Yellow is a bright color, and perhaps the pansy can be interpreted in the word optimism. Those who have the happy faculty of seeing the best side of every thing that comes to them in life, are called optimists. St. Paul was an optimist, although he had enough discouragements in founding the Churches of Europe and Asia to make him a pessimist. There are too few optimistic people in the world; too scarce are those individuals who have sunny dispositions or cheerful temperament; and can see the lining of silver to every cloud in their life's sky. If all would learn to cultivate the yellow pansy, they soon would realize that "It is worth a thousand pounds a year to have the habit of looking on the bright side of things."

"True blue," is an often repeated phrase, but just what is meant by "true blue"? Persons who say what they mean and who mean just what they say? Yes. The individual who remains true to his Maker and his friends, no matter what happens? Yes. Or is it one who is loyal to his religious faith and is sincere in his Christian life? Yes. All these make up a well rounded character. The loyal follower of Jesus Christ is the one who, tried like Job, never falters; who is tempted like his Master and does not yield, knowing that Christ was tempted and "that he himself suffered, he is able to succor them that are tempted." The dependable man or woman, who when asked to do a thing either in the church, home, social or business life is one who, when he says "Yes," will do it and do it in the best way he knows how.

Royalty is always distinguished by purple. In I Peter 2: 9, we read, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood." How many feel they belong to a King? Some Christians live and act as if they were bond slaves, rather than happy subjects of the King of Kings; "heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ." Let us foster a more enthusiastic spirit regarding our King's Business. In this way we shall be ready with our lamps burning to go forth to meet our King, be it midnight or dawn, and hear Christ's "well done" and receive from Him a starry crown.

A black pansy may symbolize sin, or discouragement. Whittier says—

"Too dark ye cannot paint the sin,
I see the wrong that round me lies,
I feel the guilt within;
I hear with groans and travail cries,
The world confess its sin."

There is much iniquity in the world today; greed and graft amongst those in high places and great immorality in large cities. Then, too, there is the "besetting sin" of each one; we all acknowledge this fact. There is One who can cleanse the world of its wickedness and who will cast our besetting sin or sins from "Him as far as the East is from the West and remember them no more," if we but let the Christ into our midst and into our lives.

All have had disappointments; some cherished dream has vanished; some youthful ambition thwarted; some vision splendid of the higher ideals (as the result of things worth while) has shone upon our path for a moment and then vanished, almost as quickly as it came, leaving us still facing realities with only the splendid vision as the goal. We sometimes doubt the sincerity of our friends, and wonder what we are existing for; we may just as well go out of the world as no one will take note of our departure. Thomas was a doubter and this is a pessimistic attitude. In such moments as these we view life from the narrowest point. A good cure for pessimism is to read something cheerful, something to broaden our vision on the "World's Work"; or "Go forth, under the bright and glorious sky, and list to Nature's teachings."

If we allow all black pansies to grow in our gardens we shall have no room for the happier flowers to flourish in the gardens of our hearts.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," says Jesus. White stands for purity, hence the white flower of thought may mean purity of thought and living. "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh;" we must be cleansed from within, from our secret faults first. Our hearts are the citadel of life and when the heart stops beating we cease to be. Likewise, when we cease planting in our heart's garden pansies of loving thoughts, words and deeds, and weary in well-doing, we stop growing in the Christian graces. When the weeds of anger, hate and discontent choke out the better things, we step backwards; it is not always at once, more often by degrees. Like Sir Gallahad, whose strength was the strength of ten because his heart was pure, we shall increase our influence for good in the community in which we live if we keep purity in thought, word and deed.

Do pansies grow in our gardens? What kind are they? As we look over our lives, we doubtless see wherein our Heavenly Father has had thought for us all along the way. We feel His presence has been near and we know His ever watchful loving eye has prevented us from stumbling over many of Life's problems. As we contemplate His goodness we say with the Psalmist, "How marvelous are thy thoughts unto me, oh God, how great the sum of them!"

Let us so live that we may see His hand in all the beautiful things he has created for our enjoyment, and then we shall see him face to face in the brighter home above, "when the mists have rolled away."

These are some of the lessons to be learned from "Pansies grow in my garden."

Dublin Yearly Meeting

Dublin Yearly Meeting which convened on May 1, was preceded by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, which is now open to all who care to attend. Searching inquiry was made into the duties and responsibilities of the ministers, elders and overseers, and the burden was strong upon the gathering that Friends should exemplify the highest ideals of vital, spiritual religion.

Several visiting Friends were present from London Yearly Meeting and from America, among the latter being Leanah Hobson, Lillian E. Hayes and Henry Coventry.

One of the most interesting sessions was the one on Thursday evening, when the Deputation to the Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis, Indiana, made its report. Much encouragement was felt at the increasing evidences of interest in the work of the Church being taken by the young people in the Yearly Meeting. In fact, this interest was one of the features of the week, and there were many references to the Young Friends' Association.

One session was devoted to the State of Society. The returns showed a total membership of 2,349, which is a decrease of forty-nine from the total last year. A spirit of optimism, however, prevailed throughout, the noticeable interest among young Friends overbalancing any discouragement due to the loss in numbers.

There was the usual interest in mission work, and expressions of satisfaction were given that the reports from the foreign field showed an increase in accessions to the Church. The educational report showed that four schools are carried on energetically under the care of Friends. One session was devoted to the subject of housing the poor in the cities, and considerable interest in the subject was aroused. Statistics were given showing the close connection between poverty and crime.

The peace question provoked a lengthy discussion, and some differences of opinion apparently developed. It was felt by some that there had been a tendency in certain quarters to fall away from the high standards set by the forefathers of the Church. The discussion will probably result in renewed interest being taken in the question throughout the Yearly Meeting.

Following the report on temperance, which was somewhat meager, it was pointed out that the advocacy of temperance by Father Matthew was called out by a Friend; that the United Kingdom Alliance (Ireland's temperance organization) owes its origin principally to an Irish Quaker. The transfer of the granting of liquor licenses by the magistrates to some other authority less under the control of the liquor interests, was advocated.

The Home Mission report showed considerable activity in evangelistic work at three or four points. Following the custom in some other places, the epistles from the American Yearly Meetings had been printed in pamphlet form, and it was decided to continue the practice another year.

A season of prayer closed the sessions, during which there were many petitions, especially directed to the subject of the abolition of the opium traffic.

Attitude of Japanese Friends on the New California Land Law

We have received the following letter and resolutions sent by Gilbert Bowles, which are self explanatory. They touch a question of somewhat critical importance, and it will be helpful to know the viewpoint of our Japanese Friends.

TOKYO, JAPAN, April 26, 1913.

S. Edgar Nicholson, Richmond, Indiana.

DEAR FRIEND—I have been asked to send the enclosed copy of the resolutions adopted by the recent Annual Meeting of Friends in Japan relative to the pending land legislation in California.

It may seem to our American friends that we here are giving too much attention to this question, but feeling as we do, that such discrimination against the Japanese as has been proposed would be a severe blow to the cordial relations hitherto existing between Japan and America, we feel bound to do everything we can to prevent such an unfortunate event.

When the question was before our Annual Meeting, there was very little discussion, simply a time of prayer and quiet waiting, and the selection of a committee to prepare a resolution. This spirit of intercession was intensified by the fact that one of our members had just returned from a conference of missionaries and Japanese Christians called by Count Okuma at his own residence, at which the Count said feelingly, that he felt the question was too difficult for statesmen and diplomatists, but that it could be solved by an earnest appeal to God for His power to act upon the minds and hearts of the people.

Notwithstanding occasional manifestations in large meetings and through the press, of the tone of excitement, and occasionally the word "war," all of the great leaders and the body of the people have exhibited remarkable calmness and self-control and desire as sincerely as any of us, a peaceful solution of the question at issue.

A NATION-WIDE CANVASS for THE AMERICAN FRIEND

We are anxious that an active canvass be made during the month of June in every Friends meeting in America for subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We will send the paper to new subscribers from now until July 1, 1914 (thirteen months), at the annual rate of $1.50; and for the balance of this present year (seven months) for 75 cents. Send for sample copies and subscription blanks. Twenty-five new names were added to the list last week, but we ought to exceed 1,000 new ones in June, at the above rate, if Friends will see that the canvass is made in every meeting.

Commending the matter to the prayerful attention of those to whom this message may come, I remain

Very sincerely, GILBERT BOWLES.

RESOLUTIONS

The Annual Meeting of the Society of Friends in Japan, assembled at Ishicka, Ibaraki Ken, April 19, 1913, places on record its conviction that the Alien Land Bill, now pending before the Legislature in California, would if put into effect, greatly injure the cordial relations which have existed between Japan and America. It recognizes such legislation to be contrary to the will of God, whose help we now seek, expressing our belief in the possibility of a peaceable settlement of the issues involved.

We bespeak the earnest efforts of the American Peace Society, the members of the Society of Friends in California, the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association of Philadelphia, and the Executive Officials of the Central Office of the Society of Friends in America.

We request that copies of the above be sent to the Charge d'Affaires of the American Embassy in Tokyo, the Associated Press, and to Japanese and foreign newspapers in Japan.

Prison as a Road to Success

Under the above heading The Circle and Success Magazine prints in its May edition an article from the pen of the late William T. Stead, hitherto unpublished. In the body of the article and used to illustrate his argument, we find the following reference to the history of Friends, which will be read with interest:

"But one of the most remarkable instances of the way in which prison serves as the stepping-stone to success is to be found in the history of the Society of Friends. This religious body may be said to have been cradled in prison. We know it today as one of the most proper and decorous of all religious societies. Its members are clad in broadcloth and fine linen, and their good name is held in high honor by the Church and the world. But the Friends lost the secret of their power when they ceased to go to gaol. As gaol-birds they swept all before them. The increase of the number of Friends in the second half of the Seventeenth Century was as great as, even if not actually greater than, the increase of the Methodists in the second half of the Eighteenth Century. But when the Friends ceased to go to gaol, they ceased to increase and multiply. They are now—the more's the pity—a small and stationary, if not actually a declining sect.

"The story of the early Friends, of their heroic endurance of all manner of persecution, of their indomitable defiance of the power of the world, the flesh and the devil, of their adamant devotion to principle, is one of the most thrilling in the annals of mankind. George Fox, who was as often in prison as out of it, looms larger across the centuries than any man of the Seventeenth Century, save Cromwell and Milton alone. What a splendid courage abode in this man, whose faith glowed all the more brightly when his enemies attempted to overwhelm him with obloquy, and crush him with repeated punishment and torture. In Doomsdale he lay for months, and out of Doomsdale he came undismayed to preach and to testify more confidently than ever.

"In the first two years of Charles the Second's reign, no fewer than 3,068 Quakers were clapped into gaol—an average of four a day, week in, week out. When James the Second came to the throne, in a quarter of a century there were 1,500 Quakers still in gaol, who were liberated by the influence of William Penn. But with their liberation ended the progression of the Society. It ceased to grow. It became stationary, and at one time threatened to become extinct. That catastrophe has fortunately been averted, for the world could ill spare the Society whose members have for nearly two centuries been foremost in every good work, and who to this day take an active and intelligent interest in the much-needed work of prison reform."

Approaching his Bible with a student's equipment, the Christian should bring also a student's attitude. He desires to learn,—to progress in the Way of Life, and not to test or prove out certain preconceived theories of his own, or indeed those of others as humanly fallible as himself. The Bible is God's revelation of himself to man and through its pages each must, in the last analysis, trace for himself the Divine lessons. An open mind, an honest will and a reverent heart, these three lead to sovereign power in Bible study.—Geo. J. Anderson.

Yet, on the whole, there is no possession so valuable as a few good habits, for this means that not only is the mind pledged and covenanted to good, but the muscles are supple, and even the bones are bent to what is good.—James Stalker.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The Bible School at Fairmount, Indiana, on May 25, observed "Fathers' Day." This was the first time such a special program had been rendered. An address was given to the fathers by Bennett L. Shugart, and a solo and chorus by the young men constituted the principal part of the program. Ninety-three fathers were present. A committee of ladies pinned on the lapel of each one's coat a sweet-pea and a pansy. Though the day was rainy, there were 344 present at the school. The church feels that the effort proved a great success, and just as annually we observe "Mothers' Day" on the second Sabbath in May, so this meeting proposes to observe "Fathers' Day" on the fourth Sabbath in May.

Friends at Monroe, Indiana, started a new meeting last winter, and have recently erected a new meeting house, which was dedicated on May 25. The cost is about $4,000.00. It is a neat frame building, which will seat about 250. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Thomas C. Brown, of Plainfield, Indiana. Truman C. Kenworthy, of Richmond, representing the Yearly Meeting Committee, and Fred Tormohlen, of Portland, were also present and participated in the service.

West Branch Quarterly Meeting was held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, on May 16-18, and was well attended. Several ministers were present. Charles Tebbetts gave a strong talk on Friday to the Select body and on Saturday he also gave a very helpful talk, ably followed by May Pemberton and others. On Sunday morning the services were large, there being no services at the other local meetings. The principal sermon was preached by John L. Kittrell, followed by others with very appropriate remarks. Charles Tebbetts again delivered a strong sermon in the afternoon, and Elwood Hinshaw at night. West Milton particular meeting is growing in interest and in attendance, and new members are being added every monthly meeting. Mothers' Day was observed on May 11, with great interest and satisfaction. The sermon was preached by the pastor, John Kittrell.

The flood in March has seriously handicapped the many undertakings of the Friends at Dayton, Ohio, but they are hoping to have a profitable time at their "Quaker Day" next Sabbath, when President Kelly, of Earlham College, will be present. Several Friends' families in the flooded district are being assisted by Richmond, Philadelphia, Lynn, Massachusetts, and Virginia Friends. Other families, not Friends, have also been assisted from the same sources. The Friends' meeting house was not reached by the water, but was used for several days in housing Hungarian refugees who had been driven from their homes.

The Friends' Christian Endeavor of Portland, Indiana, have published a history of Portland Quarterly Meeting and its particular meetings, and will have same on sale during convention May 30-June 1, 1913. The book is a neat little volume of about one hundred pages, and gives a complete history and location of all the particular meetings of the quarter. It gives a short sketch of the life of George Fox, Early Quakers, Yearly Meetings of the World, Biography of Evan C. and Martha B. Thornton, and touches on the doctrine and principals of Friends. It will be sent to any address on receipt of twenty-five cents.

Portland, Indiana.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Peace Day was observed at Penn College, May 20, at the usual chapel hour, which on this occasion was considerably extended. Special music had been prepared by the choir, and a Song of Peace to the tune of "Onward Christian Soldiers" was sung by the audience. Harlan Meredith, Penn, '01, of Lynnville, who was a delegate to the recent Peace Congress in Saint Louis, then read a carefully prepared paper showing clearly the foolishness of big armaments. Hubert Peckham, a Senior, presented the subject of the peace movement in colleges and universities, dwelling especially on the work of the Cosmopolitan Clubs. President Edwards, who was also a delegate to the Peace Congress, then gave a very interesting account of the proceedings of that body. The whole program tended to awaken and foster a lively interest among the members of the faculty and students in the subject of world peace.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Friends' University Commencement exercises are being held this week. The baccalaureate sermon was preached last Sabbath by Dr. W. H. Heppe, pastor of the First M. E. Church of Wichita, while the Commencement address was delivered by Professor Wallace C. Payne, of Lawrence. At the Alumni banquet on Tuesday night, the address was given by David F. Shirk, '05, of Kansas City.

New England Yearly Meeting

For the first time in the history of the Friends' Church at Woonsocket, Rhode Island, a roll call was held the evening of May 20. It was preceded by a supper at seven o'clock, which had been attractively prepared, partaken of by about fifty people, after a fitting grace had been sung. Responses expressing their affection for the church and their regrets for not being able to answer to the roll call were read from non-resident members from New York, Maine, Worcester, Pawtucket, Milford and other places. The people then turned their chairs in order to face the speaker of the evening, who was Tom Sykes, of England, who is at present engaged in Christian work in this country. His address was of unusual power, the singing was appropriate and all present felt that the first roll call of the Friends' Church was helpful in the full sense of the word.—Woonsocket Evening Call.

Western Yearly Meeting

The members of the Second Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, were heavy losers in the recent flood in that city, both as families and as a congregation. The church was located in the flooded district, and water stood six or seven feet deep in the building, seriously damaging it, and the equipment was totally destroyed. As a result extensive repairs to the old building will be necessary, or a new church must be built. The members are united in favor of the latter, and are looking toward such action in the near future.

Virginia Quarterly Meeting

Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held at Sedley, Southampton County, Virginia, May 17-19. Representatives from all the subordinate meetings were present except two. Visiting members were Lindley D. Clark, of Washington, D. C., and L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore.

The burden of the meetings on Seventh-day was for the use and development of the individual gifts of the whole body, and many expressed a desire that it might be realized in their own experience. The meeting proceeded to the transaction of the business under a very sensible overshadowing of the Great Head of the Church. This was the first Quarterly Meeting held on the new site; for the congregation of Black Creek have removed from the old site, one and a half miles north, to the village of Sedley, a station on the Virginian railroad. Some fears were expressed lest the attendance on First-day, which has always been large on the old site, should be small, but all were surprised at the great crowds that thronged the grounds and filled the house, probably fourteen hundred people being in attendance.

In the crowded house on First-day morning, L. Oscar Moon spoke on Friends' views respecting the communion and baptism, and many heard these for the first time. In the afternoon, Lindley D. Clark spoke to those in the house on the necessity of coming into personal touch with Christ, while L. Oscar Moon addressed those outside, who were eager to hear the word. Meetings were held at night in Sedley and in Suffolk, twenty-five miles away.

On Second-day morning the house was filled again and a helpful service followed, many participating from the body of the meeting. In the afternoon the meeting took the form of a conference. L. Oscar Moon, Field Secretary of Baltimore Yearly Meeting Committee on Evangelistic and Church Extension work, gave an interesting account of his recent visit among English Friends and some methods of their work. After this there followed an hour of asking and answering questions, which proved very helpful. Many felt this to be one of the best Quarterly Meetings held in recent years.

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting held at Albia, Iowa, May 24, 1913, (the first Quarterly Meeting held in the new church, which was dedicated October 6, 1912) was a time of blessing and sweet fellowship. Almost all of the nine monthly meetings in Oskaloosa quarter were represented.

The Select body met at 9:30 o'clock and held a pleasant and profitable session, followed by a gospel sermon by Mead Kelsey, pastor of Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting. He gave a strong, clear and helpful message from Mark 11: 22, "Have faith in God," emphasizing the truth that faith is fundamental. The testimony meeting which followed testified to the helpfulness of the message to many hearts.

Dinner was provided for at the church. The business session began at 1:30 o'clock. Reports were presented from the different departments, showing what had been accomplished in the past three months.

Grinnell reported victory, the indebtedness on the new church having been paid, or provided for, and the mortgage burned. They also reported a flourishing Bible School. The importance of thorough preparation on the part of the Sunday-school teacher was urged by Mead Kelsey and others. A Minute was granted to Ora Carroll and wife, to do work in New York and New England Yearly Meetings. Viola Smith, pastor at Grinnell, called attention to the near approach of the time of the Summer school to be held at Earlham, Iowa, in June, and urged the attendance of pastors and workers.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND was not forgotten, a number of hearty talks being made in its behalf. It was urged that it be put in every Quaker home, where possible, and that correspondents be secured in the different meetings. Stephen M. Hadley, Quarterly Meeting Clerk, urged individual faithfulness along all lines. The uplifted hands of many testified to their purposes to be faithful in prayer for each other daily, during the next three months.

Edwin Loft, pastor at New Sharon, felt lead of the Lord to remain in Albia over Sabbath for Evangelistic services. One soul was reclaimed on Saturday evening and one at each service on Sabbath. The power of the Spirit was remarkably present. Albia Monthly Meeting is progressing in love and harmony under the labors of A. C. Niblack, pastor. To God be all the glory.

At Winchester, Indiana

The average attendance of the Bible School, during the month of May was 356. Mothers' Day and Fathers' Day were observed and appropriate addresses given. On May 11, Miles J. Furnas' class of young men were instrumental in bringing Ex-Governor J. Frank Hanly, of Indianapolis, who gave his famous address on "The World Disarmed," to a large audience; and on the following Sunday, "The World's Peace Day" was observed, the program being given by A. M. Brown, B. F. Marsh, Dr. C. E. Milligan and others.

The Quarterly Meeting was not so largely attended as usual. Albert J. Furstenberger, of St. Marys, Ohio, was acceptably present with a minute from his Monthly Meeting. Considerable interest was taken in missionary work, and the Winchester Ladies' Aid served lunch in the basement of the church.

The Y. P. S. C. E. have taken charge of the evening meeting for a few weeks past, substituting their new orchestra for the usual choir and giving the pastor fifteen minutes, instead of the accustomed five minutes for remarks.

Western Quaker Party, 1913

Somewhat similar to the young Friends' "Pilgrimages" in England, a trip has been planned by some of our Eastern Young Friends extending to the Pacific Coast, the purpose being to follow up the interest and sense of unity so earnestly manifested at the Five Years Meeting, by seeking to lend encouragement to the Young Friends' movement. As originally planned it was hoped that a large number would be able to avail themselves of this opportunity to visit Western Friends, but way did not open for this, and the party finally included Carolina M. Wood and L. Hollingsworth Wood, of New York, and Maurice L. Rowntree, of England, son of Joshua Rowntree, of Scarborough, who is a lecturer on all social subjects.

These Friends were expecting to be in Chicago at an appointed meeting on the afternoon of June 1; at Penn College, Iowa, on June 2 and 3; at Nebraska Yearly Meeting at Central City, June 4-7; at Salt Lake City, June 9-11; at Oregon Yearly Meeting at Newberg, June 13-16; at San Francisco, June 18; at Yosemite Valley, June 19-23; at California Yearly Meeting at Whittier, June 24-30; at Los Angeles, July 1-3; at Grand Canon, July 4-6; at Petrified Forest, July 7; at Denver, July 9; at Wichita, Kansas, July 10; at Kansas City, July 12; and Chicago, July 13.

CORRESPONDENCE

Letter from Ireland

CORK, IRELAND, May 17, 1913.

DEAR FRIENDS: I have been in Ireland three weeks, but am expecting to sail for London next Monday, as the Yearly Meeting begins on Wednesday. Dublin Yearly Meeting was well attended, and was good throughout. There was a large number of young people present, some of whom took part in the discussions. The presiding clerk was William Frederick Bewley, who was one of the delegates five years ago at Richmond to the Five Years Meeting. He is a splendid clerk. His home was my home during the Yearly Meeting, a splendid home in a large flower garden well kept.

Friends in Ireland are very hospitable and kind. Ireland is in her glory now. The fields are green, and there are many sheep and fine cattle. The wild primroses are blooming in the wood, though there has been little sunshine for several weeks. The people here have so much sunshine in their nature; I wonder if it is because they must furnish their own sunshine.

There was little in the Yearly Meeting that would indicate that we were not in an American Yearly Meeting; very little differences in dress or address. The House is large and easy to speak in. The rest room had fire in a coal grate and was beautifully decorated with many kinds of flowers. It was a great privilege to sit through the sessions of the Yearly Meeting and see their interest in missions, home and foreign, and the peace question, which is calling for especial consideration just now, as Friends are suffering in places on account of compulsory military training. Every department at work received due consideration.

I went from Dublin to Waterford and visited Friends' meeting at Newtown school. I spoke to the students and teachers and took dinner with them. From there I went to Limerick, Ennis-corthy, Wexford, and am now at Cork for over Sabbath, where I am supposed to speak at Friends' meeting at eleven, and at the Methodist Episcopal Church at eight p. m. Pray for me in the work.

LEANAH HOBSON.

At Ramona, California

Ramona Meeting has been favored with two Missionary Sundays, the last Sunday in April and the first in May. On the former date, William Abel, who has been a missionary and colporteur in the Philippines for the last eleven years, was with us and spoke both morning and evening, telling of his own joy in salvation and of the work God has done through him in the Islands. He was an Indian boy raised on an Indian Reservation near here, educated in the public schools here, but spent some years of his young manhood in drinking and gambling.

During Tilman Hobson's pastorate at this place, under the preaching of Levi Gregory, he was converted, and has been a faithful witness to what God has done for him. Many of his old-time friends and schoolmates, who had known him in his evil days, were glad to listen to his stirring messages. On the succeeding Sunday, R. Esther Smith, of Chiquimula, Guatamala, was with us and in her forceful way presented the claims of foreign missions in general and of the Guatamala field in particular.

It was interesting to have on the platform at the same time, one of the first of our missionaries to that field, Alice Zimmer, whose home is at Ramona, together with Esther Smith and William Able. These three and the pastor sang a quartet in Spanish, accompanied by the guitar, the very instrument that Alice Zimmer used in her work in Central America, handled by William Able, who has used one in his work in the Philippines.

Your Niche

There's a niche for you in the world, my boy,

A corner for you to fill;
And it waits today along life's way,
For the boy with a frank "I will!"
So, lad, be true; the world wants you,
In the corner that you may fill.

There's a niche for you in the world, my girl,

A corner for you to fill;
For the girl who's kind and pure in mind,
A place that is waiting still.
So, lass, be true; the world wants you,
In the corner that you may fill.

There's a niche for both in the world, my dears,

A corner for you to fill;
And work to do that no one but you
In God's great plan can fill.
So, both, be true; the world wants you,
And your place is waiting still.

MEMORY IMPROVED

Since Leaving Off Coffee

Many persons suffer from poor memory who never suspect coffee has anything to do with it.

The drug—caffeine—in coffee, acts injuriously on the nerves and heart, causing imperfect circulation, too much blood in the brain at one time, too little in another part. This often causes a dullness which makes a good memory nearly impossible.

"I am nearly 70 years old and did not know that coffee was the cause of the stomach and heart trouble I suffered from for many years, until about four years ago," writes a Kans. woman.

"A kind neighbor induced me to quit coffee and try Postum. I had been suffering severely and was greatly reduced in flesh. After using Postum a little while I found myself improving. My heart beats became regular and now I seldom ever notice any symptoms of my old stomach trouble at all. My nerves are steady and my memory decidedly better than while I was using coffee.

"I like the taste of Postum fully as well as coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

JUNE 15.

SUBJECT—Jacob Before Pharaoh.

LESSON—Gen. 47: 1-12. Read Gen. 47-50. Commit verses 8-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—"To them that love God all things work together for good."—Rom. 8: 28.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

JUNE 15.

TOPIC—Favorite Verses. II. In the Proverbs. Prov. 4: 10-27.

A good exercise will be to ask each member to make selection of a strong and favorite proverb, and elaborate the same with a few sentences, explaining its breadth of meaning and practicality of application.

Call attention to Solomon's choice of wisdom in preference to fame or riches, and God's blessing upon him for this choice, as being the basis of the wisdom of so many of the proverbs.

The lesson text is a rule of conduct for every young man and every young woman. "Hear"; "Receive my sayings"; "Thy years shall be many"; "I have taught thee in wisdom"; "I have led thee in uprightness"; "Take fast hold of instruction"; "Enter not into the path of the wicked"; "Walk not in the way of evil men"; "Path of the righteous is as the dawning light"; "Way of the wicked is as darkness"; "Attend to my words"; "Keep thy heart with all diligence." These and all the rest are so many guideposts to mark the footsteps of youth along the highway of life.

Emphasis should be laid upon verses 23 and 24, verse 23 especially being the embodiment of the principles of moral rectitude.

"Read Prov. 11: 27. Christ said, 'He that seeketh, findeth.' It seems that the thing we love and seek with all our heart tends to gravitate towards us. Thus, if we seek peace, and pursue it, the chances are that it will come to us. It is true that the person that seeks mischief, finds it in abundance. Do good, be kind, and peace will be your portion."—Christian Endeavor World.

The Light Within

(PARAPHRASED FROM THE PERSIAN)

LOOK into thy secret heart,
Learn the truth it doth impart,
Look into thy soul and feel Instincts pure it doth reveal.
Look into thyself and find Symbol of eternal mind,
Thou, oh man! however small Fit epitome of all.

The supreme all nature fills,
Cause of good and cause of ills,
Here and there and everywhere
All that be his nature share—
Thought itself doth God declare.

Seeketh thou in regions far—
Shining sun or glowing star,
Seekest thou in nature's laws
Proof of the Eternal cause?
Trace thy feelings in their flow,
Trace thy fancy in its glow,
Trace emotions as they go,
Know thyself thy God to know.

A NATION-WIDE CANVASS for THE AMERICAN FRIEND

We are anxious that an active canvass be made during the month of June in every Friends meeting in America for new subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Ministers and pastors can help most in seeing that the canvass is made, but the young people can be a mighty factor in pressing the claims of the paper. We will send the paper from the first of June of this year until July 1, 1914 (thirteen months), at the annual rate of $1.50; and for the balance of this year (seven months), for 75 cents. Send for sample copies and subscription blanks. We want and ought to have 1,000 new names on our books this month at this rate. They can be had if our Friends will go after them.

Patronizing Our Advertisers

We have often wondered how many of our readers patronize THE AMERICAN FRIEND advertisers. Probably a good many give their patronage, but neglect to say that they saw the advertisement in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

It is just as important that a close relationship exist between our readers and advertisers, as it is that the paper secure either the patronage of subscribers or those who advertise.

The management exercises the greatest care in admitting advertisements to its columns, and we can conscientiously recommend such as are admitted, as being worthy of confidence.

CORRESPONDENCE

CORK, IRELAND, May 21, 1913.

Editor American Friend:

DEAR FRIEND—I thought it might prove of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to know that a recent visit of Leanah Hobson, of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, to our meetings in the South of Ireland has been greatly appreciated.

She was present in Cork for the two First-days of the 11th and 18th, preaching the Gospel with much acceptance, while on the evening of the 18th inst. she preached to a large congregation in the principal Methodist Church of the city. I have reason to know her service there was also greatly appreciated.

During the week between the two Sabbaths she visited the County of Wexford, and took an acceptable part in temperance meetings, gospel services, etc., both in Wexford and Enniscorthy. As one who cherishes happiest recollections of the visits of American Friends in days gone by, I sincerely trust we shall be favored in the future with many similar visits.

Thine sincerely,

BENJAMIN HAUGHTON.

Japan and California

A letter from Japan, received under date of April 24, says:

"Just now there is a great popular feeling against the California Land-Ownership Bill. Statesmen are mostly calm in their utterances, but a certain class of political leaders is trying to make capital to overthrow the present Cabinet. All feel that the passing of the bill would seriously disturb friendly relations between Japan and the United States. I think that many Americans in Japan feel that some provisions of the bill make unjust discrimination, that are contrary to our national sense of honor."

In this connection it may be said that the American missionaries residing at Tokyo have unanimously adopted resolutions asking that just legislation shall be enacted, and that there shall be an equitable and satisfactory settlement of this particular matter. Newspapers for the most part in the United States, and especially the religious papers, apparently feel that California has not been warranted in passing her legislation on this question, taking the position that American honor is at stake, and that this legislation will seriously hamper the influence of this country in dealing hereafter with the little brown men.

Federal Council Notes

Gifford Pinchot has accepted an appointment as Chairman of a special Committee on the Church and Country Life to represent the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Other members of the Committee are: Prof. Thomas N. Carver of Harvard and Warren H. Wilson of the Presbyterian Board.

The Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service has received the promise of a special appropriation for this purpose for the period of three years and the Committee on the Church and Country Life has secured the services of Charles O. Gill to take charge of this special work.

The Federal Council announces the immediate publication of a book published under its authority entitled "The Country Church," which records the results of investigations by Mr. Pinchot and Mr. Gill among the country churches.

Mr. Gill has also been appointed as a special Commissioner of the Council to investigate the situation relative to the church and country life in Europe during the next few months, and he sailed on Saturday, April 26.

Believing is not more prominently connected with salvation than is witnessing connected with service to God.—A. T. Pierson.

"Apt to teach."—II. Tim. 2: 24.

There are a few persons of any denomination who will not readily concede that the minister must be called of God for his special service. Emphasizing this divine appointment, Friends have no form of ordination, but merely record their recognition of a call already made, and sealed by the acceptance of the one upon whom the divine hand has been laid.

The minister therefore is primarily the servant of the Lord, but no less the servant of humanity whom Christ came to save. He stands between Jehovah and the people, not with any priestly function, but as a herald to proclaim and to reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world. Whether the gift be one of prophecy, or exposition, or teaching, or exhortation, whether he be in the home or the foreign field, his mission centers in the effort to help humanity find God by way of the crucified Son.

But all too often, the average minister is prone to narrow over-much the vision of his endeavors. Called to speak "as the oracles of God," as Peter declares, our forefathers in the dark period of Quaker history often construed the inspiration of the message to be a verbal inspiration of exact words for which the speaker had no responsibility, with the inevitable result that the ministry waned in power, and all too often gave voice to worn out platitudes that met no response in the consciousness of the people.

Some ministers apparently wear a cloak in the pulpit which they discard elsewhere, regarding their ministerial duties performed when they preach the required number of sermons during the week, ignoring the obligations of the ministerial life in daily contact among their fellows. Failing to see any vital connection between the profession in the pew and the practical life on the farm, in the shop, or the counting house, they are apparently content to allow the congregation to serve Mammon on six days, if only they are faithful to the appointed means of grace on the Sabbath-day.

There are others who are content with the ordinary and common place, satisfied to walk the beaten path of the fathers, with time-worn forms of terminology, with abstract exhortations that seldom awaken a quickened response in the thought of practical men.

The Gospel, when given its proper setting, is just as potent to save as it ever was, and will continue to be "the power of God" until the end of time, but men are not saved by platitudinous deliverances, or by the recital of homilies. Christ proclaimed the fundamentals of redeeming love, but He clothed his messages and his appeals to the multitudes with the elements of life which were characteristic of the time, and awakened response because the people recognized that a Master and Teacher was speaking unto them.

The real Gospel of the Son of God never has been, never will be potent to win humanity, when expressed in the abstract terms of formalism. The Gospel is an agency of life, a message to proclaim and reveal a living Christ, who is able and ready to transform human life here and now, out of the deadness of sin into an active, virile ministry of service for the glorification of the Father and the betterment of humanity.

Primarily the minister is a teacher, and a teacher is a leader. The world needs to be taught now, as in no other age. But the message must be adapted to this age. It must show humanity of today its need, and point the way to the source of supply. The Gospel is best revealed in terms of concrete relationships, in which men are made to feel the call to duty and to service.

Self examination is a practice in which too few indulge. Perhaps many are not honest enough with themselves to conduct such an examination. It needs a sincere soul to take a real account of stock, but the investigation is not only worth while, but essential to Christian development.

The clouds and rain are as essential to the growth of the vegetable world as is the sunshine. The dark days of life are not without their blessings. Any circumstance of life that turns the aspirations Godward, is a beneficence, though sometimes disguised.

There are many men trying to climb to Heaven by holding on to the world. It is an impossible effort, and the struggle is worthy of a better cause.

In the knowledge that God is omniscient and omnipresent, humanity should be ashamed to transgress His laws.

The Quakers in the Old Northwest

BY HARLOW LINDLEY

Pennsylvania was one of the last of the English colonies formed in America. The favorable terms offered by William Penn caused such a rapid immigration to the Colony that the parts near Philadelphia were soon occupied, and there was a demand for fresh lands, which resulted in the expansion of the Colony to the southwest away from the coast, as the lands near the coast were already settled. By 1725 the settlements of Friends had passed the Susquehanna River westward, and were well on their way to the Potomac southward.

About 1730, a company composed principally of Friends, with Alexander Ross and James Wright at the head of it, secured a grant from the government of Virginia of one hundred thousand acres of land in the valley of the Shenandoah River. This brought about a rapid immigration to that region, the settlers being largely Friends. The leading community appears to have been Hopewell, five miles north of Winchester, in Frederick County, Virginia, which was well established by 1735. Soon after the settlement was made around Winchester, other Friends settled in Loudoun and Fairfax counties, about forty miles east of Winchester.

Both of these settlements now became centers of immigration further to the south producing a chain of meetings across Virginia, and well into the Carolinas. The trouble with the Indians in Virginia during the French and Indian War hastened the immigration southward where the Indians on the border were more peaceable, and thus the Friends' settlements already begun were strengthened in the interior of North Carolina; particularly those of New Garden in Guilford County and Cane Creek in Orange County, which had their origin about 1750.

The immigration continuing southward, entered South Carolina soon after 1760, and in a few years large and prosperous settlements of Friends were formed in Union and Newberry counties, South Carolina, and in Columbia County, Georgia.

These northern immigrants were also joined by some families that came direct from England and Ireland. These settlements, made by the immigrants from the northern colonies in the Carolinas and Georgia, mark what may be called the replanting of Quakerism in the South, and it is from these communities to a large extent that the migrations to the Northwest were made.

With these brief statements with reference to the settlement of the Quakers in the South, we pass to the causes which induced them to leave their homes and migrate to the Northwest. Their location in the southland was very desirable and pleasant as far as outward comfort and ease were concerned. We are told that no finer body of land could be found in South Carolina than that embraced within their limits in that state. Their communities were prosperous, their meetings were harmonious and pleasant, and there was a loving fellowship among them as brethren of the same household of faith. But as the eighteenth century grew to a close, there was unrest among them and a general feeling that a change of location was desirable. When these Friends were moving into the Southern provinces because of the balmy climate and fertile land, they perhaps little thought that the very institution which was produced and fostered by such conditions, would be the cause of their deserting their homes and friends and starting life again in a new country.

At a time when human slavery seemed to be the natural order of events, when the advancement of civilization itself seemed to depend upon it, the Society of Friends appealed to the universal consciences of mankind, and stood as opponents of the system of slavery. Friends at first, in common with others, held slaves to some extent, but there was all the time a protest against the practice, as inconsistent with the Christian profession. When they located in South Carolina and Georgia, slavery was still tolerated among them, but in the years of their residence there, the Society had taken a very advanced position on the subject. It can easily be seen that the change of sentiment had been gradual and a result of heartfelt conviction. One by one it was laid upon their hearts and consciences that it was wrong to hold their fellowmen in bondage and they freed their slaves. This conviction spread and soon became the concern of the whole Society. By persistent persuasion the Society as a body became united on the subject. This pronounced stand of course, put them in opposition to the prevailing sentiment of the country. Migration to the Northwest began in 1795, and by 1800 there were six Friends' settlements in Ohio—three in Ross County, two in Warren County, and one in Lawrence County.

In 1799 the migration from South Carolina began. The census of 1800 shows that in the preceding decade the slaves of Newberry County increased twenty-five percent., while the white population was stationary. This showed the Friends the disadvantage to which their free labor would soon be put in competition with slave labor. In 1803, a Friends' minister named Zachariah Dicks passed through South Carolina visiting the Bush River meeting and the Wrightsboro, Georgia, meeting. He was thought to have the gift of prophecy. He warned Friends to come out of slavery. At Wrightsboro he told the Friends of a terrible internecine war not far in the future, during which many men would flee to the mountains and call on the mountains to hide them. He said the child was then born that would see it. He also advised them to leave Wrightsboro, which they did. This was forty-eight years before the predicted war came. At Bush River he went into particulars and depicted the silence and loneliness that would attend the house in which he was then speaking after its abandonment by those who had erected it, and said that herbage would ere long grow in its now well beaten paths. These statements were preceded by "O Bush River! Bush River! how hath thy beauty faded away and gloomy darkness eclipsed thy day!"

Zachariah Dicks's visit no doubt, had a bearing upon the removal of Friends to the Northwest. The first to remove after this occurrence was John Jay, in 1803, soon after Dicks's visit; and by 1807, the Quaker settlement in Newberry amounted to only eleven heads of families. Judge O'Neal, of South Carolina, says, "Newberry thus lost from a foolish panic and a superstitious fear of an institution which never harmed them or any other party, a very valuable portion of its white population."

But other causes operated as well, for, while the exodus was particularly marked among Friends, others were moving in the same direction at the same time. The Appalachian Mountains had long been looked upon as a barrier against savage invasion on the one hand, and as one against removing to an unexplored and unknown wilderness on the other, but recent events had very materially changed the situation. In 1775 Daniel Boone, who by the way, was a Quaker, crossed the mountains through the Cumberland Gap, and later, over the "Wilderness Road" thus opened, passed many of the pioneers of the Southern Colonies.

The settlement of the Quakers in the Northwest was a part of the westward movement of population seeking more freedom or better economic opportunities. This new Northwest Territory then being opened to settlers, with its fundamental Ordinance dedicating it forever to freedom and free institutions, proved to be the land which would fulfil the vision of these Southern Friends. And they were not disobedient to the vision opened before them, but came with great rapidity as a vanguard to a mighty host that soon followed. The South Carolina Friends came first to Miami County, Ohio, and found some Friends from Guilford County, North Carolina, who had come the year before. Miami Monthly Meeting, the first Friends' business meeting established in the Northwest Territory, was opened in 1803. For the next four years the names of all Friends located in western Ohio and eastern Indiana, who brought removal certificates, are given in the records of Miami Monthly Meeting. The dates of issues of these certificates and by what meeting issued are also given. The number of such certificates issued in the four years, 1803-1807, is four hundred, transferring the membership of 1,826 persons to that meeting. These certificates came from forty monthly meetings, representing four yearly meetings.

From the one monthly meeting in Georgia there came twenty-eight certificates for one hundred and fifty-five persons; from the two monthly meetings in South Carolina there came one hundred and forty-three certificates for six hundred and fifty-five persons, making eight hundred and ten persons from this section of the South, or about four-ninths of the whole number. From eleven monthly meetings in North Carolina, there came ninety certificates for three hundred and eighty-seven persons, and from two monthly meetings in Tennessee, there came forty-five certificates for two hundred and twenty-one persons, making in these four years three hundred and six certificates from sixteen monthly meetings belonging to North Carolina Yearly Meeting for one thousand four hundred and eighteen members, or seven-ninths of the whole emigration. Of the remaining two-ninths, or four hundred and eight persons, two hundred and sixty-nine were from Virginia; twenty-five were from Maryland; forty-five were from Pennsylvania; and sixty-nine were from New Jersey.

Some of the new meetings established in Ohio were practically the old meetings of the South transferred to Northern soil.

Friends who had moved westward from the Ohio settlements or who had come direct from North Carolina and Virginia were among the first settlers in the eastern part of Indiana, and very early in the century North Carolina Friends commenced to make settlements in southern and western Indiana.

In North Carolina an ex-post-facto law, enacted in 1777, re-enslaved black persons who had been set free by their masters, without conforming to certain forms not required at the time that the emancipations were made. North Carolina's claim to Tennessee was also ceded to the general government of the United States in 1789 with the proviso "that always no regulation made or to be made by Congress shall tend to emancipate slaves."

This occurred after Congress had excluded slavery from all the territory northwest of the Ohio River. With this start, Tennessee came into the Union in 1796 with a pro-slavery constitution. In 1799 Kentucky adopted a new constitution confirming slavery after a warm and thorough discussion. The establishment of slavery in Tennessee and Kentucky destroyed all hope that either State would afford pleasant abiding places, although Friends had located in both of them. The hold that the blight had now obtained was too firm to justify any hope for change. Hence, the anti-slavery people in these States, and indeed, in the entire South, saw that there was no resting place for them until they reached the country beyond the Ohio River, where the foundation for the future local governments prescribed that there should be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude otherwise than in punishment for crime.

The Call of the "New Vision"

BY DR. S. EDGAR BOND

(CONCLUDED)

Friends' doctrine has been termed the "true essence of Christianity." It is with this idea concerning the mission of Friends, and the place it may have in bringing Christ into the hearts of men, and true Christian principles into the make-up of the new social, political, industrial and educational world, that we would seek to lay aside the "weights" which hinder so that the appeal of the age will find ready lodgement in the hearts of the elders of the church, and our youth will find a fresh appeal to redoubled Christian effort.

Friends Have a Mission

There is no church today which can make a greater appeal to the masses of humanity than Friends. Perhaps two-thirds of the world's working force is without a church connection or do not feel at home in or attend the church of their choice. As a physician mingling intimately with them, we believe that a majority can be interested in a church which will assist in the training of their children aright and cater to that innate longing for a blending of interest in their temporal and spiritual needs. Too many of our city churches are centres of aristocracy, caring little for the problem of the laborer, or looking upon him with pity or small notice if unable to contribute liberally to the church. Friends have always been a church of the poor or middle class. It cannot appeal to those who love ostentation and display above spiritual growth.

The greater struggle for existence is making men look more and more to the tenets of the gospel for a solution of their problems. They find there a power for a better community life. It will put a soul into corporations; will help stamp out crime and disease; and rescue the home from infidelity and divorce. The gospel of selfishness will become that of the Golden Rule. Cannot our worshipping at the feet of the Master give to us a little more enthusiasm than any other church in putting Christ into the business world and setting to work a revival of religious ideals in the social order?

Cannot we use Friends' religious idealism, combine it with the natural human instinct, and become a leading factor in Christianizing the world? The world is already awakening to the practical side of Christ. It needs the ideal of the personal, spiritual Christ, which Friends profess. Our aim is the conversion of the strong. We have had centuries of opportunity for training. Are we ready for our opportunity to practically apply Christianity to the daily affairs of men? The spirit of an army breaking camp and about to begin a campaign is abroad, but we are afraid we will find many hindrances present.

Hindrances Present

But where are the young who must bear the active work? A recent issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND gave an account of an Earlham Quaker Study class and boasted of the large percent of alumni who engaged in Christian work. Three notes were given concerning alumni, but all were pleading for interest in Christian work outside of Friends. Why? Because the young have keenly felt that the conservative methods of the church were mere hindrances to the fullness of their life work, and the call of the Church has not been great enough to overcome opportunities elsewhere. The call of the Church to her young is one of our present problems. If we will gain our heritage, Friends must not permit conservative ideas of the past to hinder. If our methods of winning lead to the drum and street corner, and a pipe-organ in our churches to keep the brightest talents active, let us consider the end justifies the means.

Our beloved English Friend in his "American Friends and their Problems," recently said, "A quieter delivery would help to drive home a really good message," which is as far distant from really solving our troubles as the leaf is from the root. I recently stood in a driving rain for three-quarters of an hour in a neighboring city, where "Billy" Sunday was holding a revival, watching for a chance to get on a crowded car, without success, so great was the interest. His spectacular, almost crude expressions, were criticized by some, but the net result was thousands of souls saved and a city stirred to its depths. I asked a friend of several years' residence where the Friends' church was located and he after a little hesitancy, said he believed it was a modest church out in a certain section. This and other churches may have the potential power, but the day requires more than a quibbling of manner. It requires assertiveness which our gentleness has not permitted, and perhaps spectacular measures not in keeping with preconceived views.

That the recently appointed Young Peoples' Board will have opposition to any aggressive campaign outside of the beaten paths, may be illustrated by the actions of a Quarterly Meeting we attended recently. The question of the church's attitude toward the young was brought up spontaneously through a plea for more attention to the youth, and that definite steps be taken to secure their active assistance, especially in the business meetings. Instances were cited in which young people when asked to be put to work met with such discouraging response that they felt their sphere of influence was outside of Friends. Imagine the chagrin and hopelessness expressed outside the meeting when a definite proposition from the young people present was met with such obstacles as "such should come from the individual meetings." A leader advised that we did not need a committee but should go ahead and "all get to work," a proposition so hopeless that the clerk gave an unconscious rebuke by saying, "that was what we had been saying for years and that Friends evidently did not wish to take definite steps."

A committee was finally appointed in the face of seeming indifference. A feeling was privately expressed by a Friend, who said she did not believe much in permitting the young to be responsible in the business until after years of training. In other words, an in-born fear of innovation from youth until tested and pulled apart from his youthful initiative, a quality the business world values highest.

Are our business methods so antiquated they do not attract the youth, or are they so complicated that a mistake would be fatal to business success? If our business methods are so complicated as to require years of training, it is time they were changed. Why endow colleges of higher learning if the church will not use the finished product or cannot attract them into its ranks to hold the responsible positions?

Let us magnify the Christian ideal to the world, but leave nothing unturned to take our place at the head of the awakening "social vision." We have been essentially a rural church. But let us make our country churches not merely places of weekly worship, but an attractive social centre for study of practical problems.

Instead of permitting our strongest college graduates to be drawn elsewhere in the interest of humanity, let us foster Home Mission work, and send them into the cities, and make not only the churches already there centres of practical, spiritual religion, but establish Friends' social centres in other cities to help the great throbbing, laboring world to solve some of its heartaches and problems with the aid of Friends' Christian ideals. The world is calling; will the Church heed? As a means to the end THE AMERICAN FRIEND must receive the hearty support of the body and be a forum to reflect not only the sentiment of barely one-third of the church which is conservative, but the more than two-thirds, which is ready for a forward aggressive program of the church. Instead of criticising whether its "dress" is "Quakerly," let us fill the columns with live issues, methods of new work. Let's make a business of religion and respond to the new needs of the times. If we do so, the subscribers will be forthcoming, and the ranks will soon be filled with our own young and many new faces will be attracted.

In closing, we will say to those loved ones who have borne the burdens of the Church, "Let's lay aside the weights which hinder and the sins which doth so easily beset, and run with patience the race." And to the young, "Be ye strong in the Lord," and in the kindly spirit of aggression, "gird up our loins" and "put on the whole armour of God." "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers and the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

New York Yearly Meeting

The opening days of the two hundred and eighteenth annual session of New York Yearly Meeting, May 28 and 29, were marked by a notable exchange of greetings with the Yearly Meeting in session at Rutherford Place. This message was sent by our body: "The Yearly Meeting now in session desires to express its appreciation of the fact that our two bodies are gathered simultaneously in this city, and our thankfulness that each in working as it apprehends God leads it for the advancement of His kingdom. May we all realize that One is our Master, even Christ, and that we are all brethren in Him." The response from the Friends at Rutherford Place was cordiality itself, and called out a hearty expression of good-will and fellowship.

A second feature of the day was a brief address by Joseph Allen Baker, M.P., who had come to the United States as a member of the British Commission to arrange a suitable celebration of the hundred years of peace between England and America. At the conclusion of his remarks, the clerk, James Wood, pointed out that during the century the English-speaking peoples have increased two hundred percent., an increase far in excess of that of any other group; that nineteen of every twenty missionaries are from Great Britain, Canada, and the United States; and that forty-nine of every fifty Bibles printed are printed in this country and England. The day ended with an able address by Charles M. Woodman, on "The Place of the Bible."

During the discussion of the State of Society, it appeared that in one Quarterly Meeting at least, the old families of Friends had vanished, their places being taken by those who had come into the Society through conviction. This condition was made an occasion for encouragement rather than otherwise. At the same time, it was apparent that many meetings are having a struggle to keep their places in the line. Concern was expressed that there should be a continual renewal of the ministry from the younger portion of the meetings. The total average attendance at the Sabbath meeting for the thirty-five meetings regularly held in the Yearly Meeting was 1,541, an average for each meeting of forty-four. More than $12,000.00 was paid for pastoral service during the year, and more than $3,000.00 for local expenses. A new meeting-house was built, at a cost of $6,000.00, and $1,650.00 was spent in repair and improvement of meeting-houses. Fourteen ministers' homes are owned by meetings.

The work in Cuba and at High Point evoked the usual interest, and contributions for it were made in the face of the meeting. Sylvester Jones and Alfred J. Griffin were in attendance, and their presentation of the activities in Cuba and at High Point, respectively, quickened the feeling of responsibility for the needs in both fields. No less interest was manifested upon the reading of the reports of the peace and the temperance committees. The loss from the former of Albert K. Smiley was remarked upon with appreciation of what he had meant to the work.

Given a Christian who loves the Bible and studies it and takes its precepts home, we have one who is ever growing toward that ideal life of which Jesus Christ is the exemplar. For we grow in grace by growing in the knowledge of the Lord.—Wm. T. Ellis.

One of the most valuable of the exercises of the Yearly Meeting was the address on "Social Service" by President Isaac Sharpless. No one could listen to the speaker's clear and forceful analysis without perceiving more unmistakably than ever before the essential connection between spiritual energy and material improvement. President Sharpless was fearless in uncovering the weakness of the social worker who lacked spiritual discernment, and equally so in his criticism of the minister who paid no attention to physical conditions. His trenchant statement that theological perfection was not incompatible with the efforts to abolish bad sewage ought to be sufficient to prevent anyone who heard him from ever again making a mistake which all denominations have committed.

Along with this address should be placed Charles M. Woodman's on "Our Quaker Heritage and its Modern Application." Here, also, the speaker sounded a call to Friends to live in the twentieth century, not to think that they alone have the truth, but to be conscious of the fact that they constitute only one cohort in the great army. He touched tactfully upon a feeling of aristocracy which he feared had crept into the Society at one time, and perhaps had not been altogether eliminated, and he urged deeper devotion to the ideal of democracy in our dealings with the world.

Oakwood Seminary claimed as keen attention from the Yearly Meeting as was given to any other subject. The report was read by Walter Hallock Wood, the principal. It showed an expense of over $5,000.00 incurred in necessary changes in the plant, including the providing of adequate fire protection. Together with a deficit from previous years, the amount needed was about $6,000.00. Legacies had been received aggregating about $2,000.00, and the question facing the meeting was whether to use these legacies in partial discharging of the debt, or to find some way by which they could be kept, only the interest being used. It was decided to attempt the raising of the whole amount through subscriptions of $50.00, to be paid in five annual installments of $10.00 each. Over $1,000.00 was pledged in a few minutes, and a committee was appointed to present the matter to the various Quarterly Meetings.

The report of the committee on the use of the term "Quaker" in advertisements was enlivened by such suggestions as "Baptist Beer" and "Methodist Paint," which would be as possible under our laws as the "Quaker Whiskey" which the committee so strongly objects to. The meeting referred the matter to the Five Years Meeting. Another subject for the Five Years Meeting was the proposed endowment of a chair at Hartford Theological Seminary, where some subject in which Friends are especially interested, such as missions, might be taught, the chair to bear the name of some Friend whom it was wished to honor.

Glens Falls and Union Springs appeared as rivals for next year's session of the Yearly Meeting. In the end, it was decided to go to Union Springs.

Perhaps the mind of this year's session can best be expressed by the following extract from a summary of the London Epistle: "How may we identify ourselves with the world in which we live, and give our best to meet its needs? Our contentment with merely average goodness is one of the prime causes of the conditions we deplore. What are we to bring to men who are dominated by the passion for drink or pleasure, for gold or gain? Does the passion for the Kingdom of God, the intense longing to lift men out of lives of shame into the glory of divine sonship, grip us and move us, to find expression in our face and voices? Love alone can win and lift; and the love that is sufficient is to be found at the foot of the Cross."

Indiana Yearly Meeting Ministerial Association

This Association convened at Farmland, Indiana, May 28, and was felt to be an occasion of profit and blessing. The attendance of visiting ministers and workers was quite large. In the temporary absence of the chairman, the vice-president, Aaron Napier, called the Association to order. Devotional exercises were conducted by Charles E. Tebbetts. Milo Hinckle, pastor of the local church, brought a very cordial welcome, while Elwood O. Ellis, of Fairmount, responded in a few well-chosen words.

The Bible school work was then discussed under four heads. Dorothy Luther, of Fairmount, opened with a brief history of the organization by Robert Raikes and leading to its present enrollment of thirty millions. She made an earnest appeal for higher ground to be taken. A paper prepared by C. J. Helms, of Traverse City, Michigan, on the "Organized Class," was read by Austice M. Harvey. His plea was for the sheep, in order to save the lambs. The elementary division was presented by Alice Cates, who emphasized the work of the cradle roll and primary department with suitable superintendents and grading for each, and the observation of special days, such as "Christmas," "Children's Day," and "Decision Day." Ancil E. Ratliff discussed the Front Line Sabbath School, and urged that this most fertile field of the Church be cultivated to secure the largest results. A general discussion of the graded lesson system followed, which was largely approved by the Conference.

At the evening session on Wednesday, Charles Sweet, of Muncie, conducted the devotional exercises. The need of missionary work was made apparent by two able addresses, the first by J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage, who brought the vision of the "Awakening World." The Gospel of Christ is a conquering force, for it has made provision for the whole man and will set the world on fire. Murray S. Kenworthy, of Earlham College, revealed a dark picture in an address on the "Status of Women in the Unchristian World." Woman's condition is the true test of a nation's civilization. Her status in lands where the religion of Christ prevails seems more wonderful when contrasted with her abject slavery in a number of heathen lands, which were cited.

The Conference opened Thursday morning with singing and devotion, conducted by A. J. Furst-berger. We were taken into the workshop of the minister, where Frank Cornell, of Winchester, after emphasizing a God-called and a well-prepared ministry, mentioned the tools necessary for sermon making, books, clippings, illustrations, etc. He then set forth the material to be used in the finished product of a topical sermon on "Diligence," based on 2 Peter 1: 5.

Elbert Russell, of Earlham, after stating the preparation needed for an expository sermon, illustrated its making, taking as his theme the test of Baal and Jehovah worship on Mount Carmel as set forth in 1 Kings 18; 16-24. This was a masterly address. An interesting discussion of a practical nature followed.

At the afternoon session a season of silent devotion was followed by prayer and song. On motion of Fred Smith, of Fountain City, the constitution was amended fixing the time for the election of officers at the May Conference. Ancil Ratliff, of Fairmount; Esther Cook, of Knightstown; and Tennyson Lewis, of Van Wert, Ohio, were named as a nominating committee. S. E. Nicholson presented the interests of THE AMERICAN FRIEND and urged its patronage by every Friends family. On motion of Truman C. Kenworthy, of Richmond, it was voted that we express our hearty appreciation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND and take steps to place it in all families as far as possible.

Fred Carter conducted a symposium on the subject, "How do you conduct your prayer meetings?" Different methods used were set forth by Milo Hinckle, of Farmland; Aaron Napier, of Amboy; and George Bird, of Pennville. One of the most important things is to know what to pray for. Begin on time, have variety, let the people understand it is their meeting, and if kept up, it must be by their assistance. Much depends upon home training. Let family worship be observed.

Charles E. Tebbetts placed before us in a forceful manner the present critical condition of our work in the Mexican and African fields. The responsibility of the home church to meet the demand for funds and to be much in prayer was laid heavily upon us.

The subject of "Giving the Meetings Publicity," was discussed by S. E. Nicholson, followed by others. Use all proper means of advertising, but follow it up with "something that grips the heart like the touch of a hand." Publicity by personal work and an up-to-date press committee were suggested.

The evening session convened with devotion, led by Frank Long. Appreciative service was rendered by the Farmland Choir and the Ladies' Quartette. The session was devoted to the discussion of Rural Problems and Social and Religious Life. Zona Williams, in speaking of the "Social Life," emphasized the importance of rural problems, and said that the church should direct the social life of its young people and make the church its center. Conditions of farm life must be improved to counteract the tendency to drift to the cities. "The Religious Life" was discussed by Mary McVickers. She appealed for a better ministry and for the training of more leaders through Teachers' Training and organized Bible Classes.

The closing session on Friday morning was opened with prayer for blessings on the Conference and the work of the Yearly Meeting. "The Relation of the Business Man to the Church" was discussed by J. Elmer Rhea, of Muncie, and E. Gurney Hill, of Richmond. The business man ought to be God-called. There are opportunities for service before him, open to few others. The business man should keep posted on all Church activities.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—Murray S. Kenworthy.

Vice-President—Fannie Elliott.

Secretary—Zona Williams.

Treasurer—Fred Carter.

Program Committee—S. E. Nicholson, Charles Sweet, Alice C. Lawrence.

The Conference then adjourned.

Cleveland Bible Institute

The twenty-first annual commencement exercises of the Cleveland Bible Institute occurred the week beginning May 25th. On Sabbath morning of the 25th, William Kirby, of Columbus, Ohio, preached an interesting and helpful baccalaureate sermon. In the evening the Senior Class had the service, each in turn giving some account of their Christian experience and call to work. Many were deeply touched by these recitals, and seventeen responded to an altar call, consecrating their lives to God.

Monday evening the Junior Class gave an excellent program, showing very efficient work. A class of thirty-six received the advanced diploma of the International Sunday School Association. The secretary, D. Carl Yoder, in presenting the diplomas, complimented the class on the excellent work done, as shown by the examination papers. Tuesday evening the new building was dedicated. Everyone was greatly pleased with the appearance of the building and its interior arrangement. Prof. Aaron S. Watkins delivered the address, subject—"The Bible." He took a strong position in advocacy of the Scriptures as the inspired word of God. Wednesday evening a class of eleven was graduated. Seven of them delivered orations, showing strong intellectual development, and also deep spiritual thought. A number of the class have already arranged for active Christian work for the coming year.

The work of the Institute has been developed from year to year throughout its history. For the coming year there has been a re-arrangement of the curriculum, providing for important additional work. The usual strong Bible exposition has been provided throughout the three courses into which the work is divided, the Bible Course, Bible-Doctrine Course, and the Bible-Music Course. In addition, stress is laid upon Personal Work, Homiletics, Christian Sociology, Christian Pedagogy, Pastoral Theology, Biblical Introduction, and Christian Doctrine.

Instruction is given in how to do Personal Work, how to deal with different classes, and the use of the word of God in personal dealing. In Homiletics, outline work and sermon construction are taught. This does not in any sense supplant the work of the Holy Spirit, but is intended to be an aid to those who are definitely called to the ministry. In these days of varied thought on the subject of Sociology, much of it of an unchristian character, a proper understanding of it is important. This the Institute proposes to give. The methods best adapted to Bible teaching in the Sunday School and in Bible classes will receive careful attention in connection with Christian Pedagogy. Students will be fitted to lead Teacher Training classes.

In Pastoral Theology the student is familiarized with the relation and purpose of the calling of the minister; also with such practical topics as pastoral evangelism, the minister's personal character, his spiritual life, his relation to the Sunday School and various services of the church and to the members of the congregation in their home life and varied activities. Biblical Introduction embraces the history of the Bible, languages, structure, and versions. Also a careful study of Biblical geography and the races of the Bible.

In connection with Christian doctrine the history of doctrine from the Apostolic period to the present day will be considered, especially the evangelical doctrines as constituting the basis of Christian belief. Much of this work has been covered in connection with the course previously used, but the new courses provide for additional work on these lines, with some new work.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

Secretary Bryan's Peace Plan

Eleven nations have responded favorably

Word comes from Washington that on June 2 the Japanese ambassador handed to Secretary of State Bryan formal notification of the acceptance by Japan of the plan proposed by the United States for universal peace. Japan thus becomes the eleventh nation to respond favorably to Secretary Bryan's proposals, the ten others including three of the great powers of Europe, namely, Great Britain, France and Russia; and with the increase in the number of nations ready to consider the proposed plan favorably comes also in more than a direct ratio an increase in the probability that some definite agreement may be reached which shall, to use a phrase of Mr. Bryan's, "close the gap and leave no question to become a cause of war." All who sincerely desire peace in all our international relations will certainly read with genuine pleasure such comments on the situation as the following, taken from the editorial columns of the Indianapolis News:

It may not be easy to embody the proposals in an actual treaty that will be approved by all these powers. But it is worth a great deal to have their favorable consideration. When statesmen begin talking about peace, and in an official way, and still more when they are willing to work together in its behalf, it is not unreasonable to infer that they will do what they can to avoid war. It is thus that international opinion is built up. * * * In such a case as this even mere "talk" is of the greatest value. We do not mean to suggest that these proposals are simply talk, but only to say that even if they were they would be valuable. For debate and discussion of a friendly character are opposed to war and the idea of war. As a rule men talk only of those things in which they are interested. Words reflect thought. We know that when men and papers begin to talk war, war is likely to follow. When the whole world gets to talking peace, it is not likely that peace will be broken. But there is no reason why there should not be a general agreement putting the Bryan proposals into effect. * * * The plan is practical and, of course, is the product of enlightened statesmanship.

The most important feature of the proposed plan

The principles involved in Secretary's Bryan's proposals include all those fundamentals which have been the basis for the marvelous advance in the peace reform in the last half century; but the most important single feature proposed, the point which marks this as a new proposition, is the provision that no nation shall begin hostilities for a period of time (possibly nine months) while an international joint commission investigates the questions about which there has been disagreement. This clause is quoted as follows by the Literary Digest:

"The parties hereto agree that all questions of whatever character and nature in dispute between them shall, when diplomatic efforts fail, be submitted for investigation and report to an international commission (the composition to be agreed upon); and the contracting parties agree not to declare war or begin hostilities until such investigation is made and report submitted.

"The investigation shall be conducted as a matter of course upon the initiation of the commission without the formality of a request from either party; the report shall be submitted within (time to be agreed upon) from the date of the submission of the dispute; that the parties hereto reserve the right to act independently of the subject-matter in dispute after the report is considered."

An Opportunity for Friends of Peace

While the attitude of Secretary of State Bryan on questions concerning our relations with foreign nations is warmly commended by some of the leading periodicals and by many men of influence, there is yet much indifference and lack of confidence evident, and from some quarters, indeed, open criticism and unfriendliness. The proposed peace plan is, however, so simple and so practical, that it needs but to be stated to receive the hearty approval of the great body of our citizens. Even with all that has been said in the public press it is probably true that on an average not one in ten of the citizens of the United States could give any accurate statement of what the essentials of Secretary Bryan's proposals are; if this be true, no more important work can be done in this connection than to speak and write about this matter until because of the general knowledge of what has been done, public opinion will support, even demand the carrying out of such a program. Another thing quite worth while being done at this time is indicated by the letter given below which has been sent out by John F. Hanson, Superintendent of the work of Peace and Arbitration in Oregon Yearly Meeting; such action not only adds force to the general movement in the neighborhood which takes up the question, but it gives the encouragement needed to support public officials in times when the pressure opposed to their advanced plans becomes, as it occasionally does, particularly severe and hard to withstand.

PORTLAND, OREGON, MAY 22, 1913.

To Pastors or Other Officers of Churches:

The undersigned Superintendent of Peace and Arbitration, would respectfully recommend to your favorable consideration the following address to the Secretary of State, and if you approve of it, please detach and send to the Secretary at Washington, signed on behalf of your Church.

Yours truly, J. F. HANSON.

*To The Honorable William J. Bryan, Sec'y of State,

DEAR SIR—Believing in the sincerity of our Government in its effort to maintain a peace policy with other nations, and admiring its calm and wise proceedings in respect to Mexico and Japan, it is due our Government that we should express our approval and sympathy at this time.

We also believe the time opportune for the United States to lead the nations in effecting a stable and permanent World Peace. We hereby offer our loyal support and hearty co-operation.

Signed on behalf of _____ Church,

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

The Elementary Division

This division of our Bible School takes in children from infancy to twelve years of age, and naturally divides itself into four departments. These four departments are called: The Cradle Roll, Beginners' Department, Primary Department, and the Junior Department.

Little children too young to attend Sunday School (usually from birth to three years) belong to the Cradle Roll. They usually come from homes where other members of the family are already members of the Sunday School or Meeting, or from families which have no church home. A consecrated Christian woman should be chosen Superintendent of this department, one who can come into close sympathy with the parents, as the only way the child of this period can be reached is through the parents. In this way interest is aroused in the Sunday School, where perhaps before there was only indifference and that interest will probably increase as the child grows older and attends the school.

To the Beginners' Department belong children under six years of age, the smallest children attending Sunday School. Great care should be taken in the choice of a teacher for children of this department as a child's natural tendency at this age is to imitate. Some one has said that "85 per cent. of what a Primary teacher teaches she teaches through her personality." If possible, a separate room should be provided, with suitable chairs; or, if a separate room is not available, there should at least be screens or curtains to separate this class from the rest of the school.

In a graded school the Primary Department includes children of early school age, or from six to nine years. At this age they are very active, the body is growing and becoming stronger and the brain is very impressionable, habits are forming, school life brings a wider outlook and an increased knowledge, the children are beginning to read and write and the imagination is becoming stronger. They need Bible material suited to their age, they need right direction given to their activities and each one should be inspired to live as God's child. The requirements of the Primary Department in regard to teacher, place and equipment are much the same as those for the Beginners.

The time when the child should be promoted from the Primary to the Junior Department is determined not so much by his age as by his mental development. Just as soon as he can read easily in the Bible he should become a member of this department. The work of this department is very different from that of the preceding one on account of the great difference in the child. Habits are becoming stronger, hence it is necessary to establish right habits of reverence, attention, daily Bible reading, obedience and punctuality. The "gang" or "clan" spirit is becoming prominent, the reasoning powers are developing, and the memory is becoming stronger. By these facts the presentation of the lessons and the government of the class should be largely determined. I would recommend that, as far as possible, the International Graded Lessons be used for the Beginners', Primary and Junior Departments, as they have been carefully prepared to meet the needs of the different departments.

ALICE E. PENNINGTON,

Supt. Primary Department.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

L. Oscar Moon, Secretary of the Evangelistic Board of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, recently spent a week with Friends at Elkhorn, West Virginia, and during that time held seven meetings with them. There is evidence of much loyalty among the members, who but a few years ago knew nothing of Friends. Nearly all the members are in some capacity connected with the coal mine industry, and it is not an easy task to be true to Friends' ideals amid such a social environment. They deserve much commendation for the way they have maintained their meeting.

California Yearly Meeting

Whittier College Commencement is being held this week, June 6-11. The baccalaureate sermon was preached last Sabbath by Dr. Joseph John Mills, while the address before the Christian Associations was given in the evening by Frank M. Dowling, of Placentia. Monday was the Senior Class day, with the Academy graduation on Tuesday. On Wednesday, the commencement day address was given by Hon. Ford A. Carpenter, with the commencement banquet at noon.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Thomas K. Brown, president of West-town School, Pennsylvania, spent a week recently, visiting Friends' educational institutions in Indiana. He conducted morning chapel exercises at Earlham College on May 27, to the delight of the students and faculty. From Richmond he went to Fairmount.

Robert E. Pretlow, late pastor of the meeting at Brooklyn, New York, began his pastoral duties at Seattle, Washington, on May 18. In his initial sermon he preached on the failure of militarism, taking as a topic, "New Tools for Old Tasks," using Isaiah 60: 4, as a text. He addressed a session of the Washington State Peace Association in the afternoon at the Y. M. C. A.

Preparations are going forward for the "Home-Coming" of all old Earlham College students on June 24. It is expected that there will be a vast assemblage and special arrangements for a program are being made. On Sunday, the 22d, the baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Elbert Russell, '94, while Raynor W. Kelsey, '00, of Haverford College, will address the Christian Associations in the evening. Professor Elwood Perisho, '87, State Geologist of South Dakota, will give the commencement day address on Wednesday.

Appropriate exercises were held at Friends' Church, Fairmount, Indiana, June 3, in connection with the annual commencement of the Biblical Department of Fairmount Academy. Four contestants delivered Peace Orations, these being judged on thought and delivery. Prizes were awarded as follows by Peace Committee: First, $10.00, Otis Vickery; second, $5.00, Miss Mildred Allen.

Carthage, Indiana, Meeting held a unique memorial and decoration service on Sabbath, May 25. The plan was to have residents and non-residents bring or send flowers to decorate the graves of relatives buried in or near Carthage. This plan was published in the local paper and met with a general response. A number of people from out-of-town points were present. The front of the church was banked with a great profusion of floral offerings. An appropriate sermon by the pastor, J. Edgar Williams, and special music by the choir made a most impressive and helpful service. At the close of the meeting flowers were taken to the cemetery in the rear of the church and placed on many graves there, then later in the day others were taken to other cemeteries. All were tendered by this remembrance of the faithful lives lived in the past and impressed by the importance of living a life worth while.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The First Friends' Meeting at Des Moines is moving onward and gaining strength. Mothers' Day was celebrated with a very appropriate service. A farewell reception was given for the pastor, W. Jasper Hadley, and Berton B. Hadley, one who has been of great service to both Sabbath-school and meeting. He and the pastor are going to leave about the same time. The Quarterly Meeting was held June 7-8.

Many Friends in Iowa will be glad to learn that the "History of the Friends in Iowa," now being compiled, is nearing completion in its narrative part. The writer has finished Parts I and II, dealing with the early history of the Friends in the State, together with the Orthodox Yearly Meeting. He is now working on the history of the Conservative Yearly Meeting, which will soon be completed.

Hearty co-operation on the part of the various branches of the church is making rapid progress possible.

On Wednesday, May 28, 1913, Daniel and Lucy Rogers celebrated their Golden Wedding at New Sharon, Iowa, the event taking place in the Friends' Church. About fifty relatives, besides other friends, were present at high noon. After singing, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," a Bible lesson was read and prayer offered by the pastor, Edwin Loft. Daniel and Lucy Rogers came in, and walking to the front of the church, faced the people and repeated the Friends' ceremony that made them husband and wife fifty years ago. A bountiful dinner was served, after which an interesting program was rendered to the delight of all present.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Hopewell, May 9-11.

Professor William J. Reagan, of Friends' University, and Arthur Jones, pastor of Friends Meeting at Kansas City, Missouri, attended the afternoon service at the State School for the Deaf at Olatha, Kansas, May 18. The day was observed as Peace Day, and Arthur Jones, through an interpreter, gave an address, "The Coming of Peace." Cyrus E. White, Penn College, 1890, is superintendent of the school.

The meeting at Lowell, Kansas, is in fairly good condition. There is only a small membership, but they are willing workers, and there are a number of non-members who attend. We have a good, live Sabbath-school. The average attendance from January 1 to June is as follows: For January, 54½; February, 56¼; March, 59½; April, 60; May, 59½. The collections are sufficient to keep the school well supplied with the various kinds of literature for an up-to-date school. "Spring River," the other point in Lowell Monthly Meeting, has an increased attendance at both Sabbath-school and meeting over that of a year ago.

J. O. Stutzman, of the "Board of Public Welfare" in Kansas City, Missouri, gave a stereoptican lecture in the Friends' Church of that city, the evening of June 1, on "Some Housing Conditions in Kansas City." The last meeting of Friends' Church history course was held the evening of June 5, the subject being "William Penn and John Woolman."

Haviland Academy has just closed its twenty-first year of work, and it has been a good year. More than sixty students have been enrolled. The teachers, Albert Young, Nellie May Benton, and Vera Harris, have been most efficient, and have maintained a very high standard of work. We regret that the same faculty cannot be retained, but Professor Young goes to Maine, Miss Harris to her work in Missouri, and Miss Benton has made a friend of Cupid. Mr. Stanley Riggs, class of '13 at Friends' University, is to be the principal the coming year. Rev. Charles Lescault preached the baccalaureate sermon, "The Heritage of Youth," on May 25. On Monday evening Miss Benton's music pupils gave a delightful musicale; Tuesday evening was Senior Class night; Wednesday evening the annual alumni reunion and banquet, and Thursday morning the graduating exercises were held in the Friends' Church. A class of ten was granted diplomas.

The Friends' Church, Kansas City, Missouri, held a May Festival the week of May 18. Professor W. J. Reagan, of Friends' University, was present on Sabbath and preached. Sabbath evening the church choir sang a sacred cantata, "Festal Song," by Edmund Turner. Monday evening Professor Reagan gave his delightful lecture, "Childlike or Childish." Wednesday evening there was a stereoptican travelogue on the Rocky Mountains, Yellowstone Park, and California. Friday evening there was a miscellaneous entertainment, including a flag drill by sixteen girls, and the singing of "Italia," from Donizetti's opera "Lucrezia," by a large chorus. After the entertainment, a committee of men served ice-cream and strawberries in the basement of the church. Nearly fifty persons took part in the several events of the week, which were so satisfactory it has been suggested that the May Festival be made an annual event in this church.

Western Yearly Meeting

Westfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Westfield, Indiana, May 31 and June 1. We had with us that veteran of the Cross, Robert W. Douglas, of Ohio, who preached both days. Enos Harvey, pastor at Bloomingdale, gave an excellent sermon on Sabbath evening. The sermons of Robert Douglas came with the unction and power of the Holy Spirit, and were practical and full of admonitions that all Friends should heed. The interests of Union Biblical Seminary, of which William M. Smith is superintendent, were before the meeting. Steps are being taken to finance the institution. Prospects for the coming year appear bright, and an increase in attendance is probable. The superintendent is now visiting meetings in Nebraska and Kansas.

There will be a two days' meeting at the Stanton Friends' Church near Saint Joseph, Illinois, on June 21-22. In connection with this meeting, it is proposed to have a "Roll Call" of all resident and absent members, to be responded to, either by their presence or a letter of greeting. It is further proposed to have letters from all former pastors, as far as possible. Former members of this congregation are cordially invited to be present or send a greeting. Ellis A. Wells, pastor.

A new and very helpful plan for the Sunday night meeting was undertaken by Friends in Carmel, Indiana, the first Sunday night in June. The meeting was in charge of a team of men, who took their places on the platform and each one took some part in the service. This proved to be a very interesting meeting, and all expressed a feeling that it was a stepping-stone to better and more efficient things in our church work here. The pastor has been preaching on Social Service for some time, and we feel that the efforts are bearing fruit. The first Sunday night of each month will be given over to the men for Gospel team work.

Everett Morgan Better

Word has been received that Everett E. Morgan, the Matamoras missionary who is ill at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, is better, and the physician has hopes of his recovery.

Latest from Mexico

The latest news from Matehuala is to the effect that Mrs. Holding has left the city with other American women, and is safe, so far as is known. Sarah Lindley and one other have remained, and Raymond Holding is still in charge unharmed. No news has been received from Victoria, and grave fears are felt for the outcome there. There is nothing new in the Matamoras situation, all the missionaries having escaped to Brownsville, where they are waiting developments.

There are seventeen Protestant universities in Germany, in which 3,386 students are enrolled in the theological departments.

The Supreme Court of Appeals in Korea has nullified the sentences of six prominent Koreans, charged with conspiring against the Japanese governor-general. This is a victory for the Christian missionaries who have been interested in the cases, many of the accused being Christians.

JUNE 22.

TOPIC—Mission Work, at Home and Abroad. VI. Missionary Tours. Acts 15: 36-41; 16: 1-5.

A valuable exercise will be to assign to different members the study of tracing Paul's missionary journeys; and to others the task of citing events of chief interest in the several journeys.

Questions to be answered:

1. Why are tours in the foreign field necessary? (Note the necessity of establishing new centers of missionary activity in lands where missionary stations are all too few.)

2. How may we aid such tours?

3. What equipment is necessary?

4. What do these tours suggest to us in home mission work?

5. How do modes of travel now compare with those in Paul's day?

Let different members read one each of the short statements found in the Christian Endeavor World of June 5, citing methods used in different countries.

Dr. Nansen, who attempted to drift in the Fram across the north-polar region some years ago, announces that the so-called Gulf Stream which affects north-western Europe is not, in his opinion, the current that passes through the Straits of Florida, but another flowing northward from the region between Madeira and the Azores. He is preparing a book giving results of his researches.

Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Convention

The annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union was held at Portland, Indiana, May 30-June 1. The convention throughout was most pregnant with noble thought and large inspiration, an inspiration which we believe will result in more consecrated, efficient effort among the Young Friends of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

The messages Friday evening were brought to us by Herbert Tormohlen, of Portland, and Dalton H. Lewis, of Dublin. They spoke on the two phases of our Union motto: Preparation—"Study to show thyself approved unto God"; Application—"A workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

On Saturday morning Fred E. Smith, of Fountain City, spoke earnestly on the need of a Christian Endeavor Society in every Friends' meeting. At the close of the morning session, W. O. Trueblood of Indianapolis, gave a most stirring, vital message from the Young Friends' Movement in America. He so successfully transmitted his wonderful vision, that the convention rose in a body and pledged themselves to the furtherance of this work.

The afternoon was most profitably devoted to Junior work, followed by encouraging reports from the delegates concerning Christian Endeavor work in the different societies. In order to increase the knowledge and efficiency of our young Friends, a motion carried at this time to read THE AMERICAN FRIEND and give our hearty support to this periodical of the church.

The first message of the evening was brought by George R. Wright, of Portland, concerning the vital relation of the Christian Endeavor to the church. Following this and closing the session, Charles E. Tebbetts presented the missionary needs and made a strong appeal for prayer and action. The critical situation in Mexico needs earnest united compelling prayer, while the wonderful open door in China demands immediate action.

On Sunday morning the convention sermon was preached by Elbert Russell, from the text, "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." In his splendid discourse he proved that America is not a world power by reason of her army and armaments, but because of her spirit of liberty and universal brotherhood.

A most comprehensive and awakening temperance appeal was made in the afternoon session by Truman Kenworthy, of Richmond. He said, "The struggle is far greater than we have comprehended. It is a skirmish, and more a battle, and more it is a mighty campaign with its far flung battle line. The W. C. T. U., the Prohibition Party, and the Anti-Saloon League have done noble service in their respective fields, and are coming together on the solution of this gigantic evil—the prohibition of the saloon and the liquor traffic."

The following resolutions, offered by S. E. Nicholson, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The liquor traffic as it exists today is repugnant to every element that makes for a Christian civilization; and

Whereas, The states of Indiana and Ohio have already outlawed this traffic in large and influential areas of their territory and population, and have demonstrated the practicability of the no-license system, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the representatives of the Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union, in annual convention assembled, believing that the only right solution of the saloon problem is no saloon, do declare it as our sincere judgment that the time has come for the inauguration of active campaigns for the state-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic in these two states, and we pledge our best and most earnest endeavors in this direction.

Elbert Russell then spoke on the new social conscience in our social service. We must come, he said, to the place where we realize in a most vital way that regeneration includes all our brothers, whether black, brown, yellow or white. John Kittrell, of Farmland, closed the convention Sunday evening with a soul-stirring call to the higher life and closer walk with our Divine Creator.

Oakwood Seminary

Students and teachers of the Oakwood Seminary and the Friends at Union Springs, New York, have recently enjoyed a "feast of good things." Joseph and Sarah Elinton, of Philadelphia, spent three days at the school, incidentally attending Scipio Monthly Meeting on the 21st ultimo. Joseph Elinton gave two very interesting lectures on Japan and China, both illustrated with beautifully colored slides, and a very helpful and instructive address on "Workship." The following week-end was occupied by a series of special meetings conducted by Arthur and Eliza Dann, of England, who had just come from ministerial labors in Canada. These dear Friends were especially blessed in their work among the students, and their timely messages were most acceptable and spiritually edifying.

While Arthur Dann was attending

New York Yearly Meeting his wife remained at the school resting, and holding some special meetings with the students.

College Park Association of Friends

The forty-eighth semi-annual Meeting was held at their meeting house on Morse Street, College Park, San Jose, California, on Fifth Month third, 1913. Meeting for worship at 10:30 A. M. The house was filled, nearly every seat being occupied. The speakers in the morning meeting were Elizabeth H. Shelley, Dr. A. T. Murray, Joel Bean, Lydia S. B. Cox, and Walter E. Vail. The devotional meeting was followed by a brief business session. First, the minutes of last meeting were read by Deborah H. Vail, the recording clerk. The report of the Treasurer, reports of the "Good Cheer Club," the Indian Association, Japanese and Ramallah Missions and Associated Charities, were made. A

PUT AWAY PICKLES

Mathematics Figures Out the Food Question

If anyone requires a clear head it is a teacher of mathematics. He must reason in the abstract as it were, and full concentration of mind is necessary if correct results are to be forthcoming.

An Ohio man writes:

"I am a teacher of mathematics and for 15 years prior to four years ago, I either took a lunch composed of cold sandwiches, pickles, etc., to school or hurried home and quickly ate a hot dinner.

"The result was that I went to my afternoon work feeling heavy, dull of brain and generally out of sorts. Finally I learned about Grape-Nuts food and began to use it for my noon-day lunch.

"From the first I experienced a great change for the better. The heavy, unpleasant feeling and sour stomach caused by the former diet disappeared. The drowsy languor and disinclination to work soon gave way to a brightness and vim in my afternoon work, a feeling entirely new to me.

"My brain responds promptly to the requirements put upon it, and what is of more importance, the results have been lasting and more satisfactory, the longer I have used Grape-Nuts as a food.

"My wife had been suffering from weak stomach accompanied by sick headaches nearly all her life. She is invariably relieved of these when she sticks to Grape-Nuts, either eaten dry or with milk. Her stomach has gradually grown stronger and her headaches less frequent since she began to eat Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. committee was appointed to receive contributions for the "Good Cheer Club" and the Indian Association.

Emma F. Coffin, pastor of Stockton Avenue Meeting, William E. Ward and Elvira J. Ward, and others were introduced and welcomed. George N. Jones, Corresponding Secretary, reported letters sent to absent members as directed at last meeting, and responses were read from Henrietta S. Chase, Ellen R. Smith and William V. Ware, clerk of Dover Monthly Meeting in New Hampshire. A memorial of Meriam Maxwell, prepared by her brother, Charles F. Coffin, was read. Adjourned for lunch and a social hour.

At 1:30, the meeting reconvened and business was resumed.

A program was followed by discussion and remarks, in which "The Anti-Alien Land Law" came in for a share, participated in by Lily Cox, Walter Vail, Siverly Shelley, Katherine T. Bingham, Annie S. Bean and A. T. Murray. The committee to receive collections reported $28.00 received for the "Good Cheer Club," and $36.00 for the Indian Association. Emma F. Coffin made interesting remarks expressing her enjoyment and unity with the exercises of the day, both morning and afternoon, and the preciousness of Christian fellowship. A hush of stillness settled over the meeting, in which Joel Bean offered a brief prayer of thanksgiving for the blessings of the day, and the meeting closed with the united feeling that it had been a day the Lord had blessed.

A NATION-WIDE CANVASS for THE AMERICAN FRIEND

Only a few more days remain in which to complete that June canvass for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Some communities have done well, which shows what can be done when the proper effort is put forth. It is our judgment, based upon recent experiences, that there are not only hundreds, but literally thousands of Friends in America, ready to take THE AMERICAN FRIEND almost for the asking, certainly with a little missionary work being done. We will send the paper to new subscribers seven months for 75 cents and thirteen months for $1.50, this offer to hold until July 1. Perhaps it is now too late to send for samples, but it is not too late for those interested to go out and get a number of new subscribers before July 1.

Remarkable Escape from Injury

Charles E. Tebbetts, General Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Board, had a remarkable escape from serious injury last week that seems altogether providential. While in his automobile near Knightstown, Indiana, he lost control of the machine, which turned turtle, throwing Mr. Tebbetts into a ditch which had been washed out, with the machine over him. He escaped with some bruises to his left shoulder and arm.

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Friends: LONDON, ENGLAND, June 4, 1913.

I had the great privilege of attending London Yearly Meeting. The weather was fine and the attendance good, more than a thousand Friends being present at some time during the week. On Sabbath, the members went to their home meetings, of which there are forty-three in London. I was surprised to learn there are so many meeting places in London and vicinity, where Friends have Sabbath-schools, Adult schools, Mothers' meetings, etc. I have attended some of these, besides those at Leeds, Sunderland, Darlington, Birmingham, and elsewhere.

In spite of the hot weather, Friends both young and old sat throughout the long sessions, with but few passing out. Some young Friends, besides many of the older ones took part in the discussions. Consideration of the state of society took up the greater part of two sessions, in which, while there were differences of opinion, the discussions were all in a Christian spirit that was beautiful.

I spent Sunday of Yearly Meeting at the home of Mary Anna Marriage Allen, and attended the meeting at Chelmsford near her home, twenty miles out from London. It was restful to be out of the great city on the Sabbath. The country homes are very fine with beautiful flower gardens now at their best.

I am now in a series of meetings at Bunhill Fields Meeting, where the body of George Fox is laid to rest. I went yesterday to Jordans to see that old meeting house, and the grave of William Penn. These grounds are very historic. I have been in the pulpit of John Wesley here in London, and John Knox in Edinburgh.

As one thinks of the life and work of these and many others, there comes a fresh inspiration to put our lives into a worthy cause.

I go from here, if the Lord wills, to Willsden District for a series of meetings, beginning next Monday night. It is not clear yet whether to remain here for some months, and try to respond to the many calls for work, or return to America and engage in pastoral work as way opens. Pray that the Lord may lead.

The Homiletic Review

The anniversary of Henry Ward Beecher's birth occurs on June 24th, and The Homiletic Review for that month has given generously of its space to three articles on Mr. Beecher, and one sermon by Mr. Beecher. The first of the three articles is by the present occupant of historic Plymouth Church—Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D.—who writes on "What the Republic Owes to Henry Ward Beecher." The second is on "Religious Progress since the Death of Henry Ward Beecher" by the octogenarian and scholar, the Rev. James M. Whiton, Ph. D., New York City. "The Human Side of Henry Ward Beecher" is beautifully portrayed in a most appreciative contribution from the pen of the Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, Brooklyn, N. Y. The discourse by Mr. Beecher, on "A Conversation About Christ," was delivered by him on the eve of his departure for Europe, on Wednesday evening, May 27, 1863, in the lecture room of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. This discourse, we are told, is read once every year by Dr. Watkinson, the well-known English preacher.

Among the other contributors to this helpful number of The Review are Prof. Arthur S. Hoyt of Auburn Theological Seminary, who writes on "A Humanist Preacher"; Emilie Grace Briggs, B. D., New York, on "The Deaconess as Pastor's Assistant"; the Rev. William S. Jerome of Detroit, Mich., on "Horizontal Preaching"; James Learmount of England, on "The Children in Church"; and Josiah Strong, on "The Unfit in the Christian Economy."

Eighteen pages are given over to strong and seasonable sermons, and six pages to reviews of recent books.

"A workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II. Tim. 2: 15.

The essence of the ministry is quite as important as its spirit. Its character, its talent, its aptitude, its competency, the breadth of its vision, the manner of its utterance, the directness of its purpose, the language in which its message is clothed, are all vital elements in the problem of efficient ministration. The minister is neither an automaton nor a phonograph.

In saying this, we do not minimize in the least degree the work and office of the Holy Spirit in selecting the messenger and inditing the message. In our former statement, we predicated our argument upon the fact that the preacher is divinely called. We are no less aware that every gospel message ought to be delivered under the consciousness of divine leading, and in the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost.

But while the Holy Spirit leads, and imparts to the messenger a holy unction that is impelling, no less true is there a responsibility upon the agent through whom the message is proclaimed. Endowed with life and intellect, he is answerable for the use of both in all his ministrations, whether in the meeting for worship, or in daily contact with the problems of human life.

We do not mean to imply that an educational or class test can ever be applied exclusively to the ministry of the Word. The way must never be closed to that form of prophetic ministry that sometimes startles a congregation, or a community or a nation with its fervent spontaneity and earnest exhortation. But in practical experience these are the exceptions and not the rule, and denominational procedure cannot safely be based exclusively upon the exceptional, however ideal it may be.

Most ministry is more or less exegetical, wherein the trained powers of intellect, applied both to the mechanism of the sermon and the manner of its utterance, play no little part in its efficiency. It is not an age in which a premium can be put upon ignorance in any line of human service, much less that of the gospel ministry. An extended course in both exegesis and homiletics is not only not incompatible with a spiritual ministry, but ought to be regarded as an important part of the equipment of every modern preacher.

We have the greatest sympathy with a multitude of preachers, who through trial and misfortune and even suffering are doing the best they can with limited capacity and equipment to proclaim the truth of God. They will not fail in receiving the rewards of the faithful. But loyalty to the Church, and loyalty to Christ and to the cause of world evangelization compels the conviction that many of the problems of the Church and of world redemption depend upon the better training and equipment of the gospel ministry.

Many of our Friends problems will be solved only when the Church has made better provision for raising the standard of its ministry by placing within the reach of all a system of training and study that will better qualify our preachers for both their public and private ministrations. This is vital to our denominational progress. Its importance was emphasized in an elaborate report of one of the Commissions to the Five Years Meeting, but apparently the subject matter has not gripped the serious attention of the church at large extensively. As an outgrowth of the awakening of our young people and the consequent development of the Friends Young People's Movement, the church more than ever before is face to face with the problem of inaugurating plans for study and self-development that will meet the needs of those upon whom the hand of God is laid in a call to public ministry.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

The pessimist has no place in the Christian economy. In the nature of things the Church must move forward, but the pessimist has no vision for the future. Hopefulness and the assurance of victory are essential characteristics of the Christian life.

It must be said in all truth that the popular estimate of the Church is not always creditable to that institution. There needs to be more of sacrificial service that emphasizes the genuineness of the profession which is publicly made.

If there is separation between us and God, it is because we stray from His company. He is the same loving, compassionate Father today and always.

The Quakers in the Old Northwest

BY HARLOW LINDLEY

(CONCLUDED)

The Ordinance of 1878 was in itself an important influence in bringing people to the Northwest. The immigrant to this Territory knew beforehand that this was a land of the highest political as well as national promise. He knew what society, laws, rights, privileges, and opportunities the future would bring.

The early Quaker settlers in Virginia and the Carolinas had taken the lead in the struggle for toleration during the first half of the eighteenth century as the Presbyterians did in the second half. They had become the largest organized body of dissenters in these Southern Colonies and were persecuted in Virginia and disenfranchised in the Carolinas. In North Carolina they struggled not only for religious but also for political rights. Their residence in North Carolina was also often made unpleasant during and after the Revolutionary War. Their thrift no less than their non-resistance made their property the prey of the British tax-gatherers before the War, and of marauders of both parties during the War. After the War their anti-slavery sentiments made their surroundings uncomfortable to people of their feelings, while the existence of the "peculiar institution" rendered unfavorable the prospects of persons of the non-slaveholding class, especially such persons as must depend upon their own labor for their livelihood and advancement in life. At the same time in which the Quakers, under the influence of the preaching and writings of John Woolman, Benjamin Lay, Anthony Benezet and others had rapidly advanced to a decided anti-slavery position, the upholders of slavery in North Carolina had taken every favorable opportunity to strengthen the system of human bondage. A petition to Congress in 1797 showed that one hundred and thirty-four black persons set free by Quakers were again reduced to servitude under the authority of this ex-post-facto law already alluded to.

Their activity and opposition to slavery brought upon the Quakers both at home and in the debates in Congress the bitter abuse of the advocates of the doctrine of "property in man." For their own feelings and for the welfare of their children, many determined to leave the South. Thus a second generation had not grown up in North Carolina before the Society began to consider the proposition of removing. In many instances the sons of the men who had come from Pennsylvania were among those who were now leaving North Carolina. Even some born in Pennsylvania lived to come to Ohio and Indiana with their Carolina-born children.

Since slavery had been one of the chief causes for the Quaker movement to the Northwest, it was only to be expected that they would maintain their interest in the subject. There was not a year from the establishment of Friends in the Northwest until the slave was freed but what their attention was called officially to the subject in an annual query asking whether Friends bore a testimony against slavery. Committees were likewise appointed on "Concerns of the People of Colour." The legislatures of the States formed from the Northwest Territory were frequently petitioned on the subject of the so-called "Black Laws." The Friends officially memorialized Congress frequently on the subject of slavery, and they were especially emphatic in their opposition to the admission of Texas. Their most immediate labors in behalf of the slaves were, however, exerted in the activities of the Underground Railroad, one Friend having assisted three thousand negroes northward and another expressing regret that he had only had the opportunity of assisting two thousand seven hundred when the Emancipation Proclamation was issued.

While Friends in the Northwest were a unit in their opposition to slavery, they could not agree as to the best method of accomplishing the desired end, and in 1843 we meet the peculiar situation of a separation in the church, the conservative element standing for gradual emancipation and the development of a healthful public sentiment against the system, and the radical element demanding the immediate abolition of the system.

One cannot leave this phase of the subject without mentioning Charles Osborn, who in 1814 organized the first manu-mission society in the South and in 1817 at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, established the first anti-slavery paper, which was followed in 1821 by the Genius of Universal Emancipation, edited by Benjamin Lundy, another Friend, who had been interested in publication by Charles Osborn. Three anti-slavery papers were issued by Friends at Fountain City, Indiana, during the forties, and these no doubt exerted considerable influence at that time.

While as a rule Friends preferred to exert themselves as a religious body rather than through immediate political channels, yet their influence was felt directly. The final status of slavery in Indiana was determined after a long and vigorous contest, in every stage of which the Friends were a factor after they had entered the territory. They were a determining factor in the campaign of 1810, when the anti-slavery forces triumphed in the election of a representative to the United States Congress, and expressed themselves by petitions and through one of their members who was a delegate in the first Constitutional Convention. It is worthy of note that Edwin M. Stanton of Ohio came of a long line of Quaker ancestry, as did George W. Julian of Indiana.

The Quakers being opposed to slavery, supported the Whig or Free Soil parties until the formation of the Republican Party, when they joined it. Theodore Clark Smith says in his Liberty and Free Soil Parties in the Northwest, concerning the election of 1844; "In Indiana the anti-slavery counties are those in which the Quakers lived. * * * There were New Englanders in the state but they were as yet not waked up." A study of the election returns of the State shows that as a rule those counties which contain a large number of Quakers are Republican, and there is no doubt but that the question of slavery was the principal force in causing the Quakers to become Republicans. The same reforming characteristics have caused many of the Quakers to ally themselves with the Prohibition Party since its organization.

In the early history of the State of Indiana, illiteracy was alarming, but the Friends had schools organized while Indiana was still a Territory and they later developed a system of schools which set a standard for the system of public education established later. As a result of close supervision and the home training of Friends' children, the moral standard of these schools was very high and they were largely freed from the roughness and rowdiness which brought many a schoolmaster in the early half of the nineteenth century to grief and failure. By 1850 the Friends had worked out a regular system of education for their children. Practically every community had its subscription school, which was under the supervision of the local meeting. The same plan was pursued in Ohio, Illinois, and even in Michigan and Wisconsin.

Owing to local conditions, it was not advisable for each school to offer advanced work, but there were in each community a few pupils who wished to take more advanced work. As a result, certain schools were established which offered both elementary and more advanced courses. These schools corresponded to and later became modern high schools..

As shown by the Indiana Yearly Meeting reports on education, there were, in 1840, in the limits of the Yearly Meeting, seven thousand six hundred and fifty-one children of school age and of this number only three hundred and nineteen, or about one in twenty-four, were not in school. In the same year, according to Boone's History of Education, one-seventh of the population was illiterate. The school legislation in Indiana for thirty years had accomplished very little and the condition of education was arousing much public sentiment. As a result a system of free schools was adopted after a hard fight by the State in 1848, but difficulties were encountered and very little was accomplished, especially along the lines of advanced education. The first attempt to establish a public high school in Indiana was in Evansville, in 1850, while the Friends, by 1850, had twelve well organized schools doing advanced work which would compare favorably to our modern high schools. By 1867, eighteen high schools had been opened, but some of these had been discontinued because of lack of funds, while by the same year the Friends had established twenty schools with advanced courses.

A Boarding School was established at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, in 1837, and in 1845 a Manual Labor Institute was opened at Bloomingdale in western Indiana.. By 1832 the Friends were considering definite plans for a denominational college which resulted in Earlham College, which was opened in 1847. These facts are significant when the relatively small number of members is taken into consideration.

One of the leading characteristics of the Friends as a society has been their deep interest and activity in philanthropic and charitable work. This has been directed toward the Indians, negroes and the pauper and criminal classes. The Friends of Philadelphia began an active campaign in behalf of the Indians in the Northwest Territory in 1791. Schools were established among them in Ohio and Indiana and from that time forward a direct and permanent interest in the affairs of the Indians in the Northwest was maintained. Elizabeth Comstock of Michigan, a Friends minister, visited more jails, reformatories and penitentiaries in various parts of the Union than any other person in her time and has since been called the "Elizabeth Fry of America."

While Friends have been very active in Prison reform since the days of George Fox, who had occasion to recognize the need of prison reform, no organization of Friends has officially undertaken the work except in Indiana. The first committee was appointed in 1867, and it is no exaggeration to affirm that their action was largely responsible for the establishment of the Boys' Reform School in 1869; of the Woman's Prison in 1873 (three of whose four superintendents have been Friends), and of the Indiana Board of State Charities.

In conclusion, I cannot refrain from alluding to one other line of Quaker activity. In 1819, when Jonathan Jennings was Governor of the State, when James Monroe was President of the United States, and Abraham Lincoln was a ten-year-old boy in Spencer County, Indiana, fifty-seven men, of whom thirty-nine were Quakers, met at Salem, Indiana, and organized the Salem Peace Society. A descendant of one of these Quakers has since 1892 been General Secretary of the American Peace Society and has made many trips abroad in the interests of peace and international arbitration; and the son of another in 1878 made a visit to St. Petersburg to lay before the Czar a memorial praying for exemption from military duty of all Russian subjects who had conscientious scruples against war, and urging upon the Czar the adoption of arbitration as a substitute for war. So it is not unreasonable to conclude that the Quakers of Indiana may have had some part in the influences which finally resulted in the establishment of the Hague Court.

To the Quaker, holiness was his daily walk. It was his daily speech, his dress and address, his worship, his every mien and performance. The impulses of his soul were the dynamics of his deeds and it seems that, in their quiet way, the Quakers have exerted an influence in the Old Northwest quite beyond what might have been expected of them as far as numbers are concerned.

Concerning the Use of Young Friends

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

[The following article is largely a reproduction, by request, from the notes of an unsolicited talk given at Whitewater Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Richmond, Indiana. Being the result of a concern that young Friends be used, it is intended primarily for older Friends. If the writer had been addressing the younger members on the occasion which gave rise to these words, a very different train of thought might have been followed. To any young persons who feel that the younger members have little opportunity for service let me ask: How many of you have attended business meeting regularly and attentively for a year without the way opening for some service? Have you continuously endeavored to find ways of being helpful? Would you be willing to begin at the bottom (if such place there be in the church) and work up?—M. D. H.]

The young and old mutually helpful

The stories of David and Saul, of Samuel and Eli, of Elijah and Elisha, of Paul and Timothy, have been much in my mind of late. To allude to one of these, in the relation of St. Paul to Timothy, we have an illustration of the great mutual benefit which often makes friendships between the older and the younger of particular value, each seeming to be a real complement to the other. Saint Paul, the leader of the two, relies upon his young friend in many ways while yet he is the guide. Indeed, he knew no better way of helping the Corinthian church "to imitate" himself than by sending to them Timothy, whom he describes as his beloved and faithful child in the Lord, "who shall put you in remembrance of my ways, which be in Christ."

A little more than five months ago a young person arose in that great assembly of Friends at Indianapolis and said something like the following:

I just wish to say that the young Friends of America desire to do things for the Society of Friends. It will be a great joy if this Five Years Meeting gives us something to do—calls on us to accomplish some work. We do not know so much as you do, but we can learn by doing things, so please do plan something big and fine for us to do in our inefficiency and inexperience. Give us a chance and back us up.

This did not come from an "open-hearted Westerner," but from an Easterner, born and bred, and was the result of a compelling conviction. Now, we may feel that it would cheer our hearts if some young person of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting were brave enough to arise and say just this thing. We wish the young (I do not mean the middle-aged, but the young) were here in larger numbers. If only they would say by their presence, "Give us something to do; give us a chance and back us up." Most of them are not here, and if they were there might not be one brave enough or unconventional enough to say this; and yet I know that it would delight the hearts of some of them to be given something to do, for instance to be appointed on some standing committee, that they might be learning how. We should all be glad to have them learning and helping more, young and old talking over the subjects of vital moment to the church as they met on these standing committees. How proper a way for the young to learn; how proper a way for the older members to test their strength; and the young must be tested or ignored. May the Father protect us from such a fatal mistake as leaving a single young person ignored or untested. We all know that the seemingly most reticent may be longing for some sign that the way for service is opening for him.

How can we help the young Friends to cultivate the habit of attendance upon business meetings, help them to inform themselves concerning the work of the meeting and the general affairs of the church; how can we help them to feel the importance of holding themselves in readiness to assist as opportunity offers?

The value of Young Friends in one Yearly Meeting

As I have been thinking about this subject the past few days I have seemed to hear again some of the thoughts expressed by a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting as he talked to the very heart of the Five Years Meeting. You who were there remember how he began by saying that he did not come with a message, but that a message had come to him. You remember how he called our attention to the fact that we had reached a rather important and critical stage in the meeting when considering the matter of extending its scope. "My friends," he said, "if the younger people * * * have in these matters of executive a clear call, listen to it." Then he reminded us, you remember, that it was the younger men and women who a long generation ago left the customs of their fathers, while holding to their spirit and faith, and made these western Yearly Meetings what they are today. He told us that twenty years ago it was quite a question among Philadelphia Friends whether Philadelphia Yearly Meeting would exist through the coming generations. "It is not a question with us today," he continued, "I do not know what form of activity may come to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, * * * but of one thing I am sure, there will be a strong, spiritual body of men and women in that Yearly Meeting, carrying on down the historic Quakerism of their fathers." "Now, when did that change take place," he inquired; and gave answer in a bit of history.

Some twelve years ago, he told us, there was a Yearly Meeting there in Philadelphia in which somehow the burden of the meeting seemed to have shifted from the thirty or forty Friends in the gallery down to the body of the meeting. Matters came up there and were carried through with only an occasional seconding voice from Friends in the gallery. These more experienced Friends, however, looked on and rejoiced. "That is not the habit of the Yearly Meeting regularly," he assured us. The spirit had descended on the younger Friends and they accepted the call and came forward, and from that day to this that Yearly Meeting has gained in efficiency and strength, and has developed in its spiritual life, he said.

No one who heard them can forget the concluding remarks. "I have had many personal blessings, but next to that of my own family I consider that of my personal friends." He referred to the fact that he had a considerable body of them of his own age, men of experience in worldly matters and rich in the life of the spirit, and he mentioned also a set of younger men. He said that when some important proposition came up for settlement he found himself turning not to his older friends, but to the younger people, and he testified that what they say can be done he finds usually gets done. All remember the last words, "I ask my older friends 'May we?' and I ask my younger friends 'Can we?'"

"Certainly the message of Thomas K. Brown has struck a responsive chord in the heart of the Five Years' Meeting. In the phrase of George Fox, he has 'spoken to our condition,'" said the chairman. Our situation is not that of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting; certainly not of that Yearly Meeting fifteen or twenty years ago. It is no question whether Whitewater Quarterly Meeting is to exist, but even so we wish that the spirit might descend upon the younger people as it did in this conservative eastern meeting so that sometimes, at least, propositions would arise with them. It would not be desirable, perhaps, to have the burden of the meeting shift from the older and more experienced Friends to these youthful ones, as seems to have been the case at the time of which Thomas K. Brown spoke, but we all agree that it would be good to have the young learning and helping. It would probably not be wise for us to address the young and say, "Can we?", but would it not be good to have representatives of the whole church family here when the questions are asked, "May we? Can we?" and would it not be edifying to hear the youthful "We can" along with the firm voice of the middle-aged, and accompanying the feeble but prophetic voice of the aged?

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Martha, the Recruiter

BY CLARA E. WELLS

"Well, Martha," said John Bradley, pastor of the Central Friends Church of a college town, "the Sabbath-school Superintendent and I have just been having a council of war, and have both decided that we have tried all our tactics to interest the young people in our Church services, and own our defeat; won't thee try thy hand with them? Surely every daughter of Mother Eve ought to find some way to tempt others to partake of the fruit of the Spirit as well as of the tree of knowledge. Our college students are often so taken up partaking of the fruit of the latter tree, however, that they apparently forget that the fruits of the Spirit are eternal."

"Thou wishes me, a Martha never 'called' to public service, to try my unskilled hand, where you men of God have failed?" exclaimed his wife, interrupting his moralizing. "Why, John, I've been so cumbered about with much serving, caring for the family all these years, that I have not even kept in touch with the Dorcas Society, let alone Foreign Missions, or college students that seem about as far from me. Why don't thee and the Superintendent call on your Social Committees to hunt up the young people. That is their duty, not mine."

"Social Committee be switched!" exclaimed John Bradley, "they are all right in their place, arranging for a social, but not always to send out into the highways and hedges of pleasure and indifference. For the very ones they are after, 'pass by on the other side,' like the Levite, and leave the committee to nurse their chagrin, as soon as they are found out to be a Church-appointed Samaritan. We are all human, whether on the avenue or in the highway and hedges, and crave real sympathy, not the artificial kind kept in cold storage until some Church sends forth a committee to distribute it to the needy. So long as Aunt Drusilla was able to get about among the young folks she kept them in the Sabbath-school long enough to grow naturally into the Church, but she is past eighty now and her 'mantle' ought to fall upon younger shoulders. Now thee, Martha, home-body as thee is, is the very one to give those lonesome college students a touch of real home life by inviting them here, and by so doing get them interested in the Church."

"I see," said Martha, with a glimmer of his meaning dawning upon her. "Perhaps my one Martha-like-talent, if not hidden, may, if put out 'to usury,' win the Master's 'well done,' though the Marys of life have 'chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away.' I'll undertake to turn their straying feet Churchward if thee will provide for 'Blue Monday Spreads,'" she continued.

"Blue Monday Spreads! and pray what is that?" exclaimed her husband.

"Can it be a preacher don't know what Blue Monday is? I thought they had a mortgage on them as well as on 'chicken'. Students, I know, have their 'Blue Mondays' when away from home for the first time, and as they have no school Monday out at the Friends' college, I thought I'd invite, say the Freshman class, here next Monday for dinner, even if it is my wash day. Wash days, like Tennyson's stream, 'may go on forever,' but young folks won't 'go on forever' to Sabbath-school unless we keep them going after first getting them to come. And the Freshmen have lots of blue days aside from Monday before they are Seniors, and can tease the ones that have filled up their vacated ranks. As I have played Martha so long, I will take a furlough from the kitchen and have a chance to entertain, and see if I have forgotten how," she added.

"Our salary will hardly justify us hiring servants," replied her husband, dubious of the plan he had set in motion. "No one asked you, kind sir," she said. "This is the second term for the Domestic Science class at the college, so the girls have learned enough to make some concoctions that won't kill my guests, and I'll have the girls here to help me. And they will be a bait, if their cooking isn't, to bring every son of Adam invited."

"Yes, they will be the drawing card, when I want thee to be," murmured her husband. "Thou art typical of home and mother, which is ever a more lasting guide for a boy than a pretty face, and if thee could manage by having the girls to help prepare the day before, it would be better," suggested her husband.

"Very well, John, so long as thee wants me to be the magnet to draw the boys, I'll not have them appear in the first scene, but there will be other scenes in which they will play a part, such as a spread for the Boy Scouts of America our own boy David has joined. I'm not sure, but we better entertain them first, for so many of them getting restless and leaving the Sabbath-school.

"Now, John, don't say a word against the Scout organization; they are supplying a need in boy life where often the church and home has failed to do, and then, too, the Scouts of America are non-military." "Well, I'll keep still," he answered; "so long as it don't detract from the Church, as so many Lodges and Clubs do. Maybe we could get our cue to the situation better if we invited first, prominent men who dropped out of the Sabbath-school and have an experience meeting in which they tell us candidly why they left. In this way we would be weighed in the balance and find wherein we were 'found wanting' and could profit thereby."

"The very thing," cried Martha. "We'll write out the invitation something like this: '—All officers of the War Department of the Friends Church, and deserters from the Sabbath-school are invited to be present at a Council of War at the Friends parsonage next Monday evening.' That will bring out every one of them to find out what Friends have to do with war after having been opposed to it since time began. I have designs on the Boys' Scout Master, Mahlon Morrison, for if we can get him back into the Sabbath-school as teacher of his Scouts, we will have them back to stay. Put a notice in the paper, and announce it Sunday. Every officer of the Church will own up for once they belong to 'the War Department just to get to that Council.'"

As predicted, every officer for years back, were present, as well as deserters of long standing. So great was the crowd they met in the Church close by, where John Bradley explained the purpose of the gathering, saying, "We want the whole truth why the deserters left, and no offense will be taken, 'for faithful are the wounds of a friend.' We can better plan our campaign in the future, by knowing wherein we have failed in the past. Will Mahlon Morrison, Scout Master, give his experience at this time?"

With some hesitation the latter responded by saying,

"Speaking is not much in my line since I left Sabbath-school some twenty years ago. And the reasons seemed many at the time, chief of which was lack of sympathy from the members. Aside from Aunt Drusilla here, few ever gave us boys a warm handshake and a 'God bless thee.' True, they went through the form of shaking hands as all Friends did in those days. But often it was like that doled out to the 'stranger within the Church gates' today. Boys, like the strangers, know the real handshake and are not content with the sample handed out at the door just because members have been told to do so by a well-meaning pastor. I suppose it comes as hard for the member to be friendly after being told to, as it is to 'look pleasant' when told by the photographer. Then another reason, the old methods that interested our fathers failed us boys. And I think that is the reason so many leave today. Then often the boys have been given nothing to do. Born, as I was, in the last years of the Civil War, where my father and three brothers gave their life for their country, I suppose my birthright was patriotism for my country, and I've wept with chagrin as a boy when prettily dressed girls were delegated to decorate my father's grave. Our movement—the Boy Scouts of America—intends to give the boys 'a square deal,' which they never had before. We do not mean to detract from the Church, the Sabbath-school and Christian Endeavor, which have done untold good for the spiritual life of all, but we only want to supplement their good work and make of the boy an ideal Christian citizen, loyal to his country and his God." And with a "God bless thee, my boy," from Aunt Drusilla, he took his seat.

Others responded more or less freely, and after a social time they adjourned, to profit for all time from the friendly criticism that had been given.

The following week Martha gave her social for the Boy Scouts of America and won the consent of their master to serve as their Sabbath-school teacher. They helped serve the refreshments from their tents on the lawn. In fact, it was more their cooking than Martha's or the girls' from the Domestic Science Class, that won Aunt Drusilla's praise. As she watched them from a bench on the lawn some one snapped her picture in her quaint Quaker garb. And that picture was the beginning of pictures taken of the social functions that followed. These made up in booklets, were sold to the members of the Church; and the proceeds used to get badges, etc., for the Sabbath-school.

At this first social all tried, when talking to Aunt Drusilla, to use the plain speech of Friends. After many slips of the unused tongues, she relieved the situation by laughingly saying, "Never mind, I have tried to serve my day and generation, and used the plain dress and language of that generation; but you have your generation to serve in a different way, and it don't matter so much how we serve it just so it is done right. Go on with thy happy gatherings, Martha, we haven't had enough of them in our church, for fear of going to the other extreme of having suppers, etc., to raise money. But socials like this will help us hold our young folks who like a change. And we are all more or less children in that respect. So don't forget a social for the old folks."

"No indeed, we won't, Aunt Drusilla," replied Martha to the old lady, whom all called "Aunt," though she had been a great-grandmother for years. All loved her, for they had heard their mothers tell of her aid in sickness. Aunt Drusilla it was who always seemed to be "first aid to the injured." She never appeared too busy to help out; never too weary to give the cup of cold water in her Master's name; for her springs were eternal.

Before the year had passed, Martha had had her Blue Monday Spreads for the different classes at the college, as well as of the Sabbath-school. "The lame and the halt and the blind," she did not invite as such, but one or more at a time with others of the Church or Endeavor Society, so that they would not feel themselves in a class to be pitied. "Not that I am trying to improve on the Bible injunction of making a feast for such," said Martha, "but only trying to serve my day and generation in the way to meet its demands."

The Endeavorers were Martha's "first aid" as well as her last aid in her efforts to win outsiders to Christ and the Church. Ever true to their slogan, "For Christ and the Church," they worked together as one great "Look Out Committee," and indeed went into the highways and hedges after members for their Society and Church as well. While it was Martha's motherly interest in the college girls that first attracted them to the Church, it was the girls of the Endeavor Society that held the interest of the Domestic Science class. It was brought about in this way. The Endeavorers not only invited the college girls to their social functions, but asked them to furnish cooking demonstrations for the benefit of girls who ought to be in college, but who had become indifferent to education. In this way, becoming acquainted with lively college girls who were not above learning how to do the needful things of life in a scientific way, the indifferent ones were inspired to seek after knowledge, and the college girls in turn were interested and inspired to seek after true wisdom of the Soul. The young men of the Endeavor Society also had a share in the good work and formed a free Employment Bureau for young men coming to town and seeking for work. Aided by their fathers, and the co-operation of the business men they usually had work awaiting the "stranger within their gates."

The Sunshine Junior Endeavorers brightened many a mother's afternoon by caring for the little ones and letting her have an outing. The church grounds, having shade trees and flowers, were attractive and cool, and was used as a resting place during the hot weather. Here the young people of the Endeavor Society allowed children to play, who soon swelled the ranks of the Sabbath-school, and Junior; won to Christ and the Church by being met on a child's level—the playground. The Boy Scouts, true to predictions, stayed by their master, and attended Sabbath-school regularly. They even did better than their motto, "Every Scout a brother," and called every boy a brother, and later interested him in all the Church services.

This Reformation was not brought about solely by the Marthas of the Church, and the young people's crusade; but the men organized a Business Men's Endeavor Society, their aim being to manifest as much earnest endeavor in the spiritual welfare of themselves and others as they did to make their business a success. Their week-end study clubs to review the Sabbath-school and Endeavor lesson, attracted "the deserters" and they began to fill up the ranks. These new recruits brought new ideas and new zeal, and there was not a drone in the busy hive of Church activities. The hive soon became too small for all the classes and the Boy Scouts had to swarm out into their tents on the lawn. Soon a new and larger Church building was erected with modern conveniences.

All this was brought about by love and sympathy, the greatest of all Recruiters to bring those from the highways and hedges to fill up the depleted ranks of the Church Militant.

London Yearly Meeting

From letters received, and from reports in The Friend of London and other periodicals, we judge that the sessions of London Yearly Meeting, which was held May 20-28, was an occasion of more than ordinary interest. Among those present from America were Leanah Hobson and Julia White, of North Carolina, Lillian E. Hayes, of Indiana, and William and Susan T. Thompson, of New England.

One among many interesting and profitable occasions was the report of the deputation to the Five Years Meeting. The feeling manifested was summed up by the statement of John Morland to the effect that he did not remember a session devoted to American concerns in which so much sympathy had been shown with Friends across the water. This was emphasized still further by the intense interest shown in the consideration of the epistles from American Yearly Meetings.

The statistical report showed a membership of 19,785, an increase of 171 over the report of a year ago. This is a net gain of 12.3 per cent. over the membership ten years ago, and 21.8 per cent. over that of twenty years ago.

An editorial from the London Friend is so comprehensive, that we give it in full as follows:

"A wide outlook characterized the Yearly Meeting of 1913. There has been a resolute 'looking out' more than 'in.' The responsibilities of Friends towards the East have received weighty treatment. China has figured prominently in the discussions. The Opium position called forth a memorial to the Government urging the completion of the work that they have already begun in the discontinuance of the shipment of opium from India. The Yearly Meeting appointed an influential committee to seek the strengthening of the good relations between this country and China, and to take steps to insure that the real friendship of the English people may become practically manifest. The presence of General Chang, President of the Opium Prohibition Union of China, and his speech in the Yearly Meeting helped to strengthen the sense of Friends' responsibility towards that great people. On the day when a whole session was devoted to a consideration of our duty in relation to Foreign Missions, the emphasis was scarcely less on our responsibilities towards India. The report of the effort to bring relief to the sufferers from the ravages of war in the Near East still further made for the observance of the apostolic injunction to 'look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.'

"The consideration of the State of the Society likewise was not parochial. Our eyes were turned in various directions outside and beyond the fold. Friends were reminded of great modern movements which are shaking the world,—the uprising of democracy, the emergence of new powers in Eastern Europe, the stirrings in China, the women's movement at home and abroad, the trend towards peace amidst the increase of war preparations. Amid all these manifestations of life, the Society of Friends is but as a drop in a bucket; yet as it seeks the faithful discharge of its present tasks and shrinks not from greater ones providing they represent a Divine call, it may have the joy of seeing its own life breaking forth in fresh forms and with new power, for the help and enrichment of the world."

World's Student Christian Federation

BY RODERICK SCOTT

The tenth conference of the World's Student Christian Federation met at Lake Mohonk, New York, June 2 to 8. Three hundred and thirty delegates gathered from forty different nationalities; of these not more than one hundred, men and women, represented the hosts of the conference, the American and Canadian Student Christian Movements. In addition to the American, the Federation is composed of the student unions or associations or movements of Australasia; Belgium, the Netherlands, and Switzerland; China and Korea; France and Italy; Germany; Great Britain and Ireland; India and Ceylon; Japan; Scandinavia; South Africa; the lands without national organizations; and since the tenth conference, Russia. The purpose of the Federation is "to unite the Christian students of all lands, to conquer the universities of the whole world for Christ, and to relate the energies of student life to the plans of His expanding Kingdom."

Among the interesting leaders and delegates should be mentioned: Dr. Kajinosuke Ibuka, President of Meiji Gakuin, one of the leading Christian colleges of Tokyo, and chairman of the Japanese Young Men's Christian Association Union, who acted as president of the conference; Baron Paul Nicolai, founder of the Russian student movement, who acted as vice-president; Dr. David S. Cairns, of Aberdeen; Dr. Robert E. Speer, of New York; Bishop Charles H. Brent, of the Philippine Islands; Miss Ume Tsuda, head of the college for women in Tokyo, and a leader of the Young Women's Christian Association movement of Japan; Mme. Natalie Orgewsky, a foremost leader of the Young Women's work in Russia; Miss Ruth Rouse, Secretary for Women's Work of the Federation; Rev. Tissington Tatlow, General Secretary of the British Movement; Eberhard Phildius, special worker for the Federation in Austria-Hungary; David Yui, Secretary of the National Committee of the Student Movement of China, who read a letter of greeting to the Federation from General Sun, vice-president of the Chinese Republic; the Rev. Hadji Dimitriou, nominated by the Greek Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople; George Sherwood Eddy, Secretary for Asia of the Foreign Department of the American Movement; and the great General Secretary of the Federation, Dr. John R. Mott.

To the writer of this report, who had the honor to be one of the forty-four men delegates, from the United States, the great impressions of the conference were: First. That the students, at least, of the foreign parts of the world are just like the men and women we know at home. Second. That there was here in this conference a great force for world peace; in twenty years we shall be in power in our nations; and we cannot fight our friends. Third. That there were here also the beginnings of church unity in the widest possible sense; furthermore, a unity of purpose and of belief and of loyalty that should make the world believe, as our Lord promised. Fourth. That the view that many of us hold that Christ could fully reveal Himself to any one nation is utterly foreign to the facts; not only is Jesus Christ absolute Lord of All, a universal Christ, but we in the West have much to learn of Him from the nations of the East when they shall have found Him. Fifth. That God Himself moved in the conference as He had never moved in the lives of the delegates before; that the only hindrance to the use of His unsearchable riches of power, to His doing His mighty works, lay in our own lives, in the measure of our unbelief; that, in Mr. Mott's words, frequently repeated during the conference, we dare not limit God.

Executive Committee Proceedings

In addition to matters already reported in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, relative to the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting in Richmond, Indiana, on April 22, numerous other subjects were considered and acted upon.

In defining the term "administrative expenses," it was agreed this should include expenses of the Executive Committee and of members of the executive committees of the various Boards as follows: "Railroad fares and sleeping-car fare, where needed, to and from the place of meeting of the committee, with an allowance of $1.50 per day for board, while away from home." It was decided that correspondence expenses within the limits of the appropriation made for each Board, should include stationery, postage, necessary stenography and typewriting, necessary printing, except annual reports, but no clerical fees or salaries.

The chairman was instructed to appoint a committee of three to attend the conference on Christian Union and Faith to be held in New York City soon.

It was recommended that one of the two carbon copies of the stenographic report of the last Five Years meeting be sold to Haverford College at cost, and that the second one be left in the hands of the chairman to be sold as opportunity offers.

Careful attention was given the proposition from Kansas Yearly Meeting relative to the care of aged and disabled ministers. Action thereon was postponed until the annual meeting in October, but every member of the committee was directed to give attention to the question and submit any plans devised to the Secretary, so that the Central Committee could report on this question to the whole Committee at its next meeting.

Following a hearing given a committee of the West Richmond Friends relative to the "Allen Jay Memorial Building," which might contain offices to be occupied by the Boards and Secretaries of the Five Years Meeting, no action was taken, but all matters pertaining to the central offices were left to the care of the Central Committee, with instructions to make whatever temporary arrangements are necessary, and submit definite recommendations to the meeting of the Executive Committee in October.

Regarding the legality of the action of the Five Years Meeting in appointing only five Trustees when the articles of incorporation say that the number is to be eleven or more, it was decided, after consulting competent legal authority, that the resignation of a sufficient number of the original eleven appointed, be secured to make the number remaining eleven, when added to the number appointed at the last Five Years Meeting. Accordingly, two resignations were received and acted upon, and the following are now the duly authorized trustees of the Five Years Meeting, viz.: D. William Edwards, Indianapolis, Indiana; John H. Johnson, Richmond, Indiana; John B. Peelle, Sabina, Ohio; Edwin S. Jay, Richmond, Indiana; Robert W. Furnas, Indianapolis, Indiana; James Wood, Mt. Kisco, New York; John W. Woody, Guilford College, North Carolina; Amos K. Hollowell, Indianapolis, Indiana; A. F. N. Hambleton, South Pasadena, California; Calvin Kesinger, Leavenworth, Kansas; Aaron M. Bray, Portland, Oregon.

The question raised by the Publication Association of Friends at Plainfield, Indiana, as to the right of the Bible School Board to supply Sabbath-schools with graded lesson helps was referred to a committee consisting of Richard Haworth, Alvin T. Coate and Willard O. Trueblood.

A committee composed of Miles White, Jr., S. E. Nicholson and Carolena W. Wood, was appointed to consider ways and means to meet the expenses of the General Secretary and his office. It was agreed that as soon as the Secretary has been appointed, further appeals shall be made by the special finance committee, urgently requesting pledges toward his support and travelling expenses. It was directed also that this committee shall have the subject properly presented in every Yearly Meeting through their delegations or otherwise.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND was asked to publish certain propositions from the Yearly Meetings to the Five Years Meeting that were omitted from the minutes.

S. E. Nicholson, Harry R. Keates and George H. Moore were appointed a committee to consider the relationship of the Five Years Meeting Boards to the corresponding Boards of the Yearly Meetings, report to be made thereon at the meeting in October.

Other matters acted upon have already been reported in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

TEMPERANCE

Maine Enforcement

Beyond question Maine is getting genuine enforcement of the prohibitory law from one end to the other. The sheriffs whom Governor Haines appointed to replace those removed by order of the Legislature for non-enforcement of the law, are making their counties as dry as the proverbial desert. Portland, Lewiston, Bath, Rockland, Augusta, Waterville and even Bangor are all drier than they have been before in a generation. Many did not believe that such a thing could be done. But the worst scoffers are silenced and are simply wondering now how long it can last. So close a watch is kept on all channels through which liquor comes for illegal purposes that when a man is having any shipped for his own personal use he now goes to the sheriff and tells him about it. Otherwise it is altogether likely that the liquor will be seized at the express office of the freight depot. Even the railroads now refuse to accept liquor that is obviously designed for sale at Maine points. The result is that the pocket peddlers and dive keepers who still try to do business have to import their stock in trunks as baggage or to use automobiles to bring it across the state line from New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

All this is as it should be while the state-wide prohibitory provision is a part of the Maine law. The open evasion of the law has for years encouraged contempt for all law, and has been the basis of endless political hypocrisy. Governor Haines has taken the right stand, even though it has made him so unpopular in the cities that there is said to be not one chance in a hundred that he could be re-elected at the present time. He has put his oath of office above political deals and dodges. He has also put it squarely up to the people of Maine whether they want to continue the provision that Maine put in the constitution many years ago when conditions were vastly different. It was one thing to have a prohibitory law that was enforced only as each locality or county wanted it enforced; it is quite another to have one enforced without fear or favor in every part of the state.—Boston Herald.

The Earlham College Home-Coming

All arrangements are completed for the great "Home-Coming" of the old students of Earlham College, at Richmond, Indiana. The Committees have found it utterly impossible to get all the names of those who have ever attended Earlham, in order to send the invitations and literature. They want it understood, however, that all who ever attended the old Boarding School or College as much as even one term are invited and urged to be present on Tuesday, June 24. It will be an all-day affair, preceding Commencement on the 25.

In the forenoon there will be a rallying of the clans, registration, a parade of the old students, and numerous exercises appropriate to the occasion. No one can afford to miss the forenoon. In the afternoon, there will be a program of song and speeches on the Chase Stage. Addresses will be given by Ex-Speaker Joseph Cannon, who was one of the early boys there; also by Ex-United States Senator Joseph Dixon, who spent a year there in the late eighties, and by others. G. A. Lehman, Class of '12, and Mrs. Fred Bartel, will render solos, and there will be songs by the Madrigal and Glee Clubs.

It will be a day long to be remembered and no one who was ever a student at Earlham can afford to stay away.

California Yearly Meeting

Arthur B. Chilson and wife attended Pasadena Meeting on May 25, and rendered acceptable service. An appeal for funds to open a new station in Africa resulted in a subscription of near $380.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Tennyson Lewis, pastor of the Van Wert, Ohio, Meeting, has fully recovered from a recent indisposition, having taken a vacation of a few weeks that proved helpful. He is now back again in the active pastoral work. Rally day for the Bible School was observed last Sabbath. A letter announces that efforts will be made shortly to increase the circulation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in the meeting.

Charles E. Tebbetts was with us in the meeting at Farmland, the evening of June 1. He spoke to an interested audience, bringing a burning message along the line of the world vision and need, stirring the people to the realization of their responsibility in world-evangelization. It was a splendid service and will surely bring fruit later. Our people are awakening along missionary lines, and this, we feel, is the most encouraging feature of our work at present.

Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was held at East Main Street, Richmond, on June 7. There was a good attendance, and a manifestation of more than the usual interest. The gospel messages were brought by Everett Davis, Francis Ansbomb and Virgil Brock, all students in Earlham College, and were greatly appreciated. Considerable attention was given foreign missions, during the consideration of which various members urged all families to take THE AMERICAN FRIEND. A proposition to constitute the representatives from the monthly meetings a sort of standing committee to consider all matters which would otherwise be referred to the consideration of special committees during the ensuing three months was postponed until next Quarterly Meeting. A luncheon followed, during which the Young Friends were given recognition by being served at a special table.

Western Yearly Meeting

On the afternoon of June 9, Charles E. Tebbetts had a called meeting of the missionary workers of Carmel Quarterly Meeting, which was very interesting and instructive. George H. Moore, of Westfield, and William P. Buell, were also present and took part in the meeting.

Carmel Quarterly Meeting was held June 6-8. Visiting ministers present were Morton C. Pearson, George H. Moore, Amos Carson, David Commons and Payton Cox, rendering valuable service in preaching the word. The Sabbath service is in charge of the young men the first Sabbath evening in the month.

New London Quarterly Meeting was held at New London, Indiana, June 6-8. Much interest was manifested at the different sessions. Charles E. Tebbetts, General Secretary of Missionary Work, was present on both days. His gospel messages were very much appreciated. The Missionary Conference held on Sabbath afternoon is one of the best sessions of the Quarterly Meeting. At that meeting Charles E. Tebbetts gave an inspiring missionary address. Some of the children had a part in the program. The music was furnished by the young people of Lynn meeting. Harriet Stevenson, Superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Western Yearly Meeting, had charge of the services on Sabbath evening.

At Danville, Indiana

Danville Quarterly Meeting, held at Danville, Indiana, June 7, had a commendable attendance, no visiting ministers being present. Four ministers belonging to the Quarterly Meeting were in attendance. Their fervent prayers and Gospel messages were given faithful and acceptable attention, while the spiritual song service, accompanied by responsive testimonies, bespoke much warmth and tenderness of heart. Questions of vital interest during the business hour were freely and pleasantly discussed. The question of a tent meeting for evangelistic service in the limits of the Quarterly Meeting during the summer months was favorably entertained, and left for final decision to the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent on Evangelistic work, Josephine H. Wilson. The importance of securing and preserving local church history, connected with the activities and incidents of the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings, aside from the regular Minutes, to be preserved for reference by future generations, the appointment of such historian to be made by these respective Meetings, with their duties specially defined, was favorably regarded, and left for future development. The importance of interesting church items to be published in our excellent periodical, THE AMERICAN FRIEND, was suggested by David Hadley, and arrangements made by which such data might be collected and forwarded for publication.

At Manchester, New Hampshire

The Meeting at Manchester, New Hampshire, has been blessed by the coming of Harry Taylor, an evangelist from Andover, Massachusetts, to conduct an eight days' series of meetings. The Word was preached in the power of the Spirit and was used of God in the bringing of a number of precious souls out of darkness into light. Others renewed their covenant with the Lord, and most who attended were led into seasons of deep heart-searching, conscious that the Holy Spirit was inviting them to a closer walk with God. Much was also added to the occasion through the coming of Josephine Carr, who through the kindness of Salem Friends where she is now engaged in pastoral work, was liberated for our assistance as a singer.

We desire that Friends every where would uphold this work in prayer, that we through faith, may indeed enter in and possess the land which the Lord our God hath given us.

On June 8, we were again favored in having Arthur Dann with us. Our calling as witnesses, and the need of witnessing for Christ in the home and business life, were forcibly presented. It was hoped that Eliza F. Dann would also be with us, but owing to an indisposition, this was found impossible.

At Farmridge, Kansas

The meeting house of Friends at Farmridge, Kansas, has now been completed, so that the dedicatory services were held on May 25. It was announced that there was an indebtedness of about $200.00. The house still has to be painted, but this will be donated for the most part. Since then a little more than $100.00 has been paid in by members, and $50.00 has been received from a Friend near Philadelphia. If any of God's children feel like sending a little of their surplus means to pay for paint, to help buy a stove and other needed furnishings, they will have our heartfelt thanks.

We wish to express our thankfulness to all who have helped us in any way. The Lord's presence was with us in the dedicatory service. Our monthly meeting was held on June 1, the Sabbath services being conducted by the wife of the pastor in his absence.

SIMON H. HADLEY,
Lafontaine, Kansas.

Wilmington Christian Endeavor Rally

The Christian Endeavor Rally of Wilmington Yearly Meeting was held in the college auditorium at Wilmington, May 29. The meeting was well attended and the program was intensely interesting. A contest of Questions on Quakerism was held, one member from each society of the Yearly Meeting competing. During the day's program, three prize essays on different phases of Quakerism were read by Bernice Hawkins, Walter Hunnicutt and Ralph Thornburg.

Frank Barrett gave an address on "Quakerism—A World Power," and Elison R. Purdy spoke on "The Message of Quakerism to the World Today."

The officers were elected for the coming year as follows: Esther Carroll, President; Luther Warren, Secretary and Treasurer.

Among the Academies

Fairmount Academy—The Biblical Commencement at Fairmount Academy was held on the evening of June 3. Five persons received diplomas, four of whom spoke in a peace contest, using their graduating theses as orations. The contest was close and was witnessed by a very large and appreciative audience. Otis Vickery, Fairmount, received first prize, $10.00, and Mildred Allen, Summitville, second, $5.00. These prizes were given by the peace committee of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting, and will be continued next year.

On Thursday of the same week about eight hundred people gathered at the Academy for "Home-Coming Day." On both forenoon and afternoon a splendid program was rendered, consisting of addresses and reminiscences. At the noon hour dinner was served in the gymnasium and the agricultural room. On Friday evening, Professor G. L. Roberts, of Purdue University, gave the address to the graduating class, and Professor C. L. Coffin presented diplomas to the forty-four graduates, thus closing the most successful year in the history of the Academy.

On Monday evening following, an informal reception was given at the Friends' Church to Professor C. L. Coffin and family, who leave Fairmount to make their home in Iowa. During the four years of his principalship of the Academy, Professor Coffin greatly endeared himself to the hundreds of students who were in the school, and the many members and friends of the church, and great regret was felt and expressed that he is compelled to leave the community.

Professor Hall, the Principal elect of the Academy, and his wife, were present at the reception and made a very favorable impression on those present. The outlook for next year is encouraging. The enrollment for the Academy the past year was one hundred and ninety-seven. Very few changes are being made in the teaching force for the coming year.

Spiceland Academy—Spiceland Academy has just closed another very successful year's work, and has sent forth another class of sixteen to join the long list of her alumni in the splendid service of this country and even beyond seas. The commencement address was given this year by Professor Roberts of the department of education of Purdue University. The Friends at Spiceland have secured subscriptions aggregating something more than ten thousand dollars, and are going forward with plans for the rebuilding of the Academy along modern lines. The Academy is being recognized as the most valuable institution in the community, and men in all walks of life are recognizing that, from a community standpoint, it must be maintained. A goodly number of the alumni have already responded in a substantial way, and M. M. White, of Cincinnati, who is a native of this county, sent his check for $250.00. Two new teachers, both graduates of Earlham College, have been secured for next year. Barclay Morris, of the Class of 1913, will teach mathematics and manual training, while Clara B. Kendall, 1910, will have charge of the Latin and German.

At Dayton, Ohio

"Quaker Day" on June 8, was a decided success. The church was well filled at the morning service, and all listened attentively to an excellent address by President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College. Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, Indiana, preached a good sermon in the evening, and was followed by a testimony service. Timothy Nicholson and Amassa Jenkins, of Richmond, and Robert W. Douglas, of Versailles, Ohio, were also present.

The men of the Church Purchase Fund Committee, assisted by a few others, furnished, cooked and served a supper to about one hundred members and friends on Thursday evening, May 29. The supper was an excellent one, following which a social time was enjoyed.

Tribute to a Friend

In the going home of our dear friend, William Hurtley Dickinson, South Eighth Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, has lost the service of a brother whose life was marked by its faithfulness in all things that he undertook to do. Quiet and unassuming, he went about his daily duties with that sweet easy poise of manner that gave him the characteristics of Christian gentleness for which he was so distinguished.

To one that knew him well from early childhood, no words express his life's character better than gentleness and faithfulness. Surely "Faithfulness was the girdle of his reins" and gentleness the mantle of his heart. Such a life—itsself an incarnation of rectitude and love; a source of power to his fellow citizens; an influence that is deathless, breathing peace, struggling after righteousness—such a life as this is certainly a proof of immortality.

Rich in faith and rich in life, but weary of its burdens, he has gone to rest. We do not hesitate to think of him as abiding in the Father's house of many mansions. The deepest sympathy of many hearts goes out to his life's companion and to his young daughter.

Calvary

BY MARTHA D. HODGES

With soul exceeding sorrowful
Yea, even unto death—
Our blessed Saviour suffered woe
And said with laboring breath:—
"My Father, let this cup pass by Yet, not my will be done."
He suffered all this pain for thee,—
God's well-beloved Son!

I love Thee, blessed Saviour dear,
Who went to Calvary
To save my soul from death and woe,
And give sweet liberty.
See! blood-drops mask the weary way
To Calvary's rugged hill
And Jesus faints beneath the load
Submissive, loving still.

Hark! they are nailing to the cross,
God's well-beloved Son!
The mountains shake; the veil is rent,
And Jesus dies alone.
The Father veils His face from Him
His friends forsake and flee;—
All this my Saviour bore to give
To sinners liberty.

But praise the Lord, He rose again:
He rises from the sod
With triumph over death and hell,
The blessed Son of God.
He bursts the barriers of the tomb;
O! praise His precious name,
Eternal in its saving power,
Forevermore the same.
Rochester, New Hampshire.

After Christ is Risen

BY CLARA E. WELLS

After the stone was rolled away
The Saviour walked and talked with men:

He rolled the stone of doubt aside,
And proved that man doth live again.

He lives when hope is born anew,
And Christ is risen in his heart;
He only lives when shadows flee,
And Faith bids doubt and fear depart.

He only lives who walks and talks
With the God of the passing years,
Who changeth not from age to age,
And loves us still amid our tears.

After we live and talk with Christ,
And learn while here to know his voice,
Though weeping may endure for the night—

That glad Morn with Him we'll rejoice.

BEGAN YOUNG

Had "Coffee Nerves" from Youth

"When very young I began using coffee and continued up to the last six months," writes a Texas girl.

"I had been exceedingly nervous, thin and very fallow. After quitting coffee and drinking Postum about a month my nervousness disappeared and has never returned. This is the more remarkable as I am a Primary teacher and have kept right on with my work.

"My complexion now is clear and rosy, my skin soft and smooth. As a good complexion was something I had greatly desired, I feel amply repaid even though this were the only benefit derived from drinking Postum.

"Before beginning its use I had suffered greatly from indigestion and headache; these troubles are now unknown.

"I changed from coffee to Postum without the slightest inconvenience; did not even have a headache. Have known coffee drinkers, who were visiting me, to use Postum a week without being aware that they were not drinking coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

JUNE 29.

TOPIC—Our Nation's Glories and Perils.—Ex. 19: 1-8.

This is a lesson appropriate to our National birthday anniversary. At such a time, it is well to take an account of stock as a nation. There is much to be enumerated upon both the debit and credit side of our national ledger.

He who blinds his eyes to the good that has been wrought in our nation's history, and sees only the evils that threaten, has not yet attained the proper perspective from which to view and judge our national status. But on the other hand, he who sees only the glories of our achievements as a people and ignores the bad altogether, has an abnormal vision, and is not able with exactness to weigh his duties as a citizen of the Republic.

The true philosophy of our American history will not be comprehended until merit and delinquency can be weighed in their proper proportion.

Let the members recite some of the glories as well as some of the perils of our national life. Among the former are freedom of conscience and worship, our churches, Bible schools and kindred agencies, multitudes of ideal homes, our common schools, academies and colleges, the developments of invention, and the discoveries of science, our system of popular government, the spirit of missionary endeavor which is gripping a multitude of our people; the awakening public conscience, religious, social, economic, that is grappling with gigantic wrongs as a prelude to the purification of our social order.

Among perils are the liquor traffic; the social evil; a spirit of lawlessness; gambling; looseness of morals; a tendency to the infidelity of materialism; the tendency to distort personal liberty into personal license to do evil; the labor of childhood in the mines and factories; the oppression of the weak by the strong; the slums of our cities; over-capitalization; an increasing war and navy budget; the lack of needed care in our immigration laws.

It is a time to remember that "Righteousness exalteth a Nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

The French Chamber has passed an anti-gambling bill, which suppresses gambling casinos in university towns.

She was a birthright member of Friends, and was always devoted to their best interests. She was converted at the age of twelve at the family altar. During her last illness she frequently said, "Jesus is so precious to me." Almost her last words were, "Peace, peace, wonderful peace." She lived with her mother for a time at Bloomingdale, Indiana, later, nine years at Ann Arbor, Michigan, moving to Whittier, California, in 1894. In 1897 she was married to William K. Green. She was a great lover of flowers, and hardly ever went to call without taking these silent messengers of love. She is survived by her husband, two sisters and four brothers, among whom are T. Clarkson Trueblood, of Ann Arbor University, and Edwin P. Trueblood, of Earlham College. Funeral services were conducted in the Friends' Church by Edwin P. McGrew, the pastor, assisted by William P. Pinkham, Thomas Armstrong, John Henry Douglas and others.

VANBIBBER—Charlotte Vanbibber was born near Greentown, Indiana, November 23, 1859, and died March 13, 1913, aged 53 years 3 months and 20 days. She was a birthright member of Friends, was converted in 1885, was recorded a minister about fifteen years ago and has served several meetings in Western Yearly Meeting acceptably as pastor. She was a pioneer temperance worker and has been a faithful servant of her Lord.

WEBB—Delorma Webb died in Chicago of heart failure on May 24, in his seventy-ninth year. He was a highly esteemed and valued member of Sterling Monthly Meeting, Kansas, having served for a number of years as overseer. He and his wife joined Friends by conviction, and he has ever lived a faithful,

God of the Open Air

THESE are things I prize
And hold of dearest worth:
Light of the sapphire skies,
Peace of the silent hills,
Shelter of forests, comfort of the grass,
Music of birds, murmur of little rills,
Shadows of cloud that swiftly pass,
And after showers,
The smell of flowers
And of the good, brown earth—
And best of all, along the way, friendship and mirth.
So let me keep
These treasurers of the humble heart
In true possession, owning them by love;
And when at last I can no longer move
Among them freely, but must part
From the green fields and waters clear,
Let me not creep
Into some darkened room and hide
From all that makes the world so bright and dear;
But throw the windows wide
To welcome in the light;
And while I clasp a well-beloved hand,
Let me once more have sight
Of the deep sky and the far smiling land—
Then gently fall on sleep,
And breathe my body back to nature's care,
My spirit out to thee, God of the open air."

A NATION-WIDE CANVASS for THE AMERICAN FRIEND

Only a few days remain in which to complete that nation-wide canvass for THE AMERICAN FRIEND before July 1. But within that time many new subscriptions can be taken if interested Friends will take the trouble to go out after them. Recent events make it very plain that hundreds of new names can be added to our lists for the asking and urging. Up to July 1, subscriptions can still be taken at the rate of 75 cents for seven months and $1.50 for thirteen months.

West Indianapolis Meeting

At the Indianapolis Monthly Meeting of Friends, held at First Friends Church, Indianapolis, June 19th, the following minute was made:

An appeal for funds to assist the Second Friends' Church, West Indianapolis, Indiana, in building a new meeting house, has been presented to this meeting and heartily endorsed, and the following, A. K. Hollowell, D. W. Edwards, J. D. Shearman, John H. Furnas, Lula Vickers and Carrie E. B. Evans, are appointed to have charge of the matter, and assist in raising the necessary funds.

The members of the First Friends Church feel deeply for their friends who suffered so severely from the recent flood, and are in full accord with the movement that has been started to build a new church, and will aid in a material way as largely as they feel able.

An Important Conference

There is to be held at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 26th to 30th, a conference of men to study the best methods of business management for church enterprises, and the regular work of the church that men should be responsible for. Leading workers of all the prominent denominations will be present. Such themes as "Personal Evangelism," "Home and Foreign Mission Work for Home Churches," "How best to utilize the United Missionary Campaign of this coming autumn and winter," "The Development of Lay Leadership," will occupy the time forenoons and evenings. The afternoons will be reserved for rest and recreation. "The various communions have their best men set apart to lead in the conference." It is just such a conference as Friends need for solving the practical problems of our church today. It is very desirable that Friends should be well represented by our ablest men. Delegates may bring members of their family with them.

The registration fee is two dollars. $12.50 will cover all other expenses from Chicago, at the lake, and return to Chicago. Where two lodge together it will cost $11.25 each.

Much time is given to spiritual culture. A similar conference was held last year. One pastor says, "It is the biggest single factor that has entered into my life, except my conversion and call to preach." A layman says, "I have been attending conferences of Christian workers for twenty-five years, but from none of them have I had so much inspiration as this. I find that the influence abides in my life."

Circulars giving further information can be obtained from Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Ind., or from F. J. Michel, 19 South La Salle St., Chicago.

Peace Association of Friends in America

"Watch!"

Recent events seem to show conclusively that friends of peace are carelessly and unthoughtedly living over again the experience of the good man in the parable who slept, and found on awakening that his fields had been sown with tares. The article by Arthur Garratt Dorland in this issue shows how, in the face of what has been thought to be progress in the peace movement, there has actually been an alarming growth of sentiment for an increase in the military department of the Canadian Government. We, in the United States, have little cause for self-congratulation on account of our greater freedom from military burdens, for although the Militia Pay Bill and some other bills tending in the same direction have not yet passed Congress, we have reports of an increase in the voluntary extension of military training which is, if different at all, a symptom still more alarming. The latest illustration of this comes from a Quaker community which, twenty-five years and more ago, supported one of the largest private schools of secondary grade to be found among Friends in the United States at that time. In that community within the past year military training has been adopted in the public schools, and that without the compulsion of state or national laws.

This growth of military sentiment, unless it is met by organized, energetic effort will require for its uprooting years of bitter experience for our children, and our children's children.

What do you have to say about this situation?

What will you do about it?

Will you do something now?

ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

The gospel ministry is by no means limited to the public utterances in the meeting for worship. Its service is co-extensive with the needs of humanity. Its vision of possibilities must include all who come within the reach of human redemption. It must be concerned about every problem that affects human life now and hereafter. Wherever human want lifts up its voice in appeal, there must the ministry of Christ's gospel be potent for deliverance.

"Whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Therein is set forth the gospel plan of ministration. The minister is a servant, not of the few, not of the church merely, but of humanity, even as Christ came to bring salvation to all the world.

Too frequently the minister does not see beyond his own flock, too frequently he does not see beyond his own pulpit service, too frequently his ministerial garb and spirit are doffed at the door of the church edifice, while the hungry, waiting world outside is without a leader and without a shepherd.

The ministrations of the Lord's servants as applied to a local congregation should ever be directed toward the development of congregational life and power which will be voiced in the promulgation of the gospel truth to the community or world outside and manifested in the transfusion of Christ's life and presence to men and women who have not yet accepted Him. To the extent that this result is produced effectively, will the exclusive ministerial service for a congregation be justified. But every minister was first a human being, endowed with all the responsibilities of social contact with his fellows, and he can never escape that responsibility.

Many ministers seem not to be able to learn that their own Church problems can never be considered entirely apart from community problems, or municipal problems or world problems. In fact, Church problems that are worth while grow out of these larger problems. No Church can be exclusively provincial and prosper, and no minister can succeed in the broader aspects of his mission who is blind to the call of humanity's needs in the great world outside his own study and his own flock.

No minister can preach a full gospel that will benefit the masses, that will minister to human needs as they are, who is blind to the slum life of his municipality, who ignores the public immorality of his community, who has no interest in the problem of the liquor traffic, who is unable to feel the heart beat of the masses pulsating with the insistence of their necessities, who does not comprehend the worth of the moral element in government, who is not stirred profoundly by the oppressions of sin and vice and selfishness and greed, who has no vision of the darkness of lands where Christ's presence has not yet been revealed, who has no feeling that every man is a brother with a common Father who draws no lines of caste or social distinction.

The minister who is not a factor to the limit of his influence in the political mechanism that determines the governmental life and the legislative status of his community or state or nation, is missing a ministry of service that would be vastly potential in the regeneration of the masses. Humanity is not saved alone by the renovation of its environments, but multitudes are being kept out of the Kingdom of God, because they never get a chance to hear the proclamation of the gospel message with life-giving power.

The ministry must ever be under the power and leading of the spirit. It must have an equipment that will meet the demands of the age. No less must it concern itself with human affairs that affect the spiritual status of the masses. It is this all round character that helps to give virility to public ministrations, that wins humanity by the power of genuine love and heart interest in its problems.

Religion is not an experience simply for the Sabbath service or the prayer meeting. It must stand the test of the kitchen, the harvest field, the glass factory, the railroad, the coal mine, the department store and the board of trade.

Someone has said, "We attract hearts by the qualities we display; we retain them by the qualities we possess." In the last analysis, what we determine our real worth, and fixes our destiny for time and for eternity.

The Efficient Church

BY EDGAR H. STRANAHAN

The church that comes nearest the highest standard of efficiency is the one that has the largest proportion of members who are filled with the Holy Spirit. There can be no substitute for the power which is God given. Before God can be gotten into lives and before lives can be brought into vital relation to Him the Holy Spirit must have the right of way in the Church. It is hardly possible to stress this too much. It is fundamental and supreme. It is an abiding and eternal necessity. The most stupendous errors of the church have been made when connections were broken with heaven. Of itself the church can do nothing. However exalted our idea of the church may be, and it should be high, there is little of value left when the Head is severed from the body.

Any plan of church work which has not the sanction of Jesus Christ, the Head of the church, which cannot be functioned by the members who are best acquainted with the mind of the Master and which does not have spiritual results as an end, cannot be for efficiency.

Let it be kept constantly in thought that the introduction of new methods, the use of new phrases and terminology, an increase in the intricacy or amount of machinery and the talk of "system," "practicability," "modern," and "efficiency" in no way lessens the necessity of prayer, Bible study, personal consecration, worship, and all the other means of grace and power. May we repeat the thought, these are of the greatest importance and cannot even be compromised by him who would aid the church in its battle for efficiency. Surely I have made it clear that I believe in the necessity of the enduement of power from on high through the Holy Spirit. I trust it is so evident that no one may forget this in the discussion that follows.

Thus far every Christian and particularly every Quaker will willingly and even enthusiastically go, but all too many of our number refuse to go farther. Every one who has frequently attended conferences or Quarterly and Yearly Meetings where methods of church work and the shortcomings of the Society are freely discussed, has heard it said repeatedly that all we need as a religious body is an outpouring of the Holy Spirit; that what we need is spiritual power alone. Sometimes it is inferred that organization is a sure sign of a lack of spiritual life and not infrequently it is impressed that organization is rather to be tolerated as a necessary evil than to be cherished as a means of power.

Right at this point I take issue with him who assails organization just because it is organization. There is "organizing" and "organizing." We trust before finishing to present that degree of organization that is good.

The difficulty with those who decry organization is that failure on their own or others' part has given them a discouraged outlook. Perchance some one known to be lacking in spiritual grasp has too zealously defended or promoted organization. It may be that the expense of a "self-binder" has made them prefer the scythe. Maybe the skill needed to run an auto has made them cling to the push cart. Inborn conservatism, an absence of a willingness to do "team work," a limiting of the will of God, a short-sighted vision as to the plan and purpose of God for the world of men, a lack of information as to the needs of communities and the best methods to be used, one of these or other reasons may easily have entered into the situation. We are not here to condemn, it does not behoove us to do so, but the maintenance of any or all of these does not deny the advisability or even necessity of organization. If you want some unanswerable arguments in favor of organization, study your Bible, its very existence is in itself a testimony to the value of organization.

Let us suggest another viewpoint. Spiritual power comes as the channels are kept open to the throne, but God never intended to pour power into air-tight compartments where it could be hermetically sealed. He desires of His people that they should be channels themselves. We are not to question the wisdom of the Omniscient who forever ordained that, while He alone could do the work to make possible men's salvation, men themselves must convey the "good news of salvation" to the lost. Tarrying at Jerusalem was not to be a taking up of perpetual residence. The ends of the earth needed, and still need, men with Pentecostal experience. Pentecost will hardly be repeated, until men are willing to undertake the task of Pentecost. It is one thing to get the power of God, from God, it is quite another thing to get the power of God, from God, through us to others. Organization has little if anything to do with the getting of the power, at most it can be but a help. To get that power to men is the great problem that confronts us. The church will never be efficient until it has learned how to do this. We get power by knowing God; we distribute power by knowing men.

Yet another consideration must be weighed before we come to the more technical discussion. What is salvation? Here again we often meet people who have too narrow a conception of what is comprehended in the "saving" of a man. To emphasize only that from which men are saved is good but not all. From sinking sand to solid rock is a fine journey, to be made only as the Savior is leader. To dwell upon the glories of "the land over there" is not out of place, but it is not all inclusive. Throughout this article the attempt is not to have people subtract but to add. God is a great deal bigger than any of us realize and the uttermost salvation which He wrought for us in Jesus Christ embraces the needs of every man and every need of every man, if we, as His fellow-workmen, are faithful.

render to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord—enlistment in His service—loyalty to His church.” Any salvation short of this is not “full salvation.”

It thus appears that to get men saved means more than merely to have them forsake their sins and accept Jesus as their Savior; the task is not completed even when they have gone a step farther and surrendered their all to Him and acknowledged Him as Lord of all. Loyalty to His Church and the finding of a worth-while task are also integral parts of salvation. The church is surely not efficient until it is getting men saved. Paul, with all of his optimism said it took “all means to save some,” certainly no less than “all means” will do in attempting Jesus’ program for His Church which included “all men everywhere.” A careful study of the New Testament Church discloses the fact that it had no hard and fast rules, regulations and methods that were to stand regardless of what was accomplished. Those Christians dared to even overthrow some cherished plans and methods, made sacred by long usage, that a better grade of work might be done. Plans and methods are never to be maintained at the expense of men. Heaven would be bankrupt rather than see man fall short of his highest and best. Theoretically, at least, Quakerism is particularly furnished to adjust its plans and workings to meet the variety of needs which most of any group of men presents. Flexibility in methods at no time requires a shifting of foundations. There is no need for trimming sails in a doctrinal way in order to reach men, but there is a fundamental need of knowing men, knowing where and how they live and think, that the abiding Gospel of Jesus Christ may be brought to every one. The efficient Church will have a desire for every man.

What do we mean by “efficiency” as applied to a church? Regardless of the definition which any one may get from a dictionary, it may briefly be stated that when a Church is efficient it is doing all the work designed by its organizer with the least loss of energy. As we have not as yet found any instrument by which to measure the intangible spiritual forces and results, we are forced to admit that we cannot be exact in measuring church efficiency. All we can do is to examine into the outward results and the machinery by which these are obtained. No one is more ready to grant, than I, that peculiar conditions may put the lie to apparent conditions as disclosed from statistics. The strength of an organization having to do so largely with spiritual matters can never be fully measured by figures. Figures do, however, make a basis for a standard of comparison. Especially can a church compare itself with itself in different periods.

At this time, though, we are attempting to deal, not so much with statistics as with plans and methods. We take it that a church that is not equipped for certain work is not likely to do that work. Unless there is a machine that is builded for a certain specific piece of work that work is not likely to get done. Surely we will agree that a church that is expecting to make a record cannot be counted efficient except it is planning to do certain things plainly within its sphere of action. Achievements and planning are usually in direct proportion. In all Biblical history there is no indication that God wanted His people to let things drift, to let chance rule, permit matters to work themselves out in a haphazard manner. “Jacob digged a well,” “Abram went out,” “Isaiah said ‘here am I.’” God’s blessings are on the man who is in the line of active duty.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Concerning the Use of Young Friends

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

(CONCLUDED)

Opportunity for Training in the Home Meeting

I am reminded of a story which no doubt many of you heard the great preacher Russell H. Conwell tell. I shall suggest only that part of it absolutely necessary to illustrate the truth it bears for our Quarterly Meeting in connection with the subject it has seemed right for me to present.

Ali Hafed was the owner of a little farm in Persia of particular value because of the clear stream which flowed through it over the white sands. He had a family of capable children, and was often meditating as to the use to which these children might put their growing capabilities. It was while he was in this attitude of mind that he received a visit from a priest of Budha. They sat far into the night, the priest telling how the world was made; how iron and gold and silver were formed, explaining that diamonds are congealed sunlight. He said that with a diamond the size of his thumb’s end, Ali Hafed could buy farms like his own for all his children. With a handful he could buy a province, and with a mine he might set his children on thrones. Ali Hafed retired that night with his mind full of plans for helping his children to positions where they might, as he thought, be of some account in the world. He wakened the priest of Budha early to ask where he could find a mine and how he might start in search of diamonds. “There are many mines yet undiscovered,” replied the priest. “How may I know when I have found the place?” “When you find a clear stream flowing over white sands, there certainly you will find diamonds.”

Ali Hafed sold his farm, left his family in charge of a neighbor, and began his search. It was a story of suffering and struggle for the sake of a far away family. Finally, on the shore of Spain, without money and in despair, he threw himself into the incoming tide.

The new owner of the farm soon received a visit from the priest of Budha. As the priest entered the door he said, “Has Ali Hafed returned?” for he saw a gleam of light from a rough stone lying on the shelf. “No, Ali Hafed has not returned; that is a little stone with a very bright eye which I found in the sand as I was watering my camel this morning.” Thus, it is claimed, were discovered the ancient diamond mines of Golconda. The old farm, as shovelful after shovelful was sifted, afforded diamonds with which to make his children rulers on thrones, if Ali Hafed had only been there in his old place.

The members of the Friends Church in the particular meetings over the country have been meditating for the last few years more than ever before upon how the young people can be placed in positions of usefulness where their capabilities may be appreciated, where they will be of some account to the church. It is not strange that with this attitude of mind we should have been ready to listen with enthusiasm while the chairman of the commission on young people's work at our recent great gathering told of the fellowship movement among the younger men and women of England; while he spoke of the Whittier Guest House and its atmosphere of spiritual and intellectual meditation as young Friends gathered there for rest and recreation; when he told of Winona, with its days of friendly companionship and hours of searching questioning, "What wilt thou have me to do?"

During the months since we have been asking ourselves, "Where shall we go to find the mine of opportunity for our young people?" I am not trying to say that like Ali Hafed we have sold our farm and gone on a search. We have remained at home and worked away at our tasks; but we must all agree that in many places the young people have been left in charge of the Bible School, the Christian Endeavor Society, and the Friendly Round Tables, while we have watched anxiously all about the horizon for the Secretary of the Young Friends movement to appear with his definite suggestions, telling us how we may know when we find the mine for our children.

We would not be willing to delay until our successors at a later day discover the mines along the stream in the garden of our particular meeting, or on our Quarterly Meeting farm, where we have been living and working for years unconscious of the rich mine of opportunity for the young hidden there. It is certain that if the chairman of that commission could visit us to find us digging in our own land he would say, "Wherever you find old and young working together on the committees of the church and developing the departments of activity of the church, there you are certain to be entering the mine of opportunity for the young people, which will make them able to exercise their growing capabilities and be of some account in the church."

The Question for Whitewater Quarterly Meeting

Let us continue to send young Friends to the summer assemblies, let us continue to look forward to the visit of a Secretary of the Board of Young Friends' Activities, but let us ask ourselves if he can recommend anything better for the young and for the whole church and for the outside world than that we use the young Friends here and now.

The other day a young college graduate came to me with much concern about his life work. He desires to help the world through the Society of Friends, and felt not a little disturbed that his only chance of service seems through the Y. M. C. A. "If the Society of Friends does not wish to use me, I must seek work elsewhere," he concluded bitterly. "But I have never seen thee at business meeting, attendance upon which is one way of manifesting one's willingness to be of service," I explained, half conscious of what I see clearly since. This young man has needed in the past to be shown the importance of allying himself with the business affairs of the church. This and similar cases among us as well as the too frequent absence of our consecrated young people from business meetings, lead to the conclusion that our young Friends need to be advised as to our attitude toward their presence with us and concerning the use they might be in our deliberations. Yesterday, in looking over the personnel of the committees of this meeting, I discovered that, aside from the committee on entertainment, there is only one Friend under thirty or possibly thirty-five years of age. Today, in listening to the call of representatives, any student of church affairs might have been impressed by the entire absence of the names of our younger members. These and other facts suggest that we are not showing young Friends our anxiety for their presence and assistance. There are some definite suggestions which I might endeavor to make here were it not that the business which has already come before this meeting today, is itself full of suggestions on the subject. I therefore leave the matter for discussion and further development. I should be glad if one of the committees just appointed or a new one chosen now, might be given the duty of considering what use we can advantageously make of young Friends in Quarterly and Monthly Meetings.

The commission report referred to above contains one conclusion and one recommendation which I should like to read. Conclusion five:

We have a large body of intelligent young Friends, about twenty-five per cent. of our entire membership, who are more faithful in attendance upon meetings for worship than the adult membership, but who are not attending and are not being adequately used in Monthly Meeting activities.

Recommendation six—That young Friends inform themselves concerning the work of the meeting and the general affairs of the church; that they habitually attend business and other gatherings of their Monthly Meeting, and hold themselves in readiness to assist in any and every way as opportunity offers.

As I have said before, it seems to me that the question for us as a Quarterly Meeting and for the particular meetings which we represent is, how can we help the young Friends to do their duty more fully, how can we effectually encourage them to come to the business meetings and to inform themselves about the church affairs, and to be in readiness for any opportunity of service which may open for them. How can we, like Paul, guide while we lean upon these Timothys?

[After due deliberation a committee was appointed to make plans for the next Quarterly Meeting and to send up suggestions concerning policies for future appointments.]

Roughing It in the Mountains

The work in the mountains of Kentucky is hard, and not till one has spent years of toil among the mountain people does he realize the hardships before him. And yet, there is no field where the opportunities are greater and the people more responsive. When you understand how terrible our roads are, following the beds of streams and in high water impassable; how wretched are some of the buildings we meet in, but mere box houses, of rough boards and benches, cold and uninviting; how hard it is to find a teacher who knows how to teach the Bible; how people who did not believe in a Sunday-school have fought us bitterly and locked buildings on us; how we have to contend with "blind tigers" and distillers; and how when winter sets in, the roads are so impassable and the buildings are so cold, that we are forced to go into winter quarters; then you can appreciate the work accomplished.

In one school at Pine Ridge two boys came barefooted through the ice and snow. They had no shoes nor stockings, and one of them did not have a coat, and yet they came all winter. At Knowlton, (our Mt. Canaan school) all through the winter, over terrible roads and in a house where we had to hug the stove to keep warm, they met every Sunday but two. There is no school in the city that would have attempted to run under the conditions they did there. At Barker School, on Sand Lick, we could find only two teachers in the whole neighborhood who could teach, and we had to ask a man five miles from there to superintend. He superintends that school and then walks three miles and superintends another school at the Happy Home Church, and then walks two miles to his home, making ten miles he walks every Sunday. How many of our city superintendents would do that, and over such roads and two mountains to cross? At Hattan Creek, they laid in wait for me with shotguns when I stood out against a preacher who was trying to tear up the work that we were carrying on there, but today they are the most loyal friends I have, because they saw I was in the right. Last night a crowded house awaited me at their prayer meeting, and many of them came three and four miles, walking. At Roger's Chapel we gave the distillery that had set up within a mile of our Sunday-school, notice to close out, or we would have the revenue officers there at once, and they closed out, two young men riding horseback fifteen miles to bring me the news and to tell me that they would see that they stayed closed.

Thus are the Sunday-schools in the mountains uplifting our people and standing for things that are right. And this is but a small part of the great work that they are doing.

PAUL DERTHICK,

Missionary of the American Sunday School Union.

Using Denominational Names for Merchandise

The use of the words "Quaker" and "Friends" to distinguish certain articles of merchandise, as in the case of "Quaker Oats" and "Quaker Whiskey," etc., has naturally aroused considerable feeling among Friends. Indiana already has a law on the subject, but it has never been construed by the courts. The Five Years Meeting referred the question to the Board on Legislation and Temperance, which sought to have appropriate measures introduced in several legislatures. Efforts were made to get a law in Nebraska by James Stephen of Central City, a Friend, and a member of the Board and also of the legislature. The bill passed the House, but failed in the Senate after a fight made upon it by certain business interests affected.

An account of a similar effort in New York is given in the report made by a special committee of the New York Yearly Meeting to that body on May 29th, as follows:

To New York Yearly Meeting:

Your Committee, acting jointly with the Law Committee of the Representative Committee of the Yearly Meeting in the other branch of Friends, drafted a bill which was at the last session of the Legislature introduced in the Assembly and referred to the Judiciary Committee. In this work we wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to Hon. Victor J. Dowling for his valuable co-operation, influence and advice.

Objections being made to the bill on behalf of certain business concerns using the name "Quaker" in connection with their merchandise, the view of the Assembly Judiciary Committee at first seemed to be that, while in certain lines it might well be allowed, the use of such a name upon a brand of whiskey ought to be prevented by law; and with that light upon the matter, negotiations were opened with your Committee by one of the less offensive users of the name in trade, looking toward their use of the name being licensed by the Society, in return for which exclusive privilege they would join in urging the passage of the bill and assist in suppressing such use in other businesses. To this proposition answer was made that the principle involved was, that it was immoral for anyone to trade for his own profit upon the supposed virtues of another, and a public indecency to exploit for that purpose the name of a religious denomination, and that no compromise could be made by the Society of that principle.

A public hearing was therefore requested before the Assembly Committee, which was attended by a number of Friends and by the opponents of the bill. Addresses in support of the bill were made by certain members of your Committee, but the opposition of the business interests proved more influential with the Judiciary Committee than all the arguments of Friends. We are informed that only three members of that committee were in favor of reporting the bill back to the Assembly for action, as against twelve opposed.

While the matter was pending in the Legislature, it may be worth mentioning, the sky sign on Columbus Circle, New York City, advertising "Quaker Whiskey" was modified by the removal from it of the conventionalized Quaker figure, but it has since been restored in all its glowing offensiveness.

Although the businesses using the name "Quaker" for their goods are averse to criticism in the public prints of their practices in this regard, as tending to destroy the effect of their advertisements, yet during the pendency of the matter at Albany, one of your Committee was requested by a New York newspaper to write a letter, which it published, explaining the position of Friends in regard to it; much of its force, however, being taken away by the letter being printed as a plea of the "attorney" for the Society. This letter was reprinted in the Friends' Intelligencer. Another New York paper commented editorially upon the proposed legislation as being foolish and useless, and subsequent letters from Friends to the papers were never published.

The Legislative Committee, therefore, having been unconvinced of the correctness of our point of view, and public discussion in the newspapers being apparently impracticable, the difficulty is presented how to call public attention to the injustice to which Friends are subjected, especially to the iniquity of a liquor manufacturer advertising his wares under the name of a religious body which has long borne a testimony against the making, sale or use of liquor.

Your Committee, therefore, offer this suggestion for your consideration: Beginning with THE AMERICAN FRIEND (and the Friends' Intelligencer), let the facts be laid before the religious press of the whole country, and other denominations be invited to help the Society out of its undesired monopoly of this kind of advertising. For, though Friends are now the only sufferers in this way, under the present state of the law no denominational name is legally exempt from similar exploitation. To bring home to other denominations our situation, it is suggested that THE AMERICAN FRIEND (and Friends' Intelligencer) be requested to print in display type imaginary advertisements under other denominational names, alternately with fanciful advertisements of goods actually bearing the "Quaker" name, for example, as follows:

"QUAKER WHISKEY, HONEST AS ITS NAME"

"BAPTIST BEER IS THE BEST BOOZE"

"QUAKER MOTH-PROOF CHESTS

PROTECT YOUR CLOTHES
REGARDLESS OF CREED"

"METHODIST MARTINIS

MAKE MULTITUDES MERRY"

"QUAKER TIRES ARE UNTIREABLE"

"EPISCOPALIAN PAINT—COVERS A MULTITUDE OF SINS"

"QUAKER CATSUP

THE SAUCE FOR BOTH GOOSE AND GANDER"

"CATHOLIC COCKTAILS—A CURE FOR ALL CARE"

"PRESBYTERIAN PURSES FOR PLETHORIC POCKETS"

"QUAKER CORSETS GIRDLE THE EARTH"

"HEBREW HAIRBRUSHES FOR HIRSUTE HEADS"

"QUAKER LACE IS A MEANS OF GRACE"

"LUTHERAN LOOKING GLASSES GIVE PIOUS REFLECTIONS"

May we not hope that such a display, if persistently well blazoned, might arouse enough public indignation on the subject so that relief in statutory form would not long be denied?

For the Committee,

(Signed) BENJAMIN H. DOANE.

The suggestion above made was not approved by the Yearly Meeting, but the matter was left in the hands of the Committee, with power, to use such means as way opened for in bringing the matter to the attention of other religious bodies and seeking their co-operation.

How Others View the Question

The Poughkeepsie Evening Star (N. Y.), under date of June 13th, has an editorial on the subject of "Commercializing Ideals," which is appropriate to the occasion, as follows:

"The Society of Friends or Quaker Communion are justly indignant, and withal apprehensive, at a growing custom of trading in the name Quaker. It has come to be offensively familiar not only that one must buy 'Quaker' oats for breakfast and cook them on a 'Quaker' range, but skilled advertisers make it suggestively apparent that one is not doing wholly right by his time unless he tip a bottle of "Quaker" whiskey and pour this ardent beverage into a glass, all of which is pictorially presented by a giant electric sign.

"At the Five Years Meeting held in Indianapolis in last October, the Society took steps to put an end to this noxious exploiting for lucre the good name and sterling honesty which popularly characterize their membership. In both Indiana and Illinois laws have been enacted which prohibit the commercial use of the word Quaker, which is the sacred pseudonym of an ancient and honorable religious sect. The Five Years Meeting handed down to the annual meetings locally held throughout the country the commission of continuing the work. In New York a bill was presented at the last session of the legislature looking to the same end, and it was not reported out of committee, being held up by a vote of 3 to 12.

"The commercial value of a good name is well exemplified in this instance, as one concern has offered the Quakers a considerable sum of money and promised to pay for the lobbying of laws and litigating their enforcement, upon condition that it be given the exclusive right to use the name Quaker to characterize its product. Probably the Friends recall that Shakespeare has said, 'A courteous, brave and generous man will not insult me; none others can.' Otherwise they might feel justified in qualifying their proverbial equanimity of temper and of rebuffing such a gross affront as it intrinsically deserves.

"Even the government has found it expedient, some years ago, to pass a law prohibiting the use of the flag for commercial purposes. As the American commercial 'conscience' is a nauseous thing, the government thought it necessary to protect the public sense of propriety from conscienceless abuse and to safeguard the national emblem for its intended symbolism.

"All sects and denominations should accord a spirited co-operation to the Quakers in their antagonism to this unseemly practice. It would be belittling to the higher instincts to have our impressionable youth familiarized with bill-board artistry portraying Baptist Beer, Presbyterian Punch, Catholic Cocktails and Episcopal Paint Covering a Multitude of Sins.

"If a manufacturer have merit in his wares this should be susceptible of being brought out in ways which do not 'smell to heaven.' There are other routes to the divine conception and dealers who have not the decency to keep their traffic within legitimate bounds of trade, free from offence to personal and religious sensibilities, should be shown that this country is peopled with decent persons who have no wish to confound their or their neighbors' religious insignia with the trademarks of commerce.

"That committee, and others like them, will find it altogether wholesome to report out bills against sacrilege. If not, their constituents will find a way to elect legislators who shall be more decently responsive to the proprieties."

We feel that the time has come when we may well invoke the aid of the religious press of other denominations in making war upon this commercialization of religious names. We herewith call their attention to the matter, and ask their assistance in calling public attention to this injustice.

Militarism in Canada

BY ARTHUR GARRATT DORLAND

In an article of recent date we tried to show that the phenomenal advance of the Peace Movement has tended to make us as Friends feel less responsible for the advocacy of our peace principles. This is due to the fact that some of us have come to believe that our position in regard to war has been pretty generally accepted, in theory at least, by the majority of thinking persons today. But we also tried to point out that the position adopted by many of the recent advocates of peace differed fundamentally from the position of Friends. For the former, while they condemn the disastrous results of war, still believe that many wars are under certain circumstances justifiable and right. But Friends believe that since war is inherently immoral, it can never be right; and that therefore peaceable methods are the only right and just methods of settling international disputes.

In this article we wish to show that in addition to the duty laid upon us as Friends to direct this forming sentiment in favor of peace along the highest and best lines, it is also our duty to oppose the military propagandist in his attempt to recover the ground recently lost owing to the phenomenal progress of the Peace Movement.

We would do wisely here in Canada to guard against lapsing into a condition of self-congratulatory inaction. Perhaps we are not fully aware that the phenomenal success of the Peace Movement, which we regard with so much complacency, has aroused just as determined an effort on the part of the militarists to recapture public opinion. Through our educational institutions, by schools for compulsory cadet corps and for universal military training, and by periodical war-scare talks, the militarists are trying to familiarize the people with the notion of universal military training and a compulsory militia service. The militarists have not been slow to see that if—through our schools especially—they can win the present rising generation over to their military propaganda, they will have set back the cause of peace for over a century and have won Canada for militarism.

This is exactly what they are trying to do in our sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand, for we should realize at the start that the militarists movement throughout the British Domains is a consistently organized unit and not the sporadic outburst of isolated military enthusiasts. We strongly suspect that the arch mover is Lord Roberts, who is conducting a somewhat similar campaign now in England in favor of national military service.

A few years ago we would have laughed at the idea of military conscription in a free British Dominion; yet what we might have thought impossible has been brought about in Australia and New Zealand by the recent Defence Acts. By these acts every one is required to become a member of the militia, and a refusal to do so can be tried and punished by court-martial from which there is no appeal to a civil court. All boys at the age of eleven and a half years are required to begin military training. Any one evading the law may be imprisoned in the guard house and fined $500.00 by the Military Board. Any principal of a school who fails to co-operate with this scheme of universal military training may be dismissed by the Board. If you ask whether these laws are enforced, read the following extract from an article by a young Australian Friend, Elliot Thorpe, which appeared recently in the Quaker:

The authorities are unbending in their persecution of genuine conscientious objectors and in their rough riding over the weakness of helpless lads. Roy Krugger, of Ballarat, has been ordered into military custody for refusing to deny the Lord Jesus, as he has come to learn Him. Young Giles, of Broken Hill, exists on one pound of bread a day, and as much water as he cares to drink, for being true to an ideal of labor free from military domination. Osborne, of Sydney, who, orphaned, has to support eight brothers and sisters, all under sixteen years of age—a task which he pleads with tears in his eyes, absorbs all his time and energy—is ordered to make up his back drills or pay costs.

It is gratifying to know, however, that Friends in Australia, though few in numbers and scattered as they are, have come nobly to the front. They have initiated and organized an "Australian Freedom League" which now claims 3,000 definite members in South Australia alone, as a protest against compulsory military service. We believe that Friends and those sensible Christian people who have joined this anti-military movement in Australia will eventually win out; but it will mean, as it has meant, persistent, organized work with not a little hardship, as the above extract shows.

Now this is what is actually going on in our sister Dominions of Australia and New Zealand. If Colonel Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia for Canada, had his way this is what would be done in Canada. That he and those associated with him, are looking forward to some such scheme for Canada is evident from his speech at Vancouver, B. C., August 6th, when he said, speaking not of the navy but of the militia: "That Canada must get in line with New Zealand, South Africa and Australia in combining with the mother country in a general scheme of defence" (From Manitoba Free Press, August 7, 1912).

In view of all these facts it might be well worth knowing at first hand and through their official channels just what the militarists propose to do in Canada. This is told in the official journal of the Canadian Defence League of which we give the following extract as printed in a recent number of the Toronto Globe:

What the Canadian Defence League has in mind as the utmost required is that the Permanent Corps of Canada shall be recruited as now by voluntary enlistment. Then, that Canada should have universal military training for the whole of the male population. The first step is physical and military training for all boys while at school as a part of the school system. The second step is after school a continuation of this training up to the age of eighteen in cadet corps and similar institutions under state supervision. The third step is that all youths, physically fit, beginning at the age of eighteen, should have in the first year, say, four months' continuous recruit training under canvass, and during the next three years an annual camp for, say, sixteen days. If with this is coupled maneuvers once in three years, there will be no question of the Canadian militia for home defence.

We should be obliged if the militarists would point out against whom we are to defend ourselves. Probably against Germany! But if one carefully reads what they here propose, it is evident that in Canada as in Australia, they are aiming at nothing short of universal military training and a compulsory militia service practically amounting to conscription.

If the advocacy of such views were confined to the militarists alone we would not be greatly concerned, for we do not expect them to think otherwise. For there is a class of militarists in Canada whose thoughts all wear military uniforms and whose heads are full of visions of the Canadian people marching and counter-marching and saluting officers who gallop around dashingly amid all the pomp and circumstance of glorious war! But when one sees a notice such as the following which we quote from World Wide, March 13, 1913, one feels that what has been aptly described as the "mania of militarism" has infected others besides the militarists themselves. This is the notice:

The Committee of One Hundred of the Toronto Board of Trade has unanimously endorsed universal Military Training in Canada and called on the Council of the Board of Trade to consider the question and if thought advisable, to urge the Dominion Government to look into the merits of militia in other countries.

When a sober civilian body puts itself on record as upholding such views it is high time to wake up to the fact that the cause of peace is not making the progress it might, and on the other hand that militarism is gaining favorable consideration in many influential civilian circles.

There are other facts we might mention to illustrate this. The President of one of our three leading universities just recently put himself on record as favoring universal military service and the same university is making a large appropriation to buy a site for a drill hall. Many of our big collegiate institutes and high schools have cadet corps in which attendance is practically compulsory. For several years it has been the policy of the Government to subsidize schools which gave military training, thus discriminating against those where it was not taught. And all this is with a definite purpose. To pretend that the purpose of all this military training in the schools and colleges is the physical development of the students, will not do. "Uniforms and guns have a definite significance. They minister to the war passion. They signify war."

The Hon. W. A. Charlton, member for Norfolk, in a recent eloquent speech in the House of Commons before the third reading of the Naval Bill, made the following striking statement: "The world has had three historic scourges—famine, pestilence and war. Commerce has slain the first, and science has overcome the second. Who is to destroy war?" His answer is: "Christianity and sensible people."

Have we then as a Christian body a definite mission to perform in Canada? Most emphatically, "yes." Let us, therefore, in the light of Christ's teaching and of reason try to win men to higher ideals of true service to their country. Let us "be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves"; and God forbid that through the lack of our testimony there should ever occur in Canada what is now occurring in Australia and New Zealand.

Canada Yearly Meeting

BY GURNEY BINFORD

It is most interesting to think of Canada Yearly Meeting, which is meeting in its annual gathering from the 25th to the 30th of this month, as an official part of the Five Years Meeting of American Friends. And, besides being interesting, it is also a most significant fact. While Friends have always been interested in affairs political and national, they have never been satisfied to limit national interests to any one nation. I think it would be no mistake to say that this is one of the reasons why the Five Years Meeting is so glad to have Canadian Friends as an integral part of itself. Were all the yearly meetings composing it within the borders of the United States, there would be besides Foreign Missionary work no internal reminder of the fact that the interests of Friends are not limited to national boundaries.

Sometimes it has seemed to Friends in Canada that their one Yearly Meeting, and it is not a large one, scarcely need take the trouble of maintaining connection with the Five Years Meeting, but the fact that this feeling has not interfered with co-operation makes the union all the more significant for federation of church interests.

In the Peace and Arbitration cause Canadian Friends have some difficult problems and it is most gratifying to learn that they are making an effort to exert an influence in the right direction. Three of the Quarterly Meetings in their most recent sessions, placed on record in their minutes concerns for the attitude of the Canadian Government on questions affecting the peace movement. Friends in the States have heard with pleasure of this activity and feel great sympathy with our Friends in Canada on this question.

The interchange of ministering Friends is another source of most intimate connection between Friends in Canada and in the States. The ministry of visiting Friends from Canada is remembered with great consolation in many places in the States, and today in three or more places Friends from Canada are most acceptably engaged in ministerial service in the States. Wherever one goes in visiting meetings in Canada, he will hear the names of ministers from the States mentioned in most loving appreciation. At the time of the great awakening and revivals, a little more than a quarter of a century ago, it was Friends from the States that joined with others in ministering to the needs of hungry souls and gave new activity to Friends in Canada. This activity had some bad results in the way of a separation which is much deplored. But it taught a lesson of the need of forbearance and there may have been other gains, though now it seems to many that the losses outweigh the gains. One aged Friend said that she wishes to live to see the day when the conservative and the progressive Friends will be reunited. The way may not yet be open for this, but recently meeting with Friends in Canada, I found a concern that Friends be in the right spirit of Friendliness and readiness for the leading of the Lord.

I also found a revival of the spirit of concern that Canada Yearly Meeting shall have a body of Young Friends who shall have the spirit and qualifications to fill the place that Friends ought to fill in this generation. Let me ask that Friends throughout the States as they read this number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND pray especially for God's blessing upon Canada Yearly Meeting, which will be in session.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Fred Tormohlen has resigned the pastorate of the Portland Friends' Meeting.

A conference of Whitewater Quarterly Meeting Bible schools was held at South Eighth Street meeting house, Richmond, on the afternoon and evening of June 17. There was a profitable discussion of the most improved methods in Bible school work. Mrs. Prof. J. H. Coffin read a paper on "The Organized Class," while Charles E. Tebbetts discussed the place of missions in the Bible school. J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage, gave an address in the evening. The conference was presided over by Mrs. W. O. Mendenhall, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.

President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, and Mrs. Kelly, will sail from New York on June 28, for a summer's stay in England.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The hearts of Oskaloosa Friends were gladdened recently by a visit from Maurice Rountree, of London Yearly Meeting, and L. Hollingsworth Wood and Carolena M. Wood, of New York Yearly Meeting. They arrived about noon, June 2, and in the evening a reception was given them, at which time Maurice Rountree spoke of the Young Friends' Movement in England, Carolena M. Wood spoke of the Whittier Guest House, and L. Hollingsworth Wood spoke of the Promotion of the spirit of Fellowship among Friends. Each was listened to with the deepest interest and appreciation. The next morning they attended Penn College chapel exercises and again each spoke in a most interesting and helpful way. After twenty-four busy hours spent with Oskaloosa Friends, they left for Central City, Nebraska. Oskaloosa Friends feel that their visit, though brief, did us much good.

President David M. Edwards is in attendance at the Lake Geneva Y. M. C. A. Summer camp, where the college section is holding a ten days' session. He is instructor in one course.

Walter R. Miles, who has been serving the meeting at West Branch as pastor and prosecuting his studies in the University at the same time, took the degree of Ph.D. on June 11 at the S. U. I. He is a graduate of Pacific and Earlham Colleges, and for two years was a professor in Penn College. He goes to Middletown, Connecticut, the middle of July to become professor of psychology at Wesleyan University, succeeding Dr. Raymond Dodge, who goes to Washington City.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Our pastor, H. M. Vore and wife, of Armistad, New Mexico, have returned from a two months' trip through south Texas and Louisiana. They are expecting to make their home after October 1, next, near Bornami, Louisiana. They will be greatly missed in our community and meeting. Our meeting observed "Mothers' Day" with very appropriate exercises. An appreciative audience greeted the children in their exercises on Children's Day, the 8th of June. Our Monthly Meeting now convenes in the homes of the members, the second Saturday in each month.

The Monthly Meeting at League City, Texas, is a comparatively new one. Friends there are endeavoring to erect a meeting house, but will be unable to complete it without outside help. Any one desiring to help in this enterprise can send direct to Rachel Kenworthy Taylor, League City, Texas, and it will be greatly appreciated.

The last Monthly Meeting at League City, Texas, adopted a minute endorsing THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and urged all members to take the paper. An agent was named to canvass for subscriptions.

New York Yearly Meeting

In connection with the report of the Committee on the Study of Friends' Principles at New York Yearly Meeting, the subject of capital punishment was brought before the meeting, and Friends were urged to take all possible action for its abolition. The matter was referred to the Committee on Special Legislation, and also to the Committee on Legislation of the Five Years Meeting.

Western Yearly Meeting

Bloomington Monthly Meeting was held at Bloomington, Indiana, June 18, 1913. The regular routine business was transacted. Three young girls who were associate members were received as full members, also one came in by request, believing it was right. Enos Harvey was chosen pastor for another year. Solomon B. Woodard, a minister, requested a minute to visit all the meetings of Bloomington Quarterly Meeting, which was granted.

Kansas Yearly Meeting Pastors' Alliance

The Pastors' Alliance of Kansas Yearly Meeting convened in Wichita, Kansas, at the Friends' University, June 9, and continued for a session of three days. Meetings were held during the day and evening.

The plan of the meeting was to bring together the pastors of the Yearly Meeting and refresh their minds on Biblical knowledge as well as spiritual uplift. There were about forty-five visiting pastors from Kansas and Oklahoma. Great earnestness was manifested and a spiritual uplift was felt throughout the meeting.

William Smith, of Westfield, Indiana, was the Alliance speaker. He gave a series of lectures, eight in number, which gave the visiting pastors of Kansas Yearly Meeting many new and interesting things in the study of the Bible. Another visiting minister was Absalom Knight, of Georgetown, Illinois.

An English Biblical course in connection with the Biblical Department of Friends' University is offered to the pastors through correspondence, the time to complete the course being four years instead of two, when taking it at the University. Four pastors have completed the course, namely, Mary B. Hawkins, Cyrus H. Hawkins, Sarah L. Nichols and John Wright.

On the business session of the Alliance, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: L. C. Hinshaw, Wichita, Kansas, General Superintendent; John R. Wright, Argonia, Kansas, President; J. Arthur Wollam, Emporia, Kansas, Vice-President; Susie Allen, Haviland, Kansas, Secretary.

New Meeting at Newark, New Jersey

Editor American Friend:

May I ask if thee will kindly let Friends know, through the medium of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, that a meeting for worship is now being held on First-days in Newark, New Jersey, in the Y. M. C. A. building, Halsey street. The meeting is held at 11:00 A. M., and is preceded by a Bible class at 10:00 o'clock. The meeting has now been held for about two months and we have been greatly encouraged by an attendance of from twenty to thirty. I would much appreciate it if clerks of meetings would kindly advise me if they know of any Friends who have moved to this district, or who may move in the future, so that Friends here may call upon them and welcome them to our meeting.

PERCY C. GREY, Clerk.

Commencement Exercises

Penn College—Ex-Governor Herbert S. Hadley, of Kansas City, Missouri, had been chosen speaker for our Commencement, but about an hour before-time for the exercises to begin, a telegram was received stating that the train on which he was coming had been wrecked, and that it would be impossible for him to meet his engagement. President Edwards, as usual, was equal to the occasion. After a very short preparation, he delivered an able address on "The Chief Item of Poverty" to an audience of a thousand or more of the most scholarly and cultured people of the community. After listening to the address no one expressed regret over the failure of the ex-governor to meet his appointment.

The graduating class numbered thirty-five members; of these, twelve received the degree A.B., seven the degree Ph.B., and sixteen the degree B.S. Five were graduated with high honor on account of very high rank in scholarship as follows: Helen Edith Abrams, Jeannette Hadley, Mamie Marshall, Harold M. Lane, and Grover Philip Lichtenheld; while five were graduated with honor on account of high rank in scholarship as follows: Florence Faye Fry, Grace Edith Williams, Eugenia Malcolm, Harold D. Marshall, and Elmer E. Tatum.

The Haverford Scholarship was awarded to Harold M. Lane, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and the Bryn Mawr Scholarship to Mamie Marshall, of Union, Iowa. They are both members in the Society of Friends. The Freshman Biology Prize, $25.00 in cash provided by a friend of the College, was awarded to Esther Fallberg. The Haverford Quaker Study Prize was won again this year by a Penn student, Jens P. H. Jensen, a member of the Junior class. The Commencement exercises were followed by the annual banquet, served by the Ladies' Auxiliary, and the president's reception.

Twenty-one members of this year's class of graduates will receive a first grade state teacher's certificate for completing the course outlined by the Iowa State Board of Education. Several of these will continue their studies in other institutions. About two-thirds expect to teach next year. They are a fine scholarly group of young people whose influence in the classroom and in the community in which they teach will be most wholesome. Many of them are Friends. No doubt all of them will do their part in contributing to a movement which is rapidly becoming popular, that of teaching peace in the schools. In the course in Principles of Education given in Penn, several days are devoted to the study of the best methods of inculcating the principles of peace and universal goodwill.

Bloomingtondale Academy—Commencement exercises were held at Bloomingtondale Academy, Bloomingtondale, Indiana, on the evening of June 12th. There were ten graduates. The Alumni reunion was held on Commencement day, the program being given before noon. Lunch was served to a hundred guests seated under the trees on the campus, after which there followed a number of short talks from visitors. Many absent members sent greetings. Andrew F. Mitchell, of Long Beach, California, sent a letter and four boxes of Calarab figs, which were much appreciated. Graduates of this Academy are scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Louisiana and Texas, to Alberta, Canada. One is a missionary in Japan, another in Mexico.

Five Years Meeting Trustees

The Trustees of the Five Years Meeting have recently organized with the election of the following officers: President, James Wood, Mt. Kisco, New York; Vice-President, A. F. N. Hambleton, South Pasadena, California; Secretary, Edwin S. Jay, Richmond, Indiana; Treasurer, Amos K. Hollowell, Indianapolis, Indiana.

At St. Marys Ohio

Mary Sipe has just closed a week's meeting at this place which has been very helpful. The meeting at the present time is on the upward grade, reaching out for higher heights and deeper depths, while the Sunday-school is splendidly organized with a corps of Spirit-filled teachers. A monthly meeting was established here just a short time ago, which adds strength to the meeting. But with all this our hearts have been saddened by the resignation of our pastor, A. J. Furstenberger and his companion, to take effect in September. These dear Friends have labored faithfully with us for the past five years, not only shepherding the flock, but in the heat of the day, when the burden of the building was on, have stood at the front, side by side, praying, pushing, working day after day, until a Friends' Church was established in St. Marys where the full gospel can be taught. When the prospect of building was brought up, some thought it could not be accomplished at all, but the Father had spoken to Brother Furstenberger and he surmounted every difficulty until now the beautiful edifice speaks for itself.

When interviewing our pastor about his resignation his only reason given was that he felt he should give way to others. May God's richest blessing rest on them, is the wish of the Pastoral committee of the Friends' Church in St. Marys.

With the Children

The Robin's Secret

What do the robins whisper about
From their homes in the elms and birches?

I've tried to study the riddle out,
But still in my mind is many a doubt,
In spite of deep researches.

While all the world is in silence deep,
In the twilight of early dawning,
They begin to chirp and twitter and peep
As if they were talking in their sleep,
At three o'clock in the morning.

What do the robins whisper about
In the twilight of early dawning?
Listen, and tell me, if you find it out
What 'tis the robins whisper about
At three o'clock in the morning.

A Child's Gift

The part played by a nine-year-old girl in the founding of one of the city's largest churches, two hospitals and a great university was recognized recently by the congregation of Grace Baptist Church, Broad and Berks Streets, when a portrait of Hattie May Wiatt was unveiled, and the memory of the child whose mite started the building fund of the present church was lauded in a sermon by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell. Hattie May Wiatt was a member of the Sunday-school of the church when the congregation worshiped at Berks and Marvine Streets. Doctor Conwell told how one Sunday he found her outside the church trying to find her way into the Sunday-school. He told how he led her to a class in the school and how she came Sunday after Sunday.

Soon after the child, then nine years old, joined the school she was taken seriously ill. When physicians told the girl's parents that she could not recover, Hattie called her mother and gave her a little toy bank. "Please give the money to Mr. Conwell to build a new church," was the girl's farewell message. Mrs. Wiatt gave the bank, with its message, to Doctor Conwell, who used its contents, fifty-seven cents, to start a fund to purchase the site of the present church.

Doctor Conwell told how the owner of the land on which the church was later erected agreed to take the fifty-seven cents in payment for the land and a mortgage on the remainder; how the story of the girl's mite resulted in raising an additional fund of ten thousand dollars, and how the land was bought. Later the congregation formed the Wiatt Mite Society, named in honor of the girl giver. From that beginning arose the Baptist Temple, where worships one of the city's largest congregations; Temple University, where nearly eighty thousand students received instruction; Samaritan Hospital, where forty thousand persons were cared for in 1911, and Garrettson Hospital, which treated fourteen thousand patients last year.—The Philadelphia North American.

The Safest Bank

"When I am a man," said Tom, "I intend to put my money in the safest bank in the world."

"Which bank is that?" inquired Tom's father.

Tom hadn't thought of the matter. As he talked it over with his father, he found there were more things than he had dreamed of to render banks uncertain—fire, flood, burglars, panics, dishonest employees, so that even the strongest in the world might be compelled to suspend payment.

"But, papa," Tom asked in dismay, "isn't there one sure of keeping his promises?"

"There is One who has never forgotten or broken a promise. His promises are dated thousands of years back. They are scattered over the world. Not one of them has ever been refused redemption."

"Oh, that's the bank for me!"

He handed Tom a Bible.—Christian Endeavor World.

I Will Begin Now

"Mother, I mean to begin with the new year to love Jesus," said a sweet little girl of six summers.

"But," said her mother, "how do you know that you shall live till the new year?"

Emma dropped her eyes upon the floor, and sat for some moments in silence. At length she looked up, the tears glistening in her eyes, and said:

"Perhaps I shall not. I will begin now, and then, mother, I shall be a Christian when the new year begins, if God lets me live."

And by the side of her dear mamma she knelt and repeated the words of a favorite hymn.

A sweet season followed. Before a week had passed away Emma trusted that she had given her heart to the Savior. How many of our dear children, looking to Jesus to help them, have made the same resolve? Hasten to Him; tell Him how wicked you have been to refuse so long to love Him, after His great goodness to you.—Selected.

BOTH GAINED

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts

The notion that meat is necessary for real strength and foundation of solid flesh is now no longer as prevalent as formerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually sluggish a part of the time because they are not able to fully digest their food, and the undigested portion is changed into what is practically a kind of poison that acts upon the blood and nerves, thus getting all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes an Ills. man, "and up to two years ago, was in very poor health. I suffered with indigestion so that I only weighed 95 pounds.

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts food and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first, but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape-Nuts, too. Now she is fat and well and has gained 40 pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat.

"A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years, and was a heavy meat eater. Now, since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion.

"I could name a lot of persons who have rid themselves of indigestion by changing from a heavy meat diet to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Keep Adding Names

We sincerely trust that with the coming of hot weather, agents of THE AMERICAN FRIEND and others interested will not cease their efforts to add new names to our subscription list. Important contributions will appear all through the summer months, which no family of our members can miss without loss to themselves. Then, too, there are scores of farming communities where subscriptions can be secured now, with the close of harvest and the marketing of other crops, better than at any other time.

Latest From our Mexican Stations

Charles E. Tebbetts received word last week from Victoria, Mexico, dated June 14, to the effect that our missionaries there were safe at that time. This is cheering news indeed, and will relieve an anxiety that has been unbroken for more than two months.

There is no further word from Matehuala and Cedral, while the continued occupation of Matamoras by the rebel forces renders it impossible for missionary activities to be resumed in that city for the present.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

We regret to say that for some reason which we have not yet understood, we have failed to receive a report of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, much to our disappointment. It may have been lost in the mails. We feel that this statement is due our readers.

And every common bush afire with God."

Earlham College

The Commencement week at Earlham College this year was a red letter occasion for that institution. Extensive arrangements for a "home coming" of all old Earlham students brought out a crowd which thronged the grounds. It was estimated that fully 2,500 persons were present on the 24th, which was the "home coming" day.

On Saturday evening, the 21st, the annual musical recital was given in the auditorium, under the care of Miss Gaston, instructor in music. On Sabbath morning, Professor Elbert Russell gave the baccalaureate address before a large and appreciative audience. His discourse concerned the breadth of meaning involved in the mission of Christ to "seek and to save that which was lost." On Sabbath evening, Professor Raynor W. Kelsey, of Haverford College, addressed the largest annual meeting of the College Christian Associations that has ever been held here, elaborating the subject, "Covet the Best Gifts." Knowledge and righteousness were declared to be essential to the highest good.

Monday evening was devoted to a play, "The Importance of Being Earnest," by Oscar Wilde, given under the auspices of the Ionian and Phoenix Literary Societies.

Tuesday was "home coming" day. The early hours of the forenoon were devoted to registration and sociability. At 9:30 the old students, 1,200 strong, grouped into periods, circled the grounds in a line of march, following which these same groups in order rendered brief programs at the Chase out-door stage before the vast assembly. First, came the old Boarding School students, the group from '47 to '75 being represented by about 125 persons. One of the two living teachers of the first Boarding School, Sarah Woodard, of Fountain City, was present. Rufus H. Davis, aged 86, of Knightstown, the first student who slept in the old Boarding School; Timothy Wilson, of Richmond; Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, ex-speaker of the National House of Representatives, and other old timers were present.

Professor E. P. Trueblood, of Earlham, was master of ceremonies for these exercises. The first group, from '47 to '75, was represented by Wm. W. Jones, of Pittsburg; the group from '76 to '85 was led by Dr. Charles S. Bond, of Richmond; '86 to '90 sang words to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia"; '91 to '95 was the one that first originated the class yell; and so on, down to the present time, each group had some exercise of its own devising.

In the afternoon addresses were given by "Uncle Joe" Cannon; Professor Don Barrett, of Haverford, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Ella Johnson, of Richmond, and Wm. C. Dennis, of Washington, D. C. Music was rendered by the Madrigal and Glee Clubs and solos were given by Professor G. A. Lehman and Mrs. Bartel. The Alumni Association met at 4 o'clock, and

"Handling aright the word of Truth."—II. Tim. 2: 15.

We have endeavored to consider the ministry in some of its practical aspects. A knowledge of exegesis and homiletics, a vision of the wide scope of Christian ministrations, a recognition of the obligations which rest upon the minister in the great brotherhood of men in working out community and nation and world problems, all these are vital to an effective ministry in this age.

But these are more incidental than fundamental, important and vital to be sure, not to be ignored without serious and well nigh irreparable loss, but yet not quite touching the real heart and essence of the gospel ministry. "But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "Christ in you, the hope of glory" is the primary basis for any service. "The husbandman that laboreth must be the first to partake of the fruits." There can be no substitute for a heart life that is sensitive to Divine leading, that is in complete accord with the will of Jehovah.

The ministry is a part of God's great redemption plan to call the world to a higher life with Him. The message must be essentially spiritual, ministering to spiritual needs as its fundamental purpose. Every utterance should be made under the conscious presence and unction of the Holy Spirit, and should be food for soul nourishment and development. This does not mean that the message must ignore the things of time and sense. On the contrary, the gospel is most effectively proclaimed in terms of concrete relationships, and is best understood and most surely appropriated when illustrated by the living mechanism of the problems of daily life.

But the life of the message is not alone its setting, nor yet the scholarly type of its preparation or delivery. It is not even the personality of the minister, nor does it depend wholly upon his training and equipment. Important and even essential as are all these characteristics, we must never get away from the fact that the gospel is divine, that its message is divinely inspired, that the messenger is a divinely chosen agent to lead men and women out of their low estate as the servants of sin into a realm of purity and righteousness and holiness.

The gospel ministry is distinctly an effort to make somebody better, to deepen soul life, to establish character, to help the world find God, and such service can have no other authorship than the will of the Father that no one of His creation should perish "but that all should come to repentance."

Six Months of Progress

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has had a half year's existence under the new regime. It would be ungracious to chronicle herewith the troublesome problems that have presented themselves for settlement, or the anxiety of soul which has possessed the management over the situation as we have discovered it to be. It is our conviction that progress has been made, and that while we are yet far from the goal of our ideals, we are in process of moving toward it.

Hundreds have spoken kindly their appreciation, which we have accepted in humility, conscious of shortcomings and difficulties which at times seem well nigh insurmountable. We are so near the 1,000 mark in the way of new subscriptions since January 1, that in all probability this number will be exceeded by the time this issue reaches our readers.

It is our hope to produce a journal that will be a positive, constructive force in the upbuilding of our denominational interests in America. We ask our friends to remember that these interests are diversified, and that we have varied conditions to serve, increasingly so with the enlargement of our circle of readers.

More than ever we implore the sympathy, prayers and genuine co-operation of American Quakerism in the task of making this paper what it must become, before it can serve the Church in the largest way.

Many persons are so busy with the present, that they take no time to look ahead and ascertain whither they are tending. Many a life has found disappointment at the end, because it lacked purpose and definite aim.

Piety is not alone self-goodness. Rather it is an active, virile force, which in all its operations impels others to strive for the same standard of righteousness.

Christ came not for the purpose of selling the joys of Heaven, but to scatter blessings freely upon our lives.

"Consider Christ Jesus" Heb. III: 1

BY LUKE WOODARD

IV. His Deity

I use the word Deity in preference to divinity, because the latter word has come to be used in a sense which implies kinship in the Divine Being, interpreted to mean a quality possessed by every good man, whereas Deity is understood to apply only to the Supreme Being.

It is true that Christians are made partakers of the divine nature (2 Peter 1: 4), but this is effected by the new birth and sanctification of the Spirit. Such, though holy, are still only men, who had a beginning in time, born in the way of ordinary generations; while Jesus Christ was one who existed from eternity in the form of God, and who by miraculous generation took on Him the nature of man—the seed of Abraham, yet not divesting Himself of His godhead. He was "God manifest in the flesh." "In Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."

A man in whom the Spirit of God dwells is not superhuman, though he may properly be regarded as belonging to the class of whom the apostle speaks in the phrase, "Christ in you." To fail to note the scriptural, and even common sense distinction between such a man and the personal Christ, is grossest error. Saint worship is idolatry. James Naylor, an eloquent co-worker of George Fox, developed extreme views of the doctrine of Christ within, and permitted his deluded followers to address him as God. In entering Bristol in 1689, a woman led his horse, while other admirers spread their garments before him, exclaiming, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of hosts! Hosannah in the highest." This they did, and this he permitted, under the plea that it was not the man, but Christ in him that was being worshiped. It is just, however, to say that he later condemned his course, which his fellow members severely censured, and was restored to their fellowship. It is not too much to repeat what I said in a former paper, that between the holiest of men and Jesus Christ, there is the distance of infinity.

Jesus of Nazareth was he of whom Isaiah prophesied: "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and His name shall be called Immanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us." Again, "Unto us a child is born, a son is given and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

The angel who announced His birth to the shepherds said, "He is Christ the Lord."

He Himself not only claimed to be God, He allowed others so to regard Him, without the slightest intimation that it was improper. Witness Thomas in adoring love exclaiming, "My Lord and my God," who so far from being rebuked, was commended of his Lord.

Jesus exercised divine prerogatives, such as forgiving sins. He did not dissent from the assertion of His enemies, that "none can forgive sins but God only," but He vindicated His right to forgive the helpless paralytic by healing him.

Christ was condemned on the charge of blasphemy because He made this lofty claim. It is inconceivable that He would have submitted to such a tragic fate on a charge which He knew to be false.

Accepting the New Testament as authentic, that the disciples and apostles believed in His Deity, admits of no question. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (none other than Jesus of Nazareth); "the same was in the beginning with God" and "was God." "He is Lord of all." "God manifest in the flesh," is Paul's testimony. John testifies: "We know that the Son of God is come and hath given us an understanding that we may know Him that is true and we are in Him that is true, even in His son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life." "To the Son he sayeth, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." Many other citations in proof of this point might be given.

That these witnesses were sincere in believing and teaching that Jesus Christ was God, is clearly manifest. That their claim was false can not be reconciled with the fact that they wrought miracles in proof, and can not be maintained without involving the absurdity that the omnipotent God stamped His approval upon a most tremendous falsehood.

As I have stated, Jesus Christ claimed to be one with the Father. He was so understood by His enemies as well as His friends, and on this account was charged with blasphemy. "Many good works have I showed you from my Father, for which of these do ye stone me? For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God."

To deny that He was entitled to this lofty claim necessitates one of two explanations: Either that he laid claim to what He knew to be false, in which case instead of being a good man, as Unitarians allow, he was destitute of common honesty, and guilty of blasphemy. Or, on the other hand we must believe that He sincerely, though mistakenly, regarded Himself as superhuman and incarnate God, in which case He would rightly be regarded as an insane enthusiast, a proper subject for an asylum.

Let the rationalist, who proposes to submit everything to the test of reason, answer whether a villain or lunatic could produce that sublime system of ethics embodied in the Sermon on the Mount, or the parables which are the wonder of the profoundest thinkers.

Besides those direct attestations of His Godhead, Christ often employed language which clearly implies the same truth, and which can not be consistently explained otherwise.

In the Sermon on the Mount, which Unitarians accept as their theology, Christ speaks as the Judge of the world in the final judgment. To many who will make profession of having prophesied in His name, and so forth, He says He will say, "Then will I profess unto them I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

In the tenth of John, where Jesus speaks of Himself as the good Shepherd, and of His disciples as the sheep, He says: "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." And in the next chapter He says: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and he that liveth and believeth shall never die." "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on Him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Such language could not properly be spoken by any other than an omnipotent being.

The reader who is interested can follow up this line of thought and will find that I have quoted but few of many texts of Scripture in proof of the position I have taken.

A quotation from Napoleon Bonaparte's address to one of his generals, while in banishment on the island of St. Helena, may be appended as a closing paragraph on this head. It is true, Napoleon was only a man, but was a man of very extraordinary profundity of mind and he can hardly be suspected of a shallow religious bias. "It is true Christ proposes to our faith a series of mysteries. He commands with authority that we should believe them, giving no other reason than the tremendous words, 'I am God!' He declares it. What an abyss He creates by this declaration between Himself and all the fabrications of religion! What sacrilege, what audacity, what blasphemy, if it be not true! I say more. The universal triumph of an affirmation of this kind, if it be not really that of God himself, would be a plausible excuse and a reason for atheism."

The Efficient Church

BY EDGAR H. STRANAHAN

(CONCLUDED)

It has been our purpose hitherto to clear the ground that we might the better understand what was not meant, what was taken for granted and what was really to be included in the discussion. We may now turn from the more general to the specific. To the more practical outlining of plans for making the Church efficient.

Whatever else may be included, we are safe in assuming that no efficient church will be undertaking less than the five points as given to us by the Men and Religion Forward Movement: (1) Boys' Work (we will hereafter use Young People's Work), (2) Bible Study, (3) Evangelism (including Community Extension), (4) Missions (Home and Foreign), (5) Social Service.

It is our purpose to state briefly the needs for each line of work and then give a few points indicating activities that may be undertaken by any church. Churches with large membership can and should do more.

I. Young People's Work. This embraces more than the Christian Endeavor, but includes all that may well be done for young people. The church of America is today losing eighty per cent. of the "teen age" people. The period in life when the most can be done with the least amount of energy is being overlooked. It is the age when action is supreme. The boys and girls will be doing something all of their waking hours. Any scheme that counts on obtaining and holding "teen age" people to a certain purpose through a program of work covering only two, three or perhaps six hours a week, and these mostly in one day, is missing the work. Unless the church can control more of the leisure time of the children than it is now doing, it will never win them. Most of the ills of our day will be cured when the Church grips her young people and supplies their needs all the week through. As it is now, nearly all of our church work is organized with thought for the adult alone. The seats, the music, the preaching, the business, are all for the mature minds, and the group when maximum results can be obtained from minimum efforts is being sadly neglected. The boys are perhaps the most in need just now, so our program treats of them more especially. Any church can handle the following:

- (1) Graded Bible Study.
 - (2) Instruction in
 - (a) Missions.
 - (b) Church Membership (specially adapted).
 - (3) Simple, non-equipment, physical exercises.
 - (4) Socials in homes.
 - (5) Father and son suppers (admittance free to each father accompanied by his son. Father and son to sit together at table).
 - (6) Walks to places of interest in community.
 - (7) Athletic Contests conducted by the church.
 - (8) Garden Contests. Merchants will give prizes.
- Adult supervision must be given all this, but it will pay.

I wish I had the time to go into details about some work that has come under my own observation.

II. Bible Study. There is no need to take your time here to discuss whether or no we need more and better Bible study. Test any congregation that happens to be the next you get before and see how little of definite knowledge there is. It is a mighty serious thing that our church is so sadly negligent in this important matter. The man who only knows about the Bible will ever be at a disadvantage when debating with one who knows his Bible. The Bible is the Book no Christian can dare to neglect. To do so means defeat. The efficient church will be advocating and planning for Bible Study (a) by the individual; (b) in family devotion; (c) in Bible School; (d) in classes for special purposes and for selected groups. The Bible School offers the first field, it is ready at hand to be worked. Its aims will be "(1) religious instruction, (2) character development, (3) effective service." It is clear out of the question to attain these ends except as the school is graded. The time is soon coming when the school ungraded will be the laughing stock of a community. Every test of efficiency demands that teachers, pupils and lessons be suited to each other. Here is a simple, but rather comprehensive, efficiency test for your Bible School.

1. Representative—It appeals to all classes of people in the community.

2. Graded—Lessons, pupils, teachers.

3. Atmosphere—That indefinable something that permeates the whole school and makes you realize that it is a good school.

4. Educational—The vital truths of religion are being wrought into life.

5. Evangelistic—Decisions for Christ are made, Christians are trained for service.

III. Evangelism. We congratulate ourselves upon being evangelistic. Revival meetings have become a fixed part of our church machinery. In some places it is considered an absolute necessity to have at least one evangelistic campaign every year. From these meetings no small results, as to the number of "converts," are recorded. In the course of a year the figures that could be gathered from all of our yearly meetings would be large. But with all this we are but little more than holding our own. As a whole, the churches of America are gaining but four-fifths per cent. a year while the population increases over two per cent. Of the 30,000 additions to one great denomination 15,000 of them were traced to the evangelistic work of one man. In our own (Kansas) yearly meeting 820 of the 1418 additions are reported through the evangelistic channels. From these we take it that nearly all the ingathering into our churches comes from the special evangelistic campaigns, but even these are doing very little. The warmest friends of revival meetings must face the facts and they show that we lack lamentably in conducting an aggressive campaign of soul winning. The commission to win all mankind to a Savior was not given to professional evangelists, even though they have so largely and almost exclusively obeyed it. Every Christian is duty bound, yes more than that, is privilege compelled to help win men. The whole church must be enlisted in the cause of evangelism. Personal, Pastoral and Professional Evangelism are all needful. The following program for the evangelistic work of the Efficient Church is submitted.

1. Training Class in Personal Work.

2. Sunday School Evangelism.

a. Decision Day.

b. Through class organization.

3. Pastoral Evangelism.

4. Laymen Evangelistic Teams.

a. Hold meetings.

b. Do personal work.

5. Evangelistic Campaigns.

a. Adequate preparation.

b. Wise, spiritual, constructive evangelist.

c. Follow-up campaign.

IV. Missions. We need hardly stop and pity the church that does not believe in missions nor the church that divides itself into fighting clans of Home and Foreign Missions. Modern enlightenment is fast doing away with such. We all unite in praying that their end may soon be. For the sake of convenience in managing so great a work we are justified in having two Boards and for ease in designating we may call them Home and Foreign, but if any one persists in making them appear antagonistic he should be dealt with. The Bible commands us to go, the nature of the church demands an outflowing and needs at home and abroad are pleading for salvation. The average church member knows little of what the Bible says about missions, and is so densely ignorant about conditions all over the field as to be pitied. Souls out yonder are waiting the "Good News," they will continue to wait until some one goes and some one pays for the going and some one learns of both the need of money and how to give. The pastor holds the key to the situation. We offer you a program that will make for efficiency.

1. Mission Study Class.

a. Home in fall.

b. Foreign in spring.

2. Missions in Sunday School.

a. Closing exercises at intervals.

b. Charts displayed.

c. Curios exhibited.

d. Whole lesson at least once a year.

3. Mission Meetings.

b. Constant illustrations from Missions.

c. Exercises by children and young people.

d. Addresses by returned missionaries.

e. Reading of letters.

f. Stereopticon views.

g. Mission debates.

h. Prayer meetings.

4. Prayer Cycles.

5. Every Member Canvass.

a. Once each year.

b. For Home and Foreign Mission money.

c. On one Sunday afternoon.

d. Every member of meeting given an opportunity to give something.

e. Adequate preparation.

6. Weekly Offering System.

V. Social Service. The Men and Religion Forward Movement has placed Social Service on a firm basis. Hereafter it will have that evangelistic note that will save it from mere humanitarianism. Social Service is now the companion of the Revival. We henceforth believe in saving the man and also cleaning up the place in which he lives. Not only should the drunkard be redeemed, but the saloon must be closed also. Boys must be saved as much as ever, but they must also have wholesome amusements, and all young people must have a chance for a decent living. In these days of magazines, telephones, rural delivery of mail, autos and cheap excursions, no class of people is far removed from any other class. No longer are people able to live entirely independent of other people. It therefore is to each community a question of importance as to how other people live and what they permit to exist in their neighborhood. In most of our communities in this Yearly Meeting, pool halls, moving picture shows, cigar stores and the like are of all too vast importance in molding the lives of the young people. The church that closes its doors and at the same time its interest in the people of the district, while these places are open all of the time practically, is sadly handicapped. For the sake of self-preservation, if there were no higher motive, the church must have a care for its people every day. Even in the country this is important. Those who stop to consider will easily discover that what one does in his leisure time is really making him. If the church folds its hands in a do-nothing policy while the people are brought lower and lower in sin, the church will be held responsible.

No church can long thrive in a community where people are not making money. The success of the Kingdom in any given community depends to some extent at least on people making a good living. All of our farming regions are capable of producing crops that will pay well if the proper crop and the manner of caring for it be learned. Is it not within the power of the church then to help people make money for the Kingdom by co-operating with them in finding out how to raise paying crops? Train people to make money and at the same time train them to give money and you have a happy combination.

Each year multitudes of lives are sacrificed in almost every place because of improper food (especially is this the case with children), lack of proper sanitation, or because some one did not know how to swim. Persons who might have become mighty instruments for good have been cut short in life because of some of these very things. It surely is within the province of the church to save life.

The Efficient Church will have a program of Social Service, we submit one that is very inadequate, but will do as a starter.

1. Know your Community.
 - a. The schools.
 - b. The shops.
 - c. The stores.
 - d. How people are amused.
 - e. Food supplies.
 - f. The government.
2. Sabbath Observance—How best fostered?
3. The Social Evil—How cured?
4. Industrial Training in the Schools.
5. Night School, where needed.
6. Play grounds the year round, under supervision.
7. Lecture courses under church control.
8. The Charities: do they cause or relieve poverty?
9. Give publicity to the good things being done.

Japanese Students and the Bible

BY HORACE E. COLEMAN

Tokyo has in recent years come to be the largest students' center in the world, with about 28,000 students of the college and university grade, besides more than a hundred high schools. I heard it said recently that Tokyo is to Japan what Washington, New York, Boston and Philadelphia are all combined to the United States. This may give some idea of the great longing in the heart of all Japanese to visit Tokyo as often as possible and the great desire of every student to complete his education in the capital city.

It goes without saying, therefore, that no other educational institutions are so attractive to the Japanese youth as those located in Tokyo. The First Higher School, which is the direct feeder to the Imperial University, draws the best students from all the middle schools over the country. Likewise the Higher Normal School is the head of all the normal schools in the country, and the Higher Commercial School and all technical schools are the best in the country. These facts show that it is not only the number of the students who come to Tokyo, but their quality as well that makes Tokyo the most strategic center for Christian work among the educated classes of the country.

Amid these conditions you will realize what a wonderful opportunity I have in teaching the Bible to one hundred or two hundred of the young men of these higher schools and universitiess. In Keio University, which is only about ten minutes' walk from our home, there are over 2,000 students of the college grade. About 95 per cent. of these students take the economic course, looking forward to a business career. This is the oldest institution in the country for the propagation of western learning, and they have a large number of alumni prominent in the business world,—therefore a large number of students from prominent and well-to-do families. It is a well-known fact that one of the important needs of Japan for many years has been a higher business morality. One feels, therefore, when teaching the Bible or the principles of Christianity to these young men that he is helping to strengthen and raise to a higher standard the business and commercial ethics of the future of this country, which has had, and is still having a rapid growth in both industry and commerce.

To speak of my work more personally, I have generally five to seven Bible classes per week for the young men, about a hundred or more generally enrolled in these classes, and I also publish a Bible letter printed in English of about 1,600 words each month, and send these to about 240 young men in Tokyo, including the Bible class enrollment, and to about forty who have left Tokyo and are scattered over the country. We have about thirty Christian young men who are in the city, and we have special meetings occasionally for these.

Some idea of the difficulties that these young men meet in coming up to this strenuous educational center may be gained as well as how easily these difficulties may be overcome with the study of the Bible and presentation of Jesus Christ when the one in difficulty is sincere in seeking the truth. * * *

In the last few days Mr. K. Hattori, who has been my Bible class interpreter for about two years and my student helper for one year, has succeeded in passing a very difficult examination and secured a position in the Department of Communications in the Chinese Government. According to the requirements of the men wanted for this position he was the only man recommended from the University of Keio mentioned above. One was recommended from the Waseda University and four from the Higher Commercial School. The examination test given to these six men for the selection of two consisted of English (one full day), bookkeeping, arithmetic, etc., and Mr. Hattori, who says his knowledge of English was largely gained through his connection with our Bible classes, headed the list in the final result. This gives him a position in China worth almost five times as much as many of his classmates will receive if they go into business in Tokyo. Since he has suffered some persecution in the university and has been nicknamed "Coleman" because of his connection with our Bible classes, this seems a splendid reward for his courage and perseverance and earnestness.

We shall appreciate very much an interest in the prayers of all the leaders of American Friends in order that we may be strong to meet these wonderful opportunities and that we may have the equipment needed to carry on the work to the best advantage.

A Unique Club

Announcement is made that The Girl's Club of the Ladies' Home Journal, which is the largest girl's club in the world, has completed a successful undertaking by establishing a scholarship in medicine for Chinese women, to be known as "The Girl's Club Medical Foundation." The fund raised amounts to $1,233.00, which will provide for a permanent endowment for the scholarship at the Union Medical College for Women at Peking, China, an interdenominational institution. About 1,000 girls joined in the movement to raise this fund. It is announced that no more money is needed.

It is a wonderful thing, a mother. Other folks can love you, but only your mother understands you; she works for you, looks after you, loves you, forgives you.—Baroness von Hutten.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

The twenty-first annual gathering of Oregon Yearly Meeting, just closed, was in many respects the most remarkable in its history. The blessing of God and the cheerful giving of His Friends were alike much in evidence.

One of the most remarkable things was the way in which the meeting got behind Pacific College. Ever since the erection of the new building, which was a great burden on the Friends of this section, there has been a bit of a deficit each year above even the liberal donations made by Friends to maintain the school. And since the launching of the campaign for $100,000 of endowment, there has been a reluctance on the part of those who had obligated themselves on this line to incurring further obligations. So a floating indebtedness amounting to nearly $8,000 had accumulated.

When Friends saw the real condition and the great need for immediate funds, they rose to the occasion splendidly. Subscriptions were taken more than covering the entire $8,000, and contributions still keep coming in. Not satisfied with this, the yearly meeting appropriated $1,200 for educational purposes the coming year, $200 to go to the Greenleaf Academy at Greenleaf, Idaho, and $1,000 to Pacific College.

Then, to make effective at once the nearly $50,000 of endowment subscriptions already taken, the yearly meeting became responsible for the income on the second $50,000 of the $100,000 that the college authorities are seeking to raise, so that an income of $5,000 is assured for next year in addition to tuition and student fees, and the college is given a financial standing such as it has never before known, and has the backing of the yearly meeting as it has never enjoyed that backing before. The responsibility of the yearly meeting treasury for the income on this $50,000 of endowment is to be reduced as fast as the endowment funds are subscribed, and it is hoped that by the end of the year the entire $90,000 will be raised that will make effective the $10,000 offer secured some time since from James J. Hill.

But gifts to the college were not the only ones made by the attenders at yearly meeting. It has been customary to raise about $500 by subscription, in addition to the appropriation, for the evangelistic and church extension work of the yearly meeting. This year the subscriptions were almost $1,000, including the money for the purchase of the lot for a residence for the pastor at Quilcene, a home mission station in Washington. Then, to make this residence assured, $500 was raised to purchase material for the building, which the pastor, Lewis C. Russel, who is a practical builder, is to erect.

Nearly $1,000 was subscribed, to be paid in the next five years, for the new mission station that it is expected to establish in British East Africa, and a substantial appropriation amounting to $500 was made from surplus funds in the missionary board's possession, for the purchase of machinery and equipment for the East African work, and for this new station. And Arthur B. Chilson who was present at the meeting and gave the missionary address on his birthday anniversary, was showered with flowers, and given a purse containing a dollar for each year of his life, with other tokens of appreciation and love; and some of these also were sent to his wife, who was caring for a daughter who was very ill during the time of the yearly meeting.

The spiritual blessings that were poured out during the yearly meeting were rich and full. The devotional meetings were seasons of earnest waiting upon the Lord, and many souls were richly blessed. Visitors from other yearly meetings were present with helpful messages. Harry R. Keates, chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting; Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of Seattle Meeting; Amos M. Kenworthy of Whittier, California; L. Hollingsworth Wood and Carolena M. Wood of Mt. Kisco, N. Y.; Maurice L. Rowntree of Leeds, England, and Arthur B. Chilson of the Friends African Industrial Mission, were all present, and all gave messages that were much appreciated.

The reports showed a healthy growth in the various departments of the yearly meeting's work. H. Elmer Pemberton was reappointed superintendent of the evangelistic and church extension work for the ensuing year.

John Frederick Hanson expressed a concern again to visit Sweden and Denmark and to visit London and Dublin Yearly Meetings in the interests of the kingdom. The yearly meetings united heartily with this concern, and made provision for this visit.

Though the greatest interest of the meeting seemed to be aroused in evangelizing the unevangelized sections of the yearly meeting field, the maintenance of Pacific College and the advancement of our foreign mission work, other things were not neglected. Peace and arbitration, literature, including the interests of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, systematic and proportion-giving, reports from the Five Years Meeting, Christian Endeavor, Bible School work, the overthrow of the liquor traffic and other matters of the church's business in the world, received earnest attention, and many of the workers of Oregon Yearly Meeting spoke ably and with unction on these matters.

It is felt that the blessings of the yearly meeting are but the earnest of fuller blessings during the year just opening, and that much progress will be made during the year in the advancement of the kingdom.

at 8 o'clock the Senior Class rendered the play, "The House of Rimmon," by Henry Van Dyke, on the outdoor stage.

A distressing occurrence was the fact that about 200 persons became ill during the afternoon and evening from eating the lunches, which were served in boxes.

Commencement exercises were held from the outdoor stage on Wednesday. Professor Elwood C. Perisho, class of '87, now Dean and Professor of Geology in the University of South Dakota, gave the address. Discussing "The College and the State," he gave what was pronounced by many the strongest address ever given at an Earlham Commencement. President Kelly then announced that the degree of Bachelor of Arts had been conferred upon 31 members of the Senior class, and that of Bachelor of Science upon 15 others. The degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Zona May Williams, pastor of the church at Charlottesville, and Dr. John Albert Thompson, of Cincinnati, and that of Doctor of Laws upon Professor E. C. Perisho, the Commencement Day speaker.

The press announces the engagement of ten members of the Senior class, which is an unusual tribute to the winning powers of Master Cupid.

Whittier College

Interest in the thirteenth annual Commencement of Whittier College centered in the graduating exercises which occurred June 11th. President Thomas Newlin extended a cordial greeting to the audience that filled the large auditorium, and Absalom Rosenberger offered prayer.

The baccalaureate address was given by Hon. Ford A. Carpenter, of Los Angeles, on "The Influence of the College Spirit on Practical Problems," and was replete with valuable lessons from the standpoint of a scientist and a man of affairs. Mr. Carpenter is head of the weather service in Los Angeles, and has a national reputation as a meteorologist.

Following are the names of the graduating class with the several subjects of their thesis: Evelyn Rosenberger Clark, "The Conservation of Youth"; Pliny T. Greene, "The Development of California"; Bertha M. Hoskins, "Shakespeare's Ideal Woman compared with the Modern Ideal"; Herbert N. Hoskins, "The Atomic Hypothesis"; Bailey W. Howard, "The Romantic Movement in English Poetry"; Vivian Rice, "Al Pais del Don"; Jesse A. Stanfield, "The Trend of Religious Life in Colleges and Universities"; Henry N. Whitlock, "The Social Life of the Middle Ages."

Following an address to the class by President Newlin that scintillated with epitomes of truth, and which was most impressive in its forecast of the possibilities that lie before the college graduate today, Dr. W. V. Coffin, president of the Board of Trustees, conferred upon them severally the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Immediately following this the same officials sprung a surprise on the audience in conferring upon the speaker of the day, Hon. Ford A. Carpenter, the degree of Doctor of Laws, in recognition of his eminent service in the field of science.

At the noon hour the commencement banquet, which is always looked forward to as an occasion of rare interest and enjoyment, was given by the Woman's Auxiliary of the College in the spacious gymnasium. Following the splendid repast, under direction of Dr. Coffin, as toastmaster, Dr. Carpenter talked of the causes and forecast of frost in reference to the abnormal weather of last winter; Prof. Abraham Rosenberger discussed "growing pains" and their significance and results in the development of college life; Jesse Stanfield, speaking for the Seniors, told what great things their class experiences meant to them; Irene Glasgow pledged the loyal support of the preparatory graduates, and large service to the college in years to come.

The day seemed bright with omens of promise, and a pervasive spirit of optimism and hopefulness gave buoyancy to every feature of the exercises, and to the social commingling of the happy throng, and there was with all a mutual recognition that under the able administration of President Newlin the College had made substantial progress during the year just closing.

Among the more prominent features of this progress may be named a largely increased attendance of students, with assurance of a greater increase next year; the liquidation of an indebtedness of fifteen thousand dollars, and substantial progress in the canvass for increased endowment, and arrangements for material additions to the equipment of the college. The college is also fortunate in engaging Absalom Rosenberger, formerly president of Penn College, as Financial Secretary, and Prof. Thomas B. Stanley and Margaret Hampton, of Earlham College, as head of the department of English and preceptress of the girls' boarding hall respectively.

Other prominent features of commencement week were the reception to the Seniors at the home of President Newlin, the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. J. J. Mills, the address to the College Christian Associations by Frank M. Dowling, the exercises of the preparatory department, at which eleven young women and two young men were given certificates of graduation, and the entertainment of the College Choral Society, which included musical renderings of a very high order.

Wilmington College

Wilmington College has just closed another successful year of work. The various exercises of the week were well attended and happily concluded.

The first of these, the Senior class play, "She Stoops to Conquer," was presented in the opera house to a large and attentive audience. Their presentation of this popular comedy brought many words of commendation and praise to the Seniors for their artistic efforts.

Thursday, June fifth, was Field Day, which brought out its usual large and enthusiastic crowd of spectators. The honors of the day went to Mr. Willard E. Wildman, of the class of 1913.

On Sunday evening the baccalaureate sermon was given by Ellison R. Purdy, of the local Friends Church. This, the real beginning of commencement week proper, sounded a call that was an inspiration and an invitation to higher and holier things. The atmosphere of this sermon pervaded in a peculiar manner the entire commencement program.

A delightful occasion of the week was the reception given by President and Mrs. Hodgkin at the college Wednesday evening. President and Mrs. Hodgkin received the guests at the entrance to the library and presented them to the long line of Seniors.

The Alumni of the college, more than three hundred strong, had Thursday, June 12th, for their own. An enthusiastic meeting and luncheon held on the college lawn brought the events of the day to a satisfactory close. A fine spirit of co-operation and genuine interest in the work and success of the college was agreeably manifest.

Friday, June the thirteenth, was commencement day proper. After a fine inspirational address by Dr. Henry W. Elson, of Ohio University, on "Education and Freedom," degrees were conferred by the president of the college upon the nineteen members of the graduating class.

The afternoon of the day was pleasantly spent in social intercourse on the campus, followed later in the day by a reunion of the old students of Twin Ash and South Halls. At this meeting a temporary organization was effected looking toward a permanent organization of all former students of the college into an old scholars' association.

Many expressions of appreciation and commendation were heard for those whose efforts had thus brought to a successful close another year for Alma Mater.

Pacific College

The commencement season at Pacific College was one of peculiar enjoyment this year. The exercises of commencement week opened with the baccalaureate sermon by President Levi T. Pennington, who spoke from the text, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Homer L. Cox, pastor of Sunnyside Meeting in Portland gave the address to the Christian Associations, his subject being "Sonship and Heirship."

The concert by the school of music was delightful, and the Alumni were gratified by the winning of the college-alumni baseball game for the first time in the history of these contests.

Harry R. Keates, of Des Moines, Iowa, chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, gave the Alumni address on Christian Education, which was full of thought on the need for and the nature of the right kind of denominational education.

The commencement exercises were featured by a fine address by Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the Memorial Friends Church at Seattle, his subject being "The Scholar's Debt." In a very convincing way he presented to the members of the graduating class and the rest of the student body especially, the debt that is owed to the college, the community and the world, and also to the kingdom of God, by one who has had educational advantages.

This commencement marked the close of a successful year. The attendance has been larger than for eight years past. The class of 1913 is small, only three in number, but both in scholarship and character it ranks very high. Arthur B. George and Maude Haworth took the degree of Bachelor of Arts with honor, while Mabel Haworth took the same degree and with it the Penn scholarship, the highest honor for scholarship and character awarded to the Senior class.

The Florence Brown Rowe Junior Prize was awarded to Rae S. Langworthy, who has a splendid scholarship record, and also stands high in extra-curriculum work and in character. Stella Hubbard was awarded the Pacific Academy scholarship, which entitles her to free tuition in Pacific College the coming year.

The announcement of the conditional gift by James J. Hill of $10,000 toward the $100,000 that is being raised by the college for endowment purposes, and the action of Oregon Yearly Meeting in raising all the floating indebtedness and becoming responsible for the income of the last $50,000 of the endowment until it can be raised, with the appropriation for running expenses in addition, serve among other things to make this a very glad commencement season for the friends of Pacific College.

Friends Select School

The graduating exercises of Friends Select School at 140 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, occurred June 13, at 3 o'clock. The program of exercises included Scripture reading by Benjamin Cadbury; essays by Clara J. Rump on "Saving Young America"; James K. Stone on "Modern Man and Outdoor Life"; Florence Oakley H. Van Alen on "The Influence of the Fraternity in American Colleges"; and Alison Levin, who gave the "Valedictory." Presentation of diplomas by the principal, Walter W. Haviland, followed, twenty students receiving diplomas. The honor graduate was Alison Levin. The exercises closed with an address by Dr. William Wistar Comfort, Professor of Romance Languages and Literatures in Cornell University, subject, "Dawdling and Its Evil Effects."

Love is the fusing element of all life; the tremulous, softly defined horizon-line that at once separates and unites the spheres, terminating our human vision; the trysting-place where earth and heaven meet.—Lucy Larcom.

Others Teaching a Quaker Message

BY H. R. WANSEY

On page 29 of his book, "Messages from the Epistles to the Hebrews," the Bishop of Durham writes as follows: "The argument of this chapter (Heb. vii) goes directly to show that such mediatorial functions, in the age of Christ, are forever withdrawn from 'men having infirmity.' Where they stood of old, one after another, sacrificing, interceding, going in behind the veil, permitted to draw nearer to God in an official sanctity than their brethren, there now stands Another, sublime, supreme, alone.

"He is Man indeed, but He is not 'man having infirmity.' He is higher than the heavens, while He is one with us. Now our one secret of a complete approach to God is to come to God through Him. And this, unless the chapter is an elaborate semblance of what it is not, means nothing if it does not mean that between the church and between the soul and the Lord Jesus Christ, there is to come absolutely nothing mediatorial"

Again on page 73 of "Alpha and Omega," W. Middleton, whose book contains a commendatory preface by the Bishop of Durham, writes: "In Mathew xxvii: 50, we read: 'Jesus when He had cried again with a loud voice yielded up the Ghost. And behold the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.' Not only was the division wall between the Greek and the Hebrew destroyed, and the privileges and honors claimed exclusively by the elect offered to those who were outside the first covenant, but the way into the secret chamber of the Deity was opened to all believers. So every Christian, forgiven and born of God, is his own priest, and has as much right of entrance into the holiest place as the apostles and bishops of the early church.

"Over the Epistle to the Hebrews might be appropriately inscribed this passage: 'The veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.' Over every Romanist and ritualistic place of worship, should be written this legend: 'The veil of the temple has never been rent at all.' The whole system of ecclesiastical symbolism is an attempt to resuscitate an exhausted and dead Judaism. One of the old preachers said: 'Woe to the hands that would have touched it, till God himself had torn it; but woe to the hands that would stitch it up again now that He has torn it.' What God has joined together, let no man put asunder, but what God hath rent let no man try to stitch up. We do not want ecclesiastical needlework; we want the way to the holiest open; we want a simple and direct approach to the spiritualities that were pictured by that ancient symbolism."

To that we all say, "Amen." Do not these two writers both preach Quakerism? Surely, simple Quakerism with its message of reality, spirituality and fellowship, and with its democratic principles of worship, on the basis of silence before God is the great need everywhere for the present day.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Portland Quarterly Meeting was held at Pennville, Indiana, June 13-15. Visiting ministers were Robert W. Douglas, Clifford Pearson and Fred E. Smith, also Mattie Thorn, of Portland. Fred E. Smith's sermon on Friday evening on a commonplace religion for commonplace people was especially strong. The attendance on Saturday was very large. Dinner was served in the basement on Saturday to over two hundred people. The various churches comprising the Quarterly Meeting were well represented.

Friends' Bible School at Fairmount, Indiana, has been well attended of late. There is a deep interest manifested. On June 22, it was reported that 490 are enrolled in the adult and primary departments, 50 on the cradle roll and 85 in the home department, a total of 625.

Richard Haworth, pastor of Friends' Meeting at Fairmount, was called to Earlham, Iowa, to deliver two addresses on Sabbath-school work before the Christian Workers' Assembly. He will make a similar talk to the Bible School and Christian Endeavor Convention of Western Yearly Meeting at Vermilion Grove, Illinois, on August 6 and 7, and will deliver the annual Sabbath-school address at Wilmington Yearly Meeting, at Wilmington, Ohio, on August 14.

On Sabbath morning, June 15, Honorable William M. Jones delivered an address at Friends' Bible School, Fairmount, on the subject of the enactment of the cigarette law and the injurious effects of the cigarette upon the minds and bodies of growing boys. This talk was forcefully given and was helpful and entertaining to all who heard it.

Fairmount Quarterly Meeting was held June 20-22, at Fairmount, Indiana. Several visiting ministers were present. J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage, gave a very helpful message on the 21, his subject being "The Christian Home." Ira Johnson and Charles Hiatt also gave inspiring messages. More than twenty ministers were present, and there was a good attendance throughout these services.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held June 13-15, with a good attendance at all the services. On Saturday morning, J. Edgar Williams, of Carthage, delivered a spiritual, logical sermon. He was followed by Morton C. Pearson in a short talk on "Christ, the Inner Life." Both these were listened to by an appreciative audience. On Sabbath morning the service was conducted by the pastor, George C. Levering, in his usual earnest manner, endeavoring to get others to see the truths of the Gospel. In the afternoon the Township Sabbath-school convention was held in Friends' Church. The reports showed the Sabbath schools in the township to be in a live, working condition.

On the evening of June 11th, at Fairmount, Indiana, E. O. Ellis, of Fairmount, Indiana, gave a stereopticon review of the Bible lands, especially the scenes connected with the Bible School lessons the past two quarters. A large and interested audience came to see the splendid views and to hear the description first-hand, by one who has seen and can describe in a forceful way. The service was a spiritual uplift as well as a source of instruction in Bible geography. We feel abundantly repaid for having Mr. Ellis come to us with this service, to which he feels called. We cheerfully recommend this to Friends' schools everywhere, as a means of real blessing.

At Chester, Indiana, Friends' Meeting, on the 22d of June, temperance was most interestingly and effectively taught in the morning session of the Bible-school by Miss Anna Kendall, who is one of our Monthly Meeting's committee in charge of that work. The children of the various classes by interesting exercises, brought to our attention in a forceful way, the evil results of alcoholic drinks and the use of tobacco, in a way that we hope will be permanent. The class of boys in the intermediate grade taught by Elmer Kendall, was especially happy in its mode of presenting the thought of the subject.

On Sabbath morning, June 22d, Dalton H. Lewis, pastor of the Friends' Church at Dublin, Indiana, started a wave of social reform. He opened the campaign by a real heart-to-heart talk on the "Low Ebb of Local Morality." Concrete examples were furnished by the pastor, of his own observation. A beer bottle was shown from the pulpit, the contents of which had been partaken of by two boys and a girl, on the church steps. These boys and the girl were minors, their ages ranging from fourteen to seventeen years. Many such examples were given by the pastor, and his earnest talk awakened not only his audience, but stirred the town to its depths.

Many unpleasant truths were brought forth, but they were given with such love and humility of spirit, that all lovers of good will stand by him till the end. May the dear Lord give him wisdom, strength and courage.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Friends of Des Moines passed a very pleasant Sabbath, June 15. Richard R. Newby, who has come to serve as pastor, preached his first sermon, and W. Jasper Hadley, the old pastor, remained over that day. Charles Sweet, a former pastor for twelve years, came in unexpectedly, at the beginning of the meeting. The meeting was blessed by his coming. In the afternoon of the same day, the Friends Sabbath-school at Urbandale observed Children's Day. The house was nicely decorated with flowers, and they had appropriate exercises. It will be a day long remembered by all.

New York Yearly Meeting

Poughkeepsie Monthly Meeting was held at Poughkeepsie, New York, June 19. At 6:15 p. m. a splendid supper was served by the lunch committee, after which about one hundred people adjourned to the regular session in the audience room. Here the regular business was transacted. One request for membership by a young man, and a certificate were received. It was decided to grade the large plot of ground in the rear of the meeting house, in order to make tennis and croquet courts, etc., for the use of the many young people of the meeting, thus helping to make the church the center of their social activities. This Monthly Meeting was the anniversary of the thirty-fourth year when one of our active ministers, Elmer D. Gildersleeve, was recorded. After the regular business meeting came a very interesting "Echo Meeting" of the New York Yearly Meeting, which had been held a few weeks previous. The following were given five minutes each to report on different phases of the Yearly Meeting's activities: Sophronia Reynolds, Elias and Mary Minard, Aaron Lane, Elizabeth C. F. Stevens, William J. and Flora T. Sayers. It was then urged upon the membership present to help increase the subscription list of our paper, THE AMERICAN FRIEND, by taking it themselves and encouraging others to subscribe for it.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Children's Day exercises were held on the evening of June 8, in Urbana, Ohio, Friends' Church. The singing was excellent. An exercise, "The Ladder of Life," showing the different steps required to obtain the crown at the end of life's journey, was especially appreciated by the audience. The whole evening's exercise was a success and the children, as well as the committee, deserve praise for their faithful work. Urbana Friends' Church was established in 1905, and under the faithful ministry of the pastor, Ida Allen, is developing into a strong, spiritual meeting. The unity of the membership and the sweet Christian atmosphere attract many others than the members, and such are blessed in their coming. Two cottage prayer meetings and the mid-week prayer meeting at the church are held beside the regular Sunday services and all are well attended. We feel that the Lord is especially blessing His work in this place.

Western Yearly Meeting

George N. Hicks, who is serving as pastor at Marshall, Indiana, is taking a few weeks' rest on account of failing health.

Appropriate Children's Day services have recently been held in Rush Creek and Tangier, Indiana, Meetings. Mothers' Day was also observed in May. Kingman Friends are repairing their church to the extent of about $300.00. The Annual Old Students' Reunion will be held at Rush Creek, Parke County, Indiana, on Sabbath, July 6th.

Solomon B. Woodard, of Bloomingdale, Indiana, recently spent some time visiting his son, Dr. S. P. Woodard, of New York City. He attended Marshall, Indiana, Meeting on June 22d.

Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, who for two years has filled the position of Endowment Secretary of Earlham College, has offered his resignation to accept the position of Executive Secretary of the Indianapolis City Federation of Churches, in which capacity he will be at the head of the united religious work of the city. The Earlham board was loth to accept his resignation, and has referred it to the Committee on Officers. The change will take place September 1. If by that time an Endowment Secretary of the college has not been secured, it is understood that Morton Pearson will act for a time in an advisory capacity for that work.

Friends at Bloomingdale, Indiana, are indeed glad to have Enos Harvey serve as their pastor another year. His labors in the academy as well as in the meeting and Sabbath-school are much appreciated.

The committee of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting on the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic, with James Spray, chairman, arranged the following program, which was given in the Friends' Church on the evening of June 22nd.

Invocation—Enos Harvey.

Bible reading—Wade Williams.

Alcohol as Medicine—Dr. M. F. Woodard.

Teaching Temperance in the Sabbath-school—Lenora N. Hobbs.

A Temperance Parade—Nathan Pickett.

Western Yearly Meeting House

The trustees and sub-committee in charge of the rebuilding of Western Yearly Meeting house at Plainfield, Indiana, hope to have the house in a shape to accommodate the sessions of the meeting this year, beginning September 16. The preliminary work of restoring the building, retaining its architectural features of a former day, supplying necessary modern conveniences for the local congregation and the annual assembly, as well as the comfort of the public who throng the beautiful park each year, has occupied much thought and time of those in charge.

The entire basement has been excavated to a depth of several feet, for kitchen, dining, lunch and committee rooms and other purposes. This feature has necessarily delayed work in other directions preparatory to letting the work by contract or otherwise. The walls of the building have not been seriously damaged by the recent fire, and when the improvements on the house and grounds are completed, it is hoped that those attached to the original surroundings of that historic spot will be pleased, as well as those of younger years.

As an indication of the interest aroused amongst Friends who have removed to distant states, the committee is pleased to acknowledge the receipt of a number of voluntary and unsolicited donations for pulpit furniture and other equipment.

TOPIC—Speak Not Evil One of Another.—James 4: 6-12.

Every one's character is his own, and he is entitled to possess it without harm by words of detraction from others. Every one is entitled to have the best reputation which his action warrants, and it should not be subjected to unwarranted calumny and slander by words of other people.

Even the wicked are entitled to receive mercy and kindness and not abuse. Probably it is harder for humanity to learn this lesson than any other. Christ denounced sin and evil, but loved the sinner, and reported no evil against him that would block the way to his heart and his affections.

It is our business to win men and women by love. It cannot be done by evil spoken words. Flies are not caught by vinegar. Men are not won by evil speaking. It is Christ's law, which is universal.

The suffragette disturbances in England have not abated, and more trouble is expected, now that one of their number has died from injuries recently received.

Coffee Finally Had to Go

The way some persons cling to coffee, even after they know it is doing them harm, is a puzzler. But it is an easy matter to give it up for good, when Postum is properly made and used instead. A girl writes:

"Mother had been suffering with nervous headaches for seven weary years, but kept on drinking coffee.

"One day I asked her why she did not give up coffee, as a cousin of mine had done who had taken to Postum. But Mother was such a slave to coffee she thought it would be terrible to give it up.

"Finally, one day, she made the change to Postum, and quickly her headaches disappeared. One morning while she was drinking Postum so freely and with such relish, I asked for a taste.

"That started me on Postum and I now drink it more freely than I did coffee, which never comes into our house now."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum (must be boiled.)

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things, put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

At St. Joseph, Illinois

The attendance at the Stanton Friends' "Home-Coming," Saint Joseph, Illinois, was lessened by the showers of rain which refreshed all nature. But the "faithful few" received showers of blessing from above under the preaching of the Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Edward Woodard; Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, Duncan Newlin, and Elwood Lewis, a former pastor. The latter, though a veteran of the Cross, aged seventy-one, is as full of zeal and hope as a man of thirty. He was present at the Monthly Meeting and encouraged all to faithfulness. Again Seventh-day evening he spoke from the text, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." He was followed by words of encouragement from the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.

Sabbath morning Edward Woodard spoke of the woman that pressed through the crowd to touch the hem of the garment of the Savior of lost humanity. The Savior's words, "Thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace," was the text for a sermon of hopefulness in facing the discouraging conditions that surround so many of our country churches, where foreigners own the homes of the fathers of the once strong churches. "But as the woman pressed through the crowd to come in touch with the healer of mankind, so we can press through the crowd of hindrances and lift up Christ to a lost world, that they may come in touch with him and receive spiritual life."

Sabbath afternoon, Charles Haworth, the recorder, called the roll, which was responded to by letters of greeting, or by those present. The closing words and admonition in the letter of Thomas C. Brown, a founder of the Stanton Church, was the keynote of the home-coming, and good enough to "pass on" to all struggling churches pressing through the crowd of discouragements in town or country: "Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain."

Died

ALLINSON—Ann Allinson, daughter of Josiah and Rachel Tatum, and widow of Samuel Allinson, died at her home near Yardville, New Jersey, June 12, 1913, in her ninety-fifth year. A birthright member, she always loved the Society of Friends, and cherished a deep interest in its welfare. Although almost a helpless invalid for several years and deprived of both sight and hearing, she bore her trials with sweet Christian patience.

BROWN—Edward H. Brown, son of Horton and Margaret Brown, died at his home in Barclay, Kansas, June 9, 1913, aged 78 years 1 month and 29 days. He was a birthright member of Friends, and belonged to Barclay Meeting the last thirty-three years of his life. He spent three years on the Union side in the Civil war. He served the Church and the cause of moral reforms faithfully, and was gifted in song, often assisting ministers by using the gift. Funeral services at Barclay. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

FRENCH—Anna, daughter of Albert and Elizabeth French, died at the home of her sister, Rebecca Davies, in Cleveland, Ohio, May 18, 1913, aged seventy-one years. Hers was a life of loving ministry to others, many years caring for her invalid parents and teaching the freedmen at Jackson, Mississippi, three years. She was a sincere Christian whose ever increasing desire was to "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior," and was deeply pained at the attempt on the part of some to weaken the divine authority and authorship of the Holy Scriptures. Always reticent of her own attainments, she possessed keen spiritual Forty Years Among the Indians.

The above is the title of a book by Jeremiah Hubbard, with two hundred pages, bound in cloth, neatly finished, with pictures of a number of Indians, as well as others, an account of many meetings with the Indians, also many marriages where I have officiated. The account of many Indian conversions, and also texts from the Bible that the Indians are the lost tribes of Israel. The pictures and their history are worth the price of the book, without anything else. The price of the book is $1.50, but from now until the tenth day of August, anyone will receive the book by mail, prepaid, for one dollar, to meet the expense of publishing the book. The history in this book also is worth the money. Remember, $1.00 gets the book. Address, JEREMIAH HUBBARD, Miami, Oklahoma.

A PERSONAL WORD

I take it for granted that all Pastors, Sabbath School Superintendents and members of the various Sabbath School Committees, are interested in having the very best literature obtainable in the Friends' Sabbath Schools.

For over twenty-two years I have given my best efforts to this work. It is not necessary to state the sacrifices of time and money spent to build up the Sabbath School publishing and supply business for the Friends' Church in America.

I have reached the age when I must soon "ease up," and am looking toward that time. I have made offers to the Publication Board for taking over this work; but for the present their time and thought is to get the AMERICAN FRIEND thoroughly established. It may be two or three years before they can consider this work, and it may be that way will not open for it before the next Five Years Meeting.

In the meantime, I shall continue to do my best, although feeling that younger men ought to have the burden of the work. I want to get all the supply business for the Sabbath Schools concentrated, so that when the time comes to turn it over to the church, it will be Something Worth While.

TO THE POINT.

Now, to the point; it so happens that some of the Friends' Sabbath Schools prefer other lesson helps and papers to ours, (although we are supplying fully 80 percent. of all helps to Friends' Sabbath Schools). There is nothing improper in this. All schools have a right to their own personal preference, and to use what they really believe to be for the best interest of the School.

If these Schools only knew how much they could help us by ordering their supplies through us, they would surely do so. I am agent for all the Sabbath School supply houses, and am constantly ordering from other houses for Friends' Schools.

GRADED HELPS.

Three years ago I was appointed agent among Friends for the Syndicate publishing the Graded system of lessons and began at once a systematic campaign advertising these Helps. The results, as seen by the reports of the Bible School Commission of the Five Years Meeting, is that 93 Friends' Sabbath Schools are using, to some extent, these Helps. This work is largely the result of my advertising, as agent for the Syndicate, and I am in a position to give correct information on the Graded Helps. I can also send prospectus, prices and order blanks.

AN APPEAL.

My appeal to all Friends' Sabbath Schools is to use as many of our Quarterlies, Youth's Friends, and Child's Lesson Leaf, as possible, and give us their orders for all other supplies. We can supply you with any Publications or Lesson Helps published by any publishing house in the world. These will not cost any more than to order direct from the publishers. We can supply you with Bibles, Maps, Record books, Class books, Reward cards, Blackboards, Cradle Rolls, and in fact, everything for the Sabbath School. Send for our complete catalogue.

As Thy Day

As thy days, so shall thy strength be.
—Deut. 33:25.

AS THIS my day! O promise blest!
Sweet words of comfort, words of rest!
No more with boding fear I wait
To read tomorrow's hidden fate;
Whate'er its toils, whate'er its tears,
Whate'er its perils, pains and fears,
While sun and stars and worlds endure
The old, sweet promise standeth sure.

The hand that holds the world upbears
My weary heart with all its cares.
The eye that slumbers not has seen
My graveyard mounds with grasses green.
My Father's pitying love has read
The pain behind the tears I shed.
How comforting His words to me,
"Child, as thy day, thy strength shall be."

As this my day! my little day!
My broken, troubled, thwarted day!
The day whose roseate morning bloom
Was quenched and darkened into gloom!
The morn of gifts! the noon of loss!
The lengthening shadow of the cross!
Once more, my Father, say to me,
"Child, as thy day, thy strength shall be."

Editorial Comment of Our Contemporaries

"Never had a saloon," was among the list of reasons given on a wayside billboard why prospective citizens should come and take up their residence in a Wisconsin town. How's that for anti-saloon testimony? If saloons hurt business would the commercial club permit that sign to stand?—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

This whole liquor league is doing the work of the world of darkness in their determination to poison the human race for the money that can be made out of it. The worst and most damaging poison in the world is used by them. Some day the world will awaken to common sense and put this traffic and its poison where they belong.—The Herald and Presbyterian.

Universal peace may be a dream, but it is a God-inspired dream whose realization is promised, and every move for arbitration treaties, every plea for disarmament, every suggestion for lessening the burdens of peace, is a step toward the ideal that is sure to come, when the only armies and navies of the world will be those maintained as international police to enforce the decisions of the Powers.—Lutheran Observer.

Not a part, not a section, but all, the whole, for Jesus our Savior and our Lord, that is the condition of the Christian life. It is not possible to serve Him in such wise as to make it easy for him to confess us before the Father, when like the god Janus we have two faces, one looking toward Him, the other toward the world. The whole must be His. When the whole gift, the life is altogether Christ's His presence, accepting and sanctifying the gift, gives in return a peace that is not of this world, which the world cannot give, which the world cannot take away.—Central Christian Advocate.

The widespread and persistent discussion of church union indicates a deep and growing interest in the subject. The various movements toward union, it must be admitted, are more or less tentative, but the fact that they are proposed and that conferences, church councils and conventions are disposed to consider them, proves that the subject is invested with very decided interest. And this interest cannot be ignored. There are many in the church, and many more in the world, who believe it ought to be, and that a continued separation of the sects has much to do with the slow progress that Christianity is making in the conversion of the world.—The Methodist Protestant.

The United States Supreme Court has established the present right of the states to fix maximum railroad rates. A considerable number of the states either through their legislatures or through railroad commissioners have fixed two-cent mileage rates for passengers and maximum freight rates. First, in the Minnesota cases and then last week in the cases from Missouri, Arkansas, Oregon and West Virginia, the Supreme Court confirmed the rates established with the exception of a few railroads that have been able to show that the roads in question would suffer loss by the rates imposed. In cases where the roads claim that they cannot afford to do business under so low a rate as that wanted, the burden of proof rests upon the railroad. Thus far the states' rights principle is definitely recognized. One question is still unsettled; that is with reference to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission over rates fixed by a state which unjustly discriminates against shippers outside the state. Just that issue is before the Supreme Court in a case that awaits decision.—Congregationalist and Christian World.

The daily newspapers are generous in the space devoted to functions and exercises of the schools at this season of the year. It is a practice of wholesome significance and influence. The great company of young men and women who are leaving the colleges and universities must be of interest to all who have a care for the well being of society. Not a few of the institutions of high grade report the largest classes in their history. Smith College sent out 381 young women. It is to have a new biology building at a cost of $140,000. Wellesley College graduated 274 young women. Rutgers College sent out a class of 77 young men. It had the most prosperous year in its 147 so far as finances were concerned. Carnegie Institute of Technology class numbered 225 at its sixth commencement. Cornell University had its largest class, 717. The University of Pennsylvania class ran up to 849. Wesleyan University had 84 graduates. Lafayette graduated 85. Yale had a commencement season notable for large reunions of former classes, and sent out this year 767 bearing its imprimatur. A gateway in honor of former President Noah Porter was dedicated. Harvard's class numbered 346. The corner-stone of a memorial library, to cost two million dollars, was laid. It is a gift of Mrs. George D. Widener, of Philadelphia, in honor of a son who was lost with the Titanic. Vanderbilt University's trustees accepted the conditions imposed by Mr. Carnegie in this tender of a million dollars for its medical school in spite of the very bitter attack made on the giver by Bishop Candler, of the M. E. Church South. Brown had as its commencement orator, Chief Justice White, of the United States Supreme Court. Its class numbered 161.—The United Presbyterian.

We were talking with a distinguished Frenchman in Geneva last summer, and he informed us that the impression was growing in Europe that the United States was great on preaching brotherhood and good-will to the other nations, but when the crisis came, failed to practise it herself. He then instanced the general arbitration treaties offered by President Taft to France as an illustration of his point. The president of the United States spent a whole year preaching arbitration and calling upon England and France to join with him in a great compact of brotherhood forever, with all the churches and institutions of the United States hurrahing with him. Then when France and England gladly reciprocated, and were all ready to sign the treaties, the United States backed down and would not practise herself what she had been preaching to the other nations. Not long afterwards we met an Englishman. He was greatly disgusted with the United States. He said that they in England had been watching America for years in admiration. They had been following her leadership, as she preached so splendidly the gospel of good-will, and had urged so boldly the signing of treaties of arbitration. And then, without any warning, America breaks a sacred treaty, and has such distrust of other nations that she absolutely refuses to arbitrate even the question of a broken treaty. "What stock," said he, "can we hereafter take in America's talk about arbitration after the action of your Senate on the Panama tolls question?" We regret to say that we found such sentiment as that reflected in the remarks of these two men common throughout all Europe. We have been in Europe a good many times, but last summer was the first time we ever had to hang our head in shame when men talked of America.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

The Personal Touch

It is the personal touch that counts most. More's the pity that the Church has not discovered and utilized this simple bit of philosophy in a larger way than has been its custom. The Church is too prone to act only in its corporate capacity, and does not readily learn the art of resolving itself into individual units for active personal service that manifests itself in multitudinous ways.

We are reminded of the Friend's reply, when besought to do some personal work in getting others to attend religious services: "They know the meeting house is open; let them come if they want to." Many a local meeting practices this teaching, even if not ready to accept the soundness of its philosophy.

What a striking contrast there is between this evident lack of interest, and the extraordinary activity reported recently in a certain rural meeting in Indiana Yearly Meeting, in which an active house to house canvass of the neighborhood by a few interested Friends brought out a record breaking attendance at the Bible School. Many a meeting is dwindling and almost despairing, all for the want of a few people to go out into the community in order to let the neighborhood folks know that their presence is wanted at the religious services and other appointed means of grace.

If every Friends meeting would organize a sort of personal workers' neighborhood committee whose business it is to extend the glad hand of Christian greeting and welcome to the scores of "stay-at-homes" that throng almost every community, making these feel that they are wanted around at the Church and the Bible School and the Christian Endeavor and at the prayer meeting, the average attendance at these services would in most instances be doubled within two years. If there be any who doubt this statement, let them try it out honestly, sincerely, persistently.

Of course, mere formal invitations will avail little. Formality is not much of a force in the world's great workshop. It is the personal touch that sparkles with soul interest and is vitalized by an intense life that counts. Too often the handshake is a mere formality and the greeting which should breathe out fellowship is lifeless. It is the live personality that is magnetic, and doubly so a live Christian personality. Too frequently Christians in their daily intercourse belie the doctrines of brotherhood and fellowship which they profess. Live men and women will mean a live Church and ultimately an awakened community.

The successful politician is generally the "good mixer," who gives a handshake and a smile as tokens of the interest in his constituency which he at least professes. But the personal touch does not win merely because it is the game of politics. It is the fact that life comes in contact with life, social interest is awakened and the mind is made to find kinship with a new element in its existence. There are few people whose personality is so dull and impassive that they are unable to interest somebody else in the things that concern them most, if only their lives can be brought into contact.

It is this principle, heightened by the spirit of loving service which Christ begets in the regenerated life, that the Church should use in its efforts to win the masses of mankind to its teachings. All organized service is effective only to the extent that personalities may have better opportunity to impress themselves upon the lives of others. Christ won his disciples not by standing afar off and reading homilies about Christian duty, but by His personal associations with them and by the power of loving service wherein their lives merged in practical activities.

We do not minimize the importance of preaching and the proclamation of gospel truth from the pulpit or elsewhere. We are only trying to emphasize the effectiveness of those multiplied forms of Christian ministrations that may so easily be manifested in the lives and activities of our membership. Let our meetings organize for personal service in their respective communities, and many of our problems which have seemed perplexing will have found solution. It is the personal touch that counts most.

With God's spirit moving mightily in China and Japan and Persia and Africa and India, the cause of Christ should take on new life, inspired with the spirit of uplift and service, in our Christian America.

Many people are ready to quote Scripture, but act as though they do not believe what they quote. It is the sincere consistent life that counts most in the world's work.

The United States as a World Power

BY ELBERT RUSSELL

For Americans patriotism has a universal element. We feel that it is too light a thing for God to give us our resources and our liberties for ourselves alone. From the days when William Penn tried his Holy Experiment in free democracy as an example to the nations, we have had proud visions of American civilization—of America's intelligence, democracy, Christianity and liberty—enlightening the world.

Today we stand at the cross-roads of national history, considering which is the road to the accomplishment of our world-wide destiny. One of these ways that is pointed out to us is the way of military and naval power. We have heard much in the last decade of the United States as a world power, and we are urged to take our place in armed camp of the "Great Powers"; to join in the mad rivalry of naval programs; to maintain an army commensurate with our resources; to take our place in the councils of the world with armaments sufficient to give weight to our opinions and to create respect for our wishes. The assumption of those who urge us to take this road is that we first became a world-power, when in 1898 our greatly superior naval forces destroyed a few undermanned Spanish ships at Manila and Santiago; when we annexed Hawaii, conquered Porto Rico and the Philippines, and "protected" Panama. We are given to understand that our most salutary influence in the world is found in the fear and admiration aroused by our great "White Squadron" on its world cruise in 1908; by our participation in the relief and loot of Peking during the Boxer uprising; by policing Central America; and by mobilizing an army on the borders of Mexico.

The other road that is pointed out to us is the way of international justice and good-will. We are urged to rely on the justice of our claims and the wisdom of our counsels to give them weight; to win the friendship of nations by unselfish policies and acts of international good-will; to set an example of successful democracy at home; to cultivate self-control; to spend money upon institutions for human uplift rather than on armaments that breed armaments; to rely on the fairness of the merchant abroad, on the teacher's truth, and on the missionary's unselfish character, to make us a power abroad.

When we examine by the light of history the relative success of these two methods, we discover that in the latter sense the United States has always been a world power, and that in the last decade nothing has jeopardized the beneficent influence of the United States as much as its territorial expansion and its growing naval power.

Our country began to be a world-power in the very struggle by which it gained its independence. There was a world-consciousness in the "decent respect for the opinions of mankind" which led the Revolutionary Fathers to justify the revolution to the reason and conscience of the world. In the Declaration of Independence were proclaimed, with the power of conviction and suffering, the principles of human equality and popular government, which heretofore had been the inert theorizings of the Encyclopedists and French social philosophers. France hung impotent between the old order which was dead and the new world powerless to be born. It was in the American struggle that Lafayette and his companions got the vital impulse and the ideals that were ultimately to bring the French Republic to realization.

The American Revolution exercised an influence almost as great upon England and her colonies. Many of us got the idea in childhood that the Revolution was a struggle of the colonists as one man against the tyranny of the English nation. But such an idea is far from the truth. We had our Tories here, many of whom went to England or Canada rather than live in a republic that recognized no aristocracy. In England there were statesmen who raised their voices in Parliament and in the press on behalf of the colonial patriots. Because there were few Englishmen who would fight to deprive their kinsmen in America of Englishmen's rights, George III had to hire Hessian soldiers for the war. It was in reality the last great struggle for English liberty, fought on American soil. That is the reason England had no great democratic upheaval at the close of the eighteenth century such as France had. America taught her rulers that Englishmen everywhere must have the rights and liberties of Englishmen, and so saved to her the rest of her colonies. America gave the decisive impulse in the last great struggle between autocratic and popular government in England and her government is today one of the most democratic in the world. America also furnished a model for the organization of England's great colonies. The Dominion of Canada, the Union of South Africa and the Commonwealth of Australia—all are organized under federal constitutions combining local and general governments after the model of our own. Our country was able to do this when its army was inconsiderable and its navy almost a negligible quantity. We won in the Revolution not by superior might but because the cause was right and reasonable. England could have subjugated us, had Englishmen felt that we were champions of anarchy or rebels against just laws and rightful authority. To have given the vital spark to the French Revolution, the birth impulse to the Republic of France; to have completed the struggle for popular government in England and made secure the rights of Englishmen to English colonists the world over; to have given models of government to three great English-speaking federations—this is no mean achievement for a nation in its infancy. A people that can do this is already a world-power.

Our country had just emerged from the doubtful struggle of the War of 1812, the centenary of the close of which we are now preparing to celebrate, when Spanish America broke into revolt from Spain. There is no doubt as to the influence that prompted these revolutions. The liberators, Bolivar and Martin, are rivals for the honor of being the "Washingtons" of South America. All these peoples made haste to organize free republics with constitutions modeled on our own. The United States recognized these republics as her political children, and President Monroe stated his famous doctrine that these countries were not any more to be regarded as subject to European colonization. Perhaps no principle of international policy set forth in the nineteenth century has been more influential in history. Yet when uttered, and most of the time since, the United States has not had army or navy sufficient to make Europe respect it. It has come to be recognized in international law because it was in harmony with high political ideals, because of our insistence that it should not excuse any American country from the obligations of justice and humanity.

On the other hand, our influence over Spanish America has never been jeopardized so severely as when we retained the Philippines and Porto Rico, annexed Hawaii, and kidnapped Panama, and sent to South American ports a great fleet of battleships, which reminded them that "while the Monroe Doctrine protected them from Europe, it did not protect them from the United States."

The rapid rise of Japan in civilization and power was the national wonder of the last half of the nineteenth century. It was America that gave it its start upon that road. After Japan had had a taste of the European kind of civilization in the sixteenth century, its doors were shut fast against western influence, until in 1853 when Commodore Perry appeared on a peaceful mission and made a treaty of friendship. A Japanese statesman recently told an American traveler that he regarded Perry as the greatest friend of Japan, who was not a Japanese. After Perry's visit the Japanese set out to learn the ways of the western world, that would be of greatest advantage to them. They modeled their new navy after the British navy; their army was organized finally after the German model; but they paid America the supreme compliment of taking our school system as a pattern for their own. The plan of the agricultural college of Japan was outlined by the first president of the Agricultural College of Massachusetts. Quite recently ex-President Eliot of Harvard, while on a visit to Japan for the Carnegie Peace Foundation, expressed a mild criticism of the Japanese education of girls. His remarks created a great stir in the Japanese press. They are anxious that American ideals shall yet prevail in the education of their children. Many of the statesmen who instituted the constitutional era in Japan were educated in America or in American missionary schools in Japan. A few years ago Japan and Russia were engaged in a great war on the Sea of Japan and the plains of Manchuria. That war came to an end in the deliberations of a peace commission at Portsmouth Navy Yard, Maine. The combatants ceased to fight and began to reason at the invitation of the President of the United States, as you remember. After the negotiations had gone on awhile, all the terms of a treaty had been agreed upon except the question of a war indemnity. Japan insisted that Russia must pay a big indemnity, and the Russian representatives refused. Japan faced the alternative of foregoing the indemnity or of going to war for money alone. Then the Japanese statesmen braved popular sentiment in their own country, and waived the claim for indemnity, rather than outrage the sentiments of the civilized world by shedding blood for money alone. Of these Japanese plenipotentiaries who thus stood by their high ideals, Count Komura and Count Kaneko were Harvard men. It would have been in vain for President Roosevelt to get peace negotiations started, if American training in the ideals of Christian civilization had not been able to restrain the victorious cupidity of the Japanese populace.

In an article written by Dr. Yen, Secretary of the Chinese legation in 1909, he speaks of the cordial relations that have existed between "the ancient Empire and the young Republic." By these terms he then designated China and America. But if he were speaking of them today he might characterize them truly as the youngest republic and the oldest republic. The sudden transformation of China is the international sensation of the twentieth century. In this transformation the influence of America has been the largest single influence. Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the principal leader of the revolution, received his education chiefly in American mission schools in Honolulu and Hongkong, and resided at times in America. Most of the other revolutionary leaders were products of the mission schools in China—by far the best and most numerous of which were American—or were educated in the United States. Their most patriotic hope for China is a free republic like the United States of America. Half of Yuan Shih Kai's Cabinet are foreign trained, most of them educated in America.

Whence this influence of America in the regeneration of China? Is it due to our military reputation? Our great armaments? Is it the fruit of the visit of our great fleet in 1908? No. Dr. Yen, in the article mentioned, calls attention to the cordial relations that have always existed between the United States and China, and to the just treatment accorded his country by the United States. "When China desired to establish diplomatic relations with the powers, it was an American, the Hon. Anson Burlingame, who was given the coveted position of envoy." That confidence has never been destroyed by aggressions or selfish ambitions on our part. We have never engaged in an "opium war," to make for our products a Chinese market. We have never seized upon spheres of influence, like France, Russia, Germany and England. We have not shaken the "mailed fist" at China to intimidate her into concessions, such as Germany got at Kiao Chou. On the contrary, our diplomacy has insisted on the territorial integrity and commercial freedom of China. We returned to China $12,000,000—nearly half—of the Boxer indemnity, and China was so touched by this unusual act of international justice on the part of a western nation, that she devoted the income of it to educate young Chinamen in the schools of the United States of America. There are now over 800 Chinese students in the colleges and universities of the United States. Mr. Yen, writing in 1908, describes their influence in prophetic terms:

"In the hundreds of Chinese students in this country that are earnestly and industriously absorbing the best that colleges and universities can impart to them, there exists a mighty bond of union and an unwritten alliance between China and America. These young men, as one of them strikingly expressed it, form a bridge across the broad expanse of the Pacific Ocean on which American learning, American ideals, American institutions, American inventions and American manufactures are and will be conveyed to China. The influence of such young men, the future leaders of China, over their country's predilections and policies will be enormous. Having been fully saturated with American ideas and ideals, they will transport them to and distribute them among their own countrymen. They will be able to modify the public opinion of their countrymen that half a century of ordinary contact with the Occident cannot modify. They will be able to insure a peace and trade in the far east that treaties and military forces cannot insure."

Our influence in Europe has been less spectacular but no less real and pervasive. I do not refer to our commercial influence, great as that is—to the fact that American enterprise has built London subways, introduced the department store into Poland, and cultivated abroad a liking for "tinned meats" and the quick lunch.

The reflex influence of immigration to America upon European countries is a great, though little understood source of our power in the world. Everywhere this influence goes, servants are less servile and laborers less enslaved. Wages are rising all over Europe because of American standards of living. European governments are being compelled to better conditions, grant universal franchise, and abolish military conscriptions, or else see their progressive, original, adventurous young men and women go to swell the power and glory of America. I quote from an address by Mr. Mead, "The United States as a World Power":*

"Speaking of the year 1900—and I suppose the proportions have not much changed since, although the numbers have increased—but speaking of 1900, we had some twenty millions of people of English blood, eighteen millions of German blood—very little difference—whole States, like Wisconsin, three-quarters of whose people are of German blood, great cities like Milwaukee, St. Louis; and I think your own Chicago, predominantly German; we have fourteen millions of Irish and Scotch blood; half as many Swedes as in Sweden; half as many Norwegians as in Norway; half as many Danes as in Denmark; New York, the fourth

Italian city in the world with 500,000 Italians, the fifth German city in the world, the greatest Jewish city ever heard of in human history—the Jerusalem of Isaiah and John the Baptist was not in it with New York City. I don't know whether you realize it, but more than one-half of the total number of Jews in the United States are in the city of Greater New York—a million of them. New York, you see, is the New Jerusalem. I say, out of this conglomerate are we made. And the greatest influence of all has not been these spectacular things which I have hastily run over; it has been the silent, pervasive influence of the thousands and millions of letters which during the last two generations have filled the mail bags, going to the old homes from the new homes here, and falling like snowflakes into the little homes and little villages beside the Rhine and the Elbe and the Danube and the Po, telling the old folks at home of a new land, where there are free schools, and free churches, and a free press, and free assembly, and free libraries, and free speech, and all the other great institutions which make up this free country.

"My friends, talk of the influence of the United States as a world power—this has been the thing which has been leavening the world and sowing everywhere the seeds of that democracy which we believe is destined everywhere to triumph, and through whose triumph alone universal peace will come. Because, friends, there will never be universal peace in this world until there is justice, and there will never be justice in the world until men have their rights, until there is self-government, until there is some approach to a dominant democracy."

At the Hague Conference in 1899 the United States was a world influence out of all proportion to its military and naval armaments. From the visit of Barnabas C. Hobbs to the Czar a generation ago in the interest of peace, to the cablegram of a group of Texas Baptist preachers that influenced the Kaiser at the critical moment, American influence was prominent in connection with every stage of setting up the Hague Court. The American Government gave the court prestige by referring the first case to it and asking that the Venezuela claims be submitted to it. At the subsequent Hague Conference the American delegates were the most influential leaders in every forward movement.

For half a decade the events in Turkey and the Balkan Peninsula have been occupying our attention. The Young Turk Movement which overthrew the despotism of Abdul Hamid and established a constitutional regime in Turkey was not the sudden movement it seemed. Its original impulse was in the mission schools scattered here and there over the Ottoman Empire. A book like Barton's "Daybreak in Turkey" gives one a vivid sense of the transformation wrought by the great mission schools, especially the American College at Beirut and Robert College at Constantinople. At the International Peace Congress in London in 1908, one of the leading figures was Ahmed Riza, the leader of the Young Turk Movement and the president, since its establishment, of the Turkish Parliament. He gives credit to American education and American political ideals for the power of that movement.

The influence of American education extends beyond that. In 1856, as the Crimean war was nearing its close, an American merchant, Mr. Robert, of New York, was on a ship at Constantinople bound for the Crimea. He noticed that a small boat was loading upon his ship some loaves of bread that looked as if American-made. On investigation, he found that the bread was made at a little American mission school just across the Hellespont from Constantinople. The missionary was furnishing some wholesome bread for Florence Nightingale's hospital work in the Crimea. Mr. Robert grew interested in the school. As a result of his benefactions, which reached $400,000 before he died, Robert College was chartered in 1863. For fifty years and more that college, and the school that was its forerunner, has been training the youth of Turkey, and especially the young men of the Balkan States, in American political ideals. President Angell of Michigan University, who was for many years United States minister to Turkey, said that Abdul Hamid was more afraid of Robert College than he was of the armaments of the European powers. And well he might be. In 1878, after the Treaty of San Stephano had guaranteed the autonomy of Bulgaria, a great warship sailed up the Hellespont carrying the young leaders who were to establish self-government in Bulgaria and as it passed Robert College it dipped its colors and fired a salute. Those young men, when they established their government, also established a system of popular education. At the outbreak of the recent war, Bulgaria was spending one-sixth of her total revenue upon education. In the American training lay the secret of her power. The European powers gave little attention to the Balkan states, because they thought they would never overcome their traditional animosities and race hatreds long enough to act together. But the new leaders of these states had been trained under American influence to understand the federal ideal, to appreciate the advantages of union. After the crisis in 1908, when Bulgaria declared her independence, the leaders quietly formed an alliance to destroy from Europe the last remnants of Turkish power and substitute in its place a United States of the Balkans. To have overthrown the despotism of Abdul Hamid after the armies of Russia had so often failed; to have removed from European Turkey the incubus of Ottoman misrule after crusader and European "concert" had tried in vain through centuries to accomplish it,—these mark, perhaps, the highest manifestation of the United States as a world-power.

These things show us the ways by which in future we may seek to make and preserve the prestige of our country:—in national confidence, like that which led Persia to call Schuster to be its treasurer; in deeds of kindness such as sent our navy to the succor of stricken Martinique, and with supplies to aid fallen Messina; in evidences of benevolence and self-restraint like the establishment of popular government in Cuba a second time and the withdrawal of our forces to leave her to the enjoyment of her liberties; like the refusal of our government to join in forcing an unfavorable loan upon China as the price of admittance to the family of free nations; like our offer to the nations of the world to submit our causes to an impartial court, rather than to rely upon threat of war or upon diplomacy backed by armaments which make weakness look like wrong and enable aggression to assume the voice of justice. For the word of the prophet is still true, that we shall attain to a great mission not by an army nor by armaments, but by the spirit of justice, righteousness and love, which are the fruits of the Spirit of God.

The Evangelistic and Aggressive Element in the Gospel

BY DAVID HADLEY

Evangelistic work in modern conditions of society has become one of the problems of the Church. With the cultured and educated classes, the drift seems to be towards character building by processes of culture and consequent refinement, leaving the evangelistic service to be applied where vice and immorality have left their foul stain, especially among those who have seen the horny side of life, and have been exposed to the calloused conditions that produce looseness of moral sensibility. When salvation is presented to these in the power of a vitalized gospel, they are conscious of the realities of sin, and readily concede that there are ample grounds for repentance and amendment of life. But those who have been surrounded by those influences that safeguard society, who have been shielded from the grosser forms of irregularity in character, and share in the refinement of educational facilities, seem to feel that the means employed in general evangelistic service are questionable and almost wholly sensational, and tacitly stand aloof from such methods, if they do not openly oppose them.

The careful observer can readily discover that the drift of the Church is from the evangelistic to the cultural and educational methods of saving men, and that it is gradually and unconsciously falling back into the quietism that characterized our Church in former years, and which produced bondage and spiritual dearth. In these modern days when the educational facilities have been rightfully increased, and the college element of the Church greatly multiplied, the danger of losing the truly evangelistic spirit is painfully apparent.

Wherever the blight of Unitarianism, even in modified form, has been accepted and propagated, the current of soul-saving power has been almost entirely obliterated. Where there is any questioning about the Deity of Christ, the vicarious atonement made for sin, the fundamental doctrine connected with the fall of man, and his redemption through the atoning blood of Christ, where the spirit of liberalism has appeared, the tendency is away from the Pauline manner of saving men. There can be no effective and permanent evangelism where clear scriptural doctrine is largely ignored, and where speculative interpretations concerning the established revelations of the Bible are believed and propagated.

One very great drawback to this important mode of church procedure, has been emotionalism uncontrolled and blindly directed, that has claimed divine guidance for irrational conclusions and actions. This has been a source of great distraction, and has greatly hindered the appliances employed in saving men. These abuses, however, do not in any way invalidate true and sane methods of evangelism. The personnel of the evangelist is an important factor in success. Any irregularities or eccentricities will greatly neutralize the services, and be a permanent impediment in the prosecution of this important work.

Whenever the Church, either locally or in its corporate relations, fails to have an aggressive and evangelistic ministry, and ceases to maintain a membership that is in full sympathy with and in deep soul-travail for the conversion of the unsaved, and does not keep the altar fires steadily burning, there will come mildew and ultimate declension and death. The present status and organism of our Church, including all its activities, educational, missionary, evangelistic and pastoral, are the direct results of a spirit-filled, evangelistic ministry, with the spirit of aggression that has been bestowed upon the Church in the last few decades. This new vitalized vigor settled its policies in nearly all its many activities, and the direct cause of these great changes must be sustained in a clear and scriptural evangelism that answers to the command of Christ in the "Great Commission." Without this there will be great peril to these vital departmental activities; without the constant and unabated existence of this hidden fire of evangelism, the Church will lapse into cold formalism, and become invaded by doctrinal fallacies and internal eruptions, and thus forfeit the right to claim a place among the instrumentalities that represent Christ in soul saving.

While recognizing the importance of preaching the gospel of love and good will, and keeping these essential and positive forces in the foreground, yet if a full message is delivered, there must be the uncovering of the awful deformities of sin, and with unvarnished words we must deal with its deathly consequences, with no compromising tendencies, making clear and vivid to the unsaved the final doom of those who reject the offers of sovereign mercy. In these days of numberless isms and fads, the Church must stand unswervingly for the clear clarion call to genuine repentance, and faith in the sacrificial offering of Christ, as the alone means of escaping the certain final judgments of God. There should be an awakening all along the line, both in the ministry and membership, in real inward soul burden and travail for those who are outside the fold. "The fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much," and is the most essential primary instrumentality in all effective revival service.

The Sure Foundation

BY SAMUEL H. HODGES

The importance of foundation work in any undertaking cannot well be overestimated. The more valuable the structure to be erected, the greater the importance of a true and sure foundation for that structure. Now, since our faith, that is the whole body of truth which gives character to our spiritual life, is among the most valuable of all our possessions, the foundation truth upon which the whole rests, should be as the adamantine rock, imperishable and unshakable.

There are many systems of religious truth existing in the Christian world. Each of the hundreds of denominations and sects has a system which differs from all the others in some one or more particulars. Only one or two out of these hundreds claim to have all the truth. Most of them admit possibility of error in some of the details of the structure. Most of them have a rallying factor in their system around which their members gather, and for maintenance of which they strive. This becomes the key to the arch which holds their system together, and distinguishes it from all others. It is to that particular denomination their anchorage. When that is successfully attacked and demolished in the mind of any one of its members, he may keep his name on the register, but in reality he has lost his membership.

In like manner each of the religions of the world has a distinguishing feature. The Mohammedans rally around Mohammed and his teaching; the Confucians around Confucius; the Buddhists around Buddha. There are points of difference among the followers of all these, but the fidelity with which the founder and his teaching is adhered to, is the measure of the genuineness of their loyalty. When a man in Turkey departs from the teachings of Mohammed, and holds him to have been misguided, and therefore an unreliable man, while that man may have a harem, go to the mosque and obey the reigning Sultan, he is no longer a true Mohammedan. He may esteem Mohammed as having been a good camel driver, a brave warrior, and a devout worshiper of Allah, but he is no longer, to such a man, a founder of religion, and one to command his homage and implicit obedience.

In Law School days we were given lectures on pleading, especially as it used to be practiced. A lawyer, though a poor speaker in open court, would often win his cases because of his superior pleading by written documents prior to the trial. "Declaration," "Rebutter," and "Sur-rebutter" had been filed with the clerk of the court, and an issue had been arrived at, with which the litigants and their counsel went into open court for trial. The skillful pleader had gotten his opponent tied down to the weakest point in the case—a feature which that opponent could not well and satisfactorily support by law and evidence; consequently it was almost impossible for him to win his case.

In war as well as in law, the contestant maneuvers his army with a view to placing his enemy in as disadvantageous a position as possible, and to secure for himself the ground of vantage. If the enemy can be prevailed upon to spend his strength in defending a position which is not a key to the situation, the battle is half won at the beginning.

In the spiritual warfare, in which we are engaged as Christians, we have to fight and wrestle against that enemy, who Jesus said had sown the tares among the wheat. The Devil is an enemy of no mean power and skill. He has maneuvered his forces in such manner as to gain considerable advantage with regard to position. He has gotten the followers of Jesus to spend much of their strength on untenable positions. He has often set them firing at each other. Denominations and sects have staked their existence on matters of comparatively trivial importance, so that the key to the situation has been left undefended, with tremendous consequent loss.

This is true with regard to Satan's devices with individuals, as well as with organizations. He will try to get us to defend a weak point in our system of thought; a point in which he can most easily defeat us. He will endeavor to get us to look at that as the foundation truth. Then, as a matter of course, when he has defeated us on that point, our faith is destroyed, and we are at his mercy.

Then, again, when the issue has been arrived at by pleading, and the case comes into court for trial, the Professor's advice to the student is equally valuable. A plaintiff through his counsel has the opening of the case. The professor said some counselors open their case so widely that they can never close it again; they claim so much which they have not the evidence at hand to prove; consequently both judge and jury plainly saw at the conclusion of the trial they had made a failure. "Always claim less than you are prepared to prove rather than more."

In the writer's opinion, evangelical Christians have been placed at a disadvantage by the enemy. Satan has been allowed to choose his own battle ground, and the friends of truth, in many cases, have spent strength in claiming too much, and defending positions not vital to the cause they advocate. Almost every doctrine of our faith from the resurrection of the body, the trinity, the atonement, forgiveness of sins, the new birth to the rewards of the righteous and punishment of the wicked in the future life, has been chosen as a foundation factor in the faith once delivered to the saints. Not only so, but some special and particular definition of these particular doctrines, has been set up as the key to the arch. But as these definitions and expositions are human productions, every one of them has a weak spot, which the enemy of souls is not slow to find, and expose; consequently their champions are easily placed in a difficulty.

If then no single doctrine as humanly defined, ought to be considered the key to the situation, or foundation of our edifice of truth, what is the key, or foundation?

Some will immediately answer, "The Bible, out of which the doctrines are all supposed to be drawn." The writer desires to enter a most solemn asseveration in regard to his estimate of and use of the Bible. From the time (now thirty-seven years ago) when he was baptized with the Holy Spirit, he has, in a very real sense of the word, lived in the Bible. He has bought, read, and marked (till the marking has made the words obscure) more Bibles and New Testaments than any two men of his intimate acquaintances. It is his deliberate opinion that no man in the past, since the Scriptures were obtainable, and no man can now, build up a true Christian manhood without having previously obtained, and inwardly digested the truths contained in that Book of Books, which is in its entirety a unique message of God to man. And what is more, no man having attained such manhood in Christ, can maintain it without constant recourse to those Scriptures of Truth. God has given us in them "Precious promises that through these we may be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust" (Pet. 1: 4).

If a book is written and has been copied, and copies of copies made over and over again, and then translated and copied again, and all the early copies are lost, as well as the original writings, it seems to be only reasonable that the writer, if alive and able so to do, would like to have the privilege of interpreting the meaning of any and every statement in his book, capable of two or more explanations. It would not detract from the value of the book, and evidently would be far better than to go for explanation to a third party, however able and honest that third party might be. These are the circumstances under which the Bible comes to us. The Eternal Logos, or Word is its author. It is written designedly in such manner as to require illumination from some one. Many undertake to give this in sermons and comment, with the result that from it have been taken hundreds of diverse views on almost every doctrine in theology. Calvinists, Armenians, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Mormons, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Christian Scientists and others too numerous to mention, all support their views more or less by reference to the Bible. The blessed book has been, in the hands of the Lord, the instrument by which He has accomplished untold good. The New Testament, in the hands of Spirit-filled men and women, was the means used by the Lord in bringing about the wonders of the Reformation, which broke the back of civil and spiritual tyranny in Europe, and sent those to this continent who sowed the seed of liberty here.

But at this point the professor's advice regarding the opening of a case too widely is appropriate. To claim unerring accuracy for every single book, and every writer of every book, and every word of every writer, is more than can possibly be proven. To stake our salvation on the genuineness and authenticity of every word of any single individual, as now recorded in the Bible, would be a risk too great, and one wholly unnecessary to be taken. Many have been led to do something of that sort, and when the error has only seemed to be manifested to them, they have lost their faith, and Satan has triumphed.

No, no, not on a book, though precious as the Bible deserves to be considered; not on a doctrine as humanly defined; not on any theory are we to build our faith; but on a Person, a real Living Person, and that Person God's own Son, who became flesh and dwelt among us; who was crucified, dead and buried, who rose again and now lives to accomplish that for which he died; a Person who can make himself known, believed and loved; who can, by his Spirit take the truths written in the Bible, or spoken by his ambassadors, and bring to pass conviction, conversion, and sanctification wherever and whenever he is believed and obeyed.

"Christ in you" is the foundation of our faith. He is the sure "corner stone" which has become the head stone of the corner. "Other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (I Cor. 3:7). Building on him we are like Mount Zion that cannot be removed. His Spirit is given to guide us into all truth.

Jesus left no writing of his own behind him. The churches formed out of the Jewish people, which were more largely versed in the prophecies of the Old Testament Scriptures than were the Gentile churches, who were won, and depended on the direct operations of the Spirit on themselves and their instructors, all came to an end; but the Gentile churches lived, and their successors are we, of the present age. It was testimony of the knowledge of a personal Savior, which was the effective preaching then, as it is now. Those of us who have worked among people of the lower and ignorant classes, know that we must go to them with an account of what we have experienced for ourselves, of the quickening and saving power of the Eternal Word, the Son of God. It is written, "They overcame through the Blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony, and they loved not their lives unto the death." The New Testament, as we have it, was not the foundation of their faith, for it was not then written, much less compiled and bound up in a volume. But He who said, "Lo, I am with you always," and "Wheresoever two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst," was never absent; and never unwilling or unable to render all the assistance the circumstances call for, though dark and difficult those circumstances might in reality have been.

Thy forgiveness opens a door for the forgiveness of God, which otherwise can find no entrance to thy soul. Open that door wide, that he may enter and abide forever more.—Ambrose Earl.

Isom P. Wooton

For a generation Isom P. Wooton has filled a relatively large place in the councils and services of the Society of Friends; in which he was seventy-six years a member, fifty-three years a Christian, fifty years a valued minister. He was born near Dayton, Ohio, Ninth month 4, 1836, was born again in 1859, was recorded a minister in 1862, and was welcomed Home Third month 31, 1913. The prophetic gift was well represented in the family in which Mother Wooton and six of her sons became valued ministers of the Gospel of Christ. He married Margery E. Kinzer, of Bangor, Iowa, whither he had early moved from Ohio, and where for fourteen years he farmed on the prairies and shared with others in the ministry of the large and growing Bangor Friends' Church. In this period, as always elsewhere, until her health failed a few years before her death, Margery Wooton was a faithful and practical helpmeet. She was generally, perhaps always, appointed to the eldership in every new situation. She died at the home of John H. and Nelle Wooton Meader, Swarthmore, Pa., Second month 11, 1910. In Fourth month, 1911, Isom Wooton married Mary E. Updegraff, of Salem, Oregon, who survives him there.

Isom P. Wooton was a minister of much ability and convincing power, whose services were known and appreciated in nearly all the American yearly meetings. He gave much time to the early evangelistic work of Iowa Yearly Meeting, and a generation ago he was one of the few pioneer Friendly pastors. Beginning his pastoral work in the then new Des Moines Church, he continued it, with repeated interruptions, and with at least one return to his enjoyed farm life for restoration of health, in six Yearly Meetings, from Boston to Seattle, where he and his wife devoted his final few months to the new church of that city under the Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting. He had large influence with young people, and some eminent servants of the Lord attribute the chief human instrumentality in their lives to Isom P. Wooton. It was at Richmond, Indiana, that the first Friends Christian Endeavor Society was organized under his leadership.

Although positively progressive in the better sense, Isom P. Wooton was often conservative in counsel. Hence he was long a valued member of the evangelistic boards and on the Board of Trustees of Penn College. When the pastoral work of Iowa Yearly Meeting tended to extremes, as Evangelistic Superintendent he did much to restore moderation. In the same yearly meeting he was a member of the large committee who formulated and rewrote the discipline upon which the present Constitution and Discipline of the Five Years Meeting and of the American Yearly Meeting is chiefly based. Although owing to his comparatively limited education, he seldom intrusted the productions of his own pen to the press, his counsel often wisely directed the pens of others.

Isom P. Wooton possessed a balance of mind which enabled him to adjust himself to new issues and aggressive work, while he was more careful than most leaders to avoid dangerous measures and revolutionary movements. The extreme doctrinal and critical views of his time seldom found much favor with him. Desiring most of all to be a faithful and fruit-bearing Christian and Friend, he diligently sought and promoted the vital issues of the faith and the furtherance of the Gospel of the Kingdom of his Lord Christ.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

Having failed to receive the report from Nebraska Yearly Meeting which we had expected, we cull the following information from items appearing in The Nebraska Friend:

The Yearly Meeting was very well attended and it was estimated that about seventy visitors were present. It was a time of blessing and inspiration. Business was transacted in harmony and unity.

The committees for work were well chosen, and from the amount and character of the work done, all served the purpose of their appointment faithfully and well. A time each morning during the business session was given over to visiting ministers and others for devotional service.

The meetings for worship were helpful and strengthening and the messages sound. The key note was, "Watchmen be alert, sound the alarm; when we think there is no danger it may be at our very door."

The services of visiting ministers and Friends were greatly appreciated. Harry R. Keates, of Des Moines, Iowa, chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, gave a short talk on Wednesday afternoon on the necessity of the Church as the pillar of Truth upholding the Word of God. On the evening of the same day he delivered an inspiring sermon. William Smith, of Westfield, Indiana, was present during the entire session and helped much by his clear expositions of Scripture. Anna Ray and Parker Moon from Kansas Yearly Meeting were helpful in the devotional meetings and had charge of the sessions on Sabbath afternoon.

Maurice L. Rowntree, of Leeds, England, came with a minute and spoke interestingly of the work of young Friends in England. He was followed in a short talk by L. Hollingsworth Wood of New York Yearly Meeting, who said that the Board of Young People's Activities is neither a new organization or a competitor of old ones. Its object is to vitalize existing movements and to urge them to get under the burden of Friends work so that it may feel the impact of young lives. Carolena M. Wood, of New York Yearly Meeting, brought us some helpful words on social service.

After some consideration it was decided to continue the publication of The Nebraska Friend and Inez Taber Foreman was selected as editor, with George D. Weeks, of Denver, associate editor. Philip Stein continues as business manager.

The reports from the delegates to the Five Years Meeting together with remarks from Carolena M. Wood and Maurice L. Rowntree were intensely interesting, setting forth as they did the various undertakings of the Five Years Meeting along different lines of work.

There was a full house on Sunday evening when Eli H. Perisho, the newly elected president of Nebraska Central College, preached on "The Fully Equipped Soldier of Jesus Christ." The printed Minutes of the Yearly Meeting are expected to be ready for distribution about the first of July.

National Anti-Saloon League Convention

Editor American Friend:

The next biennial Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America is to be held at Columbus, Ohio, November tenth to thirteenth, inclusive. It will also be the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the League. We are expecting twenty thousand delegates. It is expected that this Convention will formally launch the campaign of the League for Nation-wide Prohibition.

Each local church, Sabbath School, and Young People's Society is entitled to representation, and we wish to appeal through your paper to the pastors, Sabbath School Superintendents and Presidents of Young People's Societies to have delegates appointed and send the names to THE CONVENTION COMMITTEE, WESTERVILLE, OHIO, immediately on their appointment.

Already a number of Governors, United States Senators and Congressmen have promised to be present and take a place on the program, as well as prominent men and women in temperance reform from all over the country.

Very truly yours,

P. A. BAKER,

General Superintendent.

Deploing Militant Efforts of Suffragists

The Countess of Carlisle, president of the British Women's Temperance Association and of the World's W. C. T. U., is also president of the Woman's Liberal Federation, a society whose object is the advancement of beneficent political movements and whose membership is composed of England's brainiest and most progressive women. Recently the Federation passed the following resolution:

"The executive committee, on behalf of the Woman's Liberal Federation, record that it has for six years consistently deplored and condemned the lawless methods of the militants which have so grievously set back the cause of woman's suffrage, and it recognizes that the outrages which are at present daily shocking the normal sense of the community are creating a serious obstacle in the way of those who are striving to carry this reform into law; nevertheless, the executive trusts that the wrong-doing of a mere section will not be unjustly visited upon thousands of constitutional, patient women who have for so many years striven by law-abiding methods to win the franchise for their sex."

Conservation

BY ANNA M. FREEMAN

When all of earth's iron is wasted,
And all of its coal is consumed,
And farm lands depleted of richness,
And the last of the forests is doomed;

When all of the buildings are crumbled,
And all of the furnaces cold,
And all the great engines are rusted,
What then is the value of gold?

Does it pay to turn iron into silver,
Or coal into greenbacks or bills,
Or trade the soil's richness for pastime,
Leaving naught but the rocks of the hills?

When our sons cry out in their hunger,
Shall we mind the piteous moans?
For meat shall we give them a serpent,
For bread shall we leave them the stones?

Not splendor, not gold, then, my brother,
But service, enough, and no more,
Remember the millions who follow
Our wake from eternity's shore.

A Method of Extension Work

About two years ago I had a glass frame about two feet high by one foot wide mounted on the front door of the Melbourne Meeting House, in which are displayed leaflets published by Yorkshire 1905 Extension Committee, Peace Committee, and other "Quakerly" literature. The leaflets are changed every week or two. Inside the frame is also placed a notice, "Literature sent free to anyone dropping their name and address in the letter-box." Up to date about 200 people have dropped their names and addresses in the letter-box, and received literature. These names are tabulated and can be used to send notices of special meetings to, or further literature. People come along the street, see the leaflets, read the notices, then search their pockets for a piece of paper to write on. The results are indeed novel.

Sometimes it is written on a visiting card, more often on the corner of a newspaper, or a scrap of dirty paper. On my desk, as I write, is an assortment that includes addresses written on a bookmaker's betting ticket, two names on two pieces of cigarette boxes, one address on the flat bottom of a match-box, one scrap of paper shows the address as "Trades Hall," the headquarters of our great labor organization. One scrap of paper reads "Rehoboth Mission, Richmond, requires tracts for distribution amongst the poor and ungodly."

Are there not hundreds of meeting houses in England and America which might get in touch with thousands of people through adopting this simple plan?

How to be Happy

Great principles are involved in being happy, but these aside, here are a few little suggestions that may help some reader:

1. Form the habit of doing something for somebody every day. This will enlarge your knowledge of human conditions and increase your capacity for happiness.

2. Look for something cheery every day if nothing more than a flower to see, a good word to hear, a bright thought to consider. Such acquisitions will enrich your mentality.

3. Add a mite to memory's store. Commit to heart a fine motto, a radiant text, a beautiful verse, or a helpful phrase, if not more than three words. Some day when you are ill or lonely or sad or dying these memorized passages will come back to you like whispers of peace from heaven's throne.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

Right Living

In spite of the difficulties that attend human life, it is all comprehended in a few simple principles easily applied. The first principle is establishing right relationship with God, the center and source of life and power. Guided and strengthened by the spirit of the Master of Men, we may then establish right relationship with the world that surrounds us, with people. We get into trouble as we become selfish and self-conscious and tell ourselves that we cannot do what we ought to do, or that it would not pay us to do it. It is so much better to apply the simple test of right and wrong, to square all our relationships by the Golden Rule, to let God guide us. We can attain to this standard of living only as we cultivate the spiritual side of our nature, only as we seek constant communion with the Holy Spirit and through prayer and faith make not self but service the great passion of our lives.—Rolfe Cobleigh.

How the sunlight seems to watch for a chance to get through the smallest openings in the clouds! Love, which forgives because it is love, and which waits for every opportunity to manifest kindness, is not going to wait to be asked to forgive. Ignore the wrongs you receive, and think over the good that has been or yet may be, and the evils will dwindle into nothingness.—Robertson.

"A modern wit has suggested that the trouble with the people who sit and wait for their ships to come in, is that they have never launched any ship to begin with. There is sound sense in that, as well as wit. We must build and launch, before sitting down to expect return cargoes."

"Do your best loyally and cheerfully, and suffer yourself to feel no anxiety or fear. Your times are in God's hands. He has assigned your place; he will direct your efforts if they be faithful."—Farrar.

Yearly Meeting News

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Professor Edwin P. Trueblood and wife, of Earlham College, will spend the summer at Whittier, California and vicinity, visiting relatives and friends. Professor W. C. Woodward and wife are spending their vacation at the home of Mr. Woodward's parents at Newberg, Oregon. Professor Harlow Lindley is serving as State Librarian at Indianapolis during the summer, in the absence of the regular official. Professor Elbert Russell will spend the summer in the East, lecturing, writing and recuperating.

On the afternoon of June 27th a large group of the membership of Seattle Meeting, Washington, went out to the home of Joshua Wright to congratulate him on the occasion of his eighty-ninth birthday. Robert E. Pretlow, on behalf of the Meeting, presented him a handsome large print New Testament, with some remarks expressing the love and esteem in which he is held by all the membership. Strawberries and cake added to the good cheer of a pleasant social hour. While not in robust health, Joshua Wright is seldom absent on Sabbath from his place at the head of Seattle Meeting.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Stafford Monthly Meeting was held June 27. Three were received into membership. These were conversions at our prayer meeting. The subject for discussion at our next meeting of ministry and oversight, to be held the 18th of July, is "Sin, its results, its nature, and its punishment," led by Edgar Potter, of Antioch.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

New Garden Monthly Meeting, held June 28, received two worthy persons into membership. Professor C. O. Meredith declared his intention of uniting in marriage with Angelina Wood, of Sandwich Monthly Meeting, New Hampshire, and a certificate of the good standing of Dr. Meredith was directed to be sent to that monthly meeting. The financial report showed all claims paid, including the Yearly Meeting stock, with a balance in the treasury. Missionary, peace, and other departmental reports, usually made at the last meeting before Yearly Meeting, were good and for the most part more satisfactory than usual. The Meeting advised the committee on Total Abstinence and Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, to be active in seeking to suppress the sale of liquor by means of the State Search and Seizure Law in connection with the new Webb Interstate Commerce Act. In this advice was included the enforcement of the state law against selling or giving away cigarettes to persons under seventeen years of age, and also the enforcement of the law against the sale or giving away of cigarettes or cigarette material within two miles of Guilford College. Our next and last Quarterly Meeting before Yearly Meeting will be held July 12.

Commencement Exercises

Nebraska Central College—From the Nebraska Friend we gather the following news concerning commencement exercises at Nebraska Central College:

"The fourteenth commencement of the Academic Department was held on the evening of June 2, in the College chapel. The stage was tastefully draped with purple and white bunting, and the class motto, 'Undaunted' in large white letters on a purple background hung above the stage, while one side wall of the chapel was hung in pennants. The class of six Academy graduates and five Commercial graduates, together with President Eli Perisho, occupied the platform, and an interesting program was rendered." * * *

The college commencement was of unusual interest this year. George D. Weeks, of Denver, Colorado, gave a most excellent educational address. The music of the occasion was worthy of note, a solo entitled "Springtime of the Year" being rendered by Mrs. Willoughby, and there was excellent quartet music by Mrs. Willoughby, Mrs. Foxworthy, Professor Perry and Lindell Hockett. Diplomas were presented to Mabel Roberts, Frank Roberts and Theodore Foxworthy. The college has reason to be proud of these worthy, hard working young people, and bids them God's speed and blessing in the new lines of work upon which they are just entering. Mabel Roberts, in and about her new home near Twin Falls, Idaho, will find a wide field of usefulness. Frank Roberts will teach in the Friends' Academy in Oregon.

We are sorry that these two graduates must be so far separated from their loved Alma Mater and the many friends here, but we are glad to see our equipped young people going out into the new and needy places, for that is where developed powers and spiritual minds are so much needed as leaders.

Mr. Foxworthy, a minister of the gospel, with his wife, will take up the pastoral work at North Loup. The Foxworthys have done so much for the college; Mrs. Foxworthy has been a faithful and valued teacher for the past four years, and Mr. Foxworthy, while carrying his heavy college work, has served with faithfulness on the College Board, a part of the time carrying the heavy burden of treasurer of the Board. They are firm believers in the college, and loyal supporters of the same, and will create college enthusiasm wherever they go.

Westtown—The Westtown school year closed June 18. The prominent events of the week were the College entrance examinations taken by a score or more of the boys; the public meeting of the Literary Union; the graduation of the class of 1913, and the meeting of the alumni association.

The senior class numbered forty-eight; twenty-eight boys and twenty girls. Each member appeared in public, either on the program of literary exercises or at graduation. The address to the class was given by J. Harvey Borton, on the "Joy and Duty of Service."

The Alumni Association held its meeting on the lawn, a total of two hundred out of the nine hundred graduates being present. Supper was served under the trees, following which was the business meeting, together with addresses by M. Elizabeth Whitacre and Francis R. Taylor. One of the features of special interest was the presence of two of the members of the first graduating class, which this year celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. The same appropriation as made last year was voted for the school's lecture course the coming year.

JULY 20.

SUBJECT—Moses Called to Deliver Israel.

LESSON—Ex. 3: 1-14. Read Ex. 3 and 4. Commit Ex. 3: 13, 14.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."—Matt. 5: 8.

JULY 20.

TOPIC—Favorite Verses. III. In the Prophetic Books. Hos. 14: 1-9.

One of the best ways to consider a lesson like this is for the leader to select a number of well known texts found in the books of the prophets, assign a text to each member, and ask not only for the recital of the text, but for a brief statement concerning its meaning. Some special subject can be followed, as for instance, the prophecies concerning the coming of Christ, prophecies warning the people against disobedience of God's law, or some prophet like Isaiah or Daniel can be considered in a topical way.

Notes From Indianapolis

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society held its closing session of the year at the First Friends' Church on June 11, the program committee being the hostess. Twelve children presented the flags of different nations in an impressive manner. An interesting program was rendered, closing with a review of the year's work by the president, Mary I. Hollowell. Refreshments and a pleasant social hour followed.

Children's Day was observed on June 8, thirty-seven of the primary and juniors taking part in building the "Ladder of Life." This was a ladder fastened to a rock and mottoes, after appropriate recitations, were hung between the rounds and formed a cross; on the top was a crown.

Twenty-seven new members have been received at the First Church since last November.

The monthly average attendance at the Sabbath-school for January was 187; for February, 194; for March, 175; for April, 196, and for May, 224.

Albert J. Brown, former pastor, preached on the 22d. It was one of the gems of pulpit discourse. The theme was "The Mission of Christ as the servant who should render judgment in Truth."

Willard O. Trueblood, pastor, and chairman of the Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting, will attend North Carolina Yearly Meeting in August. By invitation he will remain to deliver seven lectures before the school for Christian workers at Guilford College, August 12 to 22. Later he will attend Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Young Friends at Winona

Interested young Friends in America will meet in their Fourth Annual Conference at Winona, July 23 to 30. The object of the conference is to deepen spiritual life, suggest new methods of work, and inspire whole-hearted enthusiasm. Among the speakers and leaders in special services will be Charles E. Tebbetts, of Richmond, Indiana; Clara I. Cox, High Point, North Carolina; Edith Hunt, Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union; Henry J. Cadbury, Haverford, Pennsylvania; Enos Harvey, Bloomington, Indiana; Edgar Stranahan, Wichita, Kansas; Edgar Wollam, Cleveland, Ohio; William J. Sayers, Poughkeepsie, New York; E. P. Gates, Field Secretary, Illinois Christian Endeavor Union; Morton C. Pearson, and Willard Trueblood, of Indianapolis, Indiana; Ellison R. Purdy, Wilmington, Ohio, and C. Everett Davis, of Fairmount, Indiana. Lillian E. Hayes, who will return from a trip among Friends in England this month, will be in charge of the conference, as in former years.

There will be extended opportunities for religious study and participation in religious service. There will also be times of recreation, including bathing, steamboat and launch riding, row boating and fishing, tennis and croquet.

All meetings will be held at Kosciusko Lodge, which is at the lower end of the lake. An enrollment fee of $1.50 is required of all delegates. Board and room can be had at the rate of from $8.00 to $9.00 for the week. All Friends interested in the Young People's Movement are especially invited to be present. All correspondence concerning the conference should be sent to Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Indiana.

New Educational Work

Professor Irving King, a graduate of Earlham College, class of '96, and now a member of the faculty of the State University of Iowa at Iowa City, is author of a new work on "Education for Social Efficiency." It is published by D. Appleton and Company, and the price is $1.50, net.

To use the author's own words, he has had in mind, "not so much the interests of the educational specialist as the practical needs of busy teachers and parents. He has attempted to present, in simple language, and largely through the medium of illustration, a social view of education which is coming more and more to prevail. He has attempted to show, concretely, various ways in which the average teacher and parent may contribute something toward the realization of the ideal of social efficiency as the goal of our educational enterprise."

August 21, 1912, a sealed bottle was dropped in the North Platte river at the Wyoming-Colorado line. After ten months it has been picked up in Long Island Sound, near New London, Connecticut, having traveled six thousand miles.

A lunatic who escaped from an asylum at Poughkeepsie went to New York City, where after a day or two he applied to the police to be sent back to the asylum, saying that New York was no fit place for a man to stay.

A speaker before the recent session of the International Association of Police Chiefs severely condemned rathskellers, as conducted in many cities, as being schools of vice.

Need a Few Friends

We want to say through the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that we are located about thirty-five miles southwest of Topeka, Kansas, in Wabaunsee County. We have a small monthly meeting, and need a few families of Friends to move into this neighborhood. We will be glad if some readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will feel drawn this way. It is a good opening for religious work, and it is also a good farming country. We know of some good farms for sale that can be bought at reasonable prices.

CUBS' FOOD

They Thrive on Grape-Nuts

Healthy babies don't cry and the well-nourished baby that is fed on Grape-Nuts is never a crying baby. Many babies who cannot take any other food relish the perfect food, Grape-Nuts, and get well.

"My baby was given up by three doctors who said that the condensed milk on which I had fed her had ruined the child's stomach. One of the doctors told me that the only thing to do would be to try Grape-Nuts, so I got some and prepared it as follows: I soaked 1½ tablespoonfuls in one pint of cold water for half an hour, then I strained off the liquid and mixed 12 teaspoonfuls of this strained Grape-Nuts juice with six teaspoonfuls of rich milk, put in a pinch of salt and a little sugar, warmed it and gave it to baby every two hours.

"In this simple, easy way I saved baby's life and have built her up to a strong, healthy child, rosy and laughing. The food must certainly be perfect to have such a wonderful effect as this. I can truthfully say I think it is the best food in the world to raise delicate babies on, and is also a delicious, healthful food for grown-ups, as we have discovered in our family."

Grape-Nuts is equally valuable to the strong, healthy man or woman. It stands for the true theory of health. "There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"SHE DID HER BEST"

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter, and to give
A second luster to some tear-dimmed eye.
Or e'en impart
One throb of comfort to an aching heart,
Or cheer some wayworn soul in passing by;

If I can lend
A strong hand to the fallen, or defend
The right against a single envious strain,
Perhaps of much that seemeth dear and fair
To us on earth, will not have been in vain.

The purest joy,
Most near to heaven, far from earth's alloy,
Is bidding clouds give way to sun and shine.
And 'twill be well
If on that day of days the angels tell Of me: "She did her best for one of thine."

Editorial Comment on Current Events

Through the mediation of John R. Mott, John D. Rockefeller has offered to give a million dollars to establish a university under Christian control in Japan. A conference of missionaries has pronounced the project feasible, and preparations for the establishment of the institution will be carried on as speedily as possible.

The effort of China to stamp out the cultivation of the poppy seems to be reaching a successful conclusion. The persistence shown by this newest of republics in getting rid of this national evil—the opium traffic—could well be emulated by some of the older governments in their attitude toward equally degrading practices.

As one proof of the new era upon which the world has entered, it is now seriously proposed by Englishmen that they purchase Sulgrave Manor, the home of the ancestors of George Washington, and make of it a national memorial. It is an opportune time to consider the proposal in connection with the forthcoming celebration of the centenary of peace between the United States and Great Britain. Truly, we are living in a new and better age.

Several arbitration treaties between the United States and other countries expire this year. The Senate has renewed all these except those with Great Britain and with Japan. Thus far the Senate has given no indication of taking action upon these two, which shows that even Senators can sometimes descend to jingo tactics. It will be a disgrace if our Senate shall turn back to the provincialism of past decades in dealing with international problems.

Illinois has joined the list of women suffrage states by adopting limited female suffrage. Under the new law women may vote for all officers not authorized and mentioned by the State constitution. They may vote for a president, congressman or mayor, but not for governor, or other State officers. It is regarded as an important "step in the right direction." While our English sisters continue their depredations to win a law which is not forthcoming, our American women go steadily on winning new territory by peaceful methods.

The press generally accepts as truth the statement of Hudson Stuck, archdeacon and Episcopal missionary to Alaska, that on June 7, he with three companions reached the topmost summit of Mt. McKinley. The party carried a mercurial barometer and made complete readings and observations, which will enable them to get a close approximation of the height, when proper corrections are applied. The height has been popularly supposed to be upwards of 19,500 feet. A six foot cross and an American flag were left on the top to mark the exploit.

Complaint is made in certain quarters that Germany is getting around the Monroe Doctrine by making a peaceful conquest of South America. By planting colonies she is demonstrating that "trade follows the flag," and that trade develops lasting friendships. Germany is said to be educating her young business men in the Spanish language, who are becoming masters in South American trade. That is a violation of the famous "doctrine" that will find no complaint among right thinking people. All the same, American commerce needs to look to its laurels.

Apparently the Huerta government is losing ground in Mexico. While in charge of the government nominally at Mexico City, the rebels are inflicting numerous losses in many directions. More and more it is apparent that peace in Mexico cannot be restored and maintained by an armed force. Until a patriot can arise who will win popular confidence and begin a reign of peace in the interest of a better and united Mexico, the country seems doomed to continued turmoil and anarchy. As we have said before, Mexico as a nation needs the gospel of Christ.

The recent action of the Attorney-General of the United States in directing the postponement of a Federal case at Sacramento, California, involving grave charges of immorality, is not greatly to the credit of that official, whatever may have been his reasons. The immediate resignation of District Attorney McNab on this account has been applauded throughout the country. The President stepped in and ordered that the trial go on at once, but it would have looked better had he refused to accept the resignation of McNab, who was better acquainted with the facts than a new man can possibly be. It is altogether a deplorable circumstance and one approaching a scandal so far as the Attorney-General's office is concerned.

ing united their fortunes long enough to humble their common enemy and tyrant, Turkey, they have now fallen to quarreling among themselves. Late reports show a desperate state of war, in which Servia and Greece, with apparently no concert of plans, are making common war upon Bulgaria. What the end will be cannot be foreseen. It may be that Turkey, if unrestrained by the "Great Powers," will await her opportunity to regain her lost prestige and territory. Altogether, it is a sorry affair, and the Balkan states have already suffered much in public estimation. Better things were expected. Bulgaria is now said to have thrown herself wholly upon the mercy of Russia, while France is using her good offices to bring about peace.

All good citizens will applaud every effort made to uncover corruption and graft in public affairs. That business does overstep itself oftentimes when dealing with dangerous legislative situations, and that crime and immorality are never asleep in their watchfulness of the trend of legislation is all too true. Yet our observation is that the effect of the lobby is not what the public generally imagines it to be. The average official is as honest as the average man, but there are thieves and rascals in the public service as there are in private life. Perhaps a distinction ought to be made between the corrupt lobby and the legitimate exercise of the right of petition and protest, although the line of demarkation is not always well defined. The sadness of the situation is that an honest attempt to investigate is so often turned to political advantage that the honest purpose is obscured. While the broader investigation of the lobby at Washington ought to be made as soon as possible, the Senatorial Committee is in danger of missing the real purpose of its appointment by allowing itself to be sidetracked to other and more ancient matters. But that is probably a part of the lobby game to direct public attention away from immediate issues. All good men will rejoice if official corruption can be suppressed by the publicity method.

The Mohammedan women of Constantinople not long ago held a meeting and drew up a petition to the queens of Europe asking their influence towards stopping the ravages of war.

Some of Our Denominational Problems

Three-fourths of a year has now elapsed since the Five Years Meeting convened at Indianapolis and wrestled heroically with vital denominational problems. With a vision of possibilities that seemed prophetic and that was truly cheering and exhilarating, the delegates set themselves to the task of constructive workmanship in a manner to inspire widespread hope and confidence in the future of our activities. Those closing days witnessed a rare exhibit of the spirit of unity that was a forecast of a solidarity in our mechanism and operations that had previously been threatened somewhat.

It will probably be months and even years before the Church fully comprehends all that was included in the deliberations and ultimate decisions of that occasion. Upon no other hypothesis can its conclusions be judged than that the delegates were divinely led. Within the scope of their deliberations were wrapped up the destinies of the Friends' Church in America. From an occasion of such importance the Church cannot afford to turn away with indifference or allow itself to drift into uncertainty or indecision.

The Five Years Meeting set the pace for progress and for a revival of well directed endeavor. It remained for the Church to adopt the planning and incorporate the conclusions into its working mechanism. To what extent this has been done is somewhat problematic. That some progress has been made, may not be denied. That we are far from realizing all that had been hoped, is certain.

Friends have been slow to recognize the essential oneness of our denomination. Even now our provincialisms are more apparent than our Federal unity. The average member, while interested in community affairs that touch the life of the local meeting, is not profoundly concerned about the progress of the denomination as a whole. Others do not see beyond Yearly Meeting boundaries. To them, to be a Friend is to belong to a particular Yearly Meeting, and their vision has not yet comprehended a larger brotherhood, big with possibilities, that includes other similar bodies, which, as a whole, constitute a world-wide fellowship, under the name of Friends.

The Five Years Meeting was founded upon the theory that the ultimate and lasting success of the local meeting and the Yearly Meeting will depend in large degree upon the strength of a federation that binds all together into one body, and brings to each constituent part the combined wisdom and enlightenment and power of many forces acting in unison. It is true that the federation will become effective to the extent that the component parts are strong, but it is just as true that these in turn will be strengthened and inspired to greater endeavor by the help that comes from the combination and centralization of activities representing the unity of our varied interests.

The ideal relationship that should exist between the federation and the individual parts is that of cooperation rather than independence and isolation. The Five Years Meeting has no excuse for an existence for its own sake. Its justification will lie in its ability to bring inspiration, to coordinate the work of all Yearly Meetings in a manner that will infuse new zeal and new life into all local activities. Perhaps this is a lesson which most of our Boards have yet to learn. There is no greater problem awaiting solution at this time.

It was unfortunate that the General Secretary of the Church could not have been chosen to enter upon his work the first of the present year. As it is, there has been an inclination to await his coming as the signal for an aggressive endeavor to carry out the will of the Five Years Meeting. By no means have the Boards been inactive. On the contrary, at least three or four have been conspicuous for their earnest devotion in trying to fulfill the purposes of their appointment. But we are impressed with the consciousness that the great body of the Church is still awaiting the call to some definite service. Possibly our Boards for the greater part have yet to learn that their sphere is to strengthen and coordinate the work of the corresponding Yearly Meeting Boards and establish helpful working relationships with them rather than to attempt independent although parallel efforts in their respective fields. Possibly the Church at large must yet be won to give its hearty approval to this coordination, which in our judgment means so much for the future of Quakerism on American soil.

We need more of denominational spirit that recognizes the oneness of our discipleship. We need to develop denominational team work that emphasizes the oneness of our mission and our message. We need a larger vision of our Quaker call to life and service, not in detached companies that build in discordant, haphazard fashion, but as one body, the unity of whose faith and service will build constructively in the Master's kingdom.

A distinctive manifestation at the Five Years Meeting was the spirit of work and interest among the young people. By how much have we moved forward to the goal of our anticipations in this direction? Here and there we learn of greater interest being taken in Quaker study classes, in the actual work of our business meetings, but as yet the spirit of this movement can hardly be said to have gripped the Church as a whole. Many are apparently waiting, the young people looking for the assignment of definite tasks, the older ones expecting youth to claim its rightful heritage of service by assuming duties that are waiting to be performed. Proper adjustment has not yet been reached, and will not be until both youth and old age cease waiting one for the other, and both come to realize their mutual interdependence and their joint responsibility in carrying on the work of the Church.

The lesson of the Five Years Meeting will have been lost if the Church comes to regard the mechanism of organization there devised as in any degree a substitute for the life and activity of our individual membership. Organization means greater opportunity for service, as it means greater responsibility in service, and the purposes of the Indianapolis gathering will have largely failed, unless through the machinery set in motion greater individual activity applied both to individual and local meetings is developed and effectively organized. Every Yearly Meeting and every local meeting should begin to feel the up-lift and help of the work of the Five Years Meeting and its Boards, and in turn they should enter heartily into the cooperative work of the body which represents the federation of activities. It is only by such methods that the Church as a whole can reach its highest efficiency.

Sectional Quakerism no less than factional Quakerism should be discouraged. Denominational solidarity means a stronger working force in the world's great workshop. Centralization of effort imparts added energy to each component element. These are some of the fundamentals in which our membership needs to be educated as a preparation for the larger service to which God is calling the Church.

It is well to contemplate upon the goodness of God. It is a source of joy unspeakable and will clear the vision of any discouraged soul. It will strengthen faith and beget a hope that is immortal.

A Newsy Edition

With an exceptional amount of live matter on hand, which has reached THE AMERICAN FRIEND office within the past week, we need offer no apology for devoting this issue so exclusively to the news and work of the church. It affords a rare opportunity to get a vision of our nation-wide and almost world-wide activities as a denomination. We offer this issue as typifying in a degree the Federal unity of Friends, in the separate operations of whose individual parts we are all so deeply interested.

Maintaining the Spiritual Life

Church work fails, wherever it does fail, largely because spiritual life is allowed to wane. Nominal religion never creates enthusiasm, never starts a revival, never solves any problems. It is the spirit that giveth life, not the form which in itself may represent only a dead organism. Any Church with a live membership may always be counted upon to "start something" in the community that means trouble for all that is wrong, that means new life and inspiration for every righteous cause. Every local congregation should watch with zealous care the spiritual life of its membership, safeguarding them from those distractions that blight genuine Christian experiences.

Short Term Offer

Elsewhere announcement is made that new subscribers can receive THE AMERICAN FRIEND for the remainder of this year for 50 cents. We urge that pastors, ministers and all other interested Friends show proper diligence in acquainting the membership generally with this liberal offer. By starting now, the paper can be had more than five months for one-third the regular subscription price. One of the most important needs of our Quaker mechanism is a greatly enlarged patronage of this product of the Church.

Many a meeting is declining for want of a few Godly men and women to go out in the community and do a little personal work in the Master's name. Our methods of Christian work need to be reformed. It is the personal touch that counts more than all else.

Frequent self-examination is worth a fortune to any honest man or woman. Tendency and habit lay fast hold of many a life before it is conscious of the enslavement. Watching and praying are the two safeguards to the citadel of any life.

Hypocrisy is no more dead in this day than it was when Christ pronounced his woe upon it. Many a man wears the garb of the saint, but has the heart of the sinner, a fact which sooner or later will be revealed in the white light of God's truth.

Effective Bible-School Work

BY WILBUR K. THOMAS

No other department indicates so faithfully the success or failure of our Church work as the Bible School. Here is the barometer of the Church. If revivals are conducted, or missionary interest aroused, or local social work undertaken, the attendance and interest in the Bible School is changed accordingly. If the Bible School is poorly attended, sparingly equipped, and inadequately superintended, one may know the condition of the work of that Church. A flourishing meeting and a dead Bible School are never found in the same place.

When we look at the barometer in many of our meetings we find it exceedingly low. The only hopeful thing about it is its possibility of rising. How to make the work more effective is the question being asked by those directly interested in spiritual things. In a brief article, may I point out some of the ways for more effective Bible School work?

The Bible School work should be taken seriously. Without minimizing the importance of any other department of our work, it is fair to say that nothing is of more importance in the future of our Society than this. It is more vitally connected with the future than anything else we can mention. Yet how seriously do we take it? In one of our Yearly Meetings, tabulated reports show that the total membership of the Bible Schools is three-fourths that of the Yearly Meeting. Two-thirds of the Bible School members are not Friends. Here is the situation. Three-fourths of that Yearly Meeting are not members of the Bible School. For every Friend who belongs, there are two who are not Friends. These non-Friends are made up of older people who do not make profession of the Christian life, else they would be members, and children in the formative period. What more fertile field should one pray for than this?

It seems that some such ratio as indicated above, would apply to all of our Yearly Meetings. A fact of equal importance is that even of the membership of the Bible Schools, the average attendance is only half the total membership. Such facts do not indicate that the work is taken seriously. Where non-Christian people are interested enough to join our Bible Schools and attend with some regularity, giving us the opportunity to speak of religious things, why should not our work show larger gains? Hand-picked fruit is much more acceptable to our Master than that which is bruised and marred by wholesale handling. Realizing also what a small percent of people are converted after the age of maturity, and what a large percent are converted while still young, why should we not give more serious attention to the children who come under our care week after week? Too many of us have been trying to preach the gospel in clarion tones in public places, patterning after the Sermon on the Mount and forgetting the individual call to the disciples, the talk with Nicodemus, the woman at the well, and the blessing of the little children.

ive work. Consider the matter of equipment. Is there a public school in the United States so destitute of suitable room, so illy supplied with ordinary equipment for teaching through the eyes and ears, or managed in such a haphazard way, as a great many of our Bible Schools are? One room for all the classes is the usual arrangement. The form of a man or woman, who has not looked at the lesson is sometimes the equipment, and such a thing as a blackboard, or helps for the little folks is out of the question. The most careful thought should be exercised to provide the classes with suitable rooms. An addition of $5,000.00 to $20,000.00 to the meeting house would be a wise outlay in many places. The most spiritual and the brainiest people in the congregation should be in charge as officers and teachers, and the greatest care should be exercised to have the best Helps that money can buy.

Since the Five Years Meeting quite a number of schools have introduced the Graded Lessons in the younger classes and with those which were already using them, the number is quite gratifying. But why should not every school introduce them? The leaders in Sunday School work the world over, and our own Five Years Meeting officially designated them as the best for our work, yet the number is small. Since our Board has been handling the orders for all supplies, we find that the schools are using supplies from at least eight different publishing houses. There is a good and a better among these, but a great difference as to what is the best. The house of David C. Cook & Co. furnishes the majority of supplies for schools in the Five Years Meeting. In looking over the tabulated reports for the Commission to the recent Five Years Meeting, a startling condition appears in answer to one question. In answer to the query as to the reason for using the supplies they do, a few schools frankly state, "Because they are the cheapest." Why should some of our schools search for the cheapest things? Is it their estimate of the worth of souls? After seven years of work in denominational and state work, I find that a little over one cent a week is the average spent per member by Bible Schools. If this is what good schools spend what must be the condition in others of our schools? A cent doesn't seem to go so far, or accomplish so much as it does in the Bible School. But why stop at a cent?

Effective Bible School work means the best efforts of the best people. No greater opportunity is offered the rank and file of our membership for effective service for Christ and the Church, than is here presented. It is a field white unto the harvest and we are already in the field by virtue of being called Christian. Our Bible School Board has only advisory capacity and if the work becomes more effective, it will be because, in the local meetings, capable people uphold the hands of the faithful ones already at work, and consecrate themselves to His service.

New England Yearly Meeting

In the unexcelled environment of the Moses Brown School at Providence, R. I., according to biennial custom, the oldest yearly meeting of Friends in the world met again this year to renew its youth.

The wide geographical range of representation among both members and visitors, may be taken as symbolical of the growing determination of New England Yearly Meeting to draw largely upon the varied resources of Quakerdom in arriving at a solution of her more or less peculiar and difficult problems.

With accredited credentials from other yearly meetings there were present: Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, London; Rufus P. King, North Carolina; Alexander C. Purdy, Wilmington; Ora W. Carroll, Iowa, with his wife, Golda R. Carroll, a Christian worker; Mary J. Weaver, New York. This list, however, gives only an incomplete view of the representation from without our limits, since there were a number of other visitors without credentials or with minutes more or less incomplete who were cordially welcomed, and who joined in the worship and service of the meeting. Among these, at the last, were Charles C. Haworth and family from Cuba, on their way home from the field.

Although not called by that name, the "keynote address" was delivered by Arthur Dann, in a conference of ministers and workers preceding the opening of the yearly meeting proper. Referring to the several considerations relating to public ministrations, he laid main emphasis upon the endowment of power: a subject which, though so oft-mentioned among Friends and others, cannot well be over-emphasized in this or any other generation. It was in harmony with this thought, that the brief seasons set apart each day for devotion, were times of very earnest and general prayer and supplication, and brought a somewhat unusual measure of spiritual refreshing into the entire gathering.

One of the most important matters of business was that of adequate reports on the state of society. In order to assist local meetings on ministry and oversight in making these reports tell "the whole truth," as well as "nothing but the truth," a committee of the yearly meeting was appointed to act in conjunction with a similar committee from the yearly meeting on ministry and oversight, in preparing lists of questions based on the requirements of the discipline, such as will mark clearly the distinction between the two reports annually sent through the several bodies. The design is to make such reports, as nearly as possible, portray the exact condition of the entire membership.

Realizing, however, that mere reports, however valuable in stirring to zealous activity, are powerless to direct concerted effort rightly, it was decided to appoint a commission of five members to make a comprehensive study of conditions in church and community throughout our borders, with a view to promoting social and spiritual betterment.

The educational work of the yearly meeting is at present holding an especially prominent place because of the year's effort to secure an endowment of one hundred thousand dollars to guarantee the permanence of Oak Grove Seminary, a school which is doing an extremely important work of secular and religious training for a large number of young people in its community and state. The amount required not having been entirely made up, the yearly meeting agreed to be responsible for the income upon the remainder for a term of years, with the understanding that the work of soliciting and securing the full amount is to be carried forward as rapidly as possible. The urgent interest in Oak Grove, however, did not prevent numerous and enthusiastic expressions of appreciation of the great work done by the older and stronger Moses Brown School. In these expressions there were represented various angles of vision, from the parents of present students to the now white-haired children of sixty years ago.

In order to bring our members into the closest possible sense of kinship with Friends in other sections, the reading of the American epistles was preceded by a brief résumé of the geography, characteristics, problems, and interests of the several yearly meetings separately or in groups; and this was followed by an account of the splendid working unity of all as manifested in the sessions of the last Five Years Meeting. The epistles themselves were so summarized as to omit nothing named by any one of them, and by a topical arrangement to present their individual or united thought in a manner much more easily grasped than would be possible in a separate reading of each. The impressive general epistle from London, impressively read in the meeting, stirred many hearts to their depths with a fresh sense of the present realities of the gospel.

The operation of the pledge and envelope system, which for two years past has been mandatory upon all meetings, has gone forward slowly, but with increasing interest, so that there is a growing use of the combined gifts of and a growing appropriation of the scattered blessing to the many who must always be small contributors, but upon whom, after all, the health of the church in all its phases largely depends, and for whom it largely exists. The only quarterly meeting which forwarded the required report of money received and pledged showed a gain of more than fifty per cent. over the previous year.

To the superficial observer of figures, New England Yearly Meeting is still dying out, sinking, like the Titanic, with band playing and colors flying, to be sure, but sinking nevertheless. The more careful student of conditions past and present, however, notes that the net loss of seventeen this year is less than one-third the loss of fifty-three last year, which in turn is less than half the net loss of one hundred and seven two years ago. It has also been pointed out that the results of an unrelenting conservatism throughout a whole generation cannot be overcome by a very few years of progressive and aggressive policy. A body in which this and other causes have brought about, positively a loss, and negatively a failure to gain, in young and energetic men and women, must of necessity have a high death-rate, a low birth-rate, and require very persistent efforts along constructive lines in order to maintain and strengthen itself. That the net losses are so rapidly diminishing is a strong indication that the newer policies of the yearly meeting are already pointing the direction in which salvation lies; and that the need is for an acceleration of present tendencies rather than a revolution in method or spirit.

Favorable action was taken upon the proposition to extend the representation of Friends upon interdenominational agencies; so that not only were such representatives appointed as usual for the states of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, but also upon what is probably the oldest and most efficient of them all, the Interdenominational Commission of Maine. This organization is doing much to help churches of that state to make their due impress upon their respective communities, and to avoid the overlapping, overlooking, waste, and decay, that are a certain result of chaotic sectarianism.

To begin a detailed account of the several days, packed full as they were with reports of work in all the usual directions, supplemented with profitable and illuminating discussion, constructive propositions, and inspiring addresses, would exceed the bounds that must be set in this report. To those who would know the details, personal, mathematical, and general, the printed minutes will supply that information; while, on the other hand, they cannot altogether reflect the spirit of the gathering after the manner aimed at in the present report.

There is, however, one other leading matter of business which should work to the great advantage of future sessions. Growing out of a wide-spread conviction that more spiritual life and power should be infused into the meetings, even those mainly devoted to the consideration of business, it was decided to authorize the committee on arrangements in conjunction with the clerk and the (standing) committee on gospel services, to formulate the program upon a plan that would make definite provision for these things.

In the future, reports are to be printed and circulated in pamphlet form prior to the opening of the yearly meeting, thus following the modern plan of doing away with the unnecessarily wearisome reading of them in public meetings. The time thus saved—to say nothing of the gain in interest and power in the meetings themselves—can be utilized in listening each day to a vital “message ministry” of a type which in many other summer gatherings is turning the finest scholarship to account for the ends of a most positive and powerful evangelism.

Many faithful servants of the yearly meeting have been reappointed to their several duties; and while a number who have been most active in former years are this year unable to be in the annual sessions, the attendance and services of youth have been both encouraged and encouraging. A larger charity, a greater liberality, a deeper consecration to Christ and His cause, and a broadening vision of method and opportunity, are among the things which have brought both to old and young a feeling of hopefulness and courage in facing the labors of another year. The meeting adjourned to meet at Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Maine at the usual time next year.

California Yearly Meeting

California Yearly Meeting assembled in its nineteenth annual session on June 24th. There was a large attendance at every sitting, and great interest was shown in the various discussions and transactions.

The following ministers and other visitors with credentials were welcomed: Carolena M. and L. Hollingsworth Wood, of New York; Harry R. Keates, of Iowa; William H. Bertram, Edward C. Cook, Omar and Miriam C. Mendenhall, of Kansas Yearly Meeting; Sanford J. and Blanche Ford Pickering, of Oregon. Other welcome visitors were Joel Bean and daughter, Lydia Bean Cox; Rebecca Smiley, Absalom Rosenberger, Mary E. White, O. B. Ong, Arthur B. and Edna Hill Chilson.

The meeting organized with the same clerks as last year: Presiding Clerk, John Chawner; Assistant, Mabel H. Douglas; Recording Clerk, Susan H. Johnson. The reports of the various departments invited the attention of Friends to many different subjects, but the dominant note of the meeting was evangelization in its two aspects of personal salvation and social service. Harry R. Keates, chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting outlined the imperative demand for greater evangelistic effort in all parts of our great country, and especially on the Pacific Coast where men of nearly every nation on the globe may be found.

Statistics showed a net gain in membership for the year of 253. One new monthly meeting has been organized and a new congregation gathered in another place. San Diego Quarterly Meeting was opened during the year with two monthly meetings. The Evangelistic Superintendent reported $4,533.69 expended in her department, mostly for pastoral support. As a result of special meetings seventy-one persons professed conversion, renewal, or sanctification. Four ministers have been recorded and fourteen others feel a call to the ministry. Laura P. Townsend, superintendent of this department for two years, retired to become pastor of San Diego meeting, and John T. Hadley succeeded to the position. He was also made superintendent of the Bible School Department and encouraged to hold Bible School institutes as he visits among the meetings. There was a deep concern that the Bible School work might be greatly strengthened and made more efficient in reaching the community. Each Bible School was directed to make a contribution to the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting.

On the evening of the opening day of Yearly Meeting there was an inspiring Men's Meeting, when all the visiting men were the guests at supper of the Men's League of the Whittier Church, at which time a stirring address on “China, America's Opportunity” was given by Thomas Elliott, for some time Y. M. C. A. Secretary in Hongkong, China. The address was preceded by a greeting in happy vein from L. Hollingsworth Wood. At the same hour a large gathering was assembled at a women's meeting, of which the principal feature was a helpful discourse by Blanche Ford Pickering, on the “Conquering Woman.” To bring the Yearly Meeting into harmony with the Five Years Meeting the departments of Men's Work and Women's Work were combined into the department of Social Service, with Dr. William V. Coffin superintendent, and Lillian Taylor assistant.

The evils of the liquor traffic, the alarming increase in the use of cigarettes in this country, and the horrors of the white slave traffic were presented to the meeting, and Friends urged to employ every effort for their suppression. Dr. E. P. Lyon, of Los Angeles, a well-known worker for social purity, aroused deep interest by relating some of his experiences in rescue and preventive work. The meeting adopted a resolution proposed by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, protesting against commercialized vice at the approaching San Francisco exposition. A similar resolution was directed sent to San Diego authorities regarding the exposition at that place. Andrew F. Mitchell was made superintendent of the department of Suppression of the Liquor Traffic.

At a session at which were present missionaries from the Philippines, China, Palestine, Africa, Jamaica, Central America, Mexico, and Alaska, very interesting missionary reports were presented under the direction of Benjamin S. Coppock, who was continued as superintendent of missions. It is known that California Friends have contributed to missions during the year a large sum that did not pass through the mission treasury, but reports show an expenditure on Foreign Missions of $12,350, a per capita average of $3.76. Ten missionaries are working in Alaska; nine are assigned to the mission in Guatemala, where the newest feature of the work is a school for boys, of which Lester Stanton is to be principal. Margaret C. Taber is employed as missionary to the colonies of Mexicans in the vicinity of Whittier. Of late this work has become so arduous that it is necessary to provide an assistant.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Yearly Meeting has during the year opened a school in Whittier for Mexican girls, where they are trained in Christianity and domestic arts, as well as common school branches. The institution promises to yield very satisfactory results. Seven congregations report that they are doing mission work for the Japanese in the vicinity, several of whom have embraced Christianity. Conditions have been unfavorable for this work owing to the anti-Japanese agitation leading up to the passage of the anti-alien land law. A message relative to this situation was received from the Annual Meeting of Friends in Japan, held in Fourth month last, accompanied by a letter from Gilbert Bowles containing assurances of the friendly attitude toward the United States on the part of all sober and thoughtful Japanese. A cordial reply was sent to the Annual Meeting expressing regret over the action of the legislature of California and hope for a peaceful solution of all difficulties between the two nations. The meeting also recorded a resolution of regret concerning anti-alien legislation, on the ground of racial discrimination. There was the usual public meeting for Japanese on First-day afternoon. At a great missionary meeting on the same afternoon, addressed by Arthur B. Chilson and R. Esther Smith, thirteen young missionary volunteers were introduced and gave some account of their call.

The superintendent of the department of Peace, Robert C. Root, has done an immense amount of work, in speaking before public schools and colleges, and otherwise educating children and young people as to the superiority of peace over every other public policy. An able address to the Yearly Meeting by Andrew F. Mitchell set forth the historical grounds for peace doctrine. Upon information that Benjamin F. Trueblood is in impaired health, the meeting sent him a greeting. About twenty of his former students and one teacher, Thomas Armstrong, joined in the message.

Whittier College, in the sixth year of Thomas Newlin's presidency, has had the best year of its history. The preparatory department was eliminated, and the standard is in every way the same as in other first-class colleges of the state. For the first time the college conferred a doctor's degree, Ford A. Carpenter, meteorologist, being honored with the degree of LL. D. Absalom Rosenberger, President Emeritus of Penn College, has been engaged as financial secretary. Following the educational reports Friends pledged twenty scholarships to the colleges for the coming year.

Only two local meetings are without a Christian Endeavor Society. Forty Juniors have joined the church in the year. Five societies have departments for planning the study of Friends' history and distinguishing doctrine. Edwin M. Stanton was elected president of the Christian Endeavor Union.

In view of the request from one Quarterly Meeting that greater attention be given to instruction in Friends' history and distinguishing doctrines, the visit of representatives of the Young People's Department of the Five Years Meeting in the persons of L. Hollingsworth and Carolena M. Wood, was especially timely. Their message was one of encouragement to young Friends to make a careful study of Friends' history and literature, a study which will certainly yield a rich reward of increased devotion to the church and greater striving for highest Christian culture and greatest service to humanity.

The London General Epistle was regarded as a document of unusual inspiration. Heartfelt sympathy was expressed for the Friends in Australasia, who are suffering for conscience's sake because of refusal to obey the military laws, and a special letter was addressed to them. A digest of the American epistles gave the meeting a sort of bird's-eye view of the general conditions of the church in America. Ohio was congratulated on reaching its one hundredth anniversary. There was cordial response to the invitation from Iowa to send fraternal delegates to the fiftieth anniversary celebration this year. When the invitation was read near a dozen Friends were present who attended the opening session of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Upon invitation of the Northern California Indian Association Levi Gregory and Emma F. Coffin were appointed delegates to an Indian Conference which is planned to consider the advisability of forming a standing committee on Indian affairs in the state. Hitherto Friends have had no official part in the effort to improve the condition of California Indians.

The claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented and a three-year guarantee fund of more than fifty dollars was subscribed. H. Edwin McGrew was given an enthusiastic welcome on his appearance near the close of the week. He had just returned from Philadelphia where he underwent an operation on one eye with the hope of having his sight restored. The indications point to successful results. The veteran ministers, John Henry Douglas and Thomas Armstrong, were able to occupy seats on the platform at each business session and take part in the discussions.

YEARLY MEETING NOTES

J. J. Mills and family are occupying their beautiful new home in Pasadena, and intend to make it their permanent residence. L. Maria Deane has left California for sojourning and work in Nebraska and Kansas Yearly Meetings. Sanford J. and Blanche Ford Pickering of Salem, Oregon, have been engaged for pastoral work at Ramona, California. Lester Stanton is to sail from New Orleans this month en route to Chiquimula, Guatemala, where he is to serve as principal of the boys' school. Lester Stanton is a nephew of Gilbert Bowles of Tokyo, Japan.

On the afternoon of the 29th ult. Carolina M. Wood spoke to a group of the three branches of Friends in Pasadena. T. Homer Coffin, of New York City, paid his mother, Emma F. Coffin, a short visit during California Yearly Meeting and proceeded to Portland, Oregon, where he will continue in scientific work.

One of the pleasant incidents of California Yearly Meeting was the Penn College reunion, held in Whittier's beautiful little park, the assembly being especially in honor of Absalom Rosenberger, for many years president of the college, and Lydia Bean Cox, of San Jose, a member of class '81. Nine alumni were present, four former teachers, three former members of the board of trustees, a number of former students, and parents of eighteen graduates. There were four ministers, five missionaries, and two clerks of the yearly meeting in the little company. Following a delightful exchange of reminiscences a committee was appointed to consider the advisability of establishing a traveling lectureship on Friendly topics, and instructed to take the matter up with the executive of the Southern California Associated Alumni of Friends Colleges, an organization which has headquarters in Whittier.

"He keepest watch, thou needst not wake;
He taketh care, why shouldst thou fear?
Should eyes be wet or sad hearts break
While his voice bids us be of cheer?
The gloom that folds the world about
Is but the cloud of our own doubt;
Mercy above it shineth bright,
Our faithless fear blots out the light."

A great offer. The American Friend for the balance of the year for 50 cents. Ask your neighbor to subscribe.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The forty-seventh annual gathering of Friends in Canada assembled at Pickering College, Newmarket, Ontario, June 26-29.

Visiting ministers from other Yearly Meetings were: Ida Thorne Parker, of Union Springs, New York, and Fred L. and Olive Ryon of South Glens Falls, New York. The presence and messages of these honored workers of the Lord gave us new courage and good hope and made us to rejoice in that larger fellowship which prevails when those of other Yearly Meetings meet with us.

We were especially favored to have with us again our missionaries, Gurney and Elizabeth Binford. What they have been able to do as our representatives in Japan was in part vividly presented with the opportunities for larger and more aggressive work. Their new meeting house in Mito greatly facilitates their work.

The increasing number of centers where native evangelists are engaged under their supervision is also a very encouraging feature. A tent is being provided by Friends in Philadelphia which will greatly assist them in pioneer work on festive occasions when large crowds assemble who have never heard the Gospel. A letter from Friends in Japan expressed much appreciation for what was being done for them by these Friends and thankfulness to us for making their service possible.

It was gratifying to have a report from British Columbia Quarterly Meeting recently set up, and to have three delegates present from the Pacific Coast. A good delegation from the other three Quarterly Meetings attended also this year, yet a number of familiar faces were absent from various causes.

The London Epistle with its broad vision and earnest appeal again stirred our hearts with yearning for the larger life of service it indicated. A summary of the twelve epistles from the United States tended, as formerly, to strengthen the bonds of unity and fellowship. The struggles and triumphs in our several fields of activity when prayerfully considered give joy and hope and courage to face the future. A telegram of greetings was received from New England Yearly Meeting in session at the same time, referring us to Ephesians 3: 16, and a reply of thanks and best wishes, mentioning Josh. 1: 7, was sent in return. The compensation for holding Yearly Meeting at the same time seems to be a message fresh from the wires in addition to the usual epistle.

Interesting reports were given by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and committees on mission work. About $1,400.00 had been received for the work in Japan, $399.00 for the F. A. I. M., and nearly $700.00 was expended in aid of workers on the home field.

A report of the Five Years Meeting was given by Albert S. Rogers, in which special emphasis was laid upon the appointment of a General Secretary and of a Publication Board. The question of a Guarantee Fund for this work was considered and a contribution made by the Yearly Meeting. The claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented also and Friends were encouraged to subscribe.

The college report was listened to with much interest. There was a splendid staff the past year and a good school with promising results. The hopeful outlook presented by the chairman of the committee was most gratifying. He made an urgent appeal for the children of Friends to take advantage of the special opportunities being afforded them. Fitting reference was made to the service of the late W. K. Bowerman, who for several years was a member of the College Committee and a generous contributor. The promise of a new gymnasium by a warm friend of the college came as a pleasant surprise. It will be erected this fall and will cost $5,000.00. This will be a valuable asset and meet a great need.

The cause of peace again claimed special attention. Strong protest was made against an increase of armaments as proposed by our Federal Government, and also against the establishment of a Canadian navy as advocated by the opposition. That all war is wrong and preparation therefore a waste of time and energy, in the face of great need for noble enterprises based on peace principles so dear to all true Friends, is the ever recurring conclusion we arrive at, after the most careful deliberation. Militarism flaunting itself so diligently for recognition and public favor must eventually fail when the awakened church rises in her might and espouses fully the principles of truth and love. A strong resolution expressing our view of the question was adopted and directed to be sent to the Premier of Canada, to the public press and to other denominations, as far as practicable.

Resolutions were also adopted petitioning the Government of Canada to take some action to withdraw the unjust restrictions laid upon the entrance of Hindu settlers into Canada and especially those which debar wives and children from joining husbands and fathers already in this country. Also to enact such legislation as will in future prevent prize fights under the name of boxing contests, or any other guise whatsoever for money in any part of the Dominion of Canada, and thus make impossible a recurrence of the unfortunate contest which on account of the by-laws of the city of Calgary, Alberta, was held outside the city limits, on the 24th of May and resulted in the death of one of the contestants.

The work of the Young Friends was a pleasing and promising feature this year. The recreation provided, the program rendered, and especially their meeting for worship and deepening of the spiritual life on First-day afternoon were most helpful.

The other meetings for worship were occasions of spiritual uplift. The messages were fraught with life and power and there was much liberty in the Spirit. In a short consecration service, conducted by Gurney Binford, quite a number openly pledged themselves to a clean walk with God in wholehearted service. Many testified to blessings received during the Yearly Meeting and to new resolves for Christ and the Church.

The meeting adjourned to meet next year at Wellington, Ontario, at the usual time in June.

Christian Workers' Assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting

The nineteenth summer assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting was held at Earlham, Iowa, June 16-20, and was one of the best. The program was especially well arranged to give a view of the scope of our work, with its problems, its responsibilities and possibilities. The Bible School, Christian Endeavor work, Missions, and Evangelism were all considered with earnestness and definiteness and with a spirit of progress. An afternoon and evening were given to each of these departments.

Some excellent papers on Sunday School work were read, and the presence of Richard Haworth, chairman of the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, was a real stimulus toward coming up to the standard in zeal and efficiency. The program on Christian Endeavor work gave papers on the prayer meeting, Junior work and the social life. The round table, conducted by Charles Sweet, and the address given by him at night dealt helpfully with various phases of the life and work of young people.

The program on missions included, beside an evening missionary address, papers on mission work in the various organizations, church, Sunday School, etc. The assembly was especially touched when the paper on the work of the W. F. M. S. was read, the preparation of which had been made by Viola Spurgin before her death. The papers on evangelism were practical and helpful, also the round table conducted by Richard Newby. The address by Richard Newby was strong and illuminating. It dealt with the relation of the church to the need of the world. The use of the lamp and broom in the search for the lost coin suggested the work of the church in holding the light of truth, in actively moving obstacles, and in bringing that which was lost, into right relations with God and man now.

The Friends History Hour each morning, following the devotional period, was a helpful feature. The biographies were prepared by young Friends and were excellent. A discussion followed each paper in order to apply the lessons of the life to present-day conditions. The doctrinal hour was another daily feature. The topics presented were the Scriptures, Fall of Man, Atonement, and Holiness. These all showed careful study and preparation. The last named paper clearly set forth what holiness is, and the error of exalting any name above the name of Jesus Christ. The Bible Hour was conducted by Frank Dell and took up the study of the Book of Romans. The analysis was clear and helpful and the teaching edifying but practical.

The opening address of the assembly was also given by Frank Dell on the Quaker Message and its Relation to the Twentieth Century. It gave a strong and inspiring key note for the assembly. As George Fox met the conditions of his time, so we must meet the conditions of ours. The thoughts given on social service and "getting next to the people that need help" were suggestive and inspiring. The Pastors' Hour, an informal meeting held on the lawn, felt the pressure

AN OFFER THAT SHOULD BRING LARGE RETURNS

In an effort to get THE AMERICAN FRIEND into hundreds more of Friends' homes, we have decided to make a special offer that ought to bring large returns. From now until the last of the present year, we will send the paper to new subscribers for 50 cents. We ask that pastors, agents, and all Friends interested, take occasion to acquaint the membership generally with this liberal offer. It ought to bring in 1,000 new names within the next four weeks. Fifty cents until January 1, 1914.

The hospitality of the Earlham people was felt and enjoyed by all. A delightful social occasion was the auto trip to Bear Creek, arranged by Wm. and Anna Kitch. The bountiful supper which was served on the lawn at Bear Creek and the fellowship of the time can be forgotten by no one of the large number present.

EDITH SMITH.

Our Missionary Situation

Recent word reports Raymond Holding and Miss Sarah Lindley still holding the work at Matehuala. The schools are keeping up well, and only three church services were missed. The people seem to appreciate the way our workers are holding on to the work. All other schools are closed. The faithfulness of our missionaries is securing a stronger place in the confidence and respect of the people, and preparing the way for larger results in the future. There is no governmental authority in the city, and bandits come and go as they please, securing money under threats, and terrorizing the people. They have not so far disturbed our workers, only by threats. The strain on the nerves is very severe. After seven weeks Mrs. Holding and children arrived at the home of her people in Topeka, Kansas. Most of that time she was detained at Monterey, but finally got out by way of Tampico and a Red Cross boat. She had had no word from her husband for five weeks. Mrs. Roberts came out from Victoria at the same time.

The other workers at Victoria still remain. Misses Lee and Pickett and Mrs. Branen had planned to come out by way of Tampico and a New York boat. But a strong body of reinforcements had reached Victoria, and the situation looked so much better they concluded to stay.

Matamoros is in the hands of the rebel forces, and most of the people have crossed the river into Texas. Miss Sarah Charles is staying there with Miss McClelland, the head of the Presbyterian school. Miss Thomas is at home at Fountain City. Everett Morgan is with a sister at Plainfield, Indiana. He is somewhat better. Mrs. Spann of the Africa Mission broke down in health, and had to be brought home. She and her husband were to leave on June 4th.

FINANCIAL SITUATION

The emergency of having to get several of our missionaries away from the field under peculiar difficulties, will require several hundred dollars more than was provided for in our estimates for the year, which were $44,364.99. During the first nine months of the current year our treasury received $33,218.77. But of this $8,285.48 went to building and special funds, leaving $24,933.29 for missionary support. The disbursement for mission support for the same period was $29,304.03, leaving a deficit of $4,370.74. It will require somewhat more than $20,000.00 additional to free the year of debt, and three months remain to raise it. Some of this is already in the hands of yearly meeting treasurers. But it will require special generosity on the part of all friends of our mission work to meet the needs of the year. We urgently appeal to Friends to see that our work does not suffer in this year of severe trial. When our missionaries are standing so faithful by the work under severe strain, the church should stand by them with their prayers and financial support. To end the year with debt means the beginning of a new year with discouragement. We do not believe Friends want our work cut down, or our workers given any less support. We therefore ask Friends everywhere to make their contributions more generous during the next three months.

Times of strife and political unrest oftentimes prepare the way for a great awakening, and there are signs that such will be the case in Mexico. Let us strengthen our forces and be prepared for such opportunity when it comes.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

The true proficiency of the soul consists not so much in deep thinking or eloquent speaking or beautiful writing as in much and warm loving. . . . Those who truly love God love all good, wherever they find it. They have no quarrels. They bear no envy. O Lord, give me more and more of this blessed love!—St. Teresa.

It is no use to flog, flog, flog at idle Christians and try to make them work. There is only one thing that will set them to work, and that is that they shall live nearer their Master and find out more of what they owe to him; and so render themselves up to be his instruments for any purpose for which he may choose to use them.—Alexander Maclaren.

California Yearly Meeting

Lindsay Monthly Meeting is still holding its own, though several are away at present. Charles S. White and family are attending the Yearly Meeting at Whittier. Tacy Clark, a minister, who lately settled in our limits, very acceptably filled the pulpit on Sabbath in our pastor's place. Some visitors and strangers are often with us.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Professor David W. Dennis and wife have gone to Panama on a six weeks' trip for sight seeing and recuperation.

West Richmond Monthly Meeting, held at Earlham College on the evening of July 10, was the occasion of the annual roll call of the membership. A delightful supper was served on the lawn at 6:30, followed by the Monthly Meeting session. More than one hundred were present, a number of children and young people responding to the roll call. Mahala Jay, who does not get out often, was present and spoke a few encouraging words, as did Naomi Harrison Jay, of Whittier, California. Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was also present and participated in the exercises. A unique feature of the procedure in the West Richmond Meeting is an accurate and elaborate record that is written week by week, giving interesting data about each religious service held.

J. Albert Furstenberger, of St. Mary's, Ohio, has accepted a call from the pastoral committee of the South Wabash Monthly Meeting of Friends. He has been at St. Mary's five years, and has done a great work there. Charles Swander has been at South Wabash three years, and has been a wonderful help to the church and Sunday-school. He and his wife will leave Wabash with the very best wishes of the congregation and a host of friends.

The Friends' Bible School at Chester, Indiana, devotes some twenty minutes the first Sabbath in each month to missionary education and instruction. These periods are presided over voluntarily, by some one or two members chosen from the various families represented in the school,—the families taking it in rotation. On the last of these occasions, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Burg took charge of the program. They had arranged for an opening song by the Misses Hampton, after which Frank Burg read from

THE AMERICAN FRIEND some of the latest information along missionary lines. Then Mrs. Burg gave a summary of present needs and conditions in the various fields, and the program was closed with another missionary song by Miss Gertrude Simms and Mrs. Harry Jonathan, of Chicago.

A Quarterly Meeting Sabbath School Conference was held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, on Sunday, June 29. All the Sabbath Schools of the Quarterly Meeting held a joint session in the study of the lesson. Following was a Gospel service largely attended, the sermon being preached by John L. Kittrell. His subject was the "Victories of Faith," and Friends were urged to a more practical and active service and to enter the open door of opportunities. Robert Douglas and Enos Pemberton were present and active in very appropriate words of exhortation and prayer. In the afternoon session Ancil E. Ratcliff, of Fairmount, was the principal speaker, and gave a most stirring and helpful address on the Sabbath-school work. Notwithstanding the warm weather a large audience listened with great interest for an hour to his appeal for more active and aggressive work in the church.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

A reception was given at the home of Mrs. Willetts, on Maple Street, Des Moines, for Richard Newby and family, who have come to serve Friends' Meeting at Des Moines. Dr. Roberts gave the address of welcome, which was responded to by the pastor. Following were music and readings, all the exercises being well rendered. Ice cream and cake were served on the lawn, which was nicely decorated and lighted.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

During the month of July the Sabbath evening services at Friends Meeting in Kansas City are being devoted to stereopticon lectures as follows: July 6, "Saul the King, Crowned and Deposed"; July 13, "The Profligate and the Churl," a Parable of Two Sons; July 20, "The Beautiful Story of Queen Esther"; July 27, "The Thrilling Travels of St. Paul." During August, the Sabbath evening services will be abandoned, but all are invited to attend the morning services.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

Centre North Carolina Meeting and Bible school are in a prosperous growth. Eighty-nine were present in school and $2.54 offering was received on June 15. A week later one hundred and one were present, and $1.04 offering was taken. Abbie Hodgkin is filling the superintendent's place with good results. The music is improving under the management of Fanny and Herbert Reynolds.

Herbert W. Reynolds was called to Fairfield in Guilford County, North Carolina, on Sabbath, June 8, to conduct the funeral services of Elizabeth Wheeler. Her husband, Franklin Wheeler, was killed near Raleigh in the Civil War. During the war her house was a protection to some of the young men among her relatives, and because she would not tell of their hiding, she was carried to the army camp and kept a number of weeks. She never gave the desired information, and was finally released through the efforts of Friends near Marlboro in Randolph County. She was the daughter of French parents who settled near Jamestown, North Carolina. She lived a peaceable life, always holding the respect of her neighbors. Though never a member of any church organization, she believed and sympathized with Friends. She died at the age of 80 years 3 months and 22 days.

Western Yearly Meeting

Charles L. and Hannah Pratt Jessup, who have spent five years in Southern Texas, are back at their old home at Mooresville, Indiana, where Charles is under the care of two special Indianapolis physicians. He is assured that in a short time he will again be able for active service.

The Friends of Paoli Monthly Meeting, Blue River Quarter of Western Yearly Meeting, are planning to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Lick Creek Meeting on August 27. A fitting program is being planned. S. Edgar Nicholson will be the principal speaker of the day. The committee in charge expect to make this a "home coming" day, and are planning to entertain all who will come to enjoy the day with us. Those who wish other information, write to Elizabeth Gillum, Paoli, Indiana.

A lively interest has been aroused in the Sunday-school at the First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, by "Special Days." On different Sundays the closing exercises have been in charge of the Men's Bible Class, Women's Bible Class, Young Ladies' Class, Girls' Class, also the Primary Department, each class conducting the exercises in its individual manner.

Dedicatory Service at Des Moines

The dedicatory exercises of the new Friends' Meeting House at Des Moines, Iowa, were conducted on July 13. The edifice is described as a gem inside and out. The local Friends have wrought well in the erection of the structure. Richard R. Newby has recently entered upon the pastorate at Des Moines, his address being 721 Parnell Avenue. On dedication day the sermon was preached by David M. Edwards, of Penn College, while the dedicatory service was in charge of Harry R. Keates, Chairman of the Evangelistic Board of the Five Years Meeting.

At an evening service, the pastors of the city were present to extend greetings and addresses were given by W. Jasper Hadley and Richard R. Newby. There was excellent music at all services. A union meeting of young people was held at 7:00 o'clock, with Edwin C. Graves as leader.

At Georgetown, Illinois

Sabbath, July 6, was a great day in the history of Friends of Georgetown, Illinois. The event was the dedicatory service of the remodeled church building at that place. The old brick building which had served as a place of worship for so many years has been completely overhauled, refurnished, and made into a modern church edifice of the very best type. So completely has the work of remodeling been carried out, that hardly a mark remains to remind one of the old building.

The dedicatory services began at ten A. M. All the other churches of the town dismissed their regular services, and the house was crowded to its utmost capacity. From the first there was a very marked feeling of the presence and unifying power of the Holy Spirit. Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, brought the message of the morning, preaching a most powerful sermon.

One of the most remarkable features of the day was the raising of money to pay the cost of rebuilding. The total cost of the improvements amounted to about $9,000.00. Approximately $5,000.00 of this amount had been provided for, leaving $4,000.00 yet to raise. Feeling that the contributions, together with what had been pledged and not yet announced, would probably exceed this amount, it was decided to make a call for $4,500.00, and to use whatever surplus there might be in improving the parsonage. The subscriptions opened with two $500.00 gifts.

At the end of forty-five minutes, when all had had an opportunity to contribute, it was found that two hundred people had pledged $5,700.00. When this announcement had been made, our aged friend, Robert Douglas, who took part in the dedication of the old building thirty-nine years ago, offered a most appropriate dedicatory prayer, and the Friends' Church at Georgetown entered upon a new era of its history.

In the afternoon at three o'clock a memorial service was held, at which time a history of the church was read and greetings from former pastors were given, followed by a most fitting memorial sermon by Edward M. Woodard. In the evening Morton C. Pearson preached again. The sentiment of many who were permitted to attend, was well expressed by our aged friend, Elmore Haworth, when he said, "This has been one of the greatest days of all my life." When the surplus funds are used to remodel the parsonage, there will be few more attractive and comfortable church surroundings anywhere among Friends.

The American Friend 50 cents to January 1.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

JULY 27.

SUBJECT—Moses' Request Refused.

LESSON—Ex. 5: 1-14. Read Ex. 5 and 6. Commit Ex. 5: 1, 2.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted."—Matt. 5: 4.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

JULY 27.

TOPIC—Missionary Essentials, Home and Abroad. I. Information. Acts 15: 12-18.

Knowledge is the primary basis of interest in any good cause. It is doubly so in the mission field, which is beyond the horizon of the average life.

We are always interested in human nature stories, and nowhere can these be found in such abundance as in the realm of missionary work, at home and abroad. Missionary activity deals with humanity in its natural state, and if the church membership could be presented with an actual panorama of happenings in heathendom, in the slums, among the mountaineers, there would be no longer any lack of interest in missionary endeavor.

Assign to three or more members the task of getting hold of interesting stories of mountaineer life where the need of the gospel is strongly manifest, and have them recited briefly at the meeting. Follow the same process relative to mission work among the poor and outcast of the cities. Duplicate it in having an interesting recital of some recent events in the foreign field. The interest which will be developed will be well worth the efforts.

Ministerial Union Conference

The Conference of the Ministerial Union of Wilmington Yearly Meeting held at Dover, Ohio, June 25, 1913, was an occasion of great interest. The general topic was "The Rural Problem," and the program was as follows:

MORNING SESSION

Devotional.....Emma Doan
Present Conditions of the Country Meeting.....Josephus Hoskins
The Country School and Its Relation to Our Meetings...Prof. J. Dickinson
The Relation of the Country Church to the Social Life.....Sidney Bailey

AFTERNOON SESSION

Devotional.....John McMillan
Preaching and Pastoral Care in the Country Churches..Homer Biddlecum
Plans That Have Succeeded in Country Churches.....General Response
The Possibilities of Rural Churches
Frank Moorman

All of the topics were discussed with much enthusiasm. Josephus Hoskins, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Pastoral and Evangelistic work, declared in his report that the rural meetings in Wilmington Yearly Meeting have been gaining in strength for the last five years. In this Yearly Meeting there are twenty-four meetings in the open country. The attendance of eighteen of these has increased in the past five years from ten to twenty-five per cent. Four meetings have about the same attendance, and two have lost. The two meetings that have lost have no ministry, and the four remaining stationary are visited every two weeks. There has been a general increase in Bible School attendance, and the amount contributed to the support of the ministry has fully doubled. The use of the automobile has helped to increase the attendance at the country meetings.

The following were elected as officers of the Association for the coming year:

Homer Biddlecum—President.

Jane M. Carey—Secretary.

Nancy A. C. Leonard—Treasurer.

Bible School Conference

The Third Annual Conference of Center Quarterly Meeting Bible School Union was held at Springfield Meeting House, Clinton County, Ohio, June 27. In spite of the intense heat and the fact that harvest had begun, there was a large attendance and much interest.

The program was as follows:

Benefits Derived from the Home Department.....Emma Doan
Reports of Work Done in Sunday-Schools.....Superintendents Roll Call of Delegates.
Intermission for dinner, which was served by Springfield Friends.
Social Needs of the Sunday-School
General Discussion
Necessity of Teacher Training
Harriet W. Purdy
Roll Call of Teacher Training Classes.
Round Table.

An entertaining feature of the conference was the music by the members of the Springfield school, an exercise by the boys and another by the girls. The reports from the Quarterly Meeting's Schools showed that most of them were flourishing, and that several were maintaining Home and Cradle-Roll Departments.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Austin Jones.

Vice-President—Everett Terrell.

Secretary—Edith Doan.

Treasurer—Charles Farquhar.

Iowa Yearly Meeting Exercises

The new Iowa Yearly Meeting House is nearing completion, and will be dedicated in connection with the coming Yearly Meeting, which is to be held September 1-7. The dedication exercises will take place on Friday, September 5, in the afternoon. The building as has been described previously in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, is of Colonial architecture, built of gray mat-brick, and has a seating capacity of between eight and nine hundred. It will be complete in every detail by the time of dedication.

In the forenoon of September 5 will occur the exercises in connection with the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Iowa Yearly Meeting. All of the American Yearly Meetings have been invited to send representatives. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend the dedication exercises, and it is hoped that Iowa Friends especially, will make great effort to be present.

FOUND A WAY

To Be Clear of Coffee Troubles

"Husband and myself both had the coffee habit, and finally his stomach and kidneys got in such a bad condition that he was compelled to give up a good position that he had held for years. He was too sick to work. His skin was yellow, and there didn't seem to be an organ in his body that was not affected.

"I told him I felt sure his sickness was due to coffee and after some discussion he decided to give it up.

"It was a struggle, because of the powerful habit. One day we heard about Postum and concluded to try it and then it was easy to leave off coffee.

"His fearful headaches grew less frequent, his complexion began to clear, kidneys grew better until at last he was a new man altogether, as a result of leaving off coffee and taking up Postum. Then I began to drink it too.

"Although I was never as bad off as my husband, I was always very nervous and never at any time very strong, only weighing 95 lbs. before I began to use Postum. Now I weigh 115 lbs. and can do as much work as anyone my size, I think."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum (must be boiled.)

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate, and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

THE SABBATH DAY

THE Sabbath is a bridge between two shores,

White arched, strong girded. Loud on either side,

Down to the border of the silver tide
Eager and fain, the noise of traffic roars,
Then falls to silence. Not an echo frets
The lofty span, nor any garish light
Nor sordid shadow flecks that quiet height
To stain at all its snowy parapets.

Caught in a safe, high calm 'twixt strife and strife

A little while our hearts are holden here;
Our souls, like tranquil pilgrims softly shod,

Halt, and forget the weariness of life,
And, leaning, find sweet Heaven mirrored clear

In the still river of the Rest of God.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE FRIENDS PUBLICATION BOARD AT RICHMOND, INDIANA

AUTHORIZED BY THE FIVE YEARS MEETING OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $1.50 A YEAR.

Foreign postage, 50 cents extra. HEADLEY BROS., 136 Bishopsgate, London, E. C., Agents for Great Britain and Ireland.

Entered as second-class matter January 9, 1913, at the Richmond, Indiana, Postoffice.

Something to Talk About

We wonder how many of our subscribers read that splendid offer in last week's issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. And we wonder how many told their friends and neighbors about it. A good proposition is something to be talked about. Every Quaker family in America, not now on our lists, should be acquainted with the fact that they can get THE AMERICAN FRIEND from now until the end of the year for only 50 cents as a trial offer. We must rely upon our present readers to make this announcement in a way that will reach our membership. The Society of Friends in America must go forward as a whole, if it goes forward at all, and not in detached companies. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will give a vision of Quakerdom as a whole, that will bring new vitality to every local meeting. Ask your neighbors to take advantage of this liberal 50 cent offer at once.

An Educational Number

The August 14th edition of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be an Educational Number. It will be a most important issue that should be scattered broadcast. Extra copies can be secured at the rate of three cents per copy, ordered beforehand. There will be some high-grade educational articles, some valuable educational news of our institutions, and some extensive advertisements. It will probably contain twenty pages.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

The same arrangements as heretofore have been made respecting the entertainment of persons during the Yearly Meeting. The various buildings of the college give great facility for those who attend to be accommodated. Some families find comfortable places in the cottages and thus more of the family can come than otherwise would be the case. Rooms can be obtained in the dormitories and board at Founder's. The social enjoyment which results from Friends mingling together for a week will be a great gain to all who come. May all strain a point to be present this year. The Yearly Meeting at large will open at 10 o'clock on the morning of August 6th.—Friends Messenger.

Anti-Militarism in France

The influence of the anti-militarists propaganda now being carried on in France is illustrated by an incident which is reported recently from Rheims. A soldier at the station remarked to his comrades as a train was approaching: "I will show you how to escape doing three years' service," and before he could be prevented he placed his foot on the rail and had his toes crushed to a pulp.

The American Friend the balance of the year for 50 cents. Now is the time to subscribe.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

We have received a special report of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, which we present herewith, in view of the fact that the report last week was incomplete.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting convened for its sixth annual session on June 4th. The following ministers with credentials from their respective Monthly Meetings were present: Harry R. Keates, Iowa Yearly Meeting; William Smith, Western Yearly Meeting; Parker Moon and Annie Ray, Kansas Yearly Meeting. Besides these we were glad to welcome, also with credentials, Maurice Rowntree, from London Yearly Meeting; and Carolena M. and L. Hollingsworth Wood, from New York Yearly Meeting. Annie Ray has since taken up pastoral work within our limits, at Gross, Nebraska. The ministry of these Friends was very acceptable.

George D. Weeks was again appointed to serve the meeting as clerk. His assistants at the table were Estella Foxworthy, recording clerk; Ella Sor Rells, reading clerk; Charles Mesner, announcing clerk. Considerable time in the conduct of the business, was saved by a committee appointed to prepare a summary of most of the Epistles from the various Yearly Meetings, only the Epistles from London and Dublin Yearly Meetings being read in full.

The reports of the various Boards aroused considerable discussion, especially in connection with our Church Extension and Educational interests. It is increasingly evident that the continued existence of Nebraska Yearly Meeting as an active force in the propagation of Quakerism depends upon a united and aggressive policy along these lines. With Eli H. Perisho, A. M., as president of Nebraska Central College and an efficient and consecrated faculty to co-operate with him, the prospects before this institution are brighter than for some time. Frank W. Dell was appointed General Superintendent and was again given charge of the Biblical Department of the College. The report for the latter work during its first year was distinctly encouraging, over twenty students having taken all or part of the course, either by actual residence or correspondence.

The statistical report showed some decrease in membership, largely owing to a revision in some meetings of the list of members. A letter was sent to William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State, heartily endorsing his attitude on the Peace question. One of the most interesting periods in the whole Yearly Meeting was that devoted to the report of the delegates to the Five Years Meeting. The new AMERICAN FRIEND received the hearty endorsement of the Yearly Meeting and pledges of over $50 were made towards the Guarantee Fund in its behalf.

Christ is to each what each has found him. To the soul which has sunk in the mire, he is a Savior; to the intellect which has wrestled with doubt, he is a Guide; to the heart which has sorrowed, he is a Comforter. Each should travel his appointed road and accept and employ the experience which it brings. It is thus that we grow in grace.—David Smith.

Problem of the Rural Church

America is rapidly resolving itself into two great camps—an urban group and a rural group. At bottom, humanity's problems are pretty much identical, whether in the country or in the town, whether at home or abroad, but their manifestations and their distinguishing characteristics are widely different.

The Church is being forced to recognize that the rural Church is not only a problem in itself, but a live one that must be solved right speedily. It is comparatively easy to organize a city church effectively. The pastor or the leader is thrown at close range with the membership. Committees can be gotten together easily and upon short notice. Bad weather does not so readily affect the attendance upon the appointed means of grace. There are better opportunities for systematic study and social development.

This problem is of special interest to Friends, for we are largely a rural people. Possibly we have yet to learn that city and town methods and usages will not apply to our country meetings, and that special oversight will have to be accorded our rural membership.

On the face of things one development of the pastoral system has not been wholly satisfactory to some of our country meetings. Apparently in certain localities there has been a lessening of individual responsibility in meeting work, with the result that there is a growing feeling that not even a Sabbath morning service can be held to edification without the presence of a preacher. Occasionally in recent months we have heard the remark that at a particular time and place "there will be no preaching," or that "there will be preaching next Sabbath." This is a new element in the Quaker language that seems altogether inconsistent with our democratic polity wherein every member is a priest unto the Lord.

Lack of individual responsibility is always serious in any local congregation, and doubly so in a country congregation, where occasion for the exercise of responsibility is apt more frequently to be required. First and foremost among rural needs is the cultivation of a readiness to meet Christian obligations as they arise, a willingness to be faithful to every call of duty. No neighborhood can thrive in its religious life, if the custom prevails of relying wholly upon a minister to conduct the religious service. That the existing tendency is not wholly due to an abnormal development of the pastoral system is evidenced by similar tendencies in meetings that have never recognized a pastor. Whatever can be done to emphasize individual responsibility and to develop individual gifts will go far toward supplying a vital need in all rural congregations.

But this does not obviate the importance of preaching. The rural flock that has meagre opportunities for study needs all the more to be fed, but the quality of the ministration is vital. Under the pastoral system a tendency exists for the abler ministers to settle in the city meetings, and naturally so. But one of the solutions of the rural problem is to recognize that no longer can the country congregation afford to have inferior service. The need is easier to define than the remedy, but we are face to face with the importance of developing a peculiar kind of trained ministry that will be suitable for the requirements of rural uplift and progress.

We need a kind of expert gospel service, that, knowing rural life and the rural heart, can minister to rural necessities with exactness. In a peculiar degree the country meeting should concern itself with neighborhood affairs, and become a recognized leader in all that makes for moral uplift and social betterment. In no other way can the religious life be emphasized with such power and effectiveness.

Our Evangelistic and Church Extension and Social Service or Home Mission Boards can render no more important service than to apply themselves to a study of the needs of our country meetings. The problem is a vital and pressing one, and upon its solution depends in large measure the destiny of our denomination in the coming half century.

The church that is waiting for men and women to come to it, will wait indefinitely. In a parable, Christ taught that we must go out after those who are entitled to partake of the feast. We need more work and less waiting among the disciples of our Lord.

The persons of most worth in a meeting are those who can be counted upon most faithfully for any and every service that needs to be performed. He who is greatest must become servant of all.

Influence of the Great Revival in Indiana on Friends Meetings

BY LAVINUS K. PAINTER

(Graduating Thesis)

Revivals must necessarily rise out of a universal need of renewed life. The very fact of a revival presupposes a transformation. Nor does such a rejuvenation come unless men see their need and desire new life.

History shows that the revival which began among Friends a little over a half century ago was no exception. The phenomenal activity and creative genius, characterizing the first generation of Quakerism, had spent their force by the beginning of the eighteenth century. In protesting against the formality of other sects the Quakers in turn succumbed to the spirit against which they had rebelled. The dynamic vitality of the Society was sapped by criticising the methods of others until it became a "kind of system of negations." The youthful spirit of activity was displaced by the severest Quietistic formalism. To be true this crystalization was not universal. Fortunately there were still those in whom the "Inner Light" was an active, vitalizing agent; but the Society as a whole had made the fatal mistake of suppressing its own life in protesting against the objectionable features of others. Expression of personal religious life was no longer encouraged. The missionary spirit, so active during the first generation of Quakerism, became dormant both at home and abroad. During the early nineteenth century nonconformity with the stringent discipline and dissension greatly decreased the numbers of the Society. The Hicksite, Wilburite and Anti-Slavery divisions almost paralysed the life of many communities, leaving them weak and inefficient.

In theory the church held tenaciously to the principles of early Quakerism, but in practice they had drifted far from the ideals of its founder. George Fox had realized the value of silence in worship but had advocated that one should keep silence only until the spirit gave utterance. In practice Friends came gradually to accept silence as the essence of worship itself. Only those on whom the spirit rested in a special manner gave utterance to their religious experience. Verbal prayer became a dread and solemn process. Such was the reverence for God that He became too sacred and hallowed for ordinary men to approach in vocal prayer or testimony. Though in theory there was perfect liberty for all to take part in meetings for worship, there had grown up a restraint, a feeling that God was so infinitely great and must be approached with such profound reverence that few besides the regularly appointed ministry had the courage to attempt it. Those who did have the courage to speak in public were regarded as having a special gift for the ministry and in many cases were recorded. One Friend relates that the first few times he spoke in meeting the other young people looked on him with awe and fear as though he was imbued with some supernatural power. So real was this feeling that they even refrained from freely associating with him after the services.

Under the constraining effect of this inexpressible reverence for God the free leading of the Spirit developed into a formalism of enforced silence. The practice of birthright membership had brought many into the church who were unconverted and to whom silent worship could mean little. We cannot help but feel that hundreds of pious souls found the essence of worship in those hours of waiting on the Lord. Yet there must have been those who let their minds wander from things religious during those times of silent worship. The knife marks on the back benches in our old meeting houses give us a hint of the interest the boys took in such mystical worship. Little, indeed, could the healthy, vigorous youth find in the average meeting that appealed to his practical mind. Frequent reference in the records of the time to drowsiness of Friends in both First-day and Mid-week Meetings shows us that physical exhaustion or indifference must have often robbed the Spirit of His dues. How many plans for business activity and other schemes have been worked out in these meetings we shall never know, but a few instances lead us to believe that such things were not infrequent. Jacob Baker tells us of one Friend who, after his conversion, admitted that during those times of silence in First-day Meeting he studied out plans for a mouse trap and for some saw-mill machinery, both of which he afterwards patented. Others no doubt could relate similar experiences. There was little in these meetings to stimulate religious thought on the part of those who were not spiritually minded. Our ideal mental state in worship may be expressed in the frequent testimony of one Friend near Wabash. "I brought nothing here and I will take nothing away." Such an ideal of negative contemplation tended to separate mental action from religious subjects, a tendency from which Friends have not yet fully freed themselves.

Under such surroundings the average Friends Meeting offered little to lead the young and unlearned in the ways of the Spirit. In emphasizing the leading of the Spirit, systematic Biblical instruction was neglected. Rarely did parents speak to their children on religious subjects and in most homes vocal prayer was infrequent. The meetings in which there was no resident minister worshiped for the most part in silence except perhaps near the close there would be a few words of prayer, a Scripture quotation or a brief exhortation. Occasionally a visiting minister would be present and preach a doctrinal or expository sermon. In communities where there were resident ministers preaching was much more common. But these sermons were rambling and incoherent, consisting very largely of stereotyped gallery phrases and a variety of well-worn Scriptural quotations. These could convey to the listener little of practical instruction or incentive to righteousness delivered in the characteristic "sing-song" fashion.

It was indeed a "straight and narrow way" the youth of half a century ago must follow; regular attendance at meeting twice a week was almost compulsory, a necessary duty performed by force rather than through love. Plainness of dress and address, the unconscious Quaker fetishes, was adhered to as though essential to their religious faith. The Jewish ideal of exclusiveness so dominated Friends that they considered themselves a peculiar and separate people. Individual initiative was suppressed by form and custom, the ordinary pleasures of life were thought to savor of "creaturely activity" and were forbidden fruit. Social intercourse with those outside the Society was strongly discouraged, even intercourse with other religious sects were sternly dealt with.

It is with a sense of relief that we turn to the brighter side of Quakerism and search out those forces which were destined to work such a transformation in the Society of Friends within the next half century. The fact that Quakerism was not completely submerged by formalism, dissension and false standards bears testimony to the mighty irresistible power of spiritual truth for which the Society has always stood. From its very nature, this indomitable spirit of Quakerism sought to free itself from its shackles and to re-interpret its message in terms of modern life. In a Society which emphasizes democracy and personal communion with God we may expect such a movement to be a spontaneous growth in the lives of many individuals. First causes are made difficult to follow when we consider that those who first felt the impulses of this new birth naturally said very little about it. We may well wish that these Friends might, more frequently, have felt free to express verbally their inner life experiences. Here and there were thinking young people who were not satisfied with their condition, who longed for personal salvation, and who found little satisfaction in the narrow way prescribed by the Society. Custom had enclosed with high walls the way by which man should attain righteousness and many had failed to find this road to salvation. Either these walls of custom and practice must be broken down or the life within would be stifled. Fortunately, there were those who not only realized their own condition but the condition of the Society at large. These prophetic spirits set out to redeem the Society of Friends for practical usefulness in the world.

That the revival should find its fullest expression in Indiana Yearly Meeting is easily explainable. In these recently settled communities we find the Quaker influences of New England, of Pennsylvania, of Carolina, as well as an influx of fresh blood from England, all fused into one composite whole. Here, indeed, if anywhere we may expect to find universal Quakerism; all of those elements combined which develop a broad-minded, intellectual type of life, open, inquiring, searching, yet made essentially practical by the battle to gain a livelihood and establish homes in the primeval forest. These pioneers could not help but feel something of the vastness of the wilderness about them, something of the unrestrained western freedom. Restricting church discipline and long established custom lose their magic power when transplanted into communities still strong with the genius of social and industrial creation. The inexorable spirit of progress was in the air and the Friends church of the West must catch this spirit or drop out of the race.

While we attribute the revival to various movements we do not lose sight of the fact that this or any other revival is due to the working of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men. At the same time there are various agencies bringing the heart of man into touch with the Spirit. Prominent among the visible forerunners of the revival was the awakening of Friends to the responsibilities of educating their children. Quakers had failed to continue to be aggressive on account of the failure to develop competent educated leaders. Some Friends had gone so far as to declare higher education unspiritual and contrary to the doctrines of the Society. But as Friends began to establish boarding schools, academies and colleges, young minds were trained and an aggressive leadership was developed. It is to this renewed intellectual activity that we may attribute the awakening which resulted in the revival.

As a result of this general educational awakening First-day schools were established for Scriptural instruction. In many meetings these schools had been introduced under protest and were considered as doubtful "innovations" likely to breed irreverence for the Scriptures and insubordination in the church. Not only did these schools provide Biblical instruction, but they furnished a point of contact with other denominations. A small group of Friends was brought in touch with religious enterprise outside of their own church through the Indiana Bible Association of Friends, which was formed in 1857 as a branch of the American Bible Society. The Central Book and Tract Committee had been formed at Yearly Meeting in 1850 and was beginning its aggressive campaign of religious and denominational education, in a small way at first, but within a few years thousands of pages of religious literature were sent into many communities. This renewed interest of Friends in themselves, their doctrines and methods was a healthful sign of awakened activity.

During this period of exclusiveness there were some Friends who did not permit themselves to be confined by the narrow ways of the Society, but associated with other Christian forces in the larger philanthropic, reformatory and educational movements of the day. Notable among these were the charity organizations, the Anti-Slavery movement, work among the Indians, and the Bible Society just mentioned. Here and there were traveling ministers who bore unmistakable signs of having come under the influence of the evangelical teaching of Joseph John Gurney during his visit to America. Some Friends, too, had sought an education outside of the Society, and it was inevitable that these should get broader visions and higher conceptions of truth. These far-sighted people awakened to the needs of the church and saw that it must be saved to the young people or lose its power as a religious body.

Transcontinental Pilgrimage of Young Friends

Being an account of the travels and experiences of some young Friends, Maurice L. Rowntree, of England, and Carolena M. and L. Hollingsworth Wood, of New York, in visiting Nebraska, Oregon, and California Yearly Meetings, June, 1913.

The business sessions of New York Yearly Meeting were nearing their close on May 31, when Maurice L. Rowntree, one of the lecturers at the Swarthmore Settlement at Leeds, England, arrived by the "Celtic," to join the young Friends party in a visit to three western Yearly Meetings.

By six o'clock we were leaving the old meeting house in New York, amid a chorus of good wishes and showers of flowers, leaving too many of our duties for kind and willing hands to finish. Homer Coffin was with us to Oskaloosa, as he went to make his new home at Portland, Oregon. As we followed the great curves of the Hudson river, our hearts turned from the old to anticipations of the new, with the prayer that somehow we might be able to understand and serve the Society of Friends as a whole.

The journey to Chicago gave pleasant opportunities for picking up the thread of common friendships with our new-found friend, Maurice Rowntree, and for explaining to him some of the intricacies of American life as well as for sharing our First-day morning thoughts in a small, though real and not too silent meeting. By five o'clock we were welcomed in Chicago by the tall form of Herman Newman, with other Friends, and were soon spirited away by motor and elevated to the Chicago meeting house, or "Friends Church," as we were soon to learn to call our places for public worship.

Here the C. E. Society had prepared a refreshing supper, with opportunity for cheerful fellowship with Friends, both young and unaged. It was a pleasant surprise to find here Mary Fox, another young English Friend, to help Maurice Rowntree make us understand the warmth and breadth of the Young Friends movement in England. We had a sweet meeting and it was sometime after nine o'clock when at last we bade farewell to these dear Friends who had cheered us on our way with such enthusiasm.

Now we felt really off for the West with our new excursion tickets long enough to carry us as on an enchanted carpet in our various wanderings. The "Father of Waters" was soon left behind, and we were delivered into the waiting hands and hearts of the Penn College group of Friends. President Edwards and Professor Kelsey were at the station to welcome us and carry us off to a busy twenty-four hours, including inspection of college buildings, the auditorium, old and new meeting houses, and delightful friendly converse around dinner and supper tables and in the social hall and morning collection. It was a beautiful continuation of the joyous fellowship in Chicago, and we felt as we left this splendid group of Friends, that we bore away larger, braver hearts than we had brought and we felt and appreciated the downright sincerity and earnestness of the greetings of love and the invitation to Friends to come to their Yearly Meeting in September and help them open their beautiful new meeting house. Our Eastern love of peculiarity was delighted to see on the front of this new building a plain slab inscribed in plain letters, "Friends Meeting House." A name is after all but a small thing, yet there are traditions clinging about some names that have a real significance to some of us who are a little queer.

The journey over the main line of the Union Pacific through the rich Nebraska corn and alfalfa lands was quickly made, and our part of the Young Friends Movement detrained at Central City on a platform empty of Friends, for our letters warning of our coming had gone astray. The welcome we received at the meeting house soon refreshed our hearts however, and we were most hospitably and comfortably cared for. We were happy to find that the Friends who worked at the Five Years Meeting remembered us, and we were freshly impressed with the unity which comes from joining hands in work or worship or cheerful social intercourse. Among the faces of Friends who are recognized at once and who made us feel at home were the clerk, George D. Weeks, and James Tabor of Colorado and Isaac Ellis of Central City. Harry R. Keates and William M. Smith were among the visiting Friends. Parker Moon was there too, whose presence spreads a benediction of love in every gathering. It was easy also to remember Frank Dell, Everett Meyers and Theo. Foxworthy from the delegation to the last Five Years Meeting.

The presentation of our various minutes was a new sensation to all of us, for though we had often heard other Friends' minutes read, our own names sounded strange in the formal wording. The business of the Yearly Meeting is carried on with parliamentary method, but we thought George Weeks very successful in making use of its advantages without burdening the meeting with its detail. We led a busy life with motor trips to see wheat and alfalfa fields, and to inspect Friends Central College, where Nebraska Friends are making so brave an attempt to provide an education for their children. The meeting manifested its interest in peace, temperance and education as well as the ever present concern for evangelism. James Stevens' descriptions of a Friend's work in the Legislature and the stories he gave us of the early days on the Oregon trail and the "Lone Star Station" on the Platte River near the college, all added greatly to our happiness and to the pages of Maurice Rowntree's ever present notebook, from which he will doubtless draw stores of knowledge for his adult school men.

It was with a feeling that all Friends must see more of each other if we are to do the work of the Society of Friends efficiently, that we left these good Friends waving goodbye to a dear company who had come to see us off and wish us God-speed on our journey. We had just a glimpse of Denver on our western flight, and then the wonders of the Royal Gorge with its towering cliffs on either side, and the river, crowded into thirty feet in width—"seeming on edge," as we heard someone describe it—and the railroad track suspended over the river from trusses fixed in the cliffs overhead.

Next morning was First-day, and we woke in what seemed to us a golden desert, but which later proved to be the Green River Valley. As the train stopped at the various little stations, where by clever schemes of irrigation some people could find a living, we had opportunities to give "cheery words" to some. We saw little children trudging through the dust of treeless roads and plains in their evident best clothes to Sunday School, and we blessed those brave Christian hearts that were carrying the more abundant life to those who struggle with the immense arid stretches which so strangely oppress and uplift one at the same time. Especially do our hearts go out to the women, whose lives seem so shut off from all which would break the awful monotony of their struggle with nature. Our eyes feasted on the level green plains with their great rows of Lombard poplars as we reached Salt Lake. Strange ly enough, the Mormons were holding their Young People's Yearly Meeting, but way did not seem to open for us to speak to them much as we should have rejoiced to do. We attended one of their huge meetings and entered with them on that great arid plateau into the words of the solo, "As the hart panteth after the water brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God!"

A young Mormon Elder very courteously explained to us the tenets of the Mormon faith, telling us of their sending out their young men as missionaries, who must go without extra cloak or food or money, and press on their work as Christ instructed those he sent out. One could see how such an adventure might appeal to young men, and we thought the Young Friends Movement might well consider such a program.

From Salt Lake City we traveled via the Oregon Short Line—which seemed very long—up to Idaho, where we picked up some Yearly Meeting Friends from that far eastern Quarterly Meeting of Oregon Yearly Meeting, and so on down the Columbia River, with glimpses now and again of Mt. Hood—an ideal snow-covered mountain—into Portland. The roses there were in their glory and the splendid growth of green in the well-watered valley leading to Newberg refreshed our eyes. Here our coming had been duly announced, and we were greeted at the station by Levi Pennington's large form and hearty voice and handshake and by his no less hearty laughter, and were soon delivered to our respective hosts and hostesses, gathering soon after at a meeting of the Alumni of Pacific, to be addressed by Harry R. Keates, who had preceded us from Nebraska, and who spoke with his usual splendid vigor and energy. The meeting was held in the new building of Pacific College, a satisfactory structure made of plain yellow-red brick, with just enough Spanish touch and clever but simple ornamentation to rob it of too severe plainness. The next morning the commencement exercises were held and Robert E. Pretlow addressed the graduating class and us all on our indebtedness to the institutions which educate us.

The opening of Yearly Meeting gave us the pleasure of again seeing the faces of Friends we had met at Indianapolis and elsewhere; Amos Kenworthy, Arthur Chilson, John F. Hansen, Chas. O. Whitely, Lindley D. Wells and others. The message of love which we bore from New York and Nebraska Yearly Meetings was pleasantly received, and we felt that we were welcome among them. Julius C. Hodson gave a most excellent example of the dignity and good sense with which the service of clerk of a Yearly Meeting should be performed. It was interesting to find that the reading clerk is the wife of that very important official in Oregon, the State Forester. The Epistle from New York Yearly Meeting having been sent by hand, was separately read, but most noteworthy was the session for the report of the Trustees of Pacific College. The Yearly Meeting accomplished what seemed an impossible task by raising in that session $8,000.00 for the floating indebtedness of the college. It was a very inspiring occasion and showed how determined the Friends are to back their college, and it was all the more remarkable because a very generous subscription had been taken for evangelistic work the day before.

The First-day morning meeting was very large and had the unusual feature, at least to Easterners, of being suspended while the balance of the sum necessary to erect a parsonage at a mission station on the coast was subscribed. This was followed by a very beautiful message from Arthur Chilson, after which a number came forward for special prayer. The meeting of the visiting young Friends with the young Friends of Oregon was held in the German Methodist Church, near the meeting house, on First-day afternoon. There was a good response to the thought of our definite Quaker message and the necessity for study to understand it in its beautiful fullness.

The visitors again found difficulty in parting from the dear Friends they had found in Oregon, but it was refreshing to have so cheery a farewell at the station. At Portland they had to leave Maurice Rowntree, who took the Canadian Pacific back to his duties as lecturer at the George Summer School. A transcontinental journey with a young English Friend is advised for any one who wants to know why the Young Friends Movement is so vital a force in the religious life of English Friends. The journey from Portland to San Francisco by the Shasta route is indeed a joy, especially in the simplicity and comfort of a tourist car and behind an oil-burning engine which emits no cinders or smuts. The pure beauty of snow-covered Mt. Shasta lay before us nearly all day and the interest of double engines and spiral tunnels, mineral springs and boxes of fresh trout made writing and reading difficult.

In San Francisco we found an invitation to visit San Jose, so we were soon off again to meet Joel Bean and the group of all kinds of Friends which gathers in that interesting place. Joel Bean—our aged young Friend—had returned from the sea shore on purpose to meet us, and it was a pleasure to meet Emma Coffin, mother of T. Homer Coffin, a member of our New York Quakerism Class, and for part of our journey our traveling companion. Following the meeting with these dear Friends and others, we had a beautiful walk about the Leland Stanford University grounds and buildings with their magnificent setting of hills and palm trees.

San Francisco Bay and the Golden Gate are sights of wonderful beauty, and we saw the State University with its splendid grounds and the Greek theater at Berkley. Levi Gregory made us very welcome at the meeting house at Oakland, and their little mid-week prayer meeting in the attractive meeting house was earnest and inspiring. We left them for our train to the Yosemite Valley, grateful for the knowledge that Friends can flourish on both coasts and that the great message of brotherhood will be voiced, be the skin white, black or yellow. A night on the train and a stage ride of fourteen miles takes us into the heart of the Yosemite Valley and its granite bastions, its entrancing waterfalls—from the very clouds they seem to come. The witchery of rainbow and delicate spray are a successful defiance of the pen or tongue or even the imagination. Sleeping in tents after hard scrambles up the trails and a swim in the crystal clear water add to the joy of living and prepare us for thirty-four miles of staging to Wawona and the big trees. How big are they? Who can tell? Bigger than you thought? Yes, and in a different way. Happily the whole way to the "trees" from the Yosemite Park is through enormous yellow and sugar pines, as tall—some of them—as the big trees themselves, so the proper comparison is near at hand. The thought, too, of their great age lends them enchantment—survivors of the age before the glaciers swept off the vegetation of the continent and excavated the giant valleys and canons, older than the pyramid of Cheops and still alive and producing seed today! Truly it is a hard saying!—

At Merced among the glories of pink and white oleanders we have our first experience of a Harvey railroad eating house. Here as everywhere on the Santa Fe system we find food well cooked and daintily served and have the joy of seeing a service—and a difficult one—well rendered and with a poise and absence of hurry and unnecessary hustle which suggests the Quaker—or rather the Quakers of the olden time. To awaken in an orange grove is like a very pleasing dream. You can do it in Southern California, and we did it at Pasadena as we came toward Los Angeles and Whittier and our Friends there. First, however, we had a day at Catalina Island with its wonderful submarine gardens seen through glass-bottomed boats.

Such a warm greeting as the dear California Friends had in store for us!—We were at once whirled through groves of oranges, lemons and walnuts, and listened to startling stories of yields per acre which THE AMERICAN FRIEND might well fear to print from any pen but that of a native! The Yearly Meeting gathered in the splendidly big meeting house in Whittier, but as the meeting progressed, even its capacity of 900 was overtaxed. John Chawner is clerk, and directly behind him sat John Henry Douglas, still valiant with the strength of the great revival period. Beside him was Harry R. Keates and many familiar faces were on all sides. Joel Bean and his daughter, A. F. N. Hamblen; George Taylor, brother of Ernest Taylor, one of the London delegates of last year; Joseph John Mills, clerk of the Five Years Meeting; Mable H. Douglas, one of the assistant clerks of the previous Five Years Meeting and now reading clerk of California Yearly Meeting; Edna Chilson, of Africa, and hosts of others who greeted these young Friends from the East as if they loved them.

When the minutes of visiting Friends were read in the first session, we were given an opportunity to ask for a meeting with the young people, which was at once granted and a meeting appointed at the rise of the first session. This meeting was well attended and a marked interest shown in our concern that the message of Friends might be presented in present-day terms to the present day. It was very evident that geographical differences have not sundered the hearts of Friends, and we all felt much more unity of purpose and feeling than any one of us had expected. The joy of feeling that our visit was helping to cement a stronger, more intimate and vital union of the interests of the Society was very comforting as an ending to our long trip. The Yearly Meeting received a communication from one of its Quarters asking that some plan be made looking toward an understanding of our principles, and this was referred to the Evangelistic Committee for attention. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor also appointed its field secretary as superintendent of the department of the study of Friends' ideals. Beside these the meeting of the Penn College graduates appointed a committee to work for this purpose, so that altogether it seems as if there might be a fine interest developed throughout California Yearly Meeting.

In one part of the Yearly Meeting there was an interesting return to the old method of holding separate men's and women's meetings. Women Friends met in the meeting house while the Men's League of Whittier entertained the men attending Yearly Meeting at a supper in the Methodist Church social rooms, with an inspiring address on China as America's opportunity. Although there is evidently a large difference of feeling in the Yearly Meeting on the subject of the California Anti-Alien Land Bill and some strongly favor it, it was a joy to all the lovers of the Friends' old ideal of brotherhood to have the Yearly Meeting reaffirm its belief in that Christian principle.

Amid all the pleasures and opportunities of these weeks of fellowship with dear Friends, we have been conscious, as always, that our beloved principles must be lived even more than talked about, so we hasten away to the intensive duties of our little field on the eastern coast, yet taking with us a larger hope and sense of love and fellowship and interest in the Kingdom.

Memorial of the Religious Society of Friends to the Government and People of Canada

Canada Yearly Meeting of Friends, now in annual assembly at Newmarket, Ontario, desires to respectfully submit to the Government and People of Canada the earnest concern of Friends, that our country should seek rather to actively encourage, both nationally and internationally, by every means within its power, the adoption of the principles of Peace and Arbitration rather than to continue an increasing activity and larger expenditure in preparation for war.

During the 250 years since the organization of the Society of Friends in England, Friends have consistently persevered in all lands, wherever residing, in refusing to participate in military training or other preparation for war or to engage therein. The basis of this unswerving attitude during this long period, in old times maintained often under severe persecution, is the conviction of Friends that war between nations and peoples is morally wrong, and that, therefore, nothing can justify even its serious contemplation as shown in the training and other preparation for the crime of wholesale murder among civilized peoples.

The representatives of the Canadian people have recently been engaged at Ottawa in a long and contentious discussion as to the method of expending vast sums in further preparation for war or so-called "Defence," a controversy which has been anxiously watched by Canadians and by many in other parts of the Empire, and has drawn the attention of foreign nations, and while watching, the cry has arisen in many hearts that light might break through into the controversy to give a clearer and broader view to our legislators and to our whole people, that they might see how insignificant is the contested issue raised as to method of preparation compared with the opportunity at this time for Canada to give a world spectacle, not of intent for defence or war, but of preparation for the Reign of International Peace.

Can it be denied that never at any previous time in recorded history was there such a narrow space between a terrible cataclysm of war and the adoption of general arbitration in its stead? And is it not also true that distrust between peoples, largely ignorant of each other's motives and sometimes dominated by special interests of the few, is the tow,—which catches the spark,—alike the menace of conflagration, and the real barrier to International Disarmament?

With our great neighbors adjoining, we are about to celebrate the Centennial Anniversary of unbroken peace:—For a hundred years along over 4,000 miles of contiguous frontiers, there has not been a fort on land nor a ship on the rivers and lakes prepared for war. Within this Canadian land for one hundred and fifty years the descendants of diverse races, once hostile to each other, have lived in amity under equal laws, co-operating in the development of the country with increasing mutual respect and consideration. For more than a decade, citizens of the heavily armed nations of Europe as well as of Great Britain, Ireland and the United States of America have been pouring into Canada by the hundred thousands to live together in this new land:—until, today, the new comers are numbered by the millions observing common law and justice under the Canadian British flag.

The nations of Europe are staggering under the costly weight of armaments, because of their mutual distrust. Increased preparation for "defence" by one is suspected for "offence" by another, and leads to corresponding additions to the war preparation of all. No sane and honest citizen, far less those responsible in Government in any of these countries, can desire war.

The views held by Friends and many others in regard to war may, in all sincerity, be thought visionary, unpractical and even unpatriotic by some in positions of civil responsibility and by many other citizens, but after all these ages through which mankind has advanced to the present culmination of knowledge and power, and when, more and more, Government rests on the will of the whole people, is it not strange that the so-called practical man and the practical Government should see no better way out of this nightmare of war preparation than to increase the armament and thereby build still higher the walls that keep alive and active the mutual distrust now separating the great civilized peoples into hostile camps?

What is the logic of this situation to the thoughtful mind? Is not the solution to remove the distrust of the separate masses of people by better mutual knowledge and would not the Government welcome the results? Is civilized mankind still in its childhood that it should remain afraid of bogies in the dark?

Parliament has appropriated about $10,000,000 to be expended this year by the separate Department of Militia and Defence besides large sums for naval purposes. The Department of Trade and Commerce annually requires a large amount to send its representatives abroad to foster Canadian trade among commercial nations of the world. Both the objects are considered by the Government worthy of the care of a separate Minister and Departmental Staff with their large expenditures.

If practical results could be achieved in assisting to remove the distrust between the great nations of the world, promoting the feeling of brotherhood and resulting in international disarmament, would not it be well worth while for the Government to devote a large sum to establish and maintain a Canadian Peace Commission to carry on a definite campaign to promote this object abroad and to assist our own to a fuller understanding of foreign peoples: and is it not one of our first duties to correct the present tendency towards militarism in our Canadian schools, and to substitute, for the lure of military display, intelligent teaching as to the terrible results of war economically and morally to a nation?

Does not Canada in the Providence of God today occupy a unique position in the Empire and in the world, and is not this the supreme hour,—one of the historical “fullness of times” when she may take a stand before the world as an Apostle of Peace and bring to a successful issue the efforts of advocates of Peace in all countries?

The world does not require to be assured of Canada's loyalty to and affection for the Empire by additional military or naval expenditures, whether at home or in Great Britain. What better assurance could Canada give, and what better initial step could she take, to not only show true patriotism to the Empire, but, also to remove distrust of the Empire from foreign nations, than to withdraw entirely from either of the proposed plans for strengthening the naval forces of Canada and the Empire and to devote instead a part of the money to a definite Peace Propaganda under the care of a strong National Peace Commission or Department?

We appeal to the Government, to all members of Parliament and to the People of Canada for united action in this direction.

Peace Association of Friends in America

A Message From Australia

We have just received from Charles E. Howie, of Melbourne, Australia, an article entitled “A Morning with the Shirkers,” by Mrs. I. M. Allen, the first part of which appears below. He suggests that if the facts there recorded can become generally known in America “it may help to make Americans desire to keep universal training” off our continent. In explanation of the title, Mr. Howie says, “All boys not doing their compulsory drill are ridiculed by the press as unpatriotic, and called ‘shirkers’.”

As lovers of the free institutions of our country we shall certainly all read with exceptional interest the scenes here described, illustrating vividly as they do the logical outcome of governmental sanction of military training for boys.

For the Peace Association of Friends in America,
ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

A Morning with the “Shirkers”

To realize to some extent the iniquity of the present Defence Act, one has but to visit one of the courts and witness a “trial” of the “Shirkers.” Feeling that we should see for ourselves how this was carried out, Mrs. Leyton Richards and I visited the Melbourne District Court one morning recently. Once up at the Law Courts, the ambulance van waiting outside indicated which door we should enter, and to reach the court room we had almost to push our way between policemen, soldiers, and waiting boys. Why so many soldiers? we might ask, unless it be to overawe the boys—a show of force to browbeat them into submission.

They do not have such an array when the older lads—the citizen soldiers are before the Court.

Inside we saw more soldiers,—the prosecuting officer with Area-officers as witnesses, whose evidence is always taken in preference to the boys’. The magistrate sits above, but he admits he is anxious to give the military all the assistance he can. The boy is practically sentenced before he is tried. A sonorous charge is hurled at him, that he “having been given in charge of” such an officer, “failed to return to custody at” such and such a time, etc. “Guilty or not guilty?” It would almost stun a grown man,—it quite stuns most of the boys and they usually plead “guilty,” which simplifies matters for all concerned.

A bolder spirit, smarting under the injustice, will plead “not guilty” and he is then allowed to question his Area-officer or make a statement; he may also call witnesses to speak for him, but it avails little save to bring down the magistrate's wrath upon his head. No matter what inconvenience or hardships the boy may have labored under, nothing, nothing must interfere with the working of this Act. Then the prosecuting officer asks for the boy to be given into custody for so many days, corresponding to the number of drills he has missed and “whatever further penalty you choose to inflict.” In the case of this magistrate it was an additional ten days. Then the sentence: “You are committed to the custody of the officer commanding the Royal Australian Garrison Artillery, in the Port Philip Fortresses for” ten to twenty days, as the case may be. The sentence was repeated so often (fifty boys were before the Court that one morning) that it rang in one's brain with painful reiteration. Oh, the pity of it! and each day's detention means six hours' solid drill. One wonders how the magistrate would deal with a case of genuine conscientious objection,—such has not come before him so far.

Christian Citizenship Conference

The great second World's Christian Citizenship Conference held in this city has passed into history. Representatives from Canada, China, Japan, Korea, European and American countries contributed to the success of the conference. Reports of commissions on the different subjects revealed a thorough study and mastery of the matter in hand.

The Stadium had a seating capacity of from five to ten thousand and was occupied by crowds of interested delegates and listeners. An excellent spirit of sympathy and appreciation with devout reverence for the claims of the whole scope of evangelical truth was evident in every service. Sectional conferences were held in the forenoon of each day in some of the largest churches. Very interesting discussions on Missions, Peace, Temperance, Sabbath Observance, etc., were made. Mass meetings were held afternoons and evenings at the Stadium. One whole session and one leading evening address were especially devoted to the subject of peace. Almost every day the subject received attention from some foreign speaker—each in turn deprecating the purpose of persons, newspapers and corporations, whose interests were best served by disseminating discord and war scares.

The report of Professor Krebbiel for the Commission, among other things, made the following recommendations:

Inaugurate a plan of systematic discussion of the true meaning of the Christ doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man.

Inaugurate agitation to the end of passing laws which will make the misrepresentation of facts of international difference, in newspapers or otherwise, libelous and punishable.

Regulate the requirements for American naturalization along lines of intellect, physical condition and morals, rather than along lines of race, color and nationality.

The thought was freely expressed that the Christian Church in all lands should demand the abolishment of all war and inauguration of world peace. No intimation was heard that this devoutly to be desired consummation would have to await the coming to earth of the Lord Jesus, but that He is here now in the Spirit and claims the right to rule as the Prince of Peace. Reference in the report to the "Quakers" was to the effect that if they had been more aggressive as leaders, World Peace would now have been much more advanced.

Letter From Ramallah

RAMALLAH, JERUSALEM, PALESTINE,
June 4, 1913.

To the Board of Foreign Missions:

DEAR FRIENDS—We are glad to be able to inform you that this morning at 6:30 the first stone was laid in the Friends Boys' School, at the northwest corner of the building. We did not make much demonstration as we expect to lay the corner-stone with ceremonies about July 4th; but Helen Crosman, Marion Kelsey and I and a number of our native Friends were present. Prayer was offered by the superintendent, after which all united in the Lord's Prayer. You may be interested to know that the first mortar was carried by a boy named John Job, the first stone by Nusrallah, God's victory, and was laid by Abraham Salih, or Abraham the Righteous. With such a combination of workers at the very first it seems as though we ought to go forward until the final victory is perched upon our banners. However, as with Nehemiah, there are adversaries who would create jealousy and strife and hinder the work, so that we feel that we need your prayers that God will overrule all this for good.

This morning, at our private devotions, the verse for the day was "Wherefore my beloved brethren be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Then as we turned to the little book of prayer of Dr. Jowett's, that we use, the prayer for the day began thus: "O Lord, make the end more glorious than the beginning."

As George A. Crosman made the first subscription to the Building Fund and George L. Crosman has been chairman of the Building Committee and treasurer, it seemed very appropriate that Helen Crosman should witness the laying of the first stone. Thus may succeeding generations take a vital interest in the work that their fathers started and for which they have labored.

Very sincerely,

A. EDWARD KELSEY.

Friends Jamaica Mission

"The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

This struck me so forcibly as being the case with the Friends' work among the Indians at the North Side, when I had the pleasure a short while ago of a few days' visit with Miss Sada F. Stanley, in her cosy little home in Annotto Bay. I enjoyed very much going around with her as she filled her numerous engagements, as I am intensely interested in the Indian work, and was surprised and delighted to see the wonderful way the work has grown under her care.

I visited the Orange Hill Sabbath School while with her, and the interest manifested both by the children and the grown people was very encouraging. Miss Stanley had a Bible class of eight or ten Indian men, and to see their dark faces light up and their beautiful black eyes flash with intense interest, as she read and explained to them in their own language, the story of Joseph and his brethren, was an inspiration, and a sight not easily forgotten. I had a nice talk with two of these men after school, who are candidates for membership. They are being carefully taught and talked so intelligently of the joy of sins forgiven, and of taking up their cross and following Jesus.

On the Tuesday following I had the pleasure of going to the night school at Orange Hill, where the Indians are taught to read the Bible in English. The needs of this department were a revelation to me. I begged to help to teach too, and enjoyed hearing one young fellow, with a handsome, but very sad face, patiently spell through his lesson, word by word, with intense interest. It is wonderful to us the influence that has been gained over these people, and the good work she is doing will tell in the days to come, but she needs more helpers, as the field is too large to be covered by one worker. My heart ached to think of the many Indians in this island who are living and dying without a chance of hearing of Jesus and His love.

Miss Kennedy and Miss Lizzie Allen in Port Maria and Fellowship are, like Miss Stanley, working early and late, not sparing themselves but striving under great difficulties to bring the knowledge of Christ to as many as they can, but there are still many more who need some one to teach them the way of salvation. May God bless and reward these self-sacrificing laborers in His harvest field, and bring before those in the home land, to whom He has given bountifully, the great needs of these poor heathen people.

Vacation News

Many Friends are away from home on their usual summer vacation. In many instances Friends have gathered in groups at watering places or in the mountains, and are having experiences of a religious character that will be most interesting to Friends generally. We invite brief newsy reports of any such experiences for publication in THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

Anna B. and Henrietta M. Thomas sailed on the 23d instant for a short visit to England. They expect to attend the tenth anniversary of the opening of Woodbrooke, and H. M. Thomas will attend the International Congress on the Prevention of Infant Mortality, in which work she is deeply interested. During A. B. Thomas' absence, Friends should correspond with L. Oscar Moon, 106 Wyndhurst Avenue, Roland Park, Maryland, regarding any Evangelistic Committee affairs.

California Yearly Meeting

Yorba Linda Monthly Meeting of Friends' Church was held July 2. The business was transacted in harmony. The meeting gave William Bertram, late of Oklahoma, unanimous call as pastor the coming year. We have a new church building nicely finished and furnished, and the meeting is out of debt. Our membership now numbers seventy-eight. This Monthly Meeting has been established a little less than one year. With the aid of the Yearly Meeting we expect to build a neat and substantial parsonage within the next sixty days. Our Christian Endeavor Society won the Yearly Meeting banner for highest percentage of attendance. Our location on the map is in the northern part of Orange County, seventeen miles from Whittier. We are always glad to welcome visiting Friends. We are reached by the Pacific Electric Railway—La Habra Line. This new field has an opening of great possibilities for Friends. Many hundreds of acres have lately been set to lemon and orange trees which escaped the severe freeze of last Winter almost completely. But what concerns us most is, that our people shall have consecrated lives to our blessed Lord and a working knowledge of His will concerning us.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The visit of Gurney and Elizabeth Binford at Newmarket during the last week in May was much enjoyed. His gospel messages were inspiring and helpful, being illustrated by notable experiences in Japan, and characters that had come under his own observation. Their talks at the missionary meeting made their work very real to all present. The fruits of the labor of years were beginning to be realized. Native workers had developed good ability as teachers and preachers and could be counted on for future service in enlarging the scope under the management of Friends. — Canadian Friend.

The closing Y. F. C. A. meeting at Newmarket for the summer was addressed by the president, A. G. Dorland, in which the work of the year was reviewed, with an outlook upon next year. Many hearts were saddened at the loss by death of one of our young Friends, Mabel Armitage. She was an energetic secretary and a leader in several departments of work. Much sympathy is expressed for the bereaved mother and brothers. We cherish a blessed hope of meeting again in the better country. — Canadian Friend.

Alfred Young held a series of meetings at Ravenna last month. His services were much appreciated.

Alice E. Pennington, Mabel Webb and Margaret Pennington have been appointed delegates to represent Canadian Friends at the Winona Young Friends' Conference now in session at Winona Lake, Indiana.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Friends in the state of Washington feel that the prospects for Quakerism in the Northwest are brighter than ever before. With the addition of Robert Pretlow to the Seattle Meeting, and Edna Goodwin at Everett, together with a strong fraternal spirit, which has developed between Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting and Friends in British Columbia, the members are feeling a new strength which promises well for the future.

Fred E. Smith, pastor of the meeting at Fountain City, Indiana, attended Quarterly Meeting at Traverse City, Michigan, last Saturday and Sunday, and will spend two or three weeks recuperating in that Northern region. He has resigned his pastorate at Fountain City, to take effect August 1.

Naomi Harrison Jay and her daughter, Anna Harrison, of Whittier, California, are spending the summer at Richmond, Indiana. West Richmond Friends' Meeting is enjoying the influence of their Christian service.

Edgar H. Stranahan, secretary of the Church Federation of Wichita, Kansas, is spending his vacation at Richmond, Indiana, and attended South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting on the evening of July 17.

The Friends' Church at Centerville, Indiana, has undergone some needed repairs. During the four weeks of this work the services were held in the town hall. In spite of the heat and place the attendance was very good. On July 13th reopening services were held in the church. The attendance at Sunday-school was 138, the largest ever known in that church. Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, who served his first pastorate years ago at Centerville, delivered an excellent sermon in the morning to a full house. Many felt it was a great blessing to be there, and some made special efforts to come again in the evening, when he delivered a sermon especially to the younger people, urging them to consecrate their lives to God and not to take the easy and pleasant road, but to take the road of duty. The church is in a prosperous condition, which is greatly due to the untiring efforts of the pastor, Roy H. Wollam.

FIRST CHURCH, MARION, INDIANA

At the unanimous request of the membership of the First Friends' Church, Marion, Indiana, Charles E. Hiatt has consented to remain as pastor for the coming year. He and his wife have faithfully labored in our midst for four years, and we feel that they meet the need not only of the church but of the community also. He is president of the Ministerial Association of the city and is foremost in all movements pertaining to the public welfare.

Asa T. Baldwin, a valued and esteemed elder of the meeting, is confined to his home with serious illness. He has always been deeply interested in all the departments of the church, and is greatly missed from its session. He has been a teacher in the Sabbath-school for many years, and was almost never absent from his place, despite his seventy-eight years.

Charles A. Wiltsie is recovering from a very long and almost fatal siege of typhoid fever. The meeting will be glad indeed, to welcome him and his wife back to its various lines of work in which they are active.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Cox have recently come from California, and with their little son, will make their future home in Indianapolis, Indiana, where Mr. Cox has a position in one of the large mercantile establishments of the city. Mrs. Cox was formerly Hazel Hiatt, daughter of Charles E. Hiatt, of this city.

Dr. William Wagoner, who has very faithfully and satisfactorily served the meeting as treasurer for several years, has resigned his office, and Elias Bundy is appointed to fill his place. Dr. Wagoner and family have arranged to leave in August for permanent residence in Texas, hoping the change will benefit Mrs. Wagoner's health.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

A buggy has been built by High Point Buggy Company to be used in the Friends' Mission at Nowyong, India. This buggy will be used most in medical work. High Point Buggy Company have been very generous, having built the buggy at cost price, also donating an extra seat needed for Indian buggies. High Point Missionary Society donated the first $10.00 and a few individuals are responsible for the remainder. Arrangements have been made for the buggy to be shipped via New York to India at once. Esther E. Baird, who has been delayed at home because of illness from malaria, hopes to return early in September.—Friends' Messenger.

Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith have given up their pastoral duties at Mount Airy, and have gone to Tennessee.

Dr. Raymond Binford, of Guilford College, is giving a course of lectures this summer at Woods Hole, Massachusetts. He will return by the middle of August to participate in the training school, which will open upon the close of Yearly Meeting, and will continue for ten days. William T. Boyce, of Tyner, North Carolina, will have charge of the school, and other instructors will include Charles E. Tebbetts, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, and Willard O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis, Chairman of the Young People's Board.—From Friends' Messenger.

Western Yearly Meeting

The Delitha B. Harvey Circle of the First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana (the Young People's Missionary Society), has just closed a very interesting series of discussions of the various Commissions reports presented at the Five Years Meeting, which have awakened a deeper interest among the young people in the problems of the church.

A summary of the work of the various departments of the First Church at Indianapolis for the past year, as presented to the Monthly Meeting, shows that efficient work has been done along all lines, especial attention having been given to the Home and Foreign Missionary departments.

Endowment for Oak Grove Seminary

The session of New England Yearly Meeting just passed marked the close of a year's strenuous campaign to secure a $100,000.00 Endowment Fund for Oak Grove Seminary, located in Vassalboro, Maine. The campaign was unique in at least two respects. In the first place, it was the first effort of the kind New England Friends have made, and thus places that Yearly Meeting among the others that have been dealing successfully with the financial demands of modern education. In the second place, it is probably the largest fund that any secondary Friends' school has undertaken to raise in a popular campaign.

Oak Grove Seminary is one of the oldest Friends' schools in the country, dating back to 1847, but, although experiencing a gradual growth, it has never had an endowment fund. The present standards of education forced upon the Yearly Meeting the alternative of securing such a fund or necessarily abandoning the work. The increasing possibilities in the school made the latter course, if followed, partake of the nature of a calamity. Thus, in June, 1912, was launched a campaign to raise $100,000.00 within a year, and the services of Vincent D. Nicholson as Field Secretary, were secured.

As a result of the year's work, Vincent Nicholson reported at the recent Yearly Meeting five hundred pledges totalling $72,000.00, of which $52,000.00 came from New England Friends, and $20,000.00 from all other sources. The pledges were conditioned upon securing the whole amount and could be made payable either on demand or at any time within a five year period, bearing interest at five per cent. until paid. The pledges ranged in amount from $1.00 to $10,000.00, there being two of $10,000.00 each, three of $5,000.00 each, one of $3,000.00, nine of $1,000.00 each, ninety-five between $100.00 and $1,000.00, and three hundred and ninety of less than $100.00 each, with a general average for each pledge of nearly $150.00.

In order to make effective the $72,000 already secured and place the school in the desired position of independence and permanence, New England Yearly Meeting pledged itself for the income on the balance for a period of three years, with the understanding that that balance be raised by further solicitation. Thus Oak Grove will probably have the income from the whole $100,000.00 this coming year, and will take its place among those secondary schools that are looking toward larger and more influential work.

Western Yearly Meeting House

The Permanent Board of Western Yearly Meeting met at Plainfield, Indiana, on July 3, to consider the re-building of the Yearly Meeting house which burned last spring. Plans were approved which call for an investment of about $15,000.00. Of this amount $8,000.00 insurance was collected on the old building.

The plans call for a commodious basement, which will house a modern heating plant, and include committee rooms, a banquet hall and an up-to-date kitchen, with a range and necessary utensils. On the ground floor will be the auditorium, a meeting room for Plainfield local meeting and committee rooms. The ceiling is to be of steel.

Work is already under way, and while there is some hope that the building may be ready for occupancy at Yearly Meeting time in September, this is not assured by any means. In the event it cannot be used, the trustees will probably provide tents for the occasion.

A Lone Friend in Pensacola

A recent letter from Charles M. Dickinson, a Friends' minister residing at Pensacola, Florida, contains some news which will be read with interest by many Friends:

"So here I am a lone 'Quaker,' but not idle. I am almost constantly in gospel work. Few Sabbaths pass that I am not actively engaged in the ministry, as well as through the week.

"Pensacola is one of the gems of the Gulf, one of the great 'Tourist' centers. I invite Friends to come this way. When you come, hunt me up. I am easy to find. Call the chief of police. He will find me quickly.

"May the Lord bless THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Speak out. Speak loud. Speak plain. If we as a church have a real message; if we have doctrines that are peculiar to our church and that are Biblical and of God, promulgate them. Give them to the world. Be strong and very courageous, and may the very God of peace sanctify you wholly.

"Your sincere friend,
"Charles W. Dickinson."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

AUGUST 3.

SUBJECT—The Plagues of Egypt.

LESSON—Psalms 105: 23-36. Read Ex. 7-11. Commit Ps. 105: 26, 27.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be humbled; and whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted."—Matt. 23: 12.

AUGUST 3.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. VIII. His perseverance. Hebrews 6: 10-20. (Consecration Meeting.)

There are too many fair weather Christians, who blow hot or blow cold, as their environments change.

Constancy is an essential characteristic of the life of the ideal disciple of Christ.

It is the man who sticks faithfully to his task who achieves success and receives proper compensation for his effort.

The up-and-down life so frequently confessed at prayer meeting has no place in the program of the ideal Christian.

If a man can follow Christ one day in the week, serving Him faithfully and well, he can do it seven days in the week, year in and year out.

Periodic discipleship and service are the bane of the Church. The power of example is strong, and they who profess Christianity should at least be faithful and obedient.

The promise is to them that endure and overcome. Enduring Christians are those who will sit constantly at the table of the Lord and feed upon its bounties.

English Friends Returned Home

Our Friends, Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, of England, who have been in America for the past year, have returned to their home at Reigate, England, having sailed on July 5. Their visitations extended to many meetings in most of our Yearly Meetings, and their gospel labors have been edifying and inspiring. These Friends hold a large place in the heart of American Quakerism, and they will always receive a warm welcome on this side of the Atlantic.

On a Furlough

Word has just reached us that George F. and Isabella DeVol, medical missionaries at Luh Hoh, China, have arrived in British Columbia, and after a few weeks spent on the Pacific Coast, will come East. They have been allowed a year's furlough. Mrs. DeVol is a niece of Benjamin Johnson, of Richmond, Indiana, well known to Friends generally.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting, North Carolina

New Garden Quarterly Meeting, held at Guilford College on July 12, was well attended. In the meeting on Pastoral work there was an interesting and profitable discussion as to the need of development of the younger membership in Christian work and ministerial service. It was shown that Guilford College has given much aid in the way of definite educational equipment for such work and service. It appeared that more watchful, prayerful activity is needed upon the part of the respective monthly meetings to open the way for service to those who appear to have the divine call to enter into the harvest field and labor for the Master. The subject got such hold upon the meeting that a committee was appointed to take the matter to the Yearly Meeting on Pastoral work.

At eleven o'clock David E. Sampson preached in an illuminating way on "My Father's Business," claiming that part of that business is better organized effort on the part of the Church, so that, as Paul said, "By all means we may save some." Eli Reece followed in a brief discourse quoting Jesus, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so send I them into the world." Thus sent, the worker will bring success to my Father's business, whether he brings secular success to himself or not. After an hour of social interchange and a substantial luncheon, the reports of various departments of work for the past year were made, for the most part showing progress, increase of membership with a good financial showing from the constituent

CLOUDED BRAIN

Clears Up on Change to Proper Food

The brain cannot work with clearness and accuracy, if the food taken is not fully digested, but is retained in the stomach to ferment and form poisonous gases, etc. A dull, clouded brain is likely to be the result.

A Mich. lady relates her experience in changing her food habits, and results are very interesting.

"A steady diet of rich, greasy foods such as sausage, buckwheat cakes and so on, finally broke down a stomach and nerves that, by inheritance, were sound and strong, and medicine did no apparent good in the way of relief.

"My brain was clouded and dull and I was suffering from a case of constipation that defied all remedies used.

"The 'Road to Wellville,' in some providential way, fell into my hands, and may Heaven's richest blessings fall on the man who was inspired to write it.

"I followed directions carefully, the physical culture and all, using Grape-Nuts with sugar and cream, leaving meat, pastry and hot biscuit entirely out of my bill of fare. The result—I am in perfect health once more.

"I never realize I have nerves, and my stomach and bowels are in fine condition. My brain is perfectly clear and I am enjoying that state of health which God intended his creatures should enjoy and which all might have, by giving proper attention to their food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

meetings. After the reading of the Queries, reports from the five Monthly Meetings gave the spiritual condition of their membership as being good and encouraging. Then came the lively concern of David and Sarah Sampson of Winston-Salem Monthly Meeting, with a request for leave of absence as pastors there to make a religious visit to London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, if it meet the approval of this meeting and the Yearly Meeting. Their liberation for this service was approved and the matter forwarded to the Yearly Meeting. The importance of subscribing for and reading THE AMERICAN FRIEND was presented that we may keep informed and keep loyal to the Five Years Meeting and our branch of the Church.

What Have We Done Today?

WE SHALL do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done today?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give today?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak today?
We shall be so kind in the after awhile,
But what have we been today?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought today?
We shall give the truth a grander birth,
And the steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungry souls of earth,
But whom have we fed today?

That Magnificent Offer

We wonder if your friend and neighbor has been told that THE AMERICAN FRIEND can be had for the balance of the year for FIFTY CENTS. A good many Friends are taking advantage of this liberal offer, and we are convinced that hundreds of others would do so, if they only knew about it. Eight Yearly Meetings are yet to be held this year, and the record of progress which will be reported will be worth the price of the paper for that time. The Executive Committee and the Boards of the Five Years Meeting will hold their annual conferences in October, and again all Friends will need to know their conclusions as set forth in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. In addition, numerous leading Friends will write important articles for our pages, that should be widely read. Tell your Friends about it. New subscriptions FIFTY CENTS from now till January 1st next.

Using the Quaker Name

It is high time steps were taken to prevent the use of the names "Quaker" or "Friends" for commercial purposes. As a committee of New York Yearly Meeting put it, "it is immoral for anyone to trade for his own profit upon the supposed virtues of another. And it is a public indecency to exploit for that purpose the name of a religious organization." Would our co-religionists permit the widespread advertisement of a Baptist Beer or a Methodist Whiskey?—Friendly Visitor.

Twenty-sixth International C. E. Convention

BY THOMAS NEWLIN

The twenty-sixth International C. E. Convention, held in Los Angeles, July 9-14, 1913, has a remarkable history in many ways. The meetings were held in Fiesta Park in a tent seating 11,000, in the Temple Auditorium seating 3,500, and in a score of the largest churches in the city. All of these places were crowded at times and always well filled.

The local attendance was splendid, but the numbers from the far east of our country were not so large as at former meetings. However, the final report of the Enrollment Committee shows 10,001 registered delegates, with forty-seven states and territories represented, including Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Jamaica, Great Britain, Austria, Russia, Japan, China, Corea, and India.

It is safe to say that nothing else has ever so impressed Los Angeles and Southern California as has this Convention. The Convention theme was "Many-sided Christian Endeavor," which means "Many-sided Christianity." The Convention motto, "Take unto you the whole armor of God." We can scarcely appreciate how much the Church owes to this movement, for literally thousands of us were started in our careers in the C. E. Society. Besides the graded work of Junior, Intermediate and Young People's Society, the movement is carried on under ten different departments, each one of which "does" things.

This Convention was practical in its methods. Each morning at 6:30 o'clock hundreds of the Endeavorers met in the Sunrise Quiet Hour with President King of Oberlin College, when he discussed such topics as "Facing the Facts of Life," "The Way Into Life's Values," and "Reverence for Personality." At 8:00 o'clock each morning was the Intermediate Quiet Hour and Bible Study. Then at 9:00 o'clock were held Institutes for Pastors and Church Workers, by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon of Topeka, Kansas; on Bible Study by Dr. John Balcom Shaw of Chicago, but soon to come as pastor to Los Angeles; on Missions by Dr. A. L. Phillips, Richmond, Virginia; on Christian Citizenship; on Evangelism; on Christian Endeavor Efficiency Plans; on Floating Work; on Fresh Air and Hospital. In all of these Institutes plans were discussed and notable addresses were given; and in each meeting the questions were handled by experts.

Each day at noon, in Temple Auditorium, meetings were held on the topic "Problems of the Hour," in which President Ira Landrith of Nashville, Hon. J. A. Macdonald, editor of Toronto Globe, Dr. John Balcom Shaw, and "Billy" Sunday addressed crowded houses on "Christianity's Solution of Civic Conditions," "Capital and Labor," "Soul Winning as a Daily Pursuit," and "Temperance."

On Thursday afternoon the Convention met in sixteen denominational sections. The Friends met in the Friends Church, Third and Fremont Streets, where we found a crowded house and a most pleasant and helpful occasion. The local Friends acted as host and did their part splendidly. Brief addresses were given by Dr. R. E. Pretlow, Seattle; Thomas Newlin, president Whittier College; and by the missionaries, Mary White, Jamaica; Edna Chilson, Africa; Esther Smith, Central America; and Thomas M. Elliott, Hong Kong, China.

Each afternoon and each evening great platform meetings were held in the Tent Auditorium in which many notable addresses were given and plans of Christian work outlined. On the Sabbath about fifty pulpits were filled by visiting delegates, in many cases both morning and evening. Dr. R. E. Pretlow preached at Whittier two Sabbaths. It has been my privilege to attend many State and National Conventions, but in many important senses this was the greatest of all. It was great in the master minds that gave instruction, great in things done, great in the breadth and ideals, but great and mighty in holding firm to the fundamentals of Christianity.

To me it is a token of a brighter day. There was not a pessimistic note sounded, yet the facts of sin and evil were faced. Religion was brought from the skies to dwell among men. The note of evangelism was strong, the whole spirit was devotional and many took advanced steps in Christian life. The music was of a high order. The Convention Chorus consisted of 1,000 voices from Los Angeles, Pasadena, Long Beach, and Whittier. The next Convention will be held in Chicago, 1915.

The Open Doors of Service

Service is the natural consequence of life. There can be no service without life, nor can one conceive of life without its visible manifestation in some form of action, which has its highest development in service. Life does not exist for its own sake, and any conception of it to the contrary is selfish and abnormal. Growth does not spring from a dead organism which contains no germ of life.

Christianity means life, and therefore Christianity means service. There can be no Christian service without the experience of soul life; but soul life produces service just as truly as warmth and moisture and proper soil ingredients cause the plant to germinate and grow. Religion is an experience, yes; but it is an experience from which springs action and service, unless they be smothered by wrong ideals and conceptions.

Life begets life and the Godly example will produce its kind in others, but a Godly example is life in action, life personified, life in service, otherwise it will bear no fruit and soon becomes a dead organism. It is the law of spiritual growth, to be applied to congregational and community life no less than to individual life.

Too frequently formalism is made to serve as a substitute for life, and consequently there is no service that wins men and women to Christ and to His Church. How many are the neighborhoods within reach of Friends' communities, where there are no Sabbath Schools, no church services, no religious influences, where the Sabbath is a day of idling, where the Bible—if one exists at all—is a receptacle for the accumulating dust of the years, where Christ's vivifying presence is unknown! How many are the communities where the religious exercises do not touch the heart and interest of one-half the homes within easy reach of Friends' meeting places!

In some way life and service have not found their proper adjustment. Life expends itself too often in professing and in the formalities of worship, and not enough in the neighborhood experiences of every-day living. Too often the local congregation becomes unconsciously a select ecclesiastical club that means to keep open house for the public, when it should be out on the highways of life busily winning men and women to the path of Christian fellowship and discipleship.

In a multitude of ways our local meetings can grip the lives of their communities, if only they will organize for such service. An over-abundant modesty and an abhorrence of anything approaching proselyting has kept us out of our heritage far too long, and as a result scores of communities are suffering a spiritual blight that is distressing.

The great problem before Friends that is immediate and impelling is the problem of setting out to win our local neighborhoods to Christ and incidentally to the Church. It is a problem easier stated than solved, but it is a problem wherein lies our highest hopes as a denomination for the next decade. The mere holding of the appointed services of the Church will not alone suffice to solve it. There must be well directed prayer and carefully planned organization for such a campaign as this. With proper endeavor and proper equipment and proper energy directed by the Holy Spirit and strengthened by the whole working organism of the Church at large, there is no reason why literally hundreds of neighborhoods may not soon feel the awakening of a genuine religious revival, that if properly followed up will double the membership of our Society within the next decade.

We are profoundly impressed with the belief that the doors are wide open into a variety of avenues of service, personal and congregational, upon which our energies as a denomination need to be centered, and which lead inevitably to a glorious future for the cause of Christ, and the up-building of the Master's Kingdom. "Our neighborhoods for Christ" is the immediate task at hand, and in its fulfillment we will be led inevitably to become partakers in the larger task, "The world for Christ."

The common people heard the Master "gladly." His message was one of deliverance, of hope, of love, and was spoken in language which they could easily comprehend. No less will the gospel message today be received with gladness, when it is presented as the embodiment of love and helpful ministration, and is clothed in terms which appeal to the consciousness of the hearers.

Christianity Through Quakerism

BY HOMER J. COPPOCK

With the increase of Quaker activity incident to the Five Years Meeting has come a mental inquiry concerning its purpose. It has been in the mind and possibly expressed in work that all this energy is being expended simply for the advancement of Quakerism, and that the true ends of Christianity are being obscured rather than attained, that a means has been made an end. Whatever may be our feeling or the actual condition, it is well to be aware of possible danger and to consider what may be the most probable results from these strong-bodied activities.

I half remember seeing the expression, "Quakerism or Christianity?" It seems incorrect. The two things are not co-ordinate. Everywhere and in all cases Quakerism is subordinate to Christianity. It is evident that in accepting one you do not reject the other, and it is also true that acceptance of either means a living interest in both. Quakerism is an arm of Christianity,—a valued channel through which it works. Let us then, rather give consideration to the possibility of Christianity through Quakerism.

Every motive power must have an avenue of contact. For a beast of burden it is the harness, for electricity it is the wire, for thought it is the expressed word, for affection it is a sympathetic personality, and for Christianity it is human beings usually organized into churches. To all these analogies there are exceptions, but the general statement holds. Christianity touches mankind through several mediums, but the one great channel of communication is the body of organized churches. We must use the word in the plural and consider the Society of Friends as one of the many members comprising this somewhat united group of "channels of blessing." It is not necessary to make a comparison of the members of the group, but it is well to recognize the fact that many, if not all, are efficient channels. But the important consideration for us is that the Society of Friends furnishes to many Christians the best means, according to their estimate, of appropriating Christianity to personal needs and service for others.

Having chosen this channel, and keeping in mind that it is no more than a channel, we are concerned with the work we are to do by means of it. It is well to realize that although the work will be shaped by the world in which it is set, the nature of the substance will not be determined by it. The Quakerism of our activities need not obscure their Christianity.

But the most important phase of the consideration of this subject is embodied in the fact that much effort must be applied to the channel itself. It should be kept at the highest point of efficiency for the sake of the work it makes possible. A railway company which used all its men in caring for traffic and used none for keeping the track in condition would soon come to destruction. A large force of men and careful thought are devoted to this essential. Many of our members must give a part of their energies, and some must give practically all to the work of developing and sustaining our organization and the principles which are its life. The men and women who are the officers and members of our various boards and committees are in their places for the purpose of furthering a piece of work. Their time must be divided between getting the machinery in order, keeping it in motion and distributing the product. The rule is to discontinue them when there ceases to be a product. These products, we believe, are fruitful in results to Christianity. There are the results to Quakerism but they come as by-products.

We do not profess to have a perfect machine. There are places where the friction consumes all the power, and others where the workmen are content to see the wheels go round, but in the main this growing and powerful organization is producing a great deal of vital Christianity. I have used the machine only as a figure. The Society of Friends is not a mechanism but a great organism.

This then, makes evident one phase of the justification for our existence. And since we can be an efficient avenue of contact by which the spirit and message of Jesus Christ can come to mankind it will be fatal to us if we do anything less. May Friends keep their activities in the right relationship to the actual work of the Kingdom! There is every reason to believe that this is the highest desire of the great body of our membership. Then with a prayer for guidance we can throw ourselves whole-heartedly into our activities which are to be carried on, in order that Christianity may be advanced through Quakerism.

Friends Mission in India

BY JOSEPH TAYLOR

The London Friends' Foreign Mission Association has been now at work in the neighborhood of Hoshangabad in the Central Province of India for nearly forty years. Its main activities have been itinerant preaching, vernacular schools, and some small amount of medical work; and as the result of these agencies an Indian Christian community of some thousand souls or more is now in existence, where previously there were no Christians at all.

A good many orphan boys and girls were rescued from starvation in the famine years of 1897 and 1900; and their maintenance and education has been a very heavy charge on the Mission since that time. The industrial part of the work (by which we have sought to give them as Christians the requisite independence of character and ability to make their own way, so sadly lacking in the Hindu castes from which they have come) has been especially difficult to maintain, in face of local competition, and the higher standard of living which Christianity seems to require of those who profess it.

At the present moment we have a fully organized church much on the same lines as London Yearly Meeting, and much effort has been put forth in edifying and strengthening the membership. There are five Monthly Meetings and every half year a gathering of all the members, supplying the place of a Quarterly Meeting. Once in two years a specially large gathering is held, which we call a "Mela." This practically combines the idea of a Yearly Meeting and a camp meeting. The Christians live in booths or tents and the meetings are held under canvas, in some shady grove. The discipline of the church, whilst comparatively easily administered to those in actual membership, has been found rather ineffectual when applied to the larger fringe of adherents, who are looked upon as Christians, exactly the same as the members, by their Hindu and Mohammedan neighbors.

A recent interesting feature has been a movement solely under the leadership of Indian Christian members to establish the Indian "panchayat" or "brotherhood" so as to bring greater pressure to bear on these adherents in leading a commendable life, and showing a Christian example to the outside world. In the two large congregations where this has been undertaken the elders and overseers are well satisfied at the improvement in conduct due to this introduction of a well recognized national custom, though certain elements will always call for vigilance to insure a really Christian carrying out of the plan.

One of our great difficulties has been to secure a sufficient staff of Christian preachers and teachers. At the beginning of a new mission it is usual to engage these from other longer established missions. For very many years we have received no outsiders in this way, but have trained our own workers. The young men who ask to be specially engaged in the evangelistic work are only accepted on trial after having been recommended by the elders and overseers of the Meeting to which they belong, and on having given proof by previous voluntary effort that they are really desirous of bringing others to the Lord. They then go for two or three years to our Bible School, where a more thorough education in Bible teaching is given than they could acquire in their leisure hours if working at their trades. We find it very difficult to maintain a full staff of Christian teachers in our boys' schools. This is partly owing to the difficulty in getting youths to pass their government examinations qualifying them to teach in public schools, and partly to the poor remuneration a primary school teacher receives for much hard work. We are thankful to note the much greater independence and nearer approach to real leadership manifested by the Indian workers as years go by, but we still sadly need more Indian leaders and less dependence on Europeans, not only for the work of the church, but to really influence the Hindu and Mohammedan communities amongst which we live, and give a clearer witness for our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Influence of the Great Revival in Indiana on Friends Meetings for Worship

BY LAVINUS K. PAINTER

(CONCLUDED)

The revival spirit seems to have developed almost simultaneously in two communities, Farmers' Institute and Richmond. In the former place renewed life first manifested itself in the Bible classes and in "Social Meetings," which were held for the youth. The devotional side of these meetings soon developed into prayer-meetings, in which many young people were soundly converted. Thus the revival spirit beginning in 1858-59 worked quietly for several years in this isolated prairie community. Though these meetings were an "innovation" they met with little serious opposition under the carefully guiding hands of Jeremiah Grinell and Allen Jay. Could other communities have had such leaders as these in the revival movement much opposition might have been avoided and many unfortunate divisions would never have occurred.

Meanwhile these same forces were producing similar results at Richmond. Bible schools increased in efficiency and attendance, a Young Peoples' Reading Circle had been organized in 1858, and religious thought was stimulated. A few became dissatisfied with their condition and saw that the church was not fulfilling its duty. Certain travelling ministers discerned this feeling of unrest and sought to satisfy it by holding frequent "family meetings" and meetings for youth as they went from place to place. Many were awakened to a sense of their need and a few who experienced a thorough conversion prayed ardently for a revival.

At Yearly Meeting in 1860 a group of prayerful young people requested that a meeting be held expressly for the youth. This was a decided departure from custom, and well meaning Friends shook their heads in doubt. Previous to this Lindley M. Hoag, Elijah Coffin, Jeremiah Grinell and others had held such meetings in local communities, but for the young people to make the request themselves was unheard of. The request was granted with much misgiving. But the meeting was well attended and hundreds of young people for the first time confessed publicly their allegiance to Christ. Conservative Friends were scandalized at such an unrestrained demonstration of prayer and testimony, in which so many took part that the meeting could not be brought to a close until after midnight. This wonderful meeting was followed by regular Sabbath evening meetings at the home of Charles F. Coffin. These meetings provoked much discussion, but they exhibited the true revival spirit without undue excitement, and all those who came under their influence advised their continuance. The spirit of this Young People's Meeting was carried home to the individual meetings, but for the time being it created nothing more than a sincere longing for a revived Friends' church. About the only outward form it took was an increasingly devotional spirit in "family meetings" and the holding of social or literary gatherings for the youth.

During the school year of 1866-67 the revival began in a very quiet manner at Earlham College in the regular student prayer-meetings. It gradually spread over the whole college community, and before the year was out most of the students were soundly converted, not in any sentimental fashion, but by careful spiritual guidance and instruction. The students naturally carried this spirit home with them and during the next year or two revivals broke out at various points, notably one at Plainfield and one at Walnut Ridge in 1867. In both places it met with severe opposition which terminated at the former place in a division ten years later. In the latter place the revival swept the whole community to such an extent that it got beyond the control of the leaders. The Friends' idea of liberty led to extravagant professions and unrestrained license, especially among those unlearned in spiritual things. The Church was not prepared to put a discreet and wisely directing hand on this new movement so unique for a Friends' meeting. Lack of sympathy on the part of the more conservative Friends made any attempt to curb this fanatical spirit have the effect of driving the more radical members to still greater extremes. The unfortunate effects of this revival were felt in the community for many years. When Friends in other communities saw these objectionable features they were more bitter than they would otherwise have been when the true revival spread through the church a few years later.

The first sweeping revival to occur in the Friends' church took place in South Eighth Street meeting at Richmond during the fall of 1868. It started in a very remarkable way from the regular weekly prayer-meeting (This was the first Friends' meeting to hold a regular weekly evening prayer-meeting.) without any visible human leadership. As a result a general revival wave swept the whole city and over four hundred were converted, many of whom were not Friends. In these meetings there was not much preaching and very little sensational demonstration, but the Spirit worked in its power. Some Friends opposed such a serious "innovation" in a Quaker meeting; a few were estranged, but the time was ripe and the sympathy of most of the meeting was with the new movement. Fortunately the leaders felt the temper of the meetings well and closed them before the spirit of rantism began to exert itself. From Richmond the revival wave swept pretty generally over the Yearly Meeting.

The committee on General meetings which had been appointed by the Yearly Meeting in 1867 greatly broadened its field under the stimulus of the revival spirit. These General meetings were originally for doctrinal teaching and no doubt in the start were intended to quiet the growing spirit of restlessness and to establish Friends more securely in discipline and custom. Whatever may have been the primary aim in providing for these meetings under the direction of Daniel Hill and his associates, these meetings were pervaded with the evangelistic spirit. During the years 1870-74 a great number of these meetings were held at various places over the Yearly Meeting. At the same time the church was developing a group of strong evangelistic leaders, such as John Henry Douglas, Luke Woodard and Esther Frame. As the revival spread the matter of holding protracted meetings was turned over to the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings, while the Yearly Meeting Committee resolved into an Evangelistic Committee with a superintendent at its head and exerted only advisory power in local meetings. Within a very few years revival meetings and revival methods became common in most Friends' communities. These meetings brought many into the church and were a means of doing much good, although they were strongly resented by the more conservative members.

As the revival progressed new forms gradually found their place in worship. Although it met with strenuous opposition, singing was introduced, first by individuals and later by the whole congregation. It is a well proven fact that the early Quakers were in the habit of uttering their praises in spiritual song, but in the years that followed stringent discipline had attempted to drive the very music of the soul from Quakerism. The old time silence gave away to a teaching ministry. While we would not minimize the value of silence in worship, still we cannot help but feel that had our fathers indulged in the proper amount of meditative worship in their closets, prolonged silence in public meetings would have been the exception rather than the rule. So accustomed had Friends become to seeing the Spirit work through certain well defined channels that they came to think that through these alone could the Spirit be revealed. This conception is illustrated by a current editorial in the Christian Worker, "It will do no good for any to conclude that the work is in vain just because the manner of performing it does not conform to his ideal. To say, 'I would rather it were done differently,' simply means that the person would have the work done after the manner of man and he to be the man to prescribe the way in which it is to be done." When objection was raised to prayer-meetings some asked if prayer was not the essence of divine worship itself, yet others feared that specially appointed prayer-meetings did not give "sufficient deference to the qualifying influences of the Spirit before entering upon the solemn duty in a congregational or collective capacity." The idea of special meetings was dubious and confusing. Some were fearful lest they conflict with long established principle and custom, namely that "He might preside and indicate the way in which He would be worshiped." Elders were jealous of their power to appoint all meetings and exercised a stringent censorship over all that took place in these meetings.

In many ways the awakening in the Society of Friends was a revival of primitive Quakerism. The movement as a whole did not seek a new theology but a reinstatement of the old. True, a very few led by David Updegraff introduced a theology foreign to Quaker doctrine, but it never gained a very strong foothold in Indiana Yearly Meeting. Opposition was based for the most part on new methods and practices. New converts who knew nothing of the sacredness of Friends' customs saw no necessity of becoming Judaized. Some of those within the church became insistent on throwing off the old forms so that all of those practices not essential to religion itself were put under a stern critical test. New methods rose spontaneously out of the need created by the awakened life. Silence was found to be a poor school of catechism and a teaching ministry began to develop. In worship practices changed radically. Men asked themselves why the Almighty could not be approached in a kneeling as well as an upright position. Was it not just as reverent to remain seated during prayer as to rise and face the rear of the house? If singing was an expression of the soul's experience, why quench the Spirit? Thus all the customs of religious and social life came to be measured by their actual merit and those practices detrimental to progress were slowly cast aside. Many of those practices which were considered essential by our fathers have given away to more vital matters.

Previous to the revival the work of Friends was practically confined to their own membership. Only here and there were there Friends who as individuals took part in the larger philanthropic and humanitarian movements of the day. But with the advent of the revival the Society became aggressive, broadened its scope of activity, and awakened to the religious problems of the day. At home there was ample opportunity for service in providing for those made destitute by the war, both among whites and blacks. Revived spiritual life led a few to feel the call to the foreign field, and in order to open up a field of service for them a Foreign Mission Association was organized in 1867. Previous to this the work in the home field had been systematically organized in order to take care of the different phases of activity. Friends have not been in the habit of giving to religious work and the cause has often suffered for lack of funds. This renewed acceptance of the commission to go and tell all peoples, although somewhat tardy, has proven to be one of the greatest blessings to Friends of the later nineteenth century.

Before the revival influence was felt in the Society each member shared equally in carrying on the work of the church. Most of the meetings were small and each felt in a measure his own responsibility. The revival greatly increased the size of individual meetings bringing in many who were not raised Friends. Not only did these new converts need pastoral care and spiritual guidance, but the church found itself engaged in various activities with no one to direct operations. A few communities were fortunate enough to have members who were willing to minister to the spiritual needs of their fellow members and who found time to keep up the work of the church. But as the meetings grew larger and the life within and without became more complex the practical necessity of a pastoral system arose. It came unsought as far as the church itself was concerned; in fact, it has met with opposition at almost every turn. A few saw that it was the only means of holding the ground already gained and the larger meetings were driven by necessity to accept the new system. For some time the matter of ministers' wages has been a stumbling block, but they have misinterpreted the testimony of Friends against a "hireling ministry," for it is plainly Barclay's teaching that Friends shall be especially careful to provide for the physical support of those laboring in their midst. The pastoral system has arisen out of a practical need and has come to stay. Friends do not need to feel that its coming is out of harmony with Quaker ideals, but should seek to adapt it to their own peculiar conditions.

The conservatism with which Friends have met the revival and its methods has on the whole had a very wholesome effect. Although as a body we have been slow to move, Friends have always moved with the assurance of bearing a message of truth. Many mistakes of premature judgment have thus been avoided. Friends believe that the passion to help men which comes in the hour of supreme inspiration is worth very little if it does not find expression in the unending round of daily duties. As the Society has awakened to the social responsibility of Christianity it has endeavored to adopt those methods which seem best fitted to make the religion of Jesus Christ a reality in the lives of men. The temporary effects of the revival were superficial in some localities, but as a rule Friends have been able to distinguish between emotionalism and spirituality. The revival has brought the Society of Friends of the middle West to a renewed sense of their Christian duty. And as we set our eyes toward the future we trust that Friends may be ever found conveying the message of truth to the twentieth century Society with the same tireless energy which George Fox and his associates exhibited in their own day.

George T. Nicholson

IN THE AMERICAN FRIEND of April 10, mention was made of the death of George T. Nicholson, son of the late William Nicholson, and a vice-president of the Santa Fe Rail Road system. His funeral was from Friends' meeting house in Lawrence, Kansas, the home of his youth, and the services were in charge of President Edmund Stanley, of Friends' University, Wichita, who has sent us the following:

The life of every man is a book written by word and deed, for the student of life's problems in after years. "Man lives not to himself alone," is a maxim that gives room for few exceptions. That honesty, earnestness and right ideals win in the end, is a truism none the less dependable. But there seems to be no end in our day to the prevailing sentiment that merit is after all not the thing that one can rely upon for success; and sad as it may seem, this idea has found a lodging place in the minds of many of the young men of our time, who conclude that some lines of dissipation, some disregard for strict rules of conduct are necessarily a part of the experiences of youth. The disasters that follow in the wake of such life experiences make the lives of such men as the subject of this sketch, George T. Nicholson, late of Chicago, and the vice-president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway System, stand out more prominently, and their influence become more conspicuous and far-reaching.

George T. Nicholson, when I first knew him in Lawrence, Kansas, was scarcely more than a boy, but even then he was entrusted with the responsibilities which usually fall to the lot of men of mature years. As a clerk in the office of the Superintendent of Indian Service, he manifested the positive and striking characteristics which have marked his life and work throughout his very remarkable career. Loyalty in service, inflexible integrity and dependence upon, and recognition of, merit alone as the basis for preferment for himself as well as for others associated with him in business, marked the course of his whole life work. Step by step he advanced from an obscure position in the offices of one of our greatest railroads through many important and responsible positions of its service, to that of an honored executive in its council.

George T. Nicholson had been blessed with a large inheritance; and that he cherished as a valuable acquisition and an essential asset in the prosecution of his life work. This inheritance came through the providences of God in noble Christian parentage. His father, Dr. William Nicholson, was one of God's noblemen, and the mother as true and devout a mother as a son could wish or hope for. But to the son must be given the credit of heeding the wise admonitions of honored parents, and of making a part of his life the precepts of his Godly inheritance.

The characteristics of the father were very largely manifested in the real character of the son. The desire to serve, to be useful to his fellowmen, the quiet, unpretentious, persevering manner that accomplishes things, the disregard for pomp and display, and above all spurning sham and the things not real, these characteristics were but reproductions, if not in a larger way, at least under more rigorous vicissitudes and more strenuous environments. In placing the proper appreciation upon the priceless inheritance that was his, and by meeting the duties and responsibilities of the hour with manly courage and devotion to duty, he attained that prominence which placed him among the highly honored in the great business enterprises of our country. That he was worthy of every preferment that came to him was evidenced by the fact that his fellow-employees viewed his oft-repeated promotions, not with jealous eyes, but with real satisfaction; indeed oftentimes with apparently more exultation than he himself manifested.

Here truly was one of God's true noblemen. He thought it not necessary to follow in the lines of questionable habits in his boyhood days; he listened to no suggestions of the necessity for young men to "sow wild oats" for a season; he sought for no easy road nor quick way to success. He proved by his remarkable achievements, in a comparatively brief career that these things are not necessary to insure success. In such lives are found the evidences and assurances of what constitutes true manhood. Such examples of the higher and nobler conceptions of real living are they who can say: "We give our lives like coral insects, to build up invisibly, in the twilight of the seas of time, the reef of righteousness; and we may be sure, although we see not why, it is a thing worth doing."

Susanna Scott

Susanna, wife of Elwood Scott, to whom she was married forty-six years ago, after a short illness of thirteen days, died June 21st, being in her sixty-fourth year. They have raised a family of six children, all of whom are married and are living in homes of their own.

She was a model Christian woman, possessing a well governed life in all that makes up a well rounded Christian character. The obituary read at her funeral service stated that for the forty-six years of their wedded life she had never been heard to speak an angry word or to show an angry spirit. She had a temper, but she knew how to govern it. She was a woman who never indulged in tattling about other people's faults, saying often that we have enough of our own.

She was afflicted with a most severe chronic attack of inflammatory rheumatism more than thirty years ago, from which she never fully recovered. Her last attack was last September, from which she was a constant sufferer, but on the 9th of June the disease left her lower extremities and went to her heart and brain, which led to her death.

She had been a most faithful co-laborer with her husband in all their varied fields of service, for some forty years; never flinching from the plain path of duty. During all these years, while rearing their family of children, she always joined in prayer for them and helped in every way to promote a religious life among them. During all these years of her husband's active work in the evangelistic field she had never complained of her lot, being so often left alone with the care of the household, but bravely pursued her line of duty wherever she was.

Two or three years were spent in Canada in connection with work in that Yearly Meeting, some three years in Oregon and California Yearly Meetings, as well as in different fields in Indiana Yearly Meeting. She died in the triumphs and victories attached to a well spent life.

A Morning With the "Shirkers"

BY MRS. I. M. ALLEN

(CONCLUDED)

The boys are ordinary boys of the working class; there might be a few of the larrikin type, but most are decent, respectable lads. Many give no reason for their failure to drill, they do not know that in their inarticulate way they are protesting against the infringement of their liberty. They are all under eighteen; with but little education how can they stand up against such force and protest when they hardly understand themselves? Many of them are extremely nervous and unable to speak even if they wished; some are careless and take what comes with easy nonchalance; others are smarting under the injustice, while faintly hoping to receive some consideration. But it is pitiful, to one who cares for boys, to see the cloud, the look of resentment or even of bitter anger that flits across the face as sentence is passed,—it is fleeting and they pass out impassively, but it has left its mark. One lad has a caged look, the iron has entered into his soul. Oh, the blind wickedness of it all!

I might here mention two or three cases. One lad particularly interested me, a fine type of face, straightforward and intelligent. He pleaded "guilty" and gave no excuse. I do not believe he could have spoken, for one could see by the movement of his throat the nervous tension he was under. The magistrate liked his looks, for he told him he "was sorry to see a boy like him there," that he had "watched his demeanor in court and judged he was a boy who should be a credit to his corps." Nonetheless he sent him to the fortress for eighteen days.

As a contrast, a lad of larrikin type, but obviously half-witted, received scant mercy; was bade to "stand at attention," and not smile in court. The boy's reason for not attending drill was that the non-commissioned officer had pushed him away and told him he was not fit to drill with the others; "So," he said, "I was not going back when he said I was not good enough to drill with them." His officer, on oath, then gave him a bad character for disturbing the corps and causing disorder. Whereupon the magistrate rated him and said he could see he would be a "perfect pest," and proceeded to give him extra time as "some extra drill would do him some good." That lad was mentally deficient and needed care. What good could military drill do him?

Another boy pleaded "not guilty," as he could not be "in two or three places at once." He was working in Sydney and had come from there (nearly six hundred miles) in answer to the summons, his parents sending for him. As he worked at sea, he did not find it possible to drill. It was an obviously hard case, but the magistrate said it was his "own fault that he had had to come down from Sydney" as he should have got a transfer from his area-officer when he went there; "Fortress for twenty days."

A lad employed in the railway department said he worked on night-shift, or else in afternoon from two o'clock, so the time did not fit in with drills. The prosecuting officer stated that they had an arrangement with the railway department that such lads could drill on certain afternoons. This the boy did not know; to which the magistrate replied: "It is well known to you boys; I have heard the same excuse over and over again. There is very little Australian boys don't know; I guarantee you know when the next football match is" (A favorite gibe). "You knew all this months ago, and the regulations too." (Regulations! Who could know them? They are legion). "Twenty days."

Another case, a citizen soldier brought down on warrant from the country; non-attendance at drills and at the continuous camp. A friend gave evidence as to his good character; he said the lad had erred through ignorance, he was a clerk in the Railway Department and had failed to report to his Area-officer when he was transferred to a country station. He was willing to make up his drills but feared if he went away to camp it would prejudice his position. The continuous training had to be done however, and he was sent to Langwarrin Camp for eight days.

We must think what it means to some poor families to be deprived of the boys' wages for from one to three weeks, and perhaps for the boy to find his place filled when he comes out. "It is the law and must be obeyed;" yes, and a most unrighteous law. If a boy fails to appear, a warrant for his arrest is issued. Many boys have run away from home when the summons has been served. We of the Australian Freedom League hear sad stories from sorrowing mothers. One I must tell which has come to our knowledge since the day of which I am writing. One boy who had been summoned did not appear at the court and a warrant for his arrest was issued. He was determined not to drill, for what reason I do not know. Two policemen appeared at the house with the warrant at eight o'clock one morning; one knocked at the front door while the other went round to the back. The boy was in the house, but his mother who went to the door, refused to give him up and the police went away thinking he was not there. The boy then disappeared and for some days his mother did not know where he was. At last she discovered to her great distress, that he was hiding with people of bad character and she was in great fear for him. The lad now steals home at night and sleeps in the house. The mother goes downstairs to talk with him, but dares not take a light as the place is watched, so they meet and talk in the dark.

Before it is light, the boy steals away again for the day.

To resume our court experience. Besides the on-lookers in court are others who come and go, such as young lawyers, clerks, and officials. To them it appears to be a comedy, to us how different. And in our hearts we wonder who are the "shirkers"—the men who pass their burden on to the boys, or the boys who object to bearing it?

As we passed out of the court, the Rev. Leyton Richards who had been with us, exclaimed to the bystanders at the door, "They are making rebels of the boys! They will never make soldiers of them this way!" and many agreed with him.

A large military ambulance wagon was drawn up at the door, full of boys. It was drawn by four horses, a soldier to each pair and an outrider to go before; three or four soldiers on the front seat and the same number at the back. As it waited for its last passenger, Mr. Richards talked with the soldiers, some of them did not seem to relish the work. He wanted to find out what would be done to a boy if he refused to drill when in the fort, but they were uncommunicative. One said in his elegant way, "Oh, they have to drill all right, there is no 'acting the goat' down there." Another of our friends was told in answer to the same question, "Oh, we 'clink' them." Imagination must translate that.

As the heavy vehicle lumbered off, the second that morning, one's indignation rose high. This is the way Australia expects to make boys into patriotic citizens! The fortress to which the boys are condemned may be any one of the Bay forts. A previous consignment of boys were removed from Queenscliff fort on the mainland to South Channel fort on an island in the Melbourne Argus at the time, "They would be unlikely to escape as the waters of the South Channel are deep and infested with sharks."

This sort of thing is going on week after week in most of our capital cities, and the military police are hard at work trying to "round up" all defaulters.

The people have been worse than blind to allow the introduction of such a state of things. It is the poorer class who are being penalized and who feel the pinch; the public-school lads drill as part of their school curriculum, and it is easier for them. But the people are waking up, and will yet shake themselves free.

If any are only half convinced of the iniquity of it all, let them be persuaded to attend a "trial" at the court. They will come away not only convinced, but ready to do their utmost to help remove a cruel burden from the shoulders of helpless boys.

Melbourne, Australia.

Thoughts of the Flag on a Day of Mourning

BY MARY DOAN HOLE.

The Fourth and its half-conscious thoughts about our nation's flag was passing from our minds when another day—some call it a day of mourning—brought afresh the conviction that the flag has not yet taught us as a people its full meaning, its just, its inclusive, its best meaning. To the old homestead a hero of social service had been brought. He was fresh from the duties of a well equipped citizen, just leaving the many interests which fill such a life. Only a streak of lightning and a thunderclap, and the public-spirited youth had gone away from the land where "gladly he lived."

The parents were ordering the blanket of roses for the casket. We stood near and meditated, questioning. "Why must he be denied the folds of the silken flag hanging there? Was he not brave and self-forgetful and full of devotion to his country? Why must it be only the one prepared 'bravely to take or to defend life' whose manhood our colors signify?" It is so; even so. The citizen whose daily thought is for the upbuilding of the community or town or great metropolis, in short for the upbuilding of the homes and institutions of our country is denied his country's symbol as a decoration on the day of his burial. The physician who risks his own life that he may learn the nature of a dreadful disease and how to fight it, has no right to the flag draped over his casket. The minister who honestly endeavors to think God's thoughts after him and to interpret them to inquiring men and women, the home-maker who endeavors to direct the household for the physical and spiritual welfare of those in her care, these and the long list of patriots which they suggest are not our country's brave!

And so we said not a word. We only looked at the silken folds and listened to the suggestion that a blanket of roses should be brought for the hero of social service. Why? Because his life was devoted to saving the bodies and souls of men and not to preparation for their destruction.

The parents who decide to send their son to a national military institution for education consciously or unconsciously insure the social position of that son and his unquestioned right to the nation's gratitude. Ought not our flag to be large enough to include under its flying folds private institutions for a "guarded education" and state universities for the training for useful citizenship, for which it is not now considered fitting in the same degree? It is not the purpose of the writer here to disparage military and naval graduation, but to plead for a flag big enough, just enough, inclusive enough, to recognize the graduates of other colleges and universities, above all, exalted enough to recognize the Christian soldier as he fights the battles of a peaceful civilization and spreads a spirit of comradeship and not of warfare.

The twenty boys who had followed their Bible-school leader to his last resting place stood in line on that day of mourning, honoring the life of their teacher, but his legitimate right to the flag they could not claim. If they had been in uniform and his leadership had been only for the development of physical prowess instead of moral and spiritual courage they might have followed a flag-draped casket. Yes, it was necessary to order the blanket of roses.

The joy of the Lord is not only the joy of freedom from sin, but it is the joy of service for Him.

Friends Meeting in Paris, France

3 MAYFIELD ROAD,
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, ENGLAND,
July 7, 1913.

The Editor of The American Friend:

American Friends visiting Europe have often found their way to the Friends' meeting which has been held for many years in Paris, every First-day morning, at the house of a French Friend, Justine Dalencourt, 67 rue du Theatre, Grenelle. This meeting, however, has hitherto been closed during Eighth and Ninth months, which our friend is accustomed to spend at her country residence where she has established a Home of Rest for Christian workers. Léon Revoyre, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, now director of a mission to ex-priests, who, though not a member of our Society, is largely in sympathy with it, has now kindly arranged that the meeting may be held, during these two months, at his room, No. 1, rue du Pont de Lodi, which is near the Place St. Michel, and within easy reach of the center of Paris.

Friends passing through Paris can be warmly encouraged to attend this meeting, where they will at the same time have the opportunity of making the personal acquaintance of one or other of these remarkable personalities, each of whom has been constrained to leave the Roman Catholic church, and who are both seeking to make known to their fellow countrymen the gospel in its simplicity and spirituality.

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

An Appeal From Pacific College

NEWBERG, OREGON, July 18, 1913.

Dear Friend:

At the last session of Oregon Yearly Meeting, held last month, that body became responsible for the interest on the second $50,000 of the proposed $100,000 endowment for Pacific College as soon as the first $50,000 is raised. If the first $50,000 had been completed the following day, there would have been more than $400 of accrued interest up to this time, for it would have made the interest on the whole $100,000 available at once. As it is, none of the subscriptions thus far made are producing income, and none will be till the first $50,000 is completed. In the meantime we are losing more than $400 per month in income that would otherwise be accruing for the expenses of the college.

Of the first $50,000 necessary to secure for the college the income on the whole $100,000, we have now secured $44,000. Oregon Yearly Meeting at its last session raised over $8,000 to remove the floating indebtedness of the college, appropriated $1,000 for the college the coming year, and is to raise the $2,500 of interest on the second $50,000 as soon as the first $50,000 is secured. Because of these heavy expenditures, though they are continuing to give, it is hard just now, till they have met these other obligations, to secure the $6,000 necessary to secure a definite income for the college.

We have some substantial gifts promised when we push the campaign farther, but they are not available at once. What we need right away is help to secure the $6,000 that is necessary to start the income on the $100,000 by completing the subscription of the first $50,000.

If the Master puts it into your heart to help Pacific College at this time when a gift will mean so much more than the same gift would mean even a few months later, whatever help He prompts you to give will be deeply appreciated, and we shall seek so to use your gift as to advance the glory of God and the good of humanity and Quakerism in the great Northwest.

Very sincerely yours,

LEVI T. PENNINGTON, President.

C. J. EDWARDS,

Chairman Finance Committee.

A Quaker's Title

During the opening of a new library, at Hull, Sir James Reckitt told the story of his baronetcy:—"It was first offered to me—indirectly, of course, by that great man, Mr. Gladstone, and at that time I declined it. I did not feel that I was worthy of it, or that I should accept it as a Quaker. I felt it was rather overpowering; but pressure was put upon me some time afterwards by Lord Roseberry and the Government at that time, and there were other reasons why I accepted it. I am not sure, however, that I have not regretted it ever since. It often brings one into difficulties as a Quaker, and often I am asked to do things which are somewhat onerous—in fact, you are better as plain John Jones or James Reckitt."

Many Bibles for the Immigrants

The New York Bible Society reports that for the fiscal year of the Government ending June 30th, 836,437 immigrants landed at Ellis Island. The largest number arriving in any one month during the year came in June, when 115,973 immigrants landed. This was more than twice the number that landed in June, 1912. The smallest number came in January of this year, when 26,224 landed.

The missionaries of the New York Bible Society at Ellis Island distributed during the year over 109,000 volumes of Scripture among the immigrants. These volumes were in more than thirty languages. This is the largest distribution of Scriptures ever made among the immigrants. The Society aims to make it possible for every immigrant who desires to receive a copy of the Scriptures without note or comment in his own language.

O Father! give to Thy child that which he himself knows not how to ask. Behold my needs which I know not myself; see, and do according to Thy tender mercy. Teach me to pray; pray Thyself in me.—Fenelon.

Whether we stumble or whether we fall, we must only think of rising again and going on in our course. God never makes us feel our weakness, but that we may be led to seek strength from him.—Fenelon.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

On June 30th, Jane M. Grinnell, of Pasadena, celebrated her eighty-eighth birthday at the home of her niece, Mary Chawner, where she resides. About a dozen elderly Friends, all of Pasadena, excepting Joel Bean, of San Jose, gathered in the afternoon to extend congratulations, and also presented beautiful gifts of fruit and flowers. The party was almost a complete surprise to the aged lady, but she suffered no undue excitement. At the time of her birthday one year ago, she was lying apparently at the point of death, but now is able to care for her room and walk a block every day. After enjoying delicious refreshments the guests were carried to their homes by the granddaughter, Elizabeth Grinnell, Junior, in her car. Jane Grinnell is the widow of Jeremiah Grinnell, one of the earliest ministers of Pasadena Meeting, and the first to be recognized as pastor.

Fred and Anna Butler, of Richmond, Indiana, and Charles and Isabel Johnston and daughter, of Portland, Maine, have recently been welcomed as members of Pasadena Meeting.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The second annual reunion of the teachers and pupils of the Arba School will be held at Arba, Indiana, August 9, 1913. We extend you a cordial invitation to be present. We had a splendid time last year and anticipate a better time this year. Be sure and come. David Haisley, Secretary, Fountain City, Indiana.

Tennyson Lewis, of Van Wert, Ohio, has accepted a call from the pastoral committee of Portland, Indiana, Friends. He has been pastor of the Van Wert meeting for the past eight years and his success has been more than pleasing. An effort was made by the Van Wert meeting to retain him another year, but he felt called to take charge of the work at Portland. The pastoral committee at Portland feel very much elated over securing his services, and feel strength has not only been added to their church but to the Quarterly Meeting as well. Portland meeting is in a healthy condition and has recently reorganized its forces, and the Bible school and Christian Endeavor are showing a steady growth. The meeting has already started out to make this the greatest year in the history of the Portland meeting.

The following additional information has been received concerning the dedication of the new meeting house of Friends at Des Moines on July 13:

After the sermon by President D. M. Edwards, a report was given showing an indebtedness on the new church of $1,350.00, which was subscribed within a few minutes by the congregation. This was followed by the formal service of dedication conducted by Harry R. Keates, former pastor of the church and Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work. As a climax following the dedication Mr. A. B. Elliott came to the platform and in a few words presented as a gift from himself and his wife to the congregation, a parsonage to be built of brick, harmonizing with the church, upon a site south of the church, the parsonage to cost not less than $3,000.00.

In the evening a union Y. P. S. C. E. service was held, conducted by the president of the Des Moines local union. At 8:00 p. m. a fellowship meeting was held, participated in by the churches of the East side. Greetings and congratulations were given by the different churches, after which addresses were given by H. R. Keates and Richard R. Newby.

Special music was rendered throughout all the services under the leadership of Miss Ione Willits. Among the beautiful flowers was a bouquet, highly prized by all, that was arranged by Mrs. O. M. Homan, who has been sick for many months and was not able to attend the services.

New York Yearly Meeting

David Barton, of Montreal, Canada, who has been engaged for nine months in pastoral work in Elba Meeting, has had to resign owing to ill health, and return to Montreal. During his brief stay he and his wife have become endeared to the membership, having labored faithfully with us for the upbuilding of the church. It is a cause of regret that they have had to leave, but the prayers and best wishes of the members follow them.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Adrian Quarterly Meeting will be held at Raisin Valley, near Adrian, Michigan, August 1-3. Following this a conference of Christian workers will be held at the Seminary, continuing until August 17. A course of lectures has been arranged that will be of inestimable value to ministers, Sabbath School teachers, Christian Endeavorers, and all others interested in knowing more of the message of the Bible. William Kirby, of Columbus, Ohio, and Mary Barrett Pim, of Damascus, Ohio, will conduct the lecture periods. Besides these lecture hours, evangelistic meetings will be held each evening under the direction of Edgar A. Wollam, of Cleveland. These services will be under a large tent on the grounds. Special addresses will be given by Lloyd Morris, of Ypsilanti, Michigan, Prof. Ralph Coppock, of Damascus, Ohio, J. Walter Malone, of Cleveland, Evangeline Reams, of Columbus, Ohio, and Esther E. Baird, missionary to India. There will be special days, one of the most interesting of which will be the reunion of the old Raisin Valley Seminary students on August 13. Music will be under the direction of Merrill M. Coffin. Board and lodging will cost $3.75 per week; lodging alone, $1.00 per week; single meal 25 cents. Address all inquiries to Mrs. Howard Moore, at R. F. D. No. 6, Adrian, Michigan.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

Dr. Isaac Sharpless, President of Haverford College, and his wife, have lately paid a brief visit to England, on their way to Japan, where their daughter, Edith, is working as a missionary. They expect to return to Haverford in the early autumn by way of California.—The British Friend.

Prof. Raynor W. Kelsey, of Haverford College, who attended Earlham College Commencement in June, and participated in the exercises, has been spending part of the summer vacation in the West among the Indians, and in Iowa. He spent a few days in Richmond, Indiana, last week on his return East.

Rufus M. Jones is at present resting in the woods of Maine for a few days, and will sail on August 7, for a short stay in England.

Western Yearly Meeting

The Friends' meeting house at Bloomington, Indiana, is being repapered, painted and otherwise improved. The Bible school has been recently reorganized with Dr. M. F. Woodard as superintendent, and a strong corps of officers and teachers.

On Monday evening, July 21, more than thirty persons gathered in Jackson Park, Chicago, for an Earlham-Penn-Friends' University picnic, at the invitation of some of the members of the Chicago Meeting. The gathering was suggested when it was found that about twenty representatives from these three Friends' colleges were in attendance for the Summer term at the University of Chicago. After visiting over the lunch baskets and quietly getting acquainted, Walter E. Dorland called the following persons to speak for each of the schools represented: For Friends' University, Will Reagin, who has been teaching there for the past year; for Penn College, Miss Bruff and Miss Jones; for Earlham, William Carey, '12. A cordial welcome was given to all the "sojourning" Friends on behalf of Chicago Friends, and a proposition made for the formation of a permanent Friends' Club at the University of Chicago. A second picnic is planned for the near future, when this club will doubtless become a reality.

William J. Cleaver, who has been acceptably serving New London Meeting as pastor, has been retained for the work another year.

W. F. M. S. at Minneapolis.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has held regular meetings each month from September, 1912, to June, 1913, inclusive. With a membership of thirty, we have had an average attendance of ten members and two visitors at each meeting. Nine new members have been added to the roll during the year, but a few of our old members have been unable to keep up active membership, and death has removed one of our most valued members from our ranks.

Eliza J. Lindley, one of the oldest members of Minneapolis Meeting, passed away on February 18th, after a month of suffering. No matter how much we may miss her kindly presence, her never-failing courtesy, and her wise counsel, we can but rejoice with her for the joy that is now hers. She has been graduated from the school of life with honors and has received the diploma, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The memory of her life will ever be an inspiration to those of us who are left.

During the year the Society has been ambitious enough to attempt the study of both the home and foreign missionary text-books. From September to December we studied Bruce Kinney's book on "Mormonism," and from January to June have been occupied with a consideration of "China's New Day," by Isaac T. Headland. While we were not able to go very deeply into either book, we felt that we could not afford to miss at least a superficial knowledge of both of these important subjects. Our Look-out Committee has reported forty-one calls made during the year.

The Purchasing and Cutting Committee has reported the purchase of flannel, thread, long cloth and binding tape, and has received donations of other material. These materials have been made up into infants' garments and distributed to needy cases in our city. The Committee has also received donations of jelly, preserves, fruit and a sweater, which have been given to a woman whom we have helped a number of times in years past.

As usual, our annual dues have been sent to the treasurer of the Iowa Union of Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies. In addition, we have contributed to the Jamaica Mission, $10.00 to be used as needed; $4.97 for the personal needs of the Kurzhalz family; $7.25 raised by private subscription, to help purchase a much needed cook stove for the Mission; $5.00 as a Christmas remembrance to Charles Vincent, whom we still think of as "our boy," though he has grown to man's estate; and we have contributed $5.00 to the Associated Charities of our city for its fuel fund.

As a result of a systematic canvass, eleven members subscribed for the Friends' Missionary Advocate this year. One of our members has carried on gospel work in the Minneapolis City Jail under our auspices. In May we were represented on an interdenominational committee which brought Ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon to our city for a lecture on Mormonism, an enterprise which was very successful in every way.

For the first time since we have been connected with the Summer School of Missions, we have had our full representation of four members on the Board of Managers and one officer, thus having as many members working in that organization as the largest denomination in the Twin Cities. We feel that the year's work has not been unprofitable, but we trust that the coming year may see larger results.

Respectfully submitted,

ALICE C. WEBB, Secretary.

Earlham College Y. M. C. A.

The Earlham College Y. M. C. A. has an enviable record in comparison with other college associations in Indiana. The record for last year shows that sixty-five per cent. of the young men of the institution were Y. M. C. A. members, a record not equalled by any other of the twenty-one Indiana colleges. Only four others exceed this membership of 119, and in every instance the total attendance of young men at the college is much larger than at Earlham. Only two institutions excel the total attendance at the men's meeting at Earlham, which was 3,230, and these are cases where the total enrollment in the college in each instance is many times Earlham's enrollment.

Only one college excels Earlham in the number of Bible classes, and only one in the number of Bible class sessions. Earlham leads in mission study, the number being ninety-seven. She also sent nine men to Geneva, more than any other college.

Appeal From League City, Texas

LEAGUE CITY, TEXAS, July 10, 1913.

DEAR FRIENDS—We desire to call attention to a very important and urgent need, to assist in helping extend the Master's Kingdom, in the great work now begun at League City, Texas. Friends' Meeting has made rapid growth here since we came two and a half years ago, and our membership is now about one hundred. We have the hearts of this people, and it is conceded by other churches that we are in the lead in Christian work.

However, we have no meeting house of our own; have been occupying rented property, belonging to the Baptists, but the time has come when they want to use their own church, so we have no house that is available. We have secured a building site and expect to build a meeting house at once. Our members are all willing to do their best in this, but are very limited in funds. If we can raise the amount needed to buy the material, we can get the labor contributed.

This is a worthy cause. Will you help us to make it possible for our work to continue? We must have this building or the Lord's work will suffer. We would suggest a free-will offering, taken some Sabbath morning, or suitable time in your congregation, to be sent to our Chairman, as below. This will be an investment that will pay big dividends to the investor. Please "Give as the Lord has prospered you." Thanking you in advance for your kind and liberal offering, we beg to remain,

Sincerely your Friend,

W. W. WORTH, Chairman,
League City, Texas.

In the last ten years the Carnegie Foundation has forced to the wall twenty-four small medical schools which it did not consider fit to continue in existence.

A Great Offer—The American Friend for the balance of the year for 50 cents. Ask your neighbor to subscribe.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

AUGUST 10.

SUBJECT—The Passover.

LESSON—Ex. 12: 21-31. Read Ex. 12. Commit verses 26, 27.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matt. 20: 28.

AUGUST 10.

TOPIC—Heroes and Heroines of the Temperance Cause. Dan. 1: 8-17.

Assign to each member the preparation of a brief statement about some great leader in the temperance cause, like Haddock, Neal Dow, Father Matthew, Mother Thompson, Francis Murphy, John B. Gough, Frances E. Willard, Mary C. Leavitt, Mary H. Hunt, Abraham Lincoln (author of the Lincoln pledge), together with some of the great leaders of the present day in temperance reform, like Lillian M. N. Stevens, Ex-Governor Hanly, Pury A. Baker, Clinton N. Howard, Ex-Governor St. John and John G. Woolley.

It takes moral courage to storm the citadel of rum today, as it required courage on the part of Daniel to stand true to his principles in the presence of scornful courtiers at the court. Sometimes it requires physical courage as well, for liquordom has not hesitated to take life in its extremity. The temperance cause is a record of faithful heroism.

Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood Improving.

Friends generally will regret to learn of the recent illness of Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, of Washington, D. C., who for so many years has been the able secretary of the American Peace Society, and one of the leading peace workers and advocates of this country. On June 7th, he had an attack of aphasia, due in large measure to his long years of constant work and attention to the ever increasing demands of the peace movement. The executive committee has recognized the necessity for complete rest for a time, in order to regain his strength, and has granted him leave of absence for six months.

It is a pleasure to learn that he is recovering as rapidly as could be expected, and his family and friends are encouraged at the prospect. This we have in a letter from Washington City under date of July 24th. Dr. Trueblood holds a large place in the heart and affection of Friends on both sides the Atlantic, and their sympathies and prayers go out to him at this time.

Books Received

"A Dynamic Faith," by Rufus M. Jones. Fourth Edition. Published by Headley Bros., 140 Bishopsgate St., London, E. C., England. Price, one shilling, net.

The value and popularity of this work, which has been read profitably by many on both sides of the Atlantic, is shown by the issuance of the fourth edition. In his usual clear and logical style, the author has endeavored "to indicate that faith is a spiritual process of testing the validity of things unseen, and of appreciating their worth." The subject is treated in five chapters, among which are "Sources of Quakerism in the Scriptures," and "The Message of Early Quakerism." He teaches that God is still revealing Himself to His children, that man has the capacity to know God when thus revealed, and concludes with the comforting assurance that there is a basis of religion which lies wholly beyond the reach of any antagonistic forces.

"George Fox in Scotland," by D. Butler, D.D. Published by Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier, 100 Princess St., Edinburgh, Scotland. Sent post free to any address in the United States upon remittance of 75 cents.

This book is the substance of two lectures delivered in the historic Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in which the author who is not a Friend, interprets Quakerism most sympathetically. The first lecture concerns the visit of George Fox to Scotland, and furnishes a description of the times which serves as a valuable setting to his analysis. In the second lecture he enters into a closer study of his subject by discussing the spiritual significance of the Society of Friends and its founder. The work reveals an intimate understanding of the real heart and message of Quakerism, and the whole work is of value not only for its historical matter, but for its analysis of our denominational standing as a religious force in the world.

"Journal of Friends Historical Society." Vol. X., No. 2. Published quarterly by Headley Bros., 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C., England. Price per number, 50 cents; for the year, $1.50.

A feature is the continuation of reminiscences of "Some Old Edinburgh Friends." This is followed by an old letter by Sarah Smith, detailing an account of "A Literary Circle in Sheffield in 1816," together with numerous other letters of historic value, meeting records, notes relating to Elizabeth Heath, of Mansfield, extracts from the Diary of Abiah Darbey (1716-1794) and sundry other matters of interest to all lovers of our early day history. It is a most valuable number.

The Way of the Cross

JESSE CLIFFORD BOWMAN

THE way of the cross may be rugged,
The journey perchance may seem long,
With scarcely a rift in the shadows,
And seldom the lilt of a song;
But to lips that are uncomplaining,
And to hearts that are wont to pray,
The worth of it all is understood,
And there's joy in the narrow way.

The way of the cross must sometime lead
Through Gethsemane's lonely hour,
And the tired hearts for a little space
May question His purpose and power;
But all of the pain and the bitter tears
Are part of the infinite good,
As all shall know when the vision clears,
When the meaning is understood.

The way of the cross is heavenward
To the realms of eternity,
And all who seek it must one day pass
Through the darkness of Calvary.
But after the night comes perfect day,
After all of life's toil, sweet rest,
And all who keep faith shall know at last
The way of the cross was best.

That 50 Cent Offer Still Holds Good

Time is passing and some of our readers have probably not yet taken occasion to let their neighbors know that new subscribers can get THE AMERICAN FRIEND the balance of the year for 50 cents. This will mean from August 1, if sent in at once. That means five months as a trial offer. If all the membership of Friends in America could read the warm words of commendation of the paper that reach our office almost every day, they would know what they are missing by not getting the paper. We could almost fill a column every week with these warm words of endorsement which come unsolicited. Now is the time to take advantage of this short term offer. Tell your friends about it.

Advertisements Pay

Ernest Howard, who is advertising lands for sale in Saskatchewan, Canada, writes that he has had to move to Adanac, so as to be near the railroad in order to show the lands to possible purchasers. Those answering his advertisements will take notice of his change in address. Mr. Howard writes under date of July 24: "My advertisements are being recognized all over the United States, and are giving the best of results."

In this connection, it may be well enough to call attention to the fact that the management of THE AMERICAN FRIEND has had numerous evidences in recent weeks that other advertisements in the paper are bringing satisfactory results to the advertisers. We ask our readers to recommend the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to others who have anything legitimate to sell.

Bible Study in North Dakota

Every one should read the article in this number on the new plan of Bible Study in North Dakota. Prof. Squires has written a most valuable article, and it deserves the widest possible attention. Friends will do well in their various communities to urge a trial of this plan upon their Boards of Education, especially in the towns and cities.

The Winona Conference

Reports from the Young People's Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, are to the effect that the occasion was most successful and satisfactory. There was a large attendance and every Yearly Meeting was represented except three. We will have an extended report of the proceedings next week.

The Educational Number

The issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND next week will be a special Educational Number, as previously announced. It should be widely circulated, and will be a valuable number. Several important articles on educational topics will appear.

The Annual Meeting of the Cuban Mission

BY A MISSIONARY

Friends missions in eastern Cuba, consisting of four central stations and a number of out-stations, three Monthly Meetings, four Christian Endeavor Societies, eight Bible schools, and four day schools are organized under the manual by what is known as "The Mission." The annual meeting of this organization was held at Puerto Padre, July 8th and 9th. Nine of the fourteen missionaries constituting the Mission were present, three being in the States, and two not able to attend.

The meeting was a very helpful one, both for the conference we had on the various problems before us, as also for the pleasant social intercourse we all enjoyed. It is the purpose of this annual meeting not only to review the last year's work, but to plan for the next year, the latter occupying most of the time. The rules of the Mission provide for an executive committee who have the more direct oversight and care of the work, and who report to the annual meeting their recommendation as to the location of missionaries and their line of work, as also plans for training and use of native helpers. The annual meeting prepares a careful estimate of the amount of funds needed to sustain the work for the coming year and submits this to the Board with such recommendations on all lines of the work as they deem best.

Some important steps were taken this year that we trust will tend to a better organization of the work. The Educational Committee have prepared a uniform course of study for our day schools and will soon issue a catalogue of the same. The most important step taken, perhaps, was the defining of the duties of the Secretary of the Mission and planning for more direct supervision of the work on the field. The secretary's duties were defined as those of "Field Secretaries in general," and he was encouraged to visit the stations to "counsel with and encourage the workers." He was also made ex-officio member of the Executive Committee and chairman of the same. Sylvester Jones was elected secretary for two years and we are trusting for better results from this office than in the past. Charles C. Haworth was elected treasurer, and other members of the Mission were appointed on various committees, so that the work for the year was well distributed.

Eight native helpers are now engaged in the work four of whom are young men preparing for the ministry, or a pastorate, and the others teachers in our schools. One of the great needs felt, and for which we are praying and working, is an institution for higher education for the better equipment of our native helpers into whose hands must fall, sooner or later, the more direct leadership of the work.

It behooves us always to bear in mind, that while actions are always to be judged by the immutable standard of right and wrong, the judgments which we pass upon men must be qualified by considerations, age, country, station, and other accidental circumstances; and it will then be found that he who is most charitable in his judgment is generally the least unjust.—Southey.

Our Young Friends Movement

For the past half dozen years, an awakening has been stirring the life of young Friends on both sides of the Atlantic with the result that what may properly be termed a Young Friends' Movement is now a reality and rapidly becoming a positive force in our denominational activities. What the glow of the morning is to the day, is the freshness of youth to a religious propaganda, wherein consecration, loyalty and devotion are fundamental to its establishment.

In the earliest days of Quakerism, the zeal and faith of its first advocates quickly appealed to the youth of that age, and many became preachers of the truth while yet in their "teens." But there came a day when Quakerism strove to thrive upon tradition and the Society lost its grip upon its youth. Friends began to live in the past, and old age grew reminiscent in memory of activities which no longer had a place in Friends' communities. But the revival spirit came again, and youth has heard the call to service, and while belated in its response, is giving evidences of a return to the holy enthusiasm which characterized the youthful preachers of the seventeenth century.

Probably the fact that youth is feeling itself unfettered and free from much of the dead formalism that characterized the Church a half century ago and more, has helped to work the magic of a new life among our young people. Probably the inspiration of the Christian Endeavor and other similar movements has served in large part to call our younger membership back to the path of consecrated discipleship. Probably a clearer conception of the gospel message interpreted in terms of our Quaker policy and doctrine has brought a new vision of service to our young men and our young women of today. Whatever the causes, the effects are highly gratifying, and to a degree not realized before in our modern history, the Society of Friends has set its face toward the dawn, joyous in anticipation of a new era, wherein youth and old age alike are yoked in harmonious fellowship to bring the Kingdom of God into the lives of suffering humanity.

Every Yearly Meeting has its Young People's department under some appropriate title, whether it be Christian Endeavor, Fellowship or what not. There are problems consequent upon such organization, that are yet far from satisfactory solution, but in the solution of which responsibility will rest upon the young quite as much as upon the aged. It should be kept in mind that the Young People's Movement is not an objective in itself. It should not be fostered for its own sake. To the extent that it is made contributory to the better equipment and strengthening of the Church is its existence to be justified.

Whatever else Young People's organizations may do and ought to do in the way of social up-lift and enjoyment and intellectual and spiritual betterment, above all they should be training classes for efficiency in the service of the Church. A live Christian Endeavor Society ought to mean a larger mid-week prayer meeting, and a better attended and more interesting monthly meeting. The young Friend who expends all his youthful energies upon the machinery of his own Society, except in so far as its operations contribute directly to the up-building of the Church, is hitting wide of the mark, and is wasting energy that ought to be more wisely directed. Any organization is worthy only to the extent that it is made to serve some great purpose, and the Society of Friends has a right to expect a fresh quickening of zeal and spiritual power by virtue of the awakening among our younger Friends.

One of the difficulties of the problems of youth is the proper adjustment of relationships between the young and the aged. Having for the most part a different perspective, they view the same problems from different angles, and their conclusions are apt to be divergent. We doubt, however, if there has been any other time in our modern Quaker life, when the spirit of our older Friends has been so sympathetic with the life and purposes of our younger members as it is today. It is the day of opportunity for young Quakerism.

But our young Friends must not, like so many automatons, wait to be set to work. They have quite as much to do in finding their places and in assuming the burdens of the Church, as do older Friends in assigning them to specific tasks. The Church of the future will be largely what the youth of today make it. Like sons of the morning going forth to the performance of duties nobly done, let our young men and our young women heed the call of the Church and assume their proper share of its burdens, going forth to a conquest over sin and unrighteousness in the name of Jehovah.

The North Dakota Plan of Bible Study

BY PROF. VERNON P. SQUIRES.

[Upon our invitation, Professor Squires has prepared this article for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. In a most interesting way it covers a subject of vital importance, and should be widely read. The system is one worthy to be advocated, and efforts should be made to get Boards of Education elsewhere committed to it.—THE EDITOR.]

The separation of church and state is a well established principle of our national life. It is a principle which has such great advantages that no intelligent person would think for a moment of abandoning it or of proposing any plan which would violate it in letter or in spirit. Yet it must be admitted that involving, as it does, the problem of our public schools it has brought us face to face with a perplexing problem.

Education has until a comparatively recent time been regarded as one of the functions of the church. The older universities of our country, like those of England, were established primarily to train religious workers and to be strongholds of the religious life. Secondary education, too, has until lately been carried on largely under religious auspices, and Bible study has had an important part in the educational scheme.

The fundamental ideas of Christianity have thus had a great part in forming the Anglo-Saxon mind. Both in home and in school the Bible has been far more widely and far more deeply read than any other book. Its teachings have entered into the very warp and woof of our civilization; it has determined legislation, inspired art, and dominated literature. Familiarity with it on the part of well educated people has been taken for granted; ignorance of it has been regarded as a sign of illiteracy. As the late Charles Dudley Warner put it:

"The Bible is the one book that no intelligent person can afford to be ignorant of. All modern literature and all art are permeated with it. It is not all a question of religion or theology or dogma; it is a question of general intelligence. A boy or girl at college in the presence of the works set for either to master, without a fair knowledge of the Bible is an ignoramus, and is disadvantaged accordingly."

But all this is changing. The secularization of the schools which has been going on during our entire national existence, but which has advanced by leaps and bounds during the past three decades, has given a new emphasis to education and relegated various time-honored studies to the scholastic scrapheap. Especially conspicuous has been the falling off in the required study of the Bible. In not a few public schools, to be sure, a brief scriptural passage is read each morning in the course of the opening exercises. In the state of Pennsylvania, indeed, this is the legal requirement. In other states, however, as, for example, in Wisconsin, any public reading of the Bible in school is prohibited. It is safe to say that teachers as a class, the country over, feel that on the whole it is better to omit the reading than to insist upon it. The result is that millions of boys and girls whose grandparents were brought up on the Bible now never hear a word of it during their entire school life. Some other studies, notably Greek, have likewise dropped out of the thought of the rising generation. But the cases are different. Greek, as a matter of fact, was never studied save by a comparative few; and the influence of Greek with all its intellectual and artistic associations did not affect our civilization so fundamentally and vitally as has the study of the Bible.

The result of the abandonment of the Scripture as a prime educational agent is very marked. The young men and women who come to colleges and universities now-a-days are lamentably ignorant of Biblical history and literature. This has been tested time and again. I recently made a test of our freshman class, giving them a few simple questions based largely on literary allusion. Only twelve out of one hundred and thirty-nine secured the necessary seventy-five per cent which entitled them to pass. Similar tests at the University of Michigan, Adelbert College, and elsewhere give equally melancholy returns. In class work in Shakespeare, Browning, Tennyson and other standard authors there is evident an astonishing inability to grasp the meaning of the Biblical allusions with which these writers abound. This abject ignorance of the Book of books seems commonly regarded as a joke. To my mind it is a calamity; it incapacitates our boys and girls for entering into the heritage of culture which is their due; it cuts them off from an understanding of the dominant ideas of Anglo-Saxon civilization.

In a strenuous endeavor to supply this deficiency the church has of late years laid special stress on Sunday School work; and in this worthy field of endeavor much real progress has been made. One who studies into the matter can not but be impressed with the possibilities opening up in the field of religious education in connection with the Sunday School. Indeed, not a few churches seem to regard the Sunday School as the most important department. It is given the best hour of the day for its session; it is provided with finely equipped rooms, with expensive apparatus and "helps" galore. Much good must certainly result from this effort.

But with all its modern improvements the Sunday School is not doing the real educational work that it should. It is not teaching Bible history and literature so thoroughly and accurately as, for instance, the day schools are teaching American history and literature. Its methods in general are not scholarly; its teachers are far too often poorly equipped; its students do not study. A tactful teacher will frequently get a large hearing, and no doubt does much good in an inspirational way. But it is a rare teacher, indeed, who can get his boys and girls to study—to study the Bible as diligently as they are accustomed to study their regular school assignments. The reasons are obvious; everything is purely voluntary; there is no discipline; pupils come and go as they please; there are no examinations, no penalties for poor work, no credit for honest effort. No high school could continue a week on such a plan. It would not be feasible even in our universities. How, then, can we expect it to work advantageously in the Sunday School?

It was to meet this situation that the North Dakota plan was devised and adopted. It is based on the following ideas:

(1) Bible study is an essential part of the educational scheme of the future citizen of the United States.

(2) It is as worthy of academic credit as any other study.

(3) Though under our basic principle of separation of church and state, the state can not carry on Bible study in the public schools, it can still give official recognition for work well done, just as it frequently gives credit for other studies privately pursued.

In accordance with this plan the state educational board having in charge the schools of the state has authorized a syllabus of Bible study much as it has authorized syllabi in other subjects. This syllabus outlines the work to be covered in both Old and New Testaments. It contains nothing sectarian. In fact, it does not emphasize religion, as such, at all. It simply gives a brief sketch of Palestine geography and Hebrew history and indicates the books and chapters of the Bible that are to be studied. It recommends no specific text-book other than the Bible itself, any version of which is entirely acceptable. It is not intended that the work indicated should be done in the school room, or by the regular teachers. The idea is that it should be done at home, or in the Sunday School under the direction of parents or pastor or Sunday School teacher. Twice each year at the time of the regular state examinations an examination on Biblical history and literature is offered, the passing of which entitles a student to one-half unit of credit out of the fifteen units usually required for high school graduation.

The work, of course, is purely elective; no school is obliged to accept it; no student is obliged to take it. But, on the other hand, every school board has a right to accept it and every student or parent has a right to ask for the examination and the corresponding credit, if successful. So far as I have heard, there has been no objection raised to recognizing it in any school or community in this state. Protestants and Catholics alike have taken hold of the plan with enthusiasm. In scores of towns and cities the Sunday School work has taken on new life through the organization of a high school class in which studying is actually done, in which there are regular recitations and tests and examinations, and, in general, the same seriousness of purpose which is found in the regular school work.

The course, as planned, requires two years for its successful completion if only one hour per week is devoted to it. It has been offered now only one year. Still in May something over a hundred students attempted the examination, of whom ninety-eight were successful. The number taking the examination next year doubtless will be much greater.

Some objection has been raised to the plan on the ground that it lays too much stress on the merely literary and historical aspects of Bible study. In reply it might be suggested that these are naturally the only aspects for which academic credit can be given; but that each teacher will find abundant opportunity to emphasize the moral and religious aspects in connection with the required work. In most subjects the really valuable elements are not those upon which examinations are based. The great advantages of the plan are that Bible study is dignified in the estimation of the youth of the state, that boys and girls of high school age are through its agency brought into Sunday School, and that the work of Bible teaching is standardized by being made more scholarly and less sentimental. As to actual results, let me quote from a personal letter from Rev. Walter A. Snow, the efficient general secretary of our State Sunday School Association. He says: "It seems to me that this course has done more to arouse interest on the part of our high school young folks than any other thing which has ever been presented to them. My judgment is that it is destined to be a large factor in the religious training of our young people."

The Wisdom of Babes

BY FLORA M. BEALS.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."—Matt. 5: 16.

To enable one to let the light shine before men that they may see your good works, the practical Christian should strive to make this old world of ours a fit place to live in; "thy Kingdom come on earth as it is in Heaven." In order to successfully strive for that, it is necessary to understand the history of the past, compare it with the present, so as to act intelligently in the future.

The history of the past has been the history of Class Conflict; at first Masters and Slaves, next Lords and Serfs, at present Employers and Employees. Another transformation is now taking place which will abolish the useless, parasitic class who now hold their brother human beings in subjection, and it is the duty of every true and practical Christian to understand and aid in this work of every one earning his bread "by the sweat of his own brow," instead of working six million women and five million children—of school age—while they, the employing class, revel in luxury and idleness. We are constantly reminded of the great and good things the employing class have done and are doing. To better understand the situation, let me quote to you a little verse which explains the situation from a workingman's viewpoint:

"The trees were white with blossoms,
The meadows were broad and fair,
And the care free birds made music
For the children who idled there.

"But a man had need of the meadows;
His wall and chimneys sprang

From among the swaying branches
Where the thrush and robin sang.

"And the man had need of the children;
He gathered them in like sheep—
And set them to work to earn his bread,
For the children were many and cheap.

"They crouch all day by the spindles,
Wizened, and wan, and old;
They have given their youth to a master
Who has minted it into gold.

"No longer they idly listen
To a warbler's futile song,
No longer their idle laughter
Rings out the whole day long.

"No longer they roam the meadows,
Like idle gypsy bands;
For the world is growing richer
By the work of their puny hands.

"And the man who found them idling
Among the feathery blooms—
He talks of the goodly riches
His enterprise has won,
With the toil of the sad faced children,
And boasts of the thing he's done."

This condition is made possible, because of the private ownership by a few men and women of the means of producing wealth and the transportation of same, and making slaves of their fellow brothers and sisters by working them and keeping the lion's share of what they produce. To strive for the collective (or public) ownership of all the people of all the things which all the people need in order to live, and the private ownership of all the things privately used, is the duty of every true, practical Christian; if he expects his Light to shine before men that they may see his good works and glorify his Father which is in Heaven. Make a Slave out of the Machine, and not the Machine make a Slave out of Man. The private ownership of that machine by a few, enables the few to live by the sweat of another's brow.

"No fledgling feeds the father-bird!
No chicken feeds the hen!
No kitten mouses for the cat—
That glory is for man.

"We are the wisest, strongest race—
Loud may our praise be sung!
The only animal alive
That feeds upon its young!"

The above was written by a working man, born and reared in the working districts of one of our large cities. Taken as the average view point of the average class conscious working man, is it not worthy the thoughtful consideration of the earnest hearted Christian of today, who is striving to bring His Kingdom to the earth?

Dare you and I be satisfied with a predigested religion? Must it not come straight from the throne of Light, from Him who is Light—not a dry form, nor a creed to be subscribed to, but a living, burning, working reality? Can we not meet God in all the relations of life, not alone in the swelling bud and the waving grain, but in the advance of science, in the development of machinery, in the solidarity of the human family? Some one has suggested that to believe that God is Light is not enough. "Hither by thy help" each one must find the Way for himself, and "by his good pleasure" must walk in the Light as He is in the Light.

The same working man who voiced the sentiments above quoted, said to me: "One of the noon day speakers at the shops last week accused us of being atheists, of denying a God. It is the Machine," he continued, "which is making of our cities a fertile ground for atheism. The man's work in the country brings him near the heart of the Infinite. In the upturned furrow, in all nature around him he realizes a higher power than his own. We in the cities intimately associated with machinery day after day, come in contact with nothing but what we can really perceive, of which we can understand the mechanism. It is the work of men like ourselves. We are removed 'from God's creation.'" And the sentiments expressed by "The Shepherd of the Hills," came back to me with newer, deeper meaning. "We, who live in the cities, spend our days looking at the work of our own and our neighbors' hands. Small wonder that our lives have so little of God in them when we come in touch with so little that God has made."

Yet I cannot but believe that the heavily laden are coming near Christ, and learning His lessons of life. The very nature of their surroundings are leading them along the paths He trod. I never feel His presence more clearly than when actively identified with the disinherited of the earth—of which I am one—the common people who heard him so gladly of old, and who are today hungry for the practical application of His message. Verily, "The fields are white unto the harvest," and "Men will not be won back to God by the formulas of the theologians or the disputes of the doctrinaires half as readily as through the touch of Christian sympathy which ministers to humanity at the points of its direst need."

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago announces the coming to America of Mrs. Catherine Booth-Clibborn, the daughter of the late General William Booth. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, with her husband, expects to attend the Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 24th to 31st, and will speak from that platform. It is then her purpose to spend the fall and winter in America in Evangelistic Missions.

Mr. J. Charlton Steen, formerly Director of the Religious Work of the Central Y. M. C. A., London, England, has accepted the position of representative of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, in Great Britain. He is now in this country familiarizing himself with the work of the Institute, and returns to England in August.

The Darkest Hour is that Before the Dawn

BY KHALIL TOTAH

The Turk, after a sojourn of four hundred and three score years in a semi-civilized section of Europe, has finally decided to go home and be good. French clothes, German guns and paper constitutions have all proved themselves false evidences of substantial civilization. Now, is Turkey ever going to be really civilized? She might, if she boldly insists on the following: Political rebirth; economic revolution; spiritual evolution.

As long as political parties in Turkey come into power by assassination; as long as a centralizing policy to "Turkify" Armenian and Arab is pursued; and as long as the "laissez-faire" system is in vogue, Turkey must keep on going down hill. There is no hope for this nation unless she can dispose of an unpopular prime minister by ways other than foul assassination. Unless the party in power is less tyrannical, and the one out of it is more statesmanlike, Turkey will still come to even direr ends. The danger of "Turkifying" however, seems less imminent at present; for rumors are abroad that the government is favorably inclined towards paying attention to the cry of decentralization—towards heeding the demands of both Armenian and Arabic speaking people. We are just beginning to see public signs of loosening down. Arabic, the vernacular in Syria, is just beginning to gain recognition in official and administrative transactions. Again, the reports about employing foreign advisers and specialists to help run the government are fairly authentic, although nothing definite has been accomplished yet. Lord Milner and Lord Curzon, both able and experienced British administrators, are said to have been asked to help Turkey put her house in order. Nothing short of a political renaissance will be effective in doing away with the administrative rottenness in the Ottoman Empire. Now martial law rules in many cities, such as Beirut, Smyrna and Constantinople; and the military courts are not much of an improvement over civil courts.

One can imagine the economic condition of any poor country after two wars waged in two successive years, to say nothing about the misgovernment of ages which killed off every corpuscle of economic life in the system of this country. The tide of emigration is fearful; business is paralyzed; the government is bankrupt and is consequently sapping the very blood of the wretched population. Military service is relentlessly compulsory for every young man between twenty and sixty. The first exemption fee installment is only $280.00 with more to follow—this somewhat depending on how pressed the treasury is for cash. People borrow money at the rate of fifteen and twenty per cent to pay off their exemption fee. It is highway robbery all the way through.

And now, what if the Paris conference should decide on a war indemnity of a hundred million dollars against Turkey? This reminds me of Franklin's words: "Wars are not paid for in war times; the bill comes later." We will surely stagger under this obnoxious burden unless an economic revolution is near at hand. Yet there are signs of hope. The government seems to be in earnest about granting liberal concessions to foreign syndicates. The Bagdad Railway question is practically settled. A French company is said to have been granted the privilege of fixing a decent harbor at Haifa at the foot of Mt. Carmel. Another company is already at work in extracting kerosene in Palestine. Experts state that the natural resources of the country are sufficient to insure economic independence, if only scientific methods are employed. One thing is sure, and that is some Turks are only commencing "to sit up and take notice." This last defeat has been quite an eye opener. The majority of editors and publicists are now crying for help. Conceit is just being knocked out of their heads and Turkey now fully realizes its absolute incompetence to run the government on old ways.

Last, but not least, spiritual evolution is of the utmost practical importance for the reform and regeneration of this country. Under this term "spiritual" I include educational and social, as they are, to my mind, branches of the same stem. It does not take a very keen observer to see that this land is in its most critical period. We are in an age of actual transition—even here in Turkey. We are actually changing, and may the change be for the better! The people are groaning under the burden of sin, crookedness and corruption. The atmosphere is distilling dissatisfaction and grumbling. Folks are hungering for education and knowledge. They are groping for light. Turkish officials and Moslem religious leaders are sending their children to our schools, because they realize the inadequacy of their own to meet present demands.

It is time for something to happen to this antiquated and hoary country. Still the eternal laws must have their way, and spiritual changes, if they are to be permanent, must be on a sure basis and come gradually. Now is the day for the salvation of the near east. If conspicuous progress is to be made at all, it must be done now. The spiritual atmosphere is stifling. Our life is a cesspool of rottenness and we need men and women with the spirit of Christ, to roll up their sleeves and clean things up. Palestine is in need of old Amos, "Let justice roll down like waters and righteousness as an everlasting stream." This land is in sorer need of Christ than it was nineteen centuries ago. It has had all it wanted of Christian theology and now it is high time for Christian practice. We know the Bible better than folks in America do, but that is all the good it is doing us. Nothing would be better for Palestine than a clean "bunch" of active, vigorous Quakers to live-out Christ before this people.

This is an exasperating country. Its social stagnancy, educational deficiency and spiritual death grate on the nerve, and fire one's soul to do something for this unfortunate piece of humanity. But it is a man's job. It takes an all souled, whole hearted, Christly effort of altruistic service to make things budge. That is just what the Friends Mission is doing. Our hope is in the children. I, for one, will not waste my time on the adult population. It is too far steeped in superstition and ignorance, too well saturated with crookedness and too strongly fettered in pernicious habits to effect any change.

But it is different with the young. They are plastic, responsive, full of promise, energy and willingness to reform. We are trying to soak them thoroughly in the chemical of Christian living, so they will never get over it. Contact, I believe, is the most efficient method to make upright, practical Christians, and straght-forward men and women out of our boys and girls. We only ask for grace, courage and wisdom to go on. We are solicitous for the intelligent, active interest of our American Friends, and not for their pity or sympathy. Ours is an ennobling piece of work. It is eminently worth while and thoroughly Christian. We dimly see the future of this country, yet we plan to be well prepared for anything that may come our way.

Work in Behalf of the Indians

BY S. M. BROSIUS.

Agent Indian Rights Association.

The annual Indian appropriation bill, which failed of passage in the closing days of the 62nd Congress, was agreed to in both Houses of Congress on June 28, 1913, and is now a law.

Important legislation is embodied in this Act, and close attention has been given to certain subjects. The Senate Committee incorporated an amendment which prohibited the use of any money provided for allotment of lands to Indians on the public domain in the states of Arizona and New Mexico, and suspended all allotment laws until further action by Congress. Appeal was made to friends of the Indians in various states with the result that points of order were sustained against all of the amendment excepting the prohibition upon the use of funds carried by the item in question, which appropriates $200,000 for allotment work for the benefit of Indian tribes.

Senator Smith, of Arizona, and Senator Fall, of New Mexico, sought to prohibit further allotments being made to Indians on the public domain in their respective states. The Indian Bureau estimates that there are six thousand Papago Indians on the public domain in Arizona and ten thousand Navajos on the public domain in Arizona and New Mexico. About three thousand of each tribe have made application for allotment on the public domain, and it is now understood that but little will be done during the next fiscal year to complete these 6,000 allotments so that the Indians may have a guarantee that their homes will not be taken away from them.

It should be understood that almost all of these 16,000 Indians in the two states named have always lived on the public domain, and have supported themselves. At the time of the present policy of breaking up the tribal relations among Indians the act approved March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 402) extending the homestead laws to Indians located on the public domain, was adopted as an inducement to Indians to leave their reservations and adopt the habits of civilized life. They were guaranteed by this act that their right to tribal funds and lands should not be impaired by living upon the public domain. This act was extended by the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. 76), whereby the Government held the title in trust for twenty-five years for the Indian homesteader's benefit. The General Allotment act approved February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 388), provides for allotment of lands to any Indian who may settle on the public domain, and nearly all the allotments which have heretofore been made have been under the provisions of this act and its amendments. While no great damage has been done by the prohibition of the use of funds for this allotment work during the coming fiscal year, the incident shows the necessity of securing all facts possible and of forcibly presenting the rights of these Indians to the Department and to Congress. If the Indian Rights Association had not taken up this fight against the Senate amendment the Senate would without doubt have adopted it, and the amendment would have become a law.

The Indian appropriation act also carries an item of $10,000 for continuing the investigation by the Secretary of War for the purpose of determining the feasibility and practicability of constructing the San Carlos reservoir (Arizona) which is intended, primarily, to provide water for irrigation for the Pima Indian lands. This work is being carried on by the War Department, as a result of the efforts of the Association last year.

Two years ago we protested vigorously against the contracts being then secured by one McMurray, from the Choctaws and Chickasaws, of Oklahoma, whereby McMurray was to be paid ten per cent of the value of all tribal property whenever the fund realized from its sale was deposited in the United States treasury. McMurray failed to get the approval of his contracts by the President. The current Indian appropriation act contains an item which is intended to prohibit such contracts from becoming valid in so far as it is possible to legislate by Congress. It provides:

No contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

The Indian appropriation act authorizes the appointment of two members each of the Senate and House Committees on Indian Affairs to investigate and report upon the necessity and feasibility of constructing a reservoir for impounding water for irrigation of Indian lands on the Yakima reservation, Washington. The report shall be filed with Congress not later than January 1, 1914. The Senate had previously agreed to build the reservoir and adopted an amendment providing $900,000 for beginning the work. The Conference Committee, however, felt that an investigation should first be made on the ground by members of the Committees of Congress, as stated. This is important legislation and has been watched with interest. We can rigfully claim the credit for defeating the former proposition to grant a free water right sufficient for only twenty acres for each allottee of the Yakima tribe—this was during the last Congress. From present indications, the Indians are likely to receive a free water right for forty acres each. We will keep up the fight, and ought to win.

In view of our frequent criticism of the management of Indian affairs, the provision in the appropriation act authorizing an investigation of the service will be of interest. The expenditure of $25,000 is authorized for the use of a joint commission, to be composed of six members, three from the House and three from the Senate. The Commission is empowered to examine into the management of the Indian Bureau and its agencies; to examine documents and papers; to subpoena witnesses and compel their attendance; to visit schools and agencies, etc., and it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to furnish all available information demanded by said Commission. The investigation is directed to be conducted as speedily as possible, and the Commission shall report its findings and recommendations to Congress during the 63rd Congress.

The appropriation act also provides $100,000 to complete the purchase of lands necessary for homes for Apache prisoners of war, now located on Fort Hill military reservation, Oklahoma, who preferred to remain in Oklahoma rather than remove to Mescalero reservation, New Mexico. The disposition of these prisoners of war has been of deep concern to the Association. While there may have been a difference of opinion as to the advisability of permitting any of these Apaches to remove to Mescalero, they have been given absolute liberty and freedom of choice, as insisted upon by the Association, in determining whether they would remain in Oklahoma, or go to New Mexico. By provision of law, as soon as homes are provided in Oklahoma, the stigma of "Prisoners of War" will be removed from them.

Hon. Cato Sells, the newly appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is receiving favorable mention. He comes well equipped by reason of practical business experience. Previous to a six years' residence in Texas, Mr. Sells' home was in Iowa. He was Mayor of Laporte, Iowa, at 22 years of age; State's Attorney at 25, and United States Attorney at 30. Mr. Sells is not credited with being a professional reformer, although he has been associated with others in efforts for clean administration of public affairs. Mr. Sells was not an applicant for the Commissionership, but was appointed in preference to any of the twenty aspirants for the position. He has been successful in business, and his financial independence is an added recommendation, since no favoritism need be shown by him for fear of jeopardizing his position.

Mr. Sells is now in Texas arranging his private affairs previous to taking active charge of the Indian Bureau. I have called upon him twice while he was here and find him a most agreeable official to whom it will no doubt be a pleasure to present the needs of the Indians from our view point.

Benefiting the Toilers

The following argument was prepared by Stella F. Jenkins, a Friend, and a teacher in the Manual Training High School of Kansas City, at the request of a Wage Commission, and was put into the record of the Commission now sitting in that city. It is taken from the Kansas City Times of June 21.

Until a few years ago about sixty-five different occupations were carried on in the home and on the farm. Then the mind of man became very busy; machinery of many kinds was invented and put into use. The result was that nearly every kind of work that had been done in the home and on the farm was taken from the house and farm to centers of industry. Factories and packing plants of greater or less degree were built up all over the country, because it was found all such work could be done quicker and cheaper in such centers. Only the routine house-keeping was left for the home; only the farming and cattle raising was left for the farm.

"Naturally and necessarily men and women in large numbers had to follow these industries from the home and the farm to these centers of industry.

"Strangely enough, from the first, the law had something to say in many respects as to how these centers of industry should be conducted, but not until comparatively recently has much, if any, attention been given to the workers, the human beings who labor in these centers of industry. Strangely, too, the owners and operators of many of these centers of industry, through stress of big business, carelessness or forgetfulness, overlooked the fact that human beings were laboring for them. As a result of this forgetfulness the conditions and hours of labor and the wage of many of these workers, who are human beings, are such in many places as ought to make a cry that could be heard to high heaven.

"The changes in the conditions of industry have come so rapidly and furiously that the wage earner, the employer and the general public have not had time to really understand or think out fully the proper adjustment to the new conditions. The present evils and abuses which have grown out of the new conditions were not maliciously planned, or purposely brought about by any set of employers, perhaps, but nevertheless these conditions exist and cry aloud for adjustment. And the cry must be heard and answered humanely.

"Surely the time has fully come when public opinion through law shall dictate to the owners and operators at the great centers of industry, if they do not take the initiative themselves, under what conditions, for what number of hours and for what wage human beings shall labor in these centers of industry.

"Those who work for a wage ask you, gentlemen of this wage investigating committee, to write a law or have one written—that shall demand that the conditions under which human beings labor in these centers of industry shall be sanitary, humane, comfortable; that the hours shall be humane and endurable, preferably eight, not more than nine; that the wage after the first few days or weeks of learning the work shall be a full living wage. For it must be insisted that if a human being gives all of his time, that is, all his contract with his employer requires, he must have a living wage. As a human being he must be housed and clothed and fed and have recreation. If his labor, if putting in all of his time for an employer does not bring him these necessities, whose time and labor shall?

"Girls' hotels, no matter how many there are in a large city, cannot be a permanent solution, an adequate adjustment of the wage problem. At best they must be regarded as only a makeshift, a very temporary institution in the changed and changing conditions of the industrial situation.

"Surely the time has about come when the owners of factories, big department stores, big mail order houses or big business generally, who can give large sums to philanthropy and at the same time have upon their payrolls human beings who do not receive a living wage, will meet with the refusal of wage earners to be paternalized or pauperized. The wage earner wants his wages, not charity.

"We ask this commission not to foster a non-living pauperizing wage system.

"Gentlemen of the wage investigating committee, if you will write the law making the wage, the hours and the conditions of labor what they ought to be, if the employers will cheerfully enforce them, we in Kansas City, I dare say, through our more efficient schools for the boys and girls in the near future, through special training for thousands already employed, will undertake to raise the standard of efficiency.

"We are all only human beings. Why should we not help each other? If the employers, the employed and the customers, the thoughtful, studious, interested public should get together and study our industrial system from all points of view, for the interests of all concerned, something of real benefit would doubtless be worked out."

Extract From London Epistle, 1913

The generations pass, but Christ Jesus remains. We can, therefore, trust the fresh life among us, as it comes into union with His life to remould the Church in each age so that it is fitted anew for the warfare of the Kingdom of God. The universal message of early Quakerism was published through the burning zeal of young men and women, and we are thankful that both in the Five Years Meeting and in our own Yearly Meeting the Church is welcoming without fear and with high hope the service of the young.

We have been reminded that the disciple should not ask for tasks equal to his powers, but for power equal to his tasks. The opportunity is often the call, and the call itself a promise of the enabling power.

Fourth American Peace Congress

BY JOHN KENDALL

Events come and go, but we are not so far from the first week in May but that the meeting in St. Louis deserves some further brief notice. It was a representative meeting of the kind, unprecedented, elaborate in program, conspicuous on account of the men having a part in it. Those were great days for Peace and St. Louis was an appropriate place.

Delegates were enrolled from thirty-six Peace organizations of the United States, eighteen Central and South American republics, twenty-six states of the American Union where delegations were named by the Governors, thirty-eight women's Federated clubs and organizations, forty-four educational institutions of the United States and Canada, twenty-eight commercial and business organizations, thirty-seven cities, eighty-nine religious institutions, in all, about two thousand.

A few features of this Congress deserve special mention. The reception to Andrew Carnegie and wife at Shaw's Garden, and free lunch to all the comers in ninety automobiles reaching there by outlined routes. The magnificent audiences at the general sessions held at the Odeon. Mr. Carnegie, Richard Bartholdt, President of the Congress, Senator Burton of Ohio, James E. Smith, Chairman of the Executive Committee, David Starr Jordan, Booker T. Washington, Benj. F. Trueblood, and Charles W. Fairbanks were specially conspicuous in making the program and Congress a success. It was a significant remark of the latter, during his address on our "National Duty," when he said that being out of politics he was becoming more bold. This remark is suggestive of the fact that the average member of Congress has not pressed this reform in proportion to his opportunities.

The absence of President Wilson and William Jennings Bryan whom every delegate expected to see and hear at this particular juncture of public affairs was a great disappointment to the Congress. The cordial, enthusiastic and Chautauqua-like reception of the Peruvian Ambassador to the United States was significant of the feeling of the Congress toward all the Republics of the Western Continent.

The real episode of the occasion and one which has been most commented upon by the press, was the omission of the name of Dr. Lyman Abbott, D.D., from the list of Vice-Presidents, by the eighty-fifth Annual Meeting of the American Peace Society. This action was nicely taken and was a logical course to pursue inasmuch as the Society does not advocate or accept "Big Navy" methods as a part of the Peace Program directly or indirectly, nor did it brand the Doctor as an "Heretic," the position of Vice-President being merely honorary, although important as a recognition.

Fifty Vice-Presidents had graced the record previous to this meeting, and twenty-five of them resided "East of the Hudson," but this meeting reduced the list to forty-six with twenty-one of them "East of the Hudson." Friends will be pleased to know that Hiram Hadley of New Mexico and President Edmund Stanley of Kansas have been added to the list.

It should be a source of satisfaction to all classes of Friends to welcome the new recruits for this reform from hitherto unexpected sources. There should be no jealousy upon our part against them. Were it possible to sum up the thought, wisdom and conclusions of this congress, the following will suffice:

1. War does not pay if it ever did.
2. Arbitration is a practical remedy.
3. Preparedness for war or imaginary conditions not likely to occur may be less expensive than war, but it is a questionable remedy for the evil itself.
4. The stronger nations should lead in the effort to eliminate war as they take no risk in doing so.
5. All "Big Stick" and "Naval Display" methods or policies foster bigger sticks and larger navies.
6. Missions should avoid all entangling alliance with the military spirit and program.
7. The commerce of the world should be fostered and encouraged wherein it conserves the industry, health and morals of the nations, as a vital force and element of harmony amongst them.
8. That military education and graduates in military colleges are taking chances of an obsolete profession, while there are so many chances of success in business life, world work and peaceful pursuits open to young men of this generation.

The Homiletic Review

In The Homiletic Review for August the fascinating story of "The Awakening of Babylonia" is told by Edgar J. Banks, Ph.D. The second article in the series of three on "Personality and Revelation," by F. W. Butler, of London, England, deals with "Christ and the Victory over the World." The progress made toward "The Union of the Scottish Churches" is attractively set forth by a member of the Committee appointed to direct the negotiations. And Miss Emilie Grace Briggs, B.D., shows the value and need of "The Deaconess as a Missionary."

Other features of this issue are "The Sermon; Its Construction and Delivery," by Edwin Charles Dargan, D.D., LL.D.; "The Card System in the Ministry," by the Rev. F. Stanley Van Eps, New York City; and a discussion of "The Mormon Menace" in the "Studies in Social Christianity," edited by Josiah Strong, D.D.

Not the least serviceable portion of the publication comprises six pages of reviews of books which evaluate for the reader a wide range of important publications in theology, sociology, ecclesiology, archeology, and practical Christianity.

Richard Johns

Richard Johns was born in England in 1645, and removed to Maryland in early manhood. In 1671 he met with George Fox, under whose influence he became a Friend, "and through the gift of the Lord Jesus and His supporting strength he was made a minister of the Gospel, and was enabled to adorn it by a life of humble dedication and faithful walking before his Master." He was for many years clerk of the Yearly Meeting, and a Monthly Meeting was held in his house for upwards of thirty years.

Richard Johns was a man of influence in the community in which he lived, as well as in his own religious Society. At a meeting at West River, Maryland, in 1699, Richard Johns arose and pronounced the following confession of faith:—

"We believe that the Lord Jesus Christ, who was born of the Virgin Mary, being conceived by the promise and influence of the Holy Ghost, is the true Messiah or Saviour; that he died upon the cross at Jerusalem, a propitiation and sacrifice for the sins of all mankind; that he rose from the dead on the third day, ascended, and seated on the right hand of the Majesty on high, making intercession for us; and in the fullness of time shall come to judge both the living and the dead, and reward all according to their work."

—From "Terra Marlae" by Edward D. Neill.

Three R's in Factories?

More than one in ten of all the native white American voters in seven states cannot read their ballot, according to the latest census figures. The National Child Labor Committee points out that ten years ago nearly one-third of all the native white American working boys under 16 were found in these seven states, that lead the country in illiteracy of native whites.

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of hapiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Herein is love; to lift another's cross,
To give away the gold and keep the dross,
To trample into dust the worm of self,
To crowd its clam'ring on the soul's back shelf;
To crush the tears it would be sweet to shed,
And smile so others may have joy instead.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

A letter from Esther G. Frame, at Washington City, brings the cheering news that she is much better in health. She says, "I am resting in Him, trusting, for He has never failed me. He makes ways where there are no ways." Nathan Frame is frail, but not suffering so much. Their address for the present is 719 Quebec Street.

California Yearly Meeting

Sanford and Blanch Ford Pickering have accepted the call of Ramona Meeting, California, to do pastoral work. They expect to commence work there the first of August. Roy C. Newlin and family, formerly of Richmond, Indiana, have just located at Ramona, and will prove a welcome addition to the church. A new Sunday-school has been started in the schoolhouse about four miles from Ramona, and is proving a success thus far.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The recent announcement in these columns that Fred E. Smith would terminate his pastoral services at Fountain City, Indiana, on August first was incorrect. The change will take place at Yearly Meeting time, the last of September.

The Enterprise Bible Class of White-water Meeting at Richmond, taught by the pastor, Alpheus Trueblood, had their annual gathering at the home of the pastor, on Easthaven Avenue, on Sabbath, July 27, following the church service. All the members were not able to attend, but about twenty-five were present, besides a number of children. A bounteous dinner was served upon the lawn, and had just been completed, when a heavy rain drove the company indoors, where after a time of social converse, S. E. Nicholson, of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, gave an address upon the obligations of Christians to other people. Alpheus Trueblood and wife entertained royally, and the occasion was one not only of enjoyment, but of up-lift and inspiration.

August 24th has been set apart as "Anderson Day" among the various Sunday-schools of Indiana Yearly Meeting. A letter has been written to each Sunday-school superintendent asking that the day be set apart for the new church at Anderson. A complete report of this money given by the various schools will be given in a September number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Winneshiek Quarterly Meeting was held at Hesper, Iowa, July 26-27. No ministers from outside the Quarterly Meeting were present, but Maude Stanley and Mary Freeman, of Damascus, Ohio, now for a time co-pastors at our Monthly Meeting at Kedron, near Spring Valley, Minnesota, were in attendance and rendered valuable service, a part of which was a children's meeting Sabbath afternoon. Orin L. Hutchins, pastor at Valton, Wisconsin, another of our monthly meetings, was present on Sabbath morning and evening, and preached sound and helpful gospel and doctrine. The business, as usual, was transacted in order and in brotherly love. The annual reports of the various departments of church work show that the Quarterly Meeting has been alive to its duties and privileges in advancing the interests of the gospel, yet, with a consciousness that we might have done more.

On July 29th, at Pleasant Plain, about ninety persons assembled to celebrate the seventy-seventh birthday anniversary of Aunt Jane Mealey at the home of George A. Deshler, where she had been invited to spend the evening, not knowing what was to happen. After a general social time which all seemed to enjoy, light refreshments were served, followed by a special song service. Aunt Jane was presented with a $12.50 rocking chair which she greatly appreciated. Another present was a very large cake, which she cut into ninety pieces, one for each person present. Charles Haworth, a returned missionary from Cuba, offered a closing prayer, in which the desire of all present was voiced that if it be the Lord's will, her life might be spared for many years to work for the Lord.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Henry C. and Melissa S. Fellow are located in Beaver, Oklahoma, since July, when H. C. took his office of county superintendent of public schools. They will visit isolated Friends in the country and help in Bible schools, Christian Endeavor, Missionary societies and church work of other denominations in the town. They were the principal speakers at Caleyville on the Fourth of July. Temperance and Christian citizenship was the theme, illustrated with charts put out by the W. C. T. U.

A fine temperance program was given at Bethel, Oklahoma, by the union Bible school on evening of June 22nd. M. S. Fellow gave an illustrated talk on alcohol and narcotics. Later she returned and held a silver medal contest and organized a W. C. T. U. Similar work is planned for several points in the country.

Although late to notice, the graduating exercises of Laurence Friends' Academy were too good to pass by unnoticed. Excellent productions were given by the three girls and one boy who completed the course. The decorations were beautiful. The house could not hold the people. A field meet and picnic dinner were enjoyed by the community the next day.

Miss Vida Riggs (now Mrs. William Pribbenow) taught an excellent school, assisted by Prof. A. T. White, who has taught there for seven years.

The next session of Gate Quarterly Meeting will be held at Laurence Academy, three miles northeast of the town of Gate, August 22, 23 and 24. We invite any workers, sent of God, to come and help preach the Word in this great open field.

Western Yearly Meeting

Solomon B. Woodard very acceptably filled the vacancy in the meeting at Bloomingdale, Indiana, on Sabbath morning, July 27, caused by the absence of the pastor, Enos Harvey, who was one of the speakers at the Young Friends' Conference at Winona Lake. Mearl Cook and Wade Williams were delegates to that conference.

The Kendall annual reunion and picnic will be held at Brookside Park, Indianapolis, Indiana, all day on Sunday, August 17, 1913. All Kendalls and those in any way related to them by blood or marriage are cordially invited to attend; those who cannot do so this year will please send a letter to the president, Joel Kendall, Cadiz, Henry County, Indiana, to be read at the "Round Table" in the afternoon.

Blue River Quarterly Meeting was held near Salem, Indiana, July 26-27. Edward M. Woodard, our Yearly Meeting superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral work, and I. Gurney Lee, a minister from Westfield, were present and gave several helpful messages. Willard O. Trueblood, pastor of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, is here with his family at his mother's for their summer vacation. Mrs. Mary E. Chapman is serving her second year as pastor of Blue River Meeting, and she will be there for another year.

The young people of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, are preparing to take an active part in a campaign for funds for the Summer Mission for sick children, on Saturday, August 16th, known as "Sympathy Saturday." A certain section of the city has been allotted to the church, and a house to house canvass will be made.

A rather remarkable sermon by Prof. Edwin Morrison, of Earlham College, was enjoyed by the congregation at First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, July 27, on the theme, "Jesus, the Light of the World," showing in a very forceful way why Jesus so called himself, by comparing the power of Jesus with the wonderful force, Light.

Winona Friends Association

The program for the Winona Bible Conference at Winona Lake beginning August 22, promises to be the best ever offered by the association. Gypsy Smith and Campbell Morgan, of England, are sufficient to warrant a great conference. Many other prominent speakers are to be present. The Winona Friends' Association, composed of all Friends in attendance there, will hold one or two informal conferences this year, at which time matters of mutual interest and importance will be discussed. The officers would urge Friends to take advantage of this great occasion, and spend the last ten days of August at Winona. Admission to the grounds is free, and room and board can be secured for about $1.00 per day.

MORTON C. PEARSON, President.
EDGAR WILLIAMS, Secretary.

Friends at Anderson, Indiana

The Friends at Anderson, Indiana, have been successful in closing a deal, whereby they come into possession of a beautiful and substantial building for the Meeting. The building was bought of the Congregational people, who have discontinued services in this city. The building is of brick, trimmed in stone, and is located at the corner of Tenth and Chase Streets, in the heart of the city. The lot is seventy-two by one hundred and four.

The auditorium is large and nicely furnished, and has a pipe organ. On the main floor there are three large Sabbath-school rooms and two halls, which are nicely furnished. The auditorium and two of the Sabbath-school rooms are carpeted. In the basement there is a furnace room, with hot air furnace, a large dining-room and kitchen, with a range and a supply room, with a full set of dishes, etc. The church has been built but a few years and is in good condition. The building will be well adapted to Friends. Friends here had been in need of a new building for several years.

Decorators are at work now re-decorating the interior throughout. It would cost at least $20,000.00 to erect the building alone, and Friends secured it for $6,500.00 as it stands, all furnishings included. The building will be dedicated about September 1, and will be announced in THE AMERICAN FRIEND later.

Whittier Fellowship Guest House

The Whittier Fellowship Guest House at Hampton Falls, New Hampshire, is open and running in good order. Prof. Elihu and Almy Grant, of Northampton, are the worthy host and hostess this year. It is a place for summer rest in the Whittier region for Friends of all branches. From Philadelphia, the West, and places nearer by, Friends have come and are breathing inspiration and enjoying fellowship in the atmosphere made sacred to the Quaker message by Whittier.

The air from the sea and the pines is full of physical healing, while the roads and the nearby haunts offer recreation. Whittier land lures to deepen understanding of the man and his verse. The daily conferences, informal and conversational, about the things of the spirit, give fresh enthusiasm for the day's work.

There are informal talks by able lecturers on Biblical, social and Friendly topics that are profitable and up-lifting. Ocean bathing, tennis, country walks and trolley excursions afford ample opportunities for recreation. The meeting for worship is at Whittier meeting house at Amesbury. We feel that more Friends should know of the ministry of this place. It is a most significant movement.

Farewell

Farewell was a fitting "Friendly" word applied to the walls of the old Friends' Meeting house at Chester, Wilmington, Ohio, on Sabbath, July 20, 1913, when a last memorial service touched a tender chord in the hearts of the most unresponsive. Though the church was old and plain and already bore the traces of remodeling, yet the only arguments for tearing it down were the facts, either growth must cease or the old walls must burst.

Already the new church is well advanced and the dear old bricks of the old wall around which so many tender memories cling will be utilized in the new.

A site for a meeting house here was donated in 1824 and a house built for the worship of Friends in the neighborhood, then a McMillan settlement. Seventy years ago the present building was erected in the prevailing style, with raised seats and partition dividing men and women. The first service was the funeral of Susanna McMillan and at the Memorial her youngest daughter, Ann C. Wall, now the oldest resident member, recounted her memories of the meeting's history. To the young people an account of marriage customs, "passing meeting" and church weddings, was very interesting. At one time there was a double declaration when Maria McMillan and Robert Doan and Hannah McMillan and Francis Farquhar were married, the brides being sisters.

The building was for a time used to accommodate the monthly meeting school. Present activities are but the outgrowth of the sacrifice and benediction of our fathers who weighed essentials carefully and blessed their inheritance by hallowing a spot for the worship of God.

PANTRY CLEANED A Way Some People Have

A doctor said:

"Before marriage my wife observed in summer and country homes, coming in touch with families of varied means, culture, tastes and discriminating tendencies, that the families using Postum seemed to average better than those using coffee.

"When we were married two years ago, Postum was among our first order of groceries. We also put in some tea and coffee for guests, but after both had stood around the pantry about a year untouched, they were thrown away, and Postum used only.

"Up to the age of 28 I had been accustomed to drink coffee as a routine habit and suffered constantly from indigestion and all its relative disorders. Since using Postum all the old complaints have completely left me and I sometimes wonder if I ever had them."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

AUGUST 17.

TOPIC—Lessons from Forests and Fields. Ps. 104: 1-35. (An outdoor meeting, if convenient.)

"The groves were God's first temples." He who lives close to nature can more easily understand nature's God.

Many a man cannot understand the mysteries of God, and has wandered away into skepticism. Neither can man understand how heat and light and moisture and soil ingredients can be transformed into vegetable and fruit and flower.

A study of nature ought to strengthen one's faith in God, ought to make life more serviceable because of the joy that is begotten, because of the gloom that is dispelled.

"First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." This is typical of the growth in the Christian life.

Take various fruits, plants and animals. Assign to each member the task of describing one of these, setting forth its characteristics, and drawing practical lessons for daily living.

(Ball Bearing—Long Wearing)

In buying a typewriter you want a satisfactory answer to three questions:

*What will it do for me?
How well will it do it?
How long will it do it?*

By answering these queries with the needs of the typewriter owner and user in mind, the L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Company has attained the front rank in the typewriter field.

Some people think that a typewriter is a typewriter and that is all there is to it. Machines may look alike but there is a lot of difference in efficiency.

The new Model Five is built not only for straight correspondence but for tabulating, billing and in fact for every service needed in the average business.

Its ball bearings at all points where friction develops through action, permit close adjustment and insure correct and accurate typewriting.

We would like the opportunity to tell you more about it.

A PERSONAL WORD

I take it for granted that all Pastors, Sabbath School Superintendents and members of the various Sabbath School Committees, are interested in having the very best literature obtainable in the Friends' Sabbath Schools.

For over twenty-two years I have given my best efforts to this work. It is not necessary to state the sacrifices of time and money spent to build up the Sabbath School publishing and supply business for the Friends' Church in America.

I have reached the age when I must soon "ease up," and am looking toward that time. I have made offers to the Publication Board for taking over this work; but for the present their time and thought is to get the AMERICAN FRIEND thoroughly established. It may be two or three years before they can consider this work, and it may be that way will not open for it before the next Five Years Meeting.

In the meantime, I shall continue to do my best, although feeling that younger men ought to have the burden of the work. I want to get all the supply business for the Sabbath Schools concentrated, so that when the time comes to turn it over to the church, it will be Something Worth While.

TO THE POINT.

Now, to the point; it so happens that some of the Friends' Sabbath Schools prefer other lesson helps and papers to ours, (although we are supplying fully 80 percent. of all helps to Friends' Sabbath Schools). There is nothing improper in this. All schools have a right to their own personal preference, and to use what they really believe to be for the best interest of the School.

If these Schools only knew how much they could help us by ordering their supplies through us, they would surely do so. I am agent for all the Sabbath School supply houses, and am constantly ordering from other houses for Friends' Schools.

GRADED HELPS.

Three years ago I was appointed agent among Friends for the Syndicate publishing the Graded system of lessons and began at once a systematic campaign advertising these Helps. The results, as seen by the reports of the Bible School Commission of the Five Years Meeting, is that 93 Friends' Sabbath Schools are using, to some extent, these Helps. This work is largely the result of my advertising, as agent for the Syndicate, and I am in a position to give correct information to the Graded Helps. I can also send prospectus, prices and order blanks.

AN APPEAL.

My appeal to all Friends' Sabbath Schools is to use as many of our Quarterlies, Youth's Friends, and Child's Lesson Leaf, as possible, and give us their orders for all other supplies. We can supply you with any Publications or Lesson Helps published by any publishing house in the world. These will not cost any more than to order direct from the publishers.

We can supply you with Bibles, Maps, Record books, Class books, Reward cards, Blackboards, Cradle Rolls, and in fact, everything for the Sabbath School. Send for our complete catalogue.

The annual cost of maintaining this Faculty is over $55,000. The College has a productive endowment, apart from real estate, of $1,600,000. The charges, including board, room rent and tuition, are as follows:

Board for all students is the same, irrespective of the position of the room. Scholarships, ranging from $100 to $300 and partly won in open competition, may reduce the above expenses.

Haverford is especially a Friends' College, though one-half of its students are members of other denominations, received on equal footing. Its managers desire to make it a headquarters for Quaker scholarship and ideals, and invite the co-operation of all favorable to this conception.

A Last Chance on the 50 Cent Offer

The opportunity is about over to get those new subscriptions for The American Friend until the last of the year for 50 cents. We can still fill orders, however, dating from the first of August. This will give five full months at the reduced rate. Nearly 150 persons have taken advantage of this offer, but they have only come from a few communities. About eleven out of twelve of our Friends communities in this country were apparently indifferent to the offer. If our interested Friends in these meetings would only let their neighbors know about this offer, we might easily have another 150 in the next ten days.

A Larger American Friend

Our special educational advertising has necessitated a larger American Friend this week. We are sorry that it cannot be permanent, but it will suffice to show what a larger paper looks like, and what it would mean to the church as a whole, if only a fair fraction of our non-subscribing members could be awakened to a sense of their duty. Some day we are going to reach this ideal, but so many of our Friends are so slow in getting stirred to action.

Arthur and Eliza F. Dann

Arthur Dann, posting from Queenstown on the 16th instant, reported that he and his wife expected to reach Liverpool the next day, and to cross at once to Ireland on a visit to Lisburn. He says, "We have had a good voyage. It was very hot the first few days, but became cooler before we reached mid-ocean. Being the only minister on board, I had the opportunity to preach both Sunday morning in the saloon, and afternoon on the third class deck. The people were very attentive and appreciative, and last Sunday afternoon there was a large crowd, many of them probably Catholics. There were not a few in tears before the meeting closed, and they expressed the desire for a meeting this evening, which we expect to have. This public service has opened the way for a good many conversations, and we are thankful to feel we have been of use to many of the passengers, and have no doubt we were divinely led to travel on the Merion. We have two of Joel Bean's granddaughters with us from San Jose.

"Looking backward over our two visits to America, our hearts are filled with thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for the privilege of being His messengers in that land. Thousands have testified to blessings received through our simple service, and the language of our hearts finds expression in the words, 'Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory.'"—London Friend.

Lake Geneva Conference

BY FRANCIS ANSCOMBE

A conference in connection with the Laymen's Missionary Movement, likely to have far-reaching results, has just been concluded at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. One hundred and fifteen delegates were present, from fourteen states with two from Canada, and representing sixteen Protestant denominations. The primary object was to formulate plans for a North American simultaneous, every-member canvass for church finances in March next. The scheme has already proved successful in the few denominations which have tried it,—one section of the church succeeding in advancing its missionary contributions from $600,000.00 to $800,000.00 in one year.

The missionary boards of the denominations represented had already committed themselves to the undertaking. The Friends' Board of Foreign Missions has decided to identify itself with the campaign. Four Friends were among the delegates, all, by the way, from Richmond, Indiana.

To prepare the congregations for the campaign, as many missionary conferences as possible will be held between September and February next. These conferences will be interdenominational in character in order that all the churches may co-ordinate their operations. The Laymen's Missionary Movement will send to strategic centers trained teams to inaugurate the campaign and local speakers will visit the nearby country churches.

The campaign aims not only at securing larger missionary offerings, but also the development of the latent spiritual resources of Christian people. A concentrated effort will also be made to put the whole of the church finances upon a systematic business basis. It is hoped that Friends generally will get in touch at an early date with the movement. Full information can be obtained from the Secretary of the United Missionary Campaign, Madison Avenue, New York.

Editorial Comment on Current Events

Humanitarian methods are gradually being extended to our penal institutions. The United States Bureau of Education has just announced that out of sixty-five prisons in this country and Canada reporting, forty-four maintain classes in which both academic and trade subjects are taught. It is believed that the movement will be extended to include all our correctional institutions. It is an effort to be commended by all right thinking people.

Dr. Robert Bridges, poet and physician, who for thirty years has given himself to poetry and music at Oxford, has been appointed poet laureate of Great Britain, to succeed the late Alfred Austin. It is said that among his writings are many lyrics of pure classic form and great original beauty, and this appointment, while meaning little of an official nature, will bring to the light an obscure poet who deserves the fame that will now be his.

The news that the Balkan States together with Greece have concluded a treaty of peace will be hailed with joy everywhere, except possibly in Turkey. The terms are said to be humiliating to Bulgaria, which leads to the belief that peace may not be permanent. The Powers of Europe can serve humanity in no better way than by a concert of action to see that the Balkan States remain good henceforth, and that Turkey shall retire from Adrianople, without a further recourse to arms.

The recent national reunion of the blue and the gray at Gettysburg was typical of the unity that now prevails in the Republic. For many decades before the war, the North and South were growing apart, separated by the dread scourge of sectional slavery. After the bloody strife had ended, reconstruction days prolonged sectional hatred. It has only been in more recent years that both the North and the South have had the grace to forget and to forgive. The Gettysburg reunion marks a new era in the solidarity of the American Nation.

Notwithstanding the constant increase in college endowments, there is an unfortunate and wholly inexcusable tendency to increase the expenses of college students. Apparently there is a lack of business system somewhere. The tendency should be the other way, in order that the doors of our higher educational institutions may be open to a larger per cent. of our young men and women.

Upon examination it will be found that the larger per cent. of high school students who fail to enter college is due in large part to heavy college expenses.

The world is rapidly becoming one great brotherhood, interested alike in all of humanity's problems. With the international conference on the opium question recently in session at the Hague and a similar conference to consider the social evil held in London, with the recent International Sunday School Convention at Zurich, with the international Peace Congress meeting at the Hague a month hence, with the international Congress against Alcoholism convening at Milan in September, with numerous other international gatherings scheduled throughout the year, the fact is being emphasized more than ever before that the problems of today are world problems. Humanity's needs are largely the same everywhere and what have usually been termed local questions are discovered to be only the local manifestations of universal problems that concern the great brotherhood of nations. No man liveth unto himself, and the same is as true of nations as of men.

The remarkable development in the religious life of our colleges in recent years, and especially in denominational colleges, is truly gratifying. For the most part the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Association are to be credited with this awakening. While some people are pessimistic and pretend to see signs of decadence in the religious life and activities of college students, the facts do not warrant such discouragement. True, there are institutions of higher learning where a premium is apparently placed upon skepticism, but they are the exceptions and not the rule. On the other hand, the number of colleges is on the increase where the majority of the student body make profession of faith in Christ, and there are many instances where the religious life has begun after matriculation. Apparently the church needs to get into still closer relationship with our centers of learning, as there are possibilities of religious development that have not been cultivated to the full as yet.

The Anti-Saloon League of America has determined to raise the issue at once of national prohibition by means of an amendment to the Federal constitution. It is announced that pending the consummation of this undertaking, there will be no let up on the part of States that are seeking various forms of legislation suited to their needs and possibilities. It is further announced that the campaign for national prohibition is but the culmination of the ultimate aim of the League which has existed from the beginning. All friends of temperance will applaud the League's purpose to outlaw the liquor traffic. It is well to keep in mind, however, that the war is not yet over. The hardest fighting is ahead. The liquor traffic will not suffer itself to be destroyed without a conflict such as this country has not yet witnessed. The liquor question is America's greatest problem, compared with which the tariff and the currency are secondary propositions. It is time that the Church and every element that makes for righteousness were building against the day of final battle.

The convention of Sabbath school workers which met in Zurich, Switzerland, in June, was largely attended, deeply interesting and of helpful suggestion and influence. It continued for eight days. It was held in the large Town Hall of the city. There were many ministers and laymen of note in attendance. The registration showed that the delegates numbered and were divided as follows: South America, 24; Australia, 30; Africa, 56; Asia, 74; Great Britain, 286; Continental Europe, 666; North America, 1,295. One writer was so impressed with the variety and volume of the program that he writes that there was "a Niagara of oratory." The convention was practical in its plans and outgivings. There was the usual exhibition of appliances and literature connected with Sabbath schools of all grades. There were many features greatly enjoyed in a social and sight-seeing way. The children of the city were assembled in one great gathering on the Sabbath of the convention. In the afternoon the delegates marched in a body to the Zwingli (one of the great reformers of the Luther Era) monument and decorated it with a wreath. They also did honor to Pestalozzi, the originator of much that is most esteemed in modern methods of education. The convention raised a sum in excess of $100,000 for extension work.—United Presbyterian.

Our Educational Problems

In the olden days education meant learning, the acquirement of knowledge. In the light of experience, it has come to include training, intellectual equipment, the ability not only to know, but to know how to do. Out of the discipline and teaching of youth in our schools and colleges are expected to come the full rounded lives of men and women, fit to face earth's problems with the dexterity of artisans.

But in the highest sense, education must produce more than a strong mentality. It ought to mean soul culture, the enlargement of spiritual vision, the quickening of spiritual energies, the strengthening of high purposes. Education should not only produce the thinkers, the philosophers, the psychologists, the scholars, but it should turn out men and women with enlarged capacity for service to God and service to man, who recognize that their highest mission is to be workers together with Jehovah for the uplift and betterment of all humanity.

Education is not only not incompatible with religious experience and growth, but it should serve as the handmaid of religious endeavor. One does not need to be educated to be religious, but his capacity for the exemplification of the religious life may be increased by proper educational equipment.

As in many other realms that have meant the betterment of the race, Friends were pioneers in recognizing the worth of education. Not content to turn the training of their youth over to others, they early planned a system of schools under their own supervision, that finally included the academy and ultimately the college. Among Protestants they have been the most tenacious in their advocacy of denominational instruction and training.

In late years the claims of the public high school have overshadowed somewhat the demands for teaching under strictly denominational oversight, but even yet the long line of academies that still exist is a testimony to the belief of Friends that secular teaching and training do not yet satisfy the Quaker ideals of even this day.

Too much cannot be said in general praise of the public school system in this country, but with all of its development and progress, there are imperfections that cannot be overlooked by a religious body seeking the highest welfare of its children. The effort to separate church and state has been overdone in the attempt which has been more or less successful, to nullify the teachings of the Bible in the common schools or to exclude it altogether. Then, too often in our towns and cities of moderate size, the moral atmosphere, especially in the high school, is far from satisfactory, due largely perhaps, to the spirit of the age, which has sought to exclude strictly religious teaching not only from the curriculum, but from all school exercises.

While it seems no longer practicable, outside possibly of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, to maintain Friends' schools for instruction in the grades, we cannot but express the hope that our system of academies and colleges will be kept up to the highest possible standards. Most of our colleges have the more or less constant backing of one or more Yearly Meetings, but too often our academies are left to be supported by local influences alone.

We have in mind a number of our academies which would take on new life as educative forces for the church, if a group of convenient Quarterly Meetings would consent to join in giving their support and oversight in order to make these institutions centers for mental, moral and religious equipment and development. Friends are doing nobly in behalf of many of their educational centers, as recently in the case of Whittier, Penn, Pacific and Oak Grove, but if the circle of support could be enlarged, especially in behalf of our secondary schools, like Spiceland and Plainfield and Vermilion Grove and others in various Yearly Meetings, the foundation for a more substantial denominational education would be established in a way that would not only contribute to the strength of our colleges, but of the whole church, as well. It is a problem that needs careful attention.

If the church really believed the gospel it preaches, it could not be so complacent in the midst of sin and iniquity that crowds in upon every hand. The times call for an awakened church that is terribly in earnest about its Father's business.

In every community there are weary souls that are tired of sin and of sinning, that are awaiting the touch of a saved life to lead them to the place of deliverance.

Fourth of July, 1913, in Palestine

BY MARION E. KELSEY

So much has been written and said about a safe and sane Fourth, that perhaps it would be a relief to read of another kind of Fourth, in which the whole town of Ram Allah and many in the surrounding country rejoiced. No fire crackers, torpedoes, rockets, pistols or horns were seen or heard, and yet everybody was happy. Instead, five-minute speeches were made, songs were sung, cheers were heard, and heads were bowed, while for a time, the hammers were silent and trowels ceased to ring,—and over all, the glorious stars and stripes waved in protecting majesty. Whether under Syrian sun or home skies, that flag is honored and loved.

For six years and more, many hearts have been hoping for the day to come when the boys in the Friends' School at Ram Allah might have a home of their own. Many hindrances have appeared, but at last the foundation stones were laid on June 4, 1913, and on our greatest of American holidays was it not appropriate for us to be laying the corner-stone of a great institution of the future?

At four o'clock in the afternoon, there gathered the boys and girls of the two boarding schools, a very representative number of town people from Ram Allah and Bireh, the mission workers of the English Church Missionary Society, the heads of government of Ram Allah and of the surrounding district, the American consul from Jerusalem, and many other interested friends of the Friends' Mission. "How Firm a Foundation," was sounded clearly as we all stood on the roof of the ground floor. Prayer was offered by the native pastor of the C. M. S. Church in Ram Allah.

Edward Kelsey as superintendent of the Mission, gave the address of welcome in a very happy manner, following which in Arabic was sung "Come Thou Almighty King." The mudeer or governor of the district, Ali Rida Effendi, was then introduced. He spoke in Turkish, his own tongue, which few could understand, but we knew by his acts that his sympathy and friendliness are assured to the work, and that his words were doubtless but an expression of his feelings. The mudeer was followed by the head of the town government, Elias Gudi, a member of the Friends' Meeting, who spoke in Arabic of the good the school has done for the boys and girls of the country, and expressed a hope that it would continue to grow as it is doing. At the close of this speech all joined in the Turkish national song.

Our consul, William Coffin, says he only makes a speech under orders from the secretary of state. As time forbade our obtaining that order from William J. Bryan, we heard no words from Mr. Coffin, but his hand very skillfully performed the task of laying the corner-stone after the box had been placed. His presence was appreciated as a token of deep interest, since many other engagements in Jerusalem are offered him on our great American holiday. He was assisted by Sherman Salah, a Friend also, who is the master stone-cutter on the work, and whose two oldest boys were members of the first and second classes to graduate from the boys' school.

Edward Kelsey explained that the box placed beneath the corner-stone contains an historical sketch of the Mission and of the life of the department of boys' work, the minutes of New England Yearly Meeting, the flag of the Ottoman Empire and one of the United States, a picture of the two schools taken last year, some current coins of the country and some seeds of native trees. When the ceremony was finished, "America" was the last strain to be heard, and the boys then made the air ring with cheers and songs of the school.

The stone itself is a rose-colored polished stone from the native quarries, and on its face is inscribed "Friends' Boys' School, 1913," and on its end is "1911," the date in Arabic. It is placed in the northwest corner of the building.

As we faced about to leave the building we observed the chimneys and roofs of Jerusalem across the ten miles that separate us, and I thought of Amos of old, who, from his home in Tekoa, equally distant from the holy city on the south, gazed on the city of another time as he followed his flocks and herds about the hills. As God gave to him clear visions of the conditions of his time and of the times to come, and led him to give the clarion notes of warning to the sinful Israelites, so clearly may we lead these boys in ways of righteousness and truth that they may be ready to hear God's call to duty, and see with prophetic vision the conditions of the times, that they may in turn be of service as leaders of their own people. We may establish a school here that shall be to the people what Robert College is reputed to be to the Bulgarians and Armenians,—a light in a dark land and a promise after the years of social and political standstill.

Ram Allah, Palestine, July 5, 1913.

Troubles in Mexico Continue

Advices, both private and through the public press, from Mexico continue to be disturbing. No one apparently can tell what the future will bring forth. All Friends must necessarily approve the apparently peaceful policy of the Administration at Washington, and must deplore the increasing talk of intervention found in many of the daily papers. Little news is being received from our Friends missionaries still stationed in Mexico, owing to the disturbed conditions of traffic and the mails. The Missionary Board has granted to all in charge of our stations in that country privilege to leave, if at any time in their judgment the danger seems to warrant it.

An Educational Symposium

Denominational Education Emphasized

BY LEVI T. PENNINGTON

The need for a trained mind is becoming more insistent with each passing generation. The man who is in the active work of the world today needs an education more than his father did, and his son will need it more than he does. If our children are not to be handicapped in the race of life, we may as well decide at once that they must have a liberal education. Only so can they do the work that they ought to do in the world in which their work must be done. Our boys and girls must go to college or have less than a fair chance in the world of the coming generation. The question is then, to what colleges shall we send them?

The state schools, supported by our taxes, are calling to our young people. They offer free tuition, the inspiration of numbers, the prestige of great names on their faculties, the pull of varied and delightful student activities, and many other advantages that appeal to young people. With all proper consideration for their work and their excellences, one must not shut his eyes to their disadvantages. They cannot guard the moral interests of their students as the denominational college can. They cannot give the close touch between teacher and student that can be given in the small college. They cannot conserve the spiritual interests of the students as can be done in our own denominational schools.

There are many things that the great university can do that most of our Friends' colleges cannot hope to do. We must find our field then, and do our work in giving to the students something that the great university, with all its wealth and prestige and numbers cannot give.

Our Friends' colleges and academies are very properly, therefore, seeking to guard the morals of students more carefully than the state schools can undertake to do. They are exalting the Bible as the state schools and the independent schools would never be able to do. They are seeking to furnish an environment where students who are not in touch with the Savior of the world may find Him, and where those who have not yet caught their vision of service may catch it and take at least, some definite steps toward preparation for their work in life.

In a very real, though not necessarily a technical sense, every Friends' college and academy should be a training school for workers in the church. It may not be necessary nor advisable to have specific courses for training in special methods of Christian work. But in every Friends' college the call to service should be clear and insistent. And in every Quaker institution there should be opportunity and encouragement to active service, not merely in the general work of the Master, but in the special work of our own denomination. In increasing numbers, our educational institutions should send out graduates to take up the work of the ministry, missions both home and foreign, and other special lines of Christian activity, in the Friends' church.

And in larger measure than ever before, the colleges and academies should have the support of the Friends' church. We should support the institutions financially, for if it is worth our while as a church to maintain denominational schools, they should not be behind the other schools in their ability to do satisfactory educational work. There is money enough among Friends that could be spared without suffering to put every Friends' school on its feet financially. Those to whom God has committed the good things of this world should consider it a privilege to invest in the lives of chosen young men and women in the coming generations.

And we should remember to pray for faculty and students in our colleges and academies. It may well be doubted how much good fault finding does, but it cannot be doubted that prayer is a real help. Members of our college faculties need the prayers of the Friends' church, for the greatest earthly treasures we have are in their charge. And the students need our prayers, for from the student body of today must come the leaders of tomorrow. There is a fruitful field on behalf of those now in our schools and colleges, to "pray the Lord of the harvest, that He would thrust forth laborers into His harvest."

The Place of the College

BY W. O. MENDENHALL

The period of childhood should be lengthened. We are told that the necessary work of the world can be done by the expenditure of two hours a day on the part of each individual. If this is true, several possibilities present themselves. One group may be relieved entirely from any share in the great task of production and distribution. In such a group one class would devote this leisure to intellectual, aesthetic or ethical pursuits, but a larger number would spend the time in search of pleasure. This would be a calamity to the whole race. The leisure may be universally distributed. In this case, a few would use the time profitably, many would waste it, and a very large proportion would drift into ruinous dissipation. One possibility remains, a possibility in harmony with the previous lines of progress of the race and increasingly practicable,—the lengthening of the period of childhood by prolonging the length of school life of the individual. In this way a share in the newly-acquired leisure of the race can be offered to each individual. Furthermore, it is the best guarantee that those who may later obtain control of their time shall use it wisely.

College life is an extension of the period of childhood. The routine duties of the day are exactly similar to those which have confronted the pupil during the preceding ten or twelve years. His activities, aside from his class work, are still replicas of the activities of men and women in the world outside. Now the resemblance is in broader aspects and is closer than in his earlier games at home. Now, too, he often undertakes these activities consciously, with the object of preparing himself for similar ones afterward. In college, the student is still (if the college is doing its duty), under some restraint as to conduct and some pressure as to industry.

In general, this is not true of university life. When we see one student working beside a dental chair, another in a room equipped as a court room, pleading; one in a hospital writing a prescription or participating in an operation; another in the field making plans for the construction of a bridge or a piece of railway; one judging cattle, another testing ores, we think of them not as schoolmates, but as dentists, lawyers, doctors, engineers, farmers, miners. When we consider their complete freedom from restraint in matters of conduct and their privilege of working whenever they choose and as much or as little as they choose, accepting the responsibility for the result, we are convinced that the youth begins to participate in the world's work under cosmopolitan conditions on entering, rather than on leaving the university. Even those who attend the university's school of liberal arts for their college course cannot avoid association with others, older and younger, who are in the professional and technical schools frankly as a business proposition.

The sudden transit from the home to the world, from the school to the office or shop is accompanied by great loss to the race. This loss occurs whether the change arises from entrance into business or from entrance into a profession at the technical school or the university. It consists in the decrease in efficiency of many and in the ruin of some. It is due to two things, the lowering of moral standards and the lowering of industrial standards. The first may be only a slight dragging downward against the conscience of the community. It may go as far as dishonesty, corruption, disease. It may extend even to vice and the absolute ruin of the individual. The second may result in a satisfaction with one's second best or a failure to maintain one's ideals because of discouragement, or it may extend to complete loss of ambition on the one hand or to despair on the other. If the data were available, it would be very interesting to learn what have been the careers of those who, because of dissipation or of failure to work during the first semester, have been refused admittance for the second semester in our universities and technical schools. Yet these are only an infinitesimal part of those who have failed for the same reasons in their first sally into the world.

The college presents a means of making a great reduction in this waste. It offers to the boy or girl just leaving home, in the beginning of freedom from restraint, friends among the members of the faculty whose help, together with the careful discipline of the institution, produces a strong moral pressure and some control in the absence of parents. It offers further, an official faculty advisor who continuously requires the student to keep his work up to date, thus avoiding the final failure when it is too late for remedy. In these ways, the small college, with faculty interested in character building, may make the removal from home and careful parents, from school and supervising teacher gradual and safe. Thus it prevents immorality following sudden liberty, idleness following sudden removal of supervision.

Since the college plays an integral part in the evolution of the race through the lengthening of the period of childhood and is in accord with modern ideas of efficiency through the elimination of waste, Friends should give it a definite place in the education of their children and should make sure that its characteristic features are not lost.

The Christian College

BY THOMAS NEWLIN

I select this title rather than "The Denominational College" or "Sectarian Education," as expressing the thought I wish to present. The history of higher education and the relation of the church to this movement in the United States, are both interesting and instructive.

The pioneers in every section have not been slow in expressing their interest in the college, and in every case the foundation of these colleges cannot be separated from their belief in the organic relationship between the church and the college.

The early history of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, King's College, now Columbia, Williams, Amherst, Brown, Haverford, Guilford, Earlham, and the other colleges still further west, including those on the Pacific Coast, all reads very much alike. The motives of the founders were never concealed. These colleges were born under a deep religious concern and operated under the guidance of Christian men and women. They were educating for leadership.

In New England and the extreme East the idea was that the Church should train her leaders, her ministers and teachers, and give to society men for the learned professions, who were educated in the culture of the centuries and moved by Christian ideals.

While this has remained true, yet a new impulse was given to general education by the adoption of the famous Ordinance of 1787, organizing the Northwest Territory with its fundamental law that religion, morality and education were essential to good government. Then soon followed the free public school.

About the middle of the nineteenth century, Congress passed the famous Morrill Act providing for land grants for colleges. This is the origin in every state in the Union of the agricultural and trade schools, where industrial, vocational, technical and liberal education are provided at public expense. These often have been united with the state universities.

About the middle of last century came a series of discoveries in the laws of nature and the development of a scientific literature. These things deeply influenced the scientific and philosophical thinking and teaching of every college in the country. Until this time most of the colleges were of the classical type, but now began the struggle for science teaching, and the old curriculum was put on the defensive.

The rapid development of the country in wealth, invention, and population brought a demand for a scientific and practical education. The elective system gives to the student a larger opportunity, but places upon the student much of the responsibility for his own education.

There came the struggle in the state-supported schools over the use of the Bible, and the state universities eliminated the study of the Bible and religion, and as far as possible, the usual courses in Christian Ethics and Evidences of Christianity, which were so prominent in the earlier Christian colleges. In their eagerness to be free from Christianity, which they called sectarianism they became narrow in their teaching of history and the humanities, for no adequate instruction can be given in these subjects while ignoring religion in education and civilization.

In the Christian college the movements of God in human history, the influence of the Bible on our civilization, and the influence of the Man of Galilee on the moral ideals of any civilization can be fairly put and clearly emphasized.

The Christian college has a greater leverage than ever before, because scholarship has removed a false dilemma, for no one needs to choose today between intellectual honesty and adherence to the organized Church. The Christian college today can and should teach in the fullest and frankest way all the known facts and processes in Science, Sociology and History, and teach them as a revelation of God's ways and a presentation of His plans, and they can teach the science of religion as well as experimental Christianity, which some state schools do not care to do, and some do not dare to do.

The Christian college must stand for the highest scholastic attainments and for the fundamental importance of the Christian religion. The state is interested in religion, but not in Quakerism or any other ism. The chief function of the Christian college then, is to teach the coming citizens to know God and the binding force of religion, so that the relations of life may not degenerate into expediency and lawlessness; it is its function to strengthen the bulwarks of our civilization.

The Christian college must be unhampered in its teaching of religion, and give it a place of honor in its curriculum. This can not be done in the state-supported schools today. This teaching is possible today because the Christian faith is more clear, and the Christian hope is more cheerful and the theology is more simple than in former days. The Christian college has a chance to be the best expression of religious freedom in teaching, that this generation knows, and the Church will be recreant to its trust and a traitor to its own interests, and also to the duty it owes to the state when it weakens on its emphasis of religious fundamentals.

At this time of year, thousands of young men and women, as well as their parents, are thinking about college. The claims of the Christian college should make a strong appeal to all those who care for our future society. The atmosphere in which a young person is educated is very important, and the Christian college places an emphasis upon character different from any other educational institution, and in education "character is caught not taught."

Therefore, if the Christian college justifies its claim it must be a strong institution, well equipped and of a high standard in scholarship, morals and true Christianity.

The Place of the Secondary School in the Educational Work of Friends

BY WALTER HALLOCK WOOD

This subject takes us to educational ground which has been much worked in the past, but apart from special needs and conditions of particular schools, it has been very little studied as an educational problem distinct from those of the college field. The last Friends' Education Board probably took the first real step in this direction, and the very suggestive recommendations adopted by the Five Years Meeting should result in arousing many members of school boards or committees to a realization of the greatly changed conditions. There is no doubt that there is a disposition on the part of many Friends at this time to question the value of the secondary school as a factor in the solution of the problems of American Quakerism, and the time has indeed come for a considerable number of our secondary schools to justify their continuation or give way to public high schools.

The multifarious demands upon our time, energy, and financial resources, make it necessary for us, as never before in the history of Friends, to make sure that our efforts are rightly directed and properly re-enforced. We have just begun to learn the urgent need of efficiency for effectiveness in every line of church activity,—and surely the educational field, representing as it does, such vast investments of time and effort hitherto, insistently demands of us something more than sentimental interest and traditional loyalty. With the tremendous progress of the educational world of the past two decades buzzing in our ears, we have as a society taken very few intelligent steps forward in the field of secondary education. Our educational policy, if we can be said to have such, has been in so many cases that dictated by necessity rather than the mature fruitage of deliberate, intelligent investigation. May we not reasonably hope for the future that American Friends shall unite upon a worthy policy regarding secondary schools of such elasticity that it may be adaptable to varying conditions and of such scientific soundness and practicability that it may be widely respected and generally adopted?

While it is desirable before outlining ideals for future guidance to make a full analysis of the existing facts and conditions, space forbids its presentation at this time. From the broad viewpoint of American Quakerism, there are a few basic principles which we should, with right, hope to find operative in the polity of our schools. A Friends' school, first of all, should provide for pupils who are Friends regardless of the interest or patronage of non-Friends. If our schools attract non-Friends to their halls, it is reasonable to suppose that Quaker ideals and habits of life have drawn them, and therefore it seems highly shortsighted to eliminate from the curriculum or the life of the school those features which have been especially favorable to the development of such ideals. And if, contrary to our reasoning, it is good business in any case to so eliminate the distinctively Quaker training, does it not indicate a trend away from Quaker ideals and a passing of the need for that particular school as a Friends' school?

The only school which can ask with reason for Quaker support and patronage as such is the school which provides something essential to Quaker life and ideals, and which really ministers to the growth and working strength of the church. Whether it be a day-academy or a boarding-school, or a combination of both, no matter how high its academic standards otherwise, unless the Friends' school effectively provides, as no public high school can, that atmosphere and training which arouses the latent spiritual forces of life lying dormant in our youth, and gives them stimulus and direction into enthusiastic work and service in and through the avenues of the church, then the Friends' school is a farce, denominationally speaking, and as such it cumbereth the ground even as the barren fig tree. Friends have too many, far too many, other problems suffering today for the lack of time, energy, and money, for us to waste the resources of our church or its members in the highly honorable, but denominationally unprofitable work of maintaining a high grade secondary school which is negative, or neutral, or ineffective, regarding this fundamental question. And if this be true of a high grade school, what excuse is left for the low-standard school of the same type?

As its most useful function, the Friends' school of the approved type can and should provide for the training of hundreds of Quaker boys and girls who will never go to a Friends' college, and may lead many, who might otherwise not conceive it as possible, to enter some Friends' college. According to the statistics of last year, only about seven hundred Friends are enrolled in our Friends' colleges, a small number indeed, when compared with the total number of suitable age. It is a matter of the greatest importance that the thousands of boys and girls growing up in our society should receive some real training in the meaning and purposes of Quakerism, and be brought to understand the significance of the great problems of the age, enlisting their enthusiastic loyalty and youthful energy. Many hundreds of them will never have such training nor get such a vision of service, unless they get it through the agency of the Friends' school. And until some other effective agency for such training arises to take its place, there is unquestionably a great future for the right sort of Friends' secondary school in the educational work of the Society of Friends.

Loyalty

BY DAVID M. EDWARDS

The present is not essentially different from the past. It is quite likely that it has always been the case, and will probably continue to be, that there is a shortage of loyalty on the part of members of the church to their educational institution. It is more difficult for church members to consider their college to be a department of the church work, than it is for them to consider the missionary work to be such; but there is no essential difference between these two so far as they are related to the church. Each is a department of church activity. This being true a church-college should have the utmost loyalty and the unlimited support of the members of the church.

The number of young Friends who attend state schools and large universities, and even the colleges of other denominations, while not extremely large, is not inconsiderable. In almost every Friends' community there are one or more of our young people who fail in their loyalty to the college of their own church. Now, if Friends' colleges were inferior to others, nothing could be said in objection to this. But the Friends' colleges in America, almost without a single exception, are equal in every respect to the schools of their class, and are superior to many. It is extremely desirable that our young people should be educated in our own institutions.

Parents who send their children to other schools need not seek longer for the reason for lack of loyalty to the Friends' Church. How can we expect our children to be loyal to the church while they are placed during the formative period of their lives under influences which do not contribute to the development of loyalty?

James J. Hill, the great railroad magnate, when solicited upon one occasion for assistance to a denominational college, said that he believed young people should be educated in the same religious atmosphere under which they grew up. He believed that failure to do this would result in young people coming to maturity without having formed definite religious convictions, which in his opinion was nothing short of a calamity. There is nothing which so definitely determined the flavor of one's life as the atmosphere under which his education is secured. Parents can ill afford to run the risk of alienating their children from the church by placing them during this most important period of life where they will not be brought under positive pressure in the formation of religious character. The managements of our Friends' colleges desire to appeal strongly to parents everywhere to consider this matter with the utmost care.

wishes to call your attention to the following facts:

Fourteen American and nine foreign universities have contributed to the education of its faculty.

Every professor offers work to which Freshmen are admitted. Hence, students come at once into contact with the best trained men on the campus.

More than a third of the faculty have voluntarily devoted an appreciable amount of time to counsel and leadership in the distinctly Christian activities of the students. This partially accounts for the "atmosphere" of the campus.

Every applicant for residence on the campus must present certificates indicating moral character and physical soundness.

Every Freshman has two official advisers—a member of the faculty and a member of the Senior class.

Every member of the Freshman or Sophomore class must enroll for Physical Training.

A trained nurse of exceptionally broad experience lives in Earlham Hall, devotes her entire time to student needs, and gives a series of lectures to the young women in hygiene.

Eighty per cent. of the young men living in the dormitory were regular participants in athletic sports last year.

A student desiring to enter an Engineering school can complete the first two years of his course at Earlham.

Winona Young Friends' Conference

BY VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

The Fourth Annual Winona Conference for Young Friends of America was held at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 23d to 30th. In the size of the enrollment, in the scope of the work done, and in the large good so clearly resulting, it was by far the most successful thus far held. The Winona Conference is going forward by leaps and bounds. The results this year have tended to lift the work beyond the fondest dreams of its founders, and have seemingly established it as a permanent and valuable part of the Young Friends' Movement in America, with a rapidly widening scope and influence.

The evolution of the movement is interesting. Three years ago a few Friends met at Winona to consider together the activities of young people as they relate themselves to our denominational life. Most of those present opposed the further continuance of the conferences, but the faith and persistent efforts of a few have reaped their reward in the successive growth from year to year and in the final hearty support of all acquainted with the work. Every Yearly Meeting has now been represented in these conferences that have served to bind together young people of all sections by ties of close friendships and of a common vision of God's will for our Society. At this Conference one hundred and fifty-three enrolled, representing every Yearly Meeting in the United States excepting California, Oregon and New England, while delegates were present from Canada, Mexico, Jamaica, England, Australia and Japan.

The Conference is in charge of an executive committee of seven appointed by each conference for the coming year and an advisory committee of one from each Yearly Meeting similarly appointed.

From the beginning the plans for the work have existed first in the vision of the secretary, Lillian Hayes, and have been brought to accomplishment largely by her earnest and effective efforts. The financial needs are met by a tuition fee of $1.50 (to be raised to $2.00 next year) and voluntary subscriptions by individuals, Young People's organizations and Yearly Meetings.

A more ideal spot for such a conference would be hard to find. Winona—the Northfield of the West—is becoming increasingly popular as a mecca for Christian workers, as a summer resort and a chautauqua center of unusual value. The Friends take over almost wholly Kosciusko Lodge, one of the largest and most ideally located hotels of the place. Situated in a beautiful grove on the shores of the Lake a half mile from the central section, with its own large assembly room and pier and bathing-beach, and other private features, the Lodge gives opportunity for exclusiveness in all the conference activities. Six large porches and beautiful groves make ideal meeting places for the study classes and small gatherings. Thus we have some picture of the setting for a conference rich in its felt sense of spiritual power, its broadening of vision of the world's needs, its instruction in effective methods, its inspirational character, and its pleasant associations of so many kinds.

The mornings and evenings were occupied by study classes, lectures, devotional meetings and addresses; the afternoons given over to "what you will." A few prayer groups among both the young men and young women were held before breakfast, but the day's program proper was opened with the Quiet Hour led by Ira Johnson, Evangelistic Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Two hours of study classes followed, treating of missions, social problems, church methods and Bible study. The members enrolled in their choice of two of the following eight classes: "The Decisive Hour of Christian Missions," led by Errol Peckham, of Hartford, Connecticut, Theological Seminary; "The Church of the Open Country," led by Edgar Stranahan, of Wichita, Kansas; "The Upward Path" (on the negro problem), led by Edith Hunt, of Charlottesville, Indiana; Bible Study, led by Henry Cadbury, professor in Haverford College; Friends' History, led by Enos Harvey, of Bloomingdale, Indiana; Sunday-school Methods, led by Edgar Stranahan; Personal Work, led by Edgar Wollam, of Cleveland Bible Institute; Methods of Work with Boys and Girls, led by William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie, New York.

The last hour of the morning was a general meeting given over in the early part of the conference to lectures by Charles Tebbetts, Secretary American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, and later to a school of Christian Endeavor Methods conducted by E. P. Gates, Field Secretary Illinois Christian Endeavor Union. Five of the eight evenings were given over to addresses of an inspirational nature relating to present-day religious thought and life and activity. Each address was a magnificent appeal to Christian manhood and womanhood, pointing clearly the inviting door of opportunity, and impressing all with a deeper sense of responsibility and consecration.

The first address was by Edgar Stranahan, upon the unity, the universality, and the reality of the Christian message and propaganda. He dealt in world terms and inspired a world vision. The subject of Morton Pearson's address was "The Modern Quaker Knight," dealing with those high attributes of character and service that young Friends should exemplify. Ellison Purdy's theme was embodied in the words, "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God." He said that we should investigate the parentage and also the offspring of our emotions, and should take care that the inspiration of the conference should result in effective service.

E. P. Gates gave the last address emphasizing, in his earnest and forceful way, the joy of service even in little things, and giving ways of making our young people's meetings more attractive to those who needed such wholesome associations. He made the significant statement that boys and girls roam the streets hunting unwholesome amusement because they are lonesome, and the church should meet the need.

One evening, long to be remembered by all, was devoted to an excursion on the lake, and a hilarious time of entertainment around a huge campfire. Each Yearly Meeting delegation in turn presented a "stunt," an all inclusive term for the indescribable variety of features, displaying much ingenuity and wholesome humor.

The last evening was devoted to a "Purpose Meeting," led by Everett Davis, in which the blessings of the week were to be crowned by a definite consecrated purpose on the part of each individual along the line of Christian service. It was a meeting most precious to all. The large number and the spontaneity of the personal dedications showed that the Spirit of God was touching all with its consecrating fire, binding us closer to each other and to God, and impelling us to better service for Him.

Not only did study classes and addresses make more real and effective our religious life, but the many times of wholesome recreation and companionship with each other served the same purpose. All phases of the conference so blended together as to bring us into a clearer knowledge of the reality and all-pervading nature of God's love. Boating, bathing, fishing, tennis and long walks, all fitted in admirably as valuable parts of the week so profitable to all.

Not the least important phase of the conference was the opportunity for enjoying friendships, new and old. Our minds and sympathies were broadened and our spirits humbled by the interchange of differing ideas. Our lives were enriched by the pleasant associations resulting from such enjoyable times together. The Friends from other lands were warmly welcomed and their presence with us thoroughly enjoyed. Mention of them may be of interest to their many other friends the world over. From England, there were Maurice Rowntree, Ida Southall and Mary Fox; from Australia, Hettie Fitzsimons; from Canada, Mabel Webb, Alice Pennington and Margaret Pennington; from Japan, Gurney Binford; from Jamaica, Sada Stanley and Alsina Andrews.

Words are but feeble instruments to adequately describe the experiences of such a gathering. It cannot be properly viewed in the light of certain separate events, but can only be understood as a harmonious whole, each part dominated by a common spirit. The spirit of this conference, so real and vital to those in attendance, can be but poorly conveyed to others in words. Being a living thing, it can best be expressed in lives that were broadened and sweetened and blessed by its influence. It is this kind of expression that will form the real report of the Fourth Winona Conference.

Secondary Division—WILLIAM J. SAYERS, Superintendent.

The Secondary Division—"The Teen Period"—is only a child as to age, but a giant as to possibilities. The growing interest in this department of the Bible School is manifested in all sections of our country where we see great crowds in conference on the question.

All our departmental work is one as a wheel is one; all standing together in the hub. Apart from the hub it falls. Now all our work is centered around the Bible (the Hub). Apart from it we will fall. Just now the writer desires to attract you to some phases of the Secondary Division, an important spoke in our wheel.

We are building tomorrow, today in our Bible Schools. The Bible School is the church working for tomorrow, and is the responsibility of the Church. I believe in the Church of Jesus Christ and the Church of my choice, and I covet for her to covet the boys and girls for future service. As we are being aroused to our opportunity and responsibility here, the future is full of promise and bright with hope. It does pay to spend ourselves on the boys and girls, for they in turn will spend themselves for the Kingdom, Purpose, and for the church that trained them. There are indeed, big returns for any investment in this department.

In the "Teen Age" life is at its poise; this is the tragic time; this is the age when the boy is most misunderstood, and he needs the School of the Church to help him, putting into his environment what we want to put into his character, and taking out what we want taken out of him; help establish his environment and center his social activities around the church as much as possible. This will mean Christian Culture classes, for his body, mind and spirit. We only teach what is learned after all, therefore, we will have to grade our evangelism. We will also need to "Gear Up," to keep them busy. We will need to appreciate that Christianity is for the boys and girls and they are for it. Doing this, we will prevent many juvenile offenders, and increase the percentage of conversions at this remarkably misunderstood age. On the desk before me are a number of cards that boys and girls have filled out expressing certain desires and ambitions that they have. At random I select eight, which are as follows:

Two boys eighteen years of age, want family altar; desire to do personal work; one wants to do missionary work.

Two boys nineteen years of age, want to help in social service work, and help others to love the Bible.

Two boys sixteen years of age, want to be Big Brothers to the younger boys.

Two girls desire to do public Christian work; personal work. One wants to have family altar.

Several others from boys and girls from twelve to fifteen years of age, express desires equally lofty. Now these are not unnatural boys and girls, but live, wide awake ones, bubbling with fun and laughter.

The above data shows that the youths long for service, and shows the great need there is to train them for service. We have been generalizing too much in our Bible Schools. This "Teen Age" period is the greatest age of faith and service. And it seems to the writer that the training that the boys and girls are getting in the Graded Lessons is comprehensive, practical and adapted to their needs. These lessons are making the Bible a used book, with new acts of the modern apostles. They are closely related to life as they see that it should be. One young fellow said to us the other day, "I like these lessons; they hit me right where I'm living." The lessons are attractive and so arranged that originality is not spoiled, and violence is not done to the personality of the taught.

Anna Thomas

Not only her own immediate family, but the church and community have suffered a great loss in the death of Anna Thomas, of Central City, Nebraska.

"She hath done what she could" beautifully expresses the feeling of those who gathered at the church on April 30th to honor her memory. This text from Mark 14: 8, was the basis of the message given by Eli H. Perisho on that occasion. Without exaggeration, it can be said of her that in all the relationships of life in the home, in her immediate neighborhood, in the church and in the Yearly Meeting, as sister, wife, mother, friend, neighbor, minister, she was true and faithful.

She was never absent from her place in prayer meeting or Sabbath services when it was possible for her to be present, and was always faithful in prayer and testimony or personal work as the way opened.

Very early in life she manifested a deeply spiritual nature, and later in life testified that she did not remember a time when she did not love God as her Father and Christ as her Savior. To friends who talked with her a short time before her death she said, "It is all well," and expressed her thankfulness that she had always been willing to say "yes" to God.

Knowing that the end was very near, with unshaken faith she looked up into the Father's face, and after long months of patient suffering, she went from us to be forever with the Lord.

Anna Hull, daughter of John and Lavinia Hull, was born January 28, 1847, in Mahaska County, Iowa, where she grew to womanhood. On the 25th day of November, 1869, she was united in marriage to A. J. Thomas. To them were born three sons and three daughters. In 1872, they moved to Saline County, Nebraska, where in 1887, she was recorded as minister of the gospel by Triumph Monthly Meeting of Friends. After a number of years of useful service in that community, she with her family moved to Merrick County, and transferred her membership to Clark's Monthly Meeting, and later to Central City Monthly Meeting, of which she was a member at the time of her death, April 28, 1913.

News of Our Educational Institutions

Earlham College

President and Mrs. Kelly are spending the summer abroad, being in England most of the time.

Miss Gladys B. Bassett, of Vassar College, will join the Earlham College faculty this year as director of Physical Training for women.

Prof. Roderick Scott, who leaves Earlham this year, will enter the foreign work of the Young Men's Christian Association in October. He is to go as student secretary to Russia.

Prof. and Mrs. David Dennis will be in Panama a part of the summer.

Miss Elizabeth Conrad, professor of French, is attending the University of Paris. She will return in time for the opening of college.

The courses in Household Economics are extended now through two years. These classes have been growing rapidly since the newly equipped laboratory has been in use.

At the opening of the new college year, Physical Training will be required of all Sophomores as well as Freshmen.

A new tunnel is being built connecting Lindley Hall with the heating plant. This tunnel carries the steam pipes, water pipes and electric wires for light and power.

The college year is now divided into two semesters instead of into three terms, as formerly. The new arrangement begins with the current year.

Haverford College

The most interesting news connected with Haverford College during the present summer is, of course, President Sharpless's trip around the world. The President sailed for England the afternoon of Commencement Day, and on reaching London visited Parliament and listened to several debates. He was entertained extensively by Friends in England. The Public Ledger of Philadelphia prints each week a letter from him containing comments and descriptions of the political and economic phases of the countries through which he passes. At the latest time of hearing from him, the President and Mrs. Sharpless were in the best of health and enjoying the journey greatly.

Among others of the faculty who plan any traveling on a large scale, Dr. Rufus M. Jones expects to sail for England in the month of August, to deliver a series of lectures. He will return in time to take up his courses in the fall. Dr. Rayner W. Kelsey is traveling in various parts of the United States collecting further material for his book on the relations of Friends and Indians. Two other members of the faculty are giving lectures in summer schools. Dr. Francis B. Gummere is preparing a book on Anglo-Saxon literature for a series connected with Harvard University.

Prof. Allen C. Thomas, having completed his History of England, has sailed for that country to visit relatives in the north of England.

Returns to date indicate a Freshman class next autumn considerably above the average in numbers. It is expected that the size of the whole college will be at least five per cent. larger than at any time in the past. Accommodations are now strained to the limit, in spite of the fact that Founders' Hall has been thrown open to the extent of several more rooms, and that a new section of Lloyd Hall is being erected this summer by the Strawbridge brothers, in memory of their father, Justus C. Strawbridge, a former member of the Board of Managers. The athletic field has been remodeled and a grandstand built—the gift of Horace E. Smith, '86.

The new system of examinations—by both examination and certificate—which was first introduced by Harvard, has been found to work satisfactorily. The Registrar estimates that about two-fifths of the entering class have selected this method.

Penn College

The college year 1912-13 was in many respects the most significant year in the history of Penn College. The enrollment was the largest, being something over 500; the largest class graduating from the college, numbering 35. All lines of college work were up to a high standard, and while there was nothing startling or spectacular along any of these lines there was a good level maintained.

For the third year in succession Penn won both contests in the triangular debate. Our orator ranked well in the state contest. Athletic activities were prosperous. The work of the Christian Associations was highly satisfactory.

Prospects for the coming year indicate that there will be a good attendance. Fifty per cent. of the graduates of Oskaloosa High School and seventy-five per cent. of the graduates of our Academy will enter the Freshman class.

During the summer extensive improvements are being made in the college plant.

The completion of the new Yearly Meeting House is an item of considerable importance to the college work for the coming year. Heretofore the church services have been held in the college chapel, which has not always been satisfactory. To have a new church home, so that the attendance at church will not seem so much like attendance at chapel, will be welcomed by all the friends of Penn College.

For the coming year, all lines of college work will be well maintained. The work in domestic science which proved so popular last year is to be much improved. While certain members of the faculty will be away on leaves of absence in attendance at universities, both at home and abroad, good substitutes have been secured who will be able to handle the work in a perfectly satisfactory way.

Taking all things into consideration, the prospects for the coming year are gratifying.

Friends University

The Board of Friends University want a capable woman, or man and wife, to have charge of the Girls' Dormitory the coming year.

The Summer School at Friends University has enrolled more than a hundred students, a very large part of whom are teachers in the Public Schools.

The management felt almost paralyzed at the close of the year when it became known that five members of the faculty, three from the music department and two from other departments, would be married soon and retire from teaching; but the places have now all been filled with strong and capable instructors, so there will be no break in the work; and the coming year promises to be the best in the history of the institution.

The Biblical work is growing in strength and popularity, keeping pace with the other departments of college work. Many ministers, from Friends and other denominations, are taking advantage of the larger opportunities Friends University is offering for Biblical study and the pursuit of kindred subjects. If Friends generally would patronize the attempt here being made to meet the demands for higher and broader culture in these lines, which the church has so signally failed in the past to properly emphasize, there would be no longer any need to go outside our own institutions for a liberal education in Biblical and Theological lines.

Friends University holds tenaciously to the idea that the Christian college can never hope to be what it professes, nor fill the place in our educational sys-

PENN COLLEGE

OSKALOOSA, IOWA.

PENN is a denominational college. Founded by Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends in 1873. Preserving and propagating thru the years the spirit of Quakerism.

PENN is a Christian college. The principles of Christianity are given vital place in the work of Penn. Christian education is the power which is to regenerate society and cause the coming of the Kingdom.

PENN is a small college. Only five hundred different students enrolled for work last year. The individual is not lost in the mass. Personality counts for something. Students get personal contact with their professors.

The graduate work of all young people should be done in a small, Christian, denominational college. The great university should not be entered until character is formed.

We ask all living within our territory to investigate Penn College thoroly before deciding definitely upon a school to attend.

tem it ought to fill, without a faculty thoroughly Christian and evangelical in belief and in practice, alive to the spiritual needs of the student body and capable of ministering to them. With such men and women employed as leaders and directors of the young in the college life and activities, and in the pursuit of knowledge, there cannot help being in and around the institution a wholesome atmosphere and a hopeful outlook.

Pacific College

Pacific College, the only Friends college in America west of Nebraska and north of southern California, has prospects of the best year in its history for 1913-14. The action of Oregon Yearly Meeting in assuming responsibility for the income of the last $50,000 of the $100,000 endowment when the first $50,000 was raised, and the response of Friends to this call, has placed the college in much better condition financially than heretofore.

Prospects are good for a still further increase in attendance the coming year. There has been an increase of 25 per cent. the past two years.

Harold D. Marshall, a graduate of Penn College, and Mary Kenworthy, a graduate of Earlham College, are new members of the faculty for the coming year. President Levi T. Pennington goes back on the teaching force, and will give a more extended course in Biblical work than heretofore. The science teacher has not yet been elected.

A complete equipment of desk-arm chairs for the recitations, improvements to the dormitory and the campus, and other improvements to the material equipment make the college better able to care for the needs of the students that will be on hand when the college opens, September 22.

Whittier College

Whittier College last year, by the help of many friends, paid off its accumulated indebtedness of $15,000.00.

Absalom Rosenberger, for nearly twenty-five years president of Penn College, has been added to the force of Whittier College, and will serve as Financial Secretary and will be very helpful in many ways both to the college and the Yearly Meeting.

William T. Boyce, a graduate of Guilford, Haverford, and Harvard, will teach History and Political Science in Whittier College next year.

The faculty of Whittier College represent more than a dozen of the leading colleges and universities of America.

Herbert F. Allen, Ph. D., who the past four years has been at the head of the English department in the College of the Pacific at San Jose, has been added to the teaching force of Whittier College.

The Union services of six of the churches of Whittier, California, including Friends, are holding the Sabbath evening services in the College Amphitheater this summer for two months. President Thomas Newlin preached the opening sermon of the series.

The management of Whittier College feels that the last year has been the best and most successful in its history. Many improvements and enlarged plans are being made for the coming year.

Whittier College was victorious last year in the intercollegiate work in both oratory and debate.

Guilford College

Guilford College was established as New Garden Boarding School in 1837, and chartered as Guilford College in 1888. During the three-quarters of a century and more that it has been engaged in educational service, it has developed and maintained four claims upon young men and young women who desire a solid collegiate education.

First, Thoroughness. A strong insistence has always been made that the student must know a subject before he receives credit for it. The "short cut" tendency is becoming a very popular one in some educational circles. This, Guilford College desires to avoid, preferring to emphasize thoroughness, accuracy and exactness, which are the marks of all real scholarship.

Second, Morality. A safe environment, with every encouragement to upright living, is regarded as essential in the proper education of young people. It is the opinion of those who know the institution that Guilford maintains such a condition.

Third, Economy in Expenses. The college fees have been kept at a minimum, and moderation in the use of "pocket money" is encouraged. Scores of young men and women have reduced expenses by self-help. No attempt is made to make expenses appear less than they will actually be.

Fourth, Superior Location. Guilford College is one thousand feet above the sea level. It is located on a farm of 300 acres in the healthful Piedmont region of North Carolina, five miles from Greensboro, on the railroad leading to Winston-Salem. This affords most of the advantages of a city and yet supplies the fresh air, pure water, thorough sanitation and wholesome freedom of an urban or rural section.

These four virtues are supplemented by an equipment of ten buildings which are thoroughly modern in construction and equipped with electric lights, steam heat and running water. Guilford College invites the attention of parents and young people who are interested in education.

Cleveland Bible Institute

This Institute was founded in 1892, by J. Walter Malone and Emma B. Malone, who have ever since been its head and principal Bible teachers. This Institute gives the Bible the place which it demands in the preparation of those who are called of God to the ministry by making it the chief text book.

It has a three year course, and three different courses for students, besides a preparatory year for those who have for any reason been deprived of full training in the elementary branches. The Bible Course is for students who have completed preparatory work as far as high school. In this course the entire Bible is covered in three years' work.

The Bible Doctrine Course is arranged for those who have completed preparatory work and the first year of the Bible Course, or those who are graduates of any first-class high school covering four years' work.

The Bible Music Course covers two years' study and is especially designed for those who wish to specialize in music. As in other courses, the Bible occupies a prominent place, five periods each week being given to it.

Arrangements are made for all students in practical Christian work in the city in order that they may have a working idea of the plans presented.

Moses Brown School

Moses Brown School has just completed a successful year with the largest enrollment in its history. The Lower School building has been taxed to its full capacity, notwithstanding the fact that it was considerably enlarged last summer.

The address on Commencement Day was given by Rev. Hugh Black, D.D., of Union Theological Seminary.

Most of the boys of the graduating class will enter Haverford in the fall. Others will carry on their studies at Harvard, Bowdoin, and Amherst, while Wellesley and Smith will have the representatives from the girls of the class. The prospects for the coming year are unusually promising.

Vermilion Academy

Vermilion Academy, Vermilion Grove, Illinois, is on the advance. The following significant facts are given as evidence of this:

Friends University

ONE OF THE ACCREDITED COLLEGES OF KANSAS

TO OBTAIN this recognition, under the laws of the State, it is necessary for a college to establish and maintain courses as comprehensive as those of the State University, and to have the facilities for equally strong and efficient work. This recognition gives the students the opportunity to secure State Teachers' Certificates upon the completion of their college courses, and also admits them unconditionally to the State University for graduate work.

THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES offers a variety of courses, carefully selected so as to meet the needs of students in preparation for life work as well as for specialization in advanced work.

THE BIBLICAL SCHOOL is positively evangelical in its teaching, offers courses for comprehensive Bible study and intends to meet the needs of the Church in providing opportunities for preparation for the important lines of Christian work.

EDUCATIONAL, MUSICAL, COMMERCIAL AND ACADEMY DEPARTMENTS ARE MAINTAINED.

The University is located within easy reach of the city, thus bringing those students who wish to obtain work, as a means of helping to defray expenses, into close touch with the business centers.

The social, moral and religious atmosphere in and about the College tends toward the development of strong Christian character.

Mild and healthful climate, a rapidly growing city of 60,000 people, without saloons, and the vast expanse of wonderfully productive land, together with the educational advantages, make Wichita and the Arkansas Valley a very attractive place for residence.

The Board of Trustees is seriously considering the employment of a solicitor, whose duty it shall be to canvass the Quarterly Meeting for funds, for pupils, and for the general interests of the school.

For the first time in the history of the school Domestic Science and Agriculture will be included in the curriculum. A $40.00 gift was presented at Commencement time by the class of 1888 to be used toward the equipment of a Domestic Science kitchen.

Perhaps the most encouraging feature of Vermilion Academy's present development is the fact that numerous families are moving or desiring to move to Vermilion Grove in order to have their children in school at the Academy.

Vermilion Academy believes thoroughly in Friends' Secondary Education.

Bloomington Academy

Bloomington Academy, the oldest educational institution in Western Yearly Meeting, will commence its sixty-eighth year September 23, 1913. This pioneer Academy still stands with its face to the future. Hundreds of young people have gone out from its doors with broader views, with better equipment for life's duties, and with stronger determinations to do right, because of inspiration received from some earnest teacher.

While there will be some changes in next year's course of study, the same high standards of scholarship will be maintained. The following corps of teachers has been secured: Principal, H. Paul Kelsey, A.B., Earlham College, and a student in Chicago University; Maude M. Woody, A.B., Bloomington, teacher in English and Latin; Elbert A. Vickrey, Bloomington, instructor in Physics and Manual Training; and Hazel Wilson, Lawrence, Kans., teacher in Domestic Science and kindred subjects. The pastor, Enos Harvey, will give a course of Biblical talks in the chapel exercises.

Friends Select School, Philadelphia

Forrest A. De Graff, A.B. and A.M., Columbia University, a teacher of wide experience, has been appointed as the head of the department of Mathematics for next year. Gertrude Roberts Sherer, A.B., Smith College, will return to her place in the English department, after three years' absence. Elizabeth E. Jenness, of Dover, New Hampshire, a graduate of the Worcester, Massachusetts, State Normal School and for several years a teacher in Montclair, New Jersey, will take the fifth year class in the elementary school, while Margaret C. James, of West Chester, Pennsylvania, a graduate of Westtown School, and during the past year a special student at Teachers' College, Columbia University, will teach the third and fourth year work.

Spiceland Academy

After a strenuous campaign of more than four months' duration, the contract for the rebuilding of Spiceland Academy was let on August 2 and the work was immediately begun. Pledges have been secured for about $15,500.00. The brick building, which has done service so many years, but which was condemned by the state inspector last spring, is being rapidly demolished and a thoroughly modern structure is to be erected on the same ground but a few feet farther to the west.

The new building is to contain assembly and class rooms, laboratory rooms for vocational training, library; play rooms in the basement; a thoroughly up-to-date heating and ventilating system, and a pressure water plant. The town of Spiceland has contracted with a New Castle company to furnish the town with electricity, so that electric lights will be installed on the completion of the building. The completed building with furnishings and equipment will cost from eighteen to twenty thousand dollars, so that at least two thousand and five hundred dollars more will be needed and the canvass for this amount is still going forward.

The people of Spiceland and surrounding community are united in the movement for a new and better academy and better things seem to be opening up before the church and community. The meeting house, which has been remodeled the past year at a cost of $4,400, is proving splendidly adapted to the uses of the Church and Bible School, and the attendance upon the latter is decidedly on the increase. The property of Mrs. Emma Charles has been rented and will be used by the academy until the new building is ready for occupancy.

Corinth Academy

Corinth Academy, Ivor, Virginia, within the limits of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, will open September 8th. Aided financially by the educational committee of Baltimore Yearly Meeting as well as by many old students of the Academy, the community has just completed a new four-room frame school building, built of the best hard and heart pine of the famous Virginia forests.

The building will accommodate from eighty to one hundred students. One of the old buildings will be used for a gymnasium and auditorium, the other will be fitted out for the manual training department, made possible by a $500.00 donation by some Philadelphia Friends. Friends of the school and those in authority feel greatly encouraged over the prospects for the future of the Academy.

The young people of the community are very much interested and are putting forth great efforts to beautify the campus and surroundings of the school property. Had it not been for the financial aid of the older families and their wise counsel as well as the unceasing efforts of the younger people pushing the work and having oversight, this advancement could never have been accomplished.

The enrollment for the coming year promises to be the largest for many years. Already the list of applicants is ahead of previous years. The school is in charge of C. Emmett Trueblood, Principal; Janie P. Brown, Assistant Principal; Sallie T. Raiford, Intermediate; Pattie Branch, Primary; Alonzo Cloud, Bible; Dr. R. L. Raiford, Dr. B. F. Bobb, Medical Advisors; Mrs. W. C. Varner, Music.

Oakwood Seminary

The past year has been one of good work and real progress at Oakwood Seminary, the New York Yearly Meeting boarding-school at Union Springs-on-Cayuga Lake. The graduating class numbered thirteen, several of whom are expecting to enter higher institutions next month, and the remainder will probably teach in the public schools of the state. Of the twelve members of the faculty staff, only three have resigned, and their places have been filled by the appointment of Philip W. Furnas and Agnes R. Kelly, of Earlham College, and Otis S. Smithers, of Syracuse University. We are glad to report that Ida Thorne Parker continues for another year as local pastor and teacher of biblical history. The sanitary sewage disposal plant begun last year has been completed and an additional water supply secured for the school by drilling a well eight inches in diameter and two hundred fifty-eight feet deep, striking a strong vein of good water. The Oakwood Old Scholars' Association held an enthusiastic reunion and dinner at commencement time and manifested much loyalty and interest in the welfare of the school. We are very much gratified that New York Yearly Meeting is to hold its sessions at Union Springs next year.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

Pasadena Monthly Meeting recently recorded Josiah F. Hall as a minister of the Gospel.

Pasadena Quarterly Meeting was held at Long Beach on July 25th and 26th. The only visiting ministers were Edward C. Cook and Miriam C. Mendenhall of Kansas Yearly Meeting. It is so customary for numbers of ministers and other Friends from Whittier Quarterly Meeting to attend the sessions of Pasadena Quarterly Meeting that they are hardly regarded as visitors. John T. Hadley and W. Mahlon Perry were the principal speakers on Seventh-day. It was decided to hold the next session of the meeting at Bethel, near Long Beach, a point at which the Quarterly Meeting has never met. John W. Stribling, former pastor at Bethel, has returned to Iowa, and the meeting is now served by Frederick Kludas, recently of the Training School at Huntington Park.

Long Beach Monthly Meeting has secured the services of Andrew F. Mitchell as pastor for two more years. Seventy-three new members have been added to the church in the last fifteen months. The support of the meeting for the past year has been by voluntary free will offerings, and at the last monthly report of the treasurer there was a surplus of over $200.00 above current expenses. The Sabbath School and Church services have the support of a large number of earnest young people.

Naomi Jay and daughter, who have been spending the summer at Richmond, left for their home in Whittier, California, on August 9. A farewell reception was given in their honor on the Earlham College campus the preceding evening.

On Sabbath evening, August 3, at East Main Street Meeting in Richmond, the service was given over to reports of delegates who attended the recent conference of young Friends at Winona Lake, Indiana. A delegation of about twenty-five from the four Richmond meetings attended this conference, and brought back encouraging reports. Vincent D. Nicholson presided, while about a dozen of the delegates reported certain phases of the gathering. Agnes Kelly sang a solo, and a quartet of East Main Street young men sang a hymn. The exercises closed with an address by Mary Fox, of England. About two hundred persons were present.

Friends from both branches at Richmond gathered at the North A Street meeting house on the evening of August 5, to meet Mary Fox, of England, and Hettie Fitzsimons, of Australia, young Friends who are now in this country. After a bounteous luncheon on the lawn, the company gathered in the meeting house and heard addresses from the two visiting young Friends, and from several others. It was felt to be an enjoyable and profitable evening, as various phases of the Young Friends' Movement in America, England and Australia were set forth.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

E. Howard Brown will continue as pastor at Earlham.

William Kitch will remain as pastor at Bear Creek.

Clark Brown is located for another year at Cummings.

Zeno H. Doan will remain at Lynnville.

Della R. Edwards, wife of President Edwards, of Penn College, is in a very critical condition in the hospital, having just undergone a surgical operation.

We are requested to announce that the peace address by Charles E. Beals, of Chicago, to be given at the time of Iowa Yearly Meeting, will be on Wednesday evening, September 3, instead of the 23, which date through a mistake in printing, was on the printed announcements sent out by the chairman.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

The Sabbath-school and Meeting at Arroya, Oklahoma, have been held during the summer with good interest. A meeting for worship has been set up and the meeting given the name of Arroya, which belongs to Lone Star Monthly Meeting in Fowler Quarterly Meeting. On August 3, we had a Missionary program, and much interest was shown. A number of Friends have taken homesteads near here and will move here this Fall. We are looking forward to building a church ere long, that we may have a place of our own to worship in. Services are now being held at the Creek Indian school-house, six miles south of Vilas.

Henry C. Fellow is now serving his twenty-third year as superintendent of Education in Kansas Yearly Meeting, and writes that "he is as young as ever."

Oregon Yearly Meeting

The work of raising the first $50,000.00 of the proposed $100,000.00 endowment for Pacific College has been accomplished, and for the ensuing year the college will be assured of the income on the entire $100,000.00, since Oregon Yearly Meeting became responsible for the income on the second $50,000.00 of this endowment as soon as the first $50,000.00 was raised. The work of raising the second $50,000.00 is going on, and it is the desire to complete this canvass as soon as possible, as some substantial gifts, including $10,000.00 offered by James J. Hill, are dependent upon the completion of the $100,000.00 fund by the end of next year.

THE "BLUES"

A Lady Finds Help from Simple Food

Civilization brings blessings and also responsibilities.

The more highly organized we become the more need there is for regularity and natural simplicity in the food we eat.

The laws of body nutrition should be carefully obeyed, and the finer, more highly developed brain and nervous system not hampered by a complicated, unwholesome dietary.

A lady of high nervous tension says:

"For fifteen years I was a sufferer from dyspepsia. I confess that an improperly regulated diet was the chief cause of my suffering. Finally, nothing that I ate seemed to agree with my stomach, and life, at times, did not seem worth living.

"I began to take a pessimistic view of everything and see life through dark blue glass, so to speak. My head became affected with a heavy creeping sensation, and I feared paralysis.

"Palpitation of the heart caused me to fear that I might die suddenly. Two years ago, hearing Grape-Nuts so highly spoken of by some estimable friends of mine, I determined to try it.

"The change in my condition was little less than miraculous. In a short time the palpitation, bad feeling in head and body began to disappear and the improvement has continued until at the present time I find myself in better health than I have ever enjoyed.

"My weight has increased 20 lbs. in the last year, and life looks bright and sunny to me as it did when I was a child."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

AUGUST 24.

SUBJECT—The Bread of Heaven.

LESSON—Ex. 16: 2-15. Read Ex. 15-17. Commit verses 4, 5.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Jesus saith unto them, I am the bread of life."—John 6: 35.

AUGUST 24.

TOPIC—How I have proved Christianity and seen it proved. John 3: 25-36; 21: 24, 25. (Messages from former and absent members.)

The witness in court may relate only the things which he knows of his own personal knowledge. "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." They who can testify to their associates and to the world by reciting actual experiences of joy and blessing and spiritual up-lift that come from serving God will have unbounded influence in bringing others into the Kingdom.

There are those who are hardly honest with their Christian experience. Some exaggerate their actual spiritual condition, and claim more than they possess. Others through modesty or timidity fail to claim all to which their experience entitles them. It is the honest and sincere life that counts most.

It is a good thing to recount the actual results of the Christian life, how God has been proved in prayer, in service of various kinds, in communion, in personal contact with one's associates. To the extent that this service will call out the honest expression of actual experience, will it be helpful.

Whittier Guest House

An interested group of Friends has enjoyed the lectures of Elihu Grant, Professor of Biblical Literature at Smith College, given at the Whittier Guest House at Hampton Falls, New Hampshire, during the past week. Beside Elihu Grant, James Wood and Professor Augustus Murray will be lecturers during August.

Among the hosts and hostesses will be Charles and Anna Evans, Hibberd and Lydia F. Taylor, Wm. and Caroline

Warren and L. Hollingsworth and Carolina M. Wood. During the last week in August and over Labor Day there will be a conference to consider World Wide Quakerdom.

The same delightful times of inspiration have been enjoyed by those at the Guest House this year as were experienced last year. They are times to be remembered. For rooms, write Whittier Guest House, Hampton Falls, New Hampshire.

Ohio Yearly Meeting Announcement

This year will be an unusually interesting gathering at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, the One Hundredth Anniversary of the establishment of the Yearly Meeting. A special program has been prepared for the occasion. The Centenary exercises will occur on Monday, the first of September. Pres. Edmund Stanley and other Friends of prominence will be present and take part. During the Yearly Meeting addresses will be given by Daniel A. Poling on Christian Endeavor and on Prohibition; George Hartley will speak on the Indian question. Several Yearly Meetings have appointed fraternal delegates and a large attendance is anticipated.

The Broken Wing

I WALKED through the woodland meadows,
Where sweet the thrushes sing,
And I found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wound, and each morning
It sang its old, sweet strain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soared as high again.

I found a young life broken
By sin's seductive art;
And, touched with a Christlike pity,
I pressed him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the life that sin had stricken
Never soared as high again.

But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare;
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its compensation,
There is healing for every pain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

Jogging the Memory a Little

We find that a considerable number of subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND are in arrears for their subscriptions. A number have waited until after the harvesting of the crops before remitting. This deficiency is somewhat embarrassing to the management at this season of the year, which is busy enough with the daily duty of getting out a creditable paper, without having to struggle with the inability to meet printing bills. We appeal earnestly to those who know themselves to be in arrears that they make every effort to remit at once. We cannot emphasize the urgency of the appeal too strongly. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

An Important Notice

It seems important to announce to our contributors, and those wanting advertising space, that all material must reach the office not later than Saturday, if it is to be sure of a place in the following week's issue. The forms are invariably made up on Monday, and THE AMERICAN FRIEND goes to press on Tuesday of each week. The Pacific Coast papers are mailed on that day, and all others on Wednesday. This will explain our procedure here which evidently has not been generally understood.

Joseph Storrs Fry

Our English Friends, and many on this side of the Atlantic, are mourning the death of Joseph Storrs Fry, of Bristol, England, which occurred July 7th. As minister, business man, reformer, philanthropist and humble Friend, he has left a deep impress upon English life, and especially upon English Quaker life. It has been said that he might have been in Parliament, or held any one of many offices, had he so chosen. Of him the London Friend says editorially:

"His convictions were deep and strong, yet his large-hearted love was given freely to men from whose opinions he widely differed. Many reformers are rash in their natural impatience to remedy crying evils. His sympathy with forward movements and active support of them were tempered by a wise judgment and a careful study of the best lines of progress. No one could be further from self-assertion, yet when the right had to be contended for, he was its staunch champion. No one could be firmer in his Christian faith, or in adherence to the Quaker interpretation of the Christian message, yet none was warmer in his feeling of brotherhood towards men of all sorts and conditions, or more ready to unite in religious fellowship with men of other creeds. Thus he was a worthy representative of the Society of Friends on the many occasions when he was chosen to act in that capacity, both during his official career as Clerk of the Yearly Meeting and at other times in his life."

The Trouble in Mexico

BY HIRAM HADLEY

Every friend of advancing civilization must feel deeply interested in the internecine struggle that is raging in our sister republic on the South. Many plans for its suppression and termination have been made. To accomplish this is most desirable.

I do not profess to know much about such complex problems, but I will briefly state how I look at this particular case. It is simply one of those decisive crises that have occurred with many other peoples and nations as their civilization has advanced from a state of comparative servitude or semi-slavery to one of freedom and independence.

If I am convinced of one thing more strongly than another, it is that during all past time human civilization has been approaching more nearly equality of rights and privileges for every grade of human beings; and this without regard to nationality, race, color, or condition. It appears to me that a very limited knowledge of history must convince the thoughtful, unprejudiced mind of the truth of this. In old Rome the contest between the patricians and the plebians is a sample. It took plebeians over one hundred years to obtain equal rights with the patricians, but they succeeded. It is difficult to point to a single instance during the past two thousand years in which equal human rights has been the object of contest that has not terminated with the complete triumph of this principle.

In Mexico the mass of the common people have long been in a condition of semi-slavery. A comparatively small number of aristocrats have held them in practical subjection. Through various influences—contact with the people and institutions of the United States, better educational advantages, the work of Christian missionaries, extensive trade relations with other nations—the common people have become awakened to their condition, and they have a vision of the inherent rights of all mankind for equal rights and privileges, and the struggle is now raging for the attainment of this condition.

History and experience convince me that this struggle will never cease in Mexico until this recognition has been secured. It is this that is at stake. No one can foresee the length of time required to bring this about. Great, difficult tasks often require less time now than they did a century ago. It may come by a protracted, sanguinary, exhaustive struggle amongst the Mexican people themselves. It may come by the practical application of one or more of the means advocated by the friends of the arbitration and peace cause, such as the interference of an international police force and the decisions of an international Supreme Court. The termination will be the same, no matter how or when it is brought about.

Christian civilization is destined to conquer the world; equal rights and privileges for all mankind is one of its elements, and Mexico is simply a milestone in its onward march.—From Las Cruces (New Mexico) Citizen.

The Church and the Saloon

When one contemplates the great moral and religious problems which this generation is being called upon to face, it is disheartening to witness the incompetency that so often characterizes the efforts of the Church as a factor in their solution. Whether its beliefs have become too theoretic or whether its messages have grown too formal, the fact remains that the Church often finds itself powerless and beaten in its conflicts with the organized powers of evil.

Probably it has not always understood a given problem or its own relationship thereto. Having at times a wrong perspective, it not infrequently absolves itself from all obligations, and is content to turn over to civil government—to politics—the solution of questions that are essentially moral, and which require not only an awakened public conscience expressing itself at the ballot box, but the application of spiritual discernment and concentrated moral energy which ought ever to characterize the Church of Christ.

The Church is the greatest manifestation of moral and spiritual power in the world today. If it lack in any of its essential characteristics, then evil is enthroned and the powers of darkness play havoc with the sons and daughters of men. Civil government should be the handmaid of religion in conserving the morals of humanity, but the Church can never turn over to any other agency responsibilities peculiarly its own in the realm of establishing character and conscience and righteous sentiment and moral fibre so essential in the inevitable conflict with organized evil and public iniquity.

Just as the church must be the embodiment of moral and religious truth and power, so is the liquor traffic of this generation the embodiment of that which is most threatening and destructive in human life. There are probably many national sins, but the particular sin of America at this time is the protected liquor traffic, whose destruction is far overdue. Here we have the world old conflict, holiness against sin, righteousness against evil, the Church against the organized rum traffic. Other conflicts have been won, and righteousness has triumphed over a particular wrong. The Church must now make up its mind that the liquor traffic must be destroyed, or be prepared for the inevitable destruction of much of its own power and opportunity at the hands of this demon of iniquity.

Just at present, the press of the country is wrestling with the periodic puzzle of a decrease in the number of saloons and an increase in the amount of liquor consumed, and many have been disposed to base their estimates of a great evil like the liquor traffic upon a few columns of statistics which they have never taken the time to analyze. The fact is overlooked or ignored that the apparent increase in consumption is wholly in the revenue collection districts where the license system is enthroned, and where public sentiment apparently condones the traffic in intoxicants. Another fact is ignored that there is an annual increase in population in the United States of at least one and a half millions of people, the bulk of them immigrants from foreign lands, three-fourths of whom have been drinkers from infancy. There must naturally be an annual increase of upwards of thirty million gallons of liquor consumed before there is any increase in the per capita consumption. Then again, for four years there has been no marvelous increase in no-license territory (the West Virginia law not going into effect until 1914), and with the steady increase in population, mostly in the cities and mining districts which are well nigh universally wet, it would be marvelously strange if there were not a steady increase in the production and consumption of intoxicants.

But the liquor problem is not to be gauged by any such surface conditions. The wrong of the system will not be cured by a study in statistics. If liquor drinking is on the increase, it is an added argument for a system of prohibition that will be universal in its application. The success of the propaganda to overthrow the liquor traffic is not to be measured by the fact that a few towns go dry or go wet each year, nor yet by the status of arrests and convictions for drunkenness and crime, nor by the effect of the saloon or its abolition upon trade and taxes. All these elements, important as they are, are but incidental to the main question, that the United States is fostering and protecting a gigantic system of iniquity that not only debauches citizenship, corrupts public morals and blasts the happiness of the home, but also blocks the path of the Church in its mission of human redemption, condemns humanity in great sections to spiritual death, and by its unholy touch corrupts the fountains of our social, civic and national life.

The Church cannot thrive while the saloon thrives, and there is coming a conflict, the impact of which will test the Church as it has not yet been tested, and which will shake our republic to its depths. No student of the liquor problem can avoid any other conclusion. Either the Church must run away or it must stand and meet the tide of a tremendous moral battle that is inevitable. Evil has been the aggressor already too long, and the attacks of the Church have been too largely general and desultory.

With half our population free from the open saloon, and the other half in its deadly clutch, we are in imminent danger of developing two wholly different and antagonistic civilizations in the same government, with no possibility of a natural and sympathetic assimilation. The country cannot permanently exist half drunk and half sober. Ultimately, either we must go back and surrender half our population to the greed of the saloon, which is an unthinkable proposition, or we must rally and concentrate the forces of righteousness for a well defined attempt to free the other half.

That is the problem in a nut-shell. It is no easy task that the Church is facing. The rum power is desperate, is standing with its back to the wall, and thus far has beaten its enemies in its manner of fighting. It excels in aggressiveness, in organization, in its ability to control the channels of power. With all its activity, the Church is not yet half aroused. In a straight-out contest at the polls, the saloon can count yet upon too large a percentage of the Christian Church. Too many others are content to let the saloon have its way, only faintly resisting, if at all, and in no sense aggressive. Too long that portion of the Church which is aroused has been fighting in separate camps. A divided army can never whip a united foe. In the face of a crisis it is worse than folly for those who should be allies to be hurling anathemas at one another.

The Church has moved forward within a decade, but it needs to become the aggressor. This is not carnal warfare, but a campaign against a gigantic wrong. There are Friends' meetings, in which temperance activities are negligible, where the quarterly temperance lesson is considered a dull occasion, where temperance instruction of our youth is left almost wholly to others.

The day for pro-saloon argument is past. The day for mighty constructive effort for saloon annihilation is at hand, and the burden is upon the Church of Christ to lead the way for its consummation.

Preaching the Truth

The simple gospel is the most effective agency for the salvation of the world. Its proclamation in terms that are understood by the multitudes has not lost its potency for redemption. A portrayal of Christ as a personal Savior, a recital of His teaching and His mighty manifestations of abiding love, a description of His agony in the garden, His death upon the cross, and finally His triumphant resurrection, when presented in the spirit of love and personal interest, will melt the sinful heart as of old and bring it into subjection to the will of God.

The necessity for repentance and the vital need of forgiveness can be made to appeal easily to any heart that has felt in any degree the sting of sin. No one can be lost in a maze of misunderstandings who follows the simple but powerful admonition of Isaiah, "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

Men are led into bewilderment oftentimes because great doctrinal truths that are fundamental are not reduced to the concrete terms of daily life that appeal to the consciousness of humanity. Skepticism cannot stand in the face of the practical application of Christ's truth to daily living here and now. Theories cannot thrive in the presence of actual experience. Doubts will melt away and vanish as the snow bank before the noon-day sun, when confronted by the tangible evidences of joyous Christian living which is but the fruition of the personated truths of the gospel.

Many flounder over the so-called doctrine of holiness. But holiness taught in the Scripture is not a doctrine to be considered in the abstract, but an experience, a life to be lived daily, hourly, with constancy, with love, with fidelity, a life whose pleasure and whose joy it is to serve God faithfully and with unerring devotion to His cause.

What the world needs is the gospel truth in its simplicity, proclaimed without hedging, without compromise, and with a directness that makes its message personal to every one who hears.

A certain whiskey firm is advertising a peculiar brand of its wares as having a history back of it. That's the trouble with all brands. They have a history that is full of sadness and women's tears and children's hunger. If this true history could be written, no brand would longer find a market in a civilized land.

A prominent periodical says: The first step toward the elimination of sin is to get after the man who makes money out of it." This is a great truth and could not be expressed more tersely.

Christianity in Effectual Operation

BY RUFUS M. JONES

The Christian church has always been slow to see its practical tasks, but when it once does see them and girds itself to do them, it always becomes an irresistible force in the constructive work of the world. It has solved the greatest problems that have ever been solved, and it has led the way to the greatest victories that have ever been won. It always follows the old lines of custom with conservative instinct as long as it can, but when finally its open-eyed prophets see a new line of march for the race and succeed in making the rank and file of the membership see it, then new highways are cast up where there was no way, and new roads are built for human action to move upon.

For centuries the church allied itself with war, canonized the successful warrior, blessed the weapons of destruction and sang Te Deums when the victory was won. But quiet prophets of peace began to speak their message. At first nobody noticed it, or only jeered at the words. Years went by and nothing seemed to happen. The old alliance stood fast. The battle flags were still hung in churches, and ministers from their pulpits blessed the fighters. But at length the quiet word of the truth became quick and powerful and grew. It penetrated all the churches and affected all communions. It proclaimed itself from house tops and traveled around the world. It became as well known in the great city pulpit as in the humble Quaker meeting. The end is not yet, but it is already certain that war is doomed, and that it is only a question of time when in Christian lands war will cease to be a way of settling international difficulties.

The same thing is true in the field of social service. The church has lived in the world with no eyes for the sore spots all about it. It has mildly cried out against the liquor saloon and the house of ill-repute, but it has not realized in any clear way that the economic and social problems of the world were an inherent part of its mission. But they are a part of its mission, and the prophets of the church are crying their message to all ears that will hear. It does not in any way mean that the church is to slacken its work for the redemption of individuals, or that its gospel of personal salvation is to be abandoned. It only means that the church is to widen its mission and its function to include the whole gospel, which is both individual and social. The "blessed people" of the Beatitudes reveal the double aspect of true Christianity. They not only have "the Kingdom of Heaven" and "see God," and have individual experiences of the value of religion, but they at once become "salt of the earth" and "light of the world." They change the world they are in and purify the air which others breathe. It is to this second aspect, this constructive social task, that we are now being called.

Perhaps we should not have discovered this wider mission if we had not been rudely awakened to the fact that the world was becoming unresponsive to our spiritual efforts. All serious ministers and religious workers in all parts of the country know perfectly well that something is the matter. There are vast masses of humanity which they cannot reach at all. They do not speak as once they did with compelling authority, and they find only a small part of the community, whether in city or country, coming to hear their message. They feel compelled to resort to novelities and sensational ways to arrest attention, and these methods prove very short-lived. "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." The difficulty is everywhere recognized and it has been powerfully presented this summer by a popular author in a book which multitudes are reading, "The Inside of the Cup."

It does not mean that the old gospel is out-dated or that the mission of the church is over. It only means that the deeper needs of the time must be understood and that the gospel must be applied in ways that will heal the heart of this complicated life of ours today. Those who stand aloof—and it is a great throng—say that we do not speak to their condition, that we give them a stone for bread, that we talk to them of another world and do not show them how to overcome the darkness and evil of this world where their life has to be lived. We tell them about the love of God, but we do not show them that love in effectual operation.

This criticism may not be altogether fair, but whether fair or not, we must meet it squarely. "Social service" is merely putting into effectual operation the love of God which we have discovered in Christ. It means carrying our religion into the actual currents of human life and making it an effective element in all that touches the joys and the sorrows, the struggles and the triumphs of men. We must not stop preaching the redeeming love of God, but we are to supplement our preaching now with a neighborhood practice of this love which shall affect every home in the sphere of our community influence.

The ways and methods of putting our faith and love into effectual operation will vary in different localities and in different communities. We cannot yet lay down any hard and fast plan of work that can be followed in all regions. The preliminary step most needed at this stage is a broadening of human sympathy, an enlargement of interest in the lives of those about us who are outside our fold and who need our human fellowship. As in all other spiritual directions, so here, Christ is the best guide and the best model. Few things open one's eyes more than a careful study of the social aspects of Christ's message and Christ's practice. There are great books now available, within the intellectual range of all serious persons, and those who miss this feature of the gospel are surely missing "the full round gospel" of the Master.

This will lead naturally to a deeper interest in our present day human problems and our present day social needs, and here again there are many good helps for understanding the concrete and definite tasks before the Christian church of today. Suggested programs of work can be had from Charles S. McFarland, Secretary of the Federation of Churches, Clarendon Building, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and all readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND would do well to read the new book by C. O. Gill and Gifford Pinchot on "The Country Church," published by authority of the Federal Council of the Federation of Churches.

We cannot do much until our membership have caught the spirit that is abroad in the Christian world, and which is slowly penetrating all the churches and preparing for a new era of religious activity. One of the best ways to catch this spirit and to feel the power of this governing movement, is to form reading circles and study groups to read and discuss the literature now available on the subject, and to make experimental beginnings toward the practice of community Christianity in our neighborhoods.

Quakerism was born with a social passion. May we see that passion once more sweep over our Society and possess our membership.

As Others See Us

BY EZEKIEL S. COX

The following are some quotations in which favorable mention is made of the Friends by persons not members of that denomination:

Historian Macauley, while not friendly to the Quakers, says: "Throughout all civilized nations the name of William Penn is taken as a synonym for probity and philanthropy."

Charles Summer, in his great oration, "The True Grandeur of Nations," says: "To William Penn belongs the distinction of first establishing in human history the law of love as a rule of conduct in the intercourse of nations."

In Chamber's Encyclopedia, a lengthy editorial on The Friends Society, in closing says: "And finally it may be safely asserted that mankind is more largely indebted to Quakerism for its present social happiness and moral elevation, than to any other religious body in existence."

An article in the New York Tribune, written somewhat in criticism of the society admits that: "The Quakers have wrought an influence upon the world out of all proportion to their numbers."

Many years ago, during the time of the great changes in our Society, in a lengthy write-up of the Quaker Church in the Chicago Tribune and reproduced in the Christian Worker, the author says: "The Quaker Church has bred some of the purest and saintliest lives of any religion on earth. It has been the most eloquent listener at the court of Heaven." The writer also asks this very pertinent and searching question, "What was it that bred Fox?"

About the same time, the Kansas City Star published an editorial arguing that the changes in our Church methods were unwise, and deplored the fact that the Quaker Church was losing its individuality, and said: "The power which the Quakers had over the outside world was largely due to their peculiarity."

Then in 1895 David Starr Jordan in addressing a class of Chautauquans at Long Beach, in the course of his address said: "A strong man is not necessarily a tyrant. The Quakers are the strongest people in the country today by reason of their peculiarity."

Soon after this, President Gates of Pomona College, in his address to a graduating class of High School students at Long Beach, said: "The world could not have had the high religious standing which it has today, if George Fox had not lived in it."

In a club of lawyers organized at Indianapolis, Indiana, of well informed, intelligent men, no doubt, the Hon. A. C. Harris in an address before the club, says: "The Quakers are a unique people, yet in the progress of the last two centuries since their organization, they have in every great work been found at the head of the corner. And I submit to the club that no religious organization, regardless of numbers, has had more to do in building up and bringing about the high state of our commonwealth than the Society of Friends."

Isaac R. Sherwood, a brigadier general and an ex-member of congress, in an address to a "Citizen's Association" in Boston, in March, 1911, says: "What this country needs and needs more than anything else in the domain of civic righteousness, is more Quakers and fewer battleships."

Joseph C. Wing, recently writing in the Breeders' Gazette, says: "What is there in the belief of Friends that keeps women serene, calm and strong with the strength of honest womanhood? What is it about the belief of the Friends that makes men more unhurried, unworried, calm, purposeful, more loving, more patient?"

Recently E. Lloyd Jones, a Wesleyan minister and one of the ablest lecturers in England, in an address to an immense health resort audience, makes this unique statement: "The ancient Jew was a ritualist, but Jesus was a Quaker."

The following letter, written by President Abraham Lincoln to Eliza P. Gurney, a Quaker lady, is now preserved in the rooms of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 4, 1864.

Eliza P. Gurney,

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND—I have not forgotten, probably never shall forget the very impressive occasion when yourself and friends visited me on a Sabbath forenoon two years ago. Nor has your kind letter written nearly a year later ever been forgotten. In all, it has been your purpose to strengthen my reliance on God. I am much indebted to the good Christian people of the country for their constant prayers and consolations, and to none of them more than yourself.

Your sincere friend,

A. LINCOLN.

The letter written to President Lincoln by Eliza P. Gurney, many months before, was found in the breast pocket of Lincoln's coat after his assassination; showing that it had been treasured and much read.

In 1734 Joseph Wanton, a Quaker, was elected Governor of Rhode Island. Of course, he could not consistently take the usual oath of office. But to relieve him in the dilemma, the Attorney General for the King of England made a special ruling, as follows: "That a Quaker, if duly elected as Governor, may act as such without being obliged to take any oath whatever."

The Detroit Evening News, under date of February 25th, this year (1913), in an editorial article says: "Our Western life lacks one element, at once mellow and mellowing, which is the presence of the Quaker folk, and the Quaker sentiment. These Friends are the people of the quiet. There is an atmosphere of quietness about them strangely at variance with the fuss and flutter of this bustling century."

Thomas B. Gregory, in New York American, this year, says: "The coming of the Quaker was a mighty good thing for this country. It is hardly necessary to say that the influence of the Quakers in America has been large, and always of the right sort. As humanitarians, they take second place to none. Against slavery, war, against intemperance, brutality and every species of maladministration in government, they have from the very beginning of their existence arrayed themselves in solid phalanx."

A distinguished lawyer, Eli F. Ritter, of Indianapolis, Indiana, says: "George Fox was the bravest, freest, fairest and kindest of all teachers who had ever appeared among English people. The Society of Friends from the day when George Fox began to teach, has steadily born testimony against the abuses and evils of the day in matters of civil government. In religion and in social life, the denomination of Friends has never floated with the tide, on any subject of morality, religion or politics."

Dr. David Gregg, a Presbyterian minister, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in a great sermon entitled, "Quakers as Makers of America," says: "The Quakers are a peculiar people, but behind every peculiarity, there is a consistent reason; they are the embodiment of great principles. Both their principles and life have entered into the bone and sinew of our Republic. The Quakers, when seen at their best, stand in American history for ideal civilization, and this civilization is their contribution to the American Republic. As historic characters, the Quakers are a marked and influential people, in the midst of the most marked and influential types of mankind, they have put their stamp indelibly on national and international life."

Historian George Bancroft says this: "The rise of the Quakers was one of the most remarkable events in the history of man. It marks the moment when intellectual freedom was claimed unconditionally by the people as an unalienable birthright."

Encyclopedia Britannica says: "A genuine vein of philanthropy has always existed in the Quaker body."

Long Beach, California.

What of Higher Education?

BY ALBERT J. BROWN

While riding on a train between Toledo and Detroit, I engaged in conversation with a farmer. A field of sugar beets directed our attention to the tariff. From the tariff we passed to laborers' wages, thence to the probable salaries of young men just out of college. "I have two boys both of whom are in high school," said the farmer with enjoyable pride. "You will send them to college?" I asked encouragingly. "My friend," said he, "I want my boys to work and be gentlemen. College doesn't seem to fit many boys for hard work."

Passing along an Atlanta street with a university law graduate and a successful practitioner, we came to a distinctive building. Negro capital and ingenuity erected the structure. College graduates in medicine, law, dentistry, and other professions have their offices in this building. "Are these professional men well educated?" I asked. "They are, sir," came the decisive reply. "But that's all," he continued after a moment's pause. "Character is yet to be built into the race."

We were jogging down toward the Nebraska-Kansas state line in a motor car, when the conductor joined a little group of traveling men and said, "Gentlemen, the source of the Mississippi is nearer the center of the earth than its mouth. Why does the water flow toward the equator?" This sounded like the polemics of the school room and aroused my curiosity. I met him at a hotel later in the day at the end of his run in Manhattan, the seat of the Kansas State Agricultural College. "Did you ever teach school?" was my first direct attack. "Twelve years, neighbor. Yes, twelve years. Liked it, too. I have a brother who is professor in the Agricultural school here in town. He thinks he gets a good salary as far as college salaries go, but the old motor 'chalks up' as much for me. He has to study in summer schools or take a year off to hold his job. I study for the love of it. Tell you, stranger, a knowledge of the movement of the heavenly bodies has a constant charm for me. Wish I had gone through the university. Don't do you much good toward making a living, but it has an untold value to a man in setting his mind free. The principal stock in trade in Kansas, you know, is fresh air and freedom."

I was just out of college. The night express for the east was in the foothills and the lights of Oakland and the bay were far behind. A half dozen men under forty, save one, were animated by a discussion of the essentials of a successful man. The "old man" was so grizzled with life's rough adventure that one could not guess his age. The college man came in for censure. He was pronounced foppish, vain, lazy, sissy-like, unfit. No one thought of "Old Grizzly" until the arch accuser of the intellectual life appealed to him for his valued judgment. This was the stroke that was expected to annihilate the advocate of higher education. "Gentlemen, I am a Wyoming rancher and employ hundreds of men. The college men ride more miles of the range, round up more cattle, save more of the herd, and show more loyalty to the owner than any other class of men who have roped a steer in the Northwest."

The fear of higher education still possesses many minds. Utility and morality are the two angles from which the severest criticisms come. Those of us who have taken our stand for the positive advancement of learning should not be deterred by the fears of others. Nevertheless, we should increase our diligence in fostering morality and equipping men for material achievement. Neither stands in the way of the ideal in life. Both respond admirably to it, and in fact, draw their power from it. "Where there is no vision the people perish."

Spiritual-Mindedness

BY BERNICE E. HAWKINS

(One of the prize essays read at Wilmington Yearly Meeting C. E. Union, at Wilmington, Ohio, May 29.)

In the beginning of our church's history, membership in the Society was not attained by birth, request or by letter, but because of certain qualities of mind and soul. George Fox and the early Friends believed so strongly that the church was entirely a spiritual body and that this definition held the meaning employed by Christ and some of the Apostles, St. John the author of Revelations particularly, that they called themselves The Society of Friends rather than Quaker or Friends Church, as we western Friends have degenerated into calling ourselves.

Membership in the early days of the Society was accorded those who took part in the business of the meeting, and only those who were spiritually-minded were supposed to have anything to do with the business of the Society. In these business sessions a system of procedure widely different from what we call parliamentary usage was employed. Decisions were not reached by taking a vote, and courses of action were not determined by a majority, but by the clerk, the presiding officer, taking the consensus of opinion, or to use Quaker phraseology, "the sense of the meeting." Nor was the sense of the meeting often the opinion of the majority. It was that, however, which the spiritually-minded men and women of the audience thought. This mode of procedure has come down practically intact to us and many a Friend can remember, before he knew the reason, wondering why the clerk seemed to wait for certain ones to speak, and how often the decision recorded in the minutes was not the mind of the majority, for often only a few, two or three perhaps, spoke and sometimes the record made contained the ideas of only two or three out of the several who did speak.

This is most certainly a beautiful method and one is almost certain it is ideal, for how better could the ideas of Christ be transmitted than through those who reverently seek His guidance and are in direct communion with Him who is indeed The Head of the Church? The practical side of it appeals to the utilitarian mind too, for in this way Christ is directly brought down to the needs of men and women, and has a wonderful influence on the affairs of the day.

But do we appreciate our privilege of being spiritually-minded? Do we take time to reverently wait, or do we rush into His presence with a prayer which is almost a demand for His help? The slow and tedious method by which audience with any of our earthly kings is obtained should teach the truth that although priests and aids to procure the attention of the Almighty are unnecessary, yet the Creator and Designer of the universe should be honored and loved with that adoration which is simplicity itself and quietness of waiting.

Simplicity in manner, dress and service, and the "silent meeting" are two traditionally precious tenets of Quakerism which have fallen into much disuse among us; I mean the real quietness of worship and feeling. Our silence now is too often a "waiting," and with this we have in a way lost our power. The word Quaker as applied to our forefathers was a synonym for integrity, but it cannot always be applied to modern Friends with the same meaning. We are shorn of our locks.

Christ's religion is nothing if it is not spiritually conceived. The world is coming to see that the ordinances and creeds that have been set up are nothing but symbols of the spiritual life, and are mere modes of conveying ideas to church members. Baptism does not insure admittance to the pearly gates at all. It is spirituality, that atmosphere of heaven itself that will best accommodate one to enjoy the pleasures of that City of Light. What a vista of light and power, what a vision beautiful is open to him who daily, hourly, feels his spirit communing with his Maker, who sometimes catches glimpses of Truth, who feels the uplift of inspiration which is in itself a consecration for service! Little wonder is it that often the silences of those old time meetings were broken by sobs, and that it was not uncommon to see tears on the faces of the worshipers, or that the faces beneath the broad-brimmed hats or within the plain bonnet wore a heavenly light which was a benediction!

Is it a concern to modern Friends that the business of the church be done according to the mind of the Spirit, or that it be done expeditiously and with proper diplomatic tact; that one's private affairs will merely bear the inspection of the public or that they be examples of orderliness and right dealing; that one's conscience be still on hearing the Queries read, or that one can enter into the spirit of them and seek in every way to bring to bear on the daily life the pervading, healing power of the Spirit?

The Rural Life Commission which reported to the last Five Years Meeting ends its report by making an appeal to the dormant energy in the church. Before my mind is a vision of a well-organized-for-service church, with members who seek the mind of Christ; in quietness of soul striving to know His ways of peace, gentleness, meekness and loving service to humanity; who find in Him personal satisfaction and spiritual uplift, and inspiration which is consecration for service.

The Least of These

BY FLORA M. BEALS

It seems to me that in his timely article on "The Call of the New Vision," Doctor Bond reaches a fortunate conclusion which the church will do well to consider.

Myriads of the thoughtful, progressive Christians who come in touch with the labor movement are realizing that the time is ripe for the Church to manifest her love and sympathetic interest for the world's burden bearers in a concrete way. They are groping for the light which they are almost ready to believe comes only from above. They are hoping for and expecting much from the Church. Are we going to be prepared to offer them the Christ-viewpoint of living issues, to breathe into their lives the true and the whole meaning of the message of Jesus? If you want to do good unto your fellowmen, says Mary Lathbury, you must not "adapt" yourselves to them but must, rather, "identify" yourselves with them.

My almost constant association with the workers will not let me believe that the majority are bitterly antagonistic toward the Church. There are, of course, diverse reasons why the masses have been estranged from it which we cannot enter into here. But I have learned that there are many who are doing some original thinking along the lines which most strongly appeal to them, who are honestly searching for the wisest solution of their problems. They are fair-minded, and liberal and are ready to accept guidance from whatever source it may come. Very many are outside the pale because they feel the Church has not taken an intelligent interest in the affairs which touch them so vitally. Are we ready to help her redeem herself?

There is no other Church organization, I believe, which is likely to appeal more strongly to the class-conscious among us than our own. The absence of the "one-man rule" policy, the purely democratic form of management, the perfect equality of the sexes, all touch a responsive chord in his large, fraternal heart.

I, for one, will be glad indeed if Doctor Bond will kindly outline his idea in regard to the "Friends Social Centers." Perhaps others will be ready to give their views also.

Okoboji Summer School of Missions

In the northwestern part of Iowa lies Lake Okoboji, a sheet of water rivaling Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, in its picturesque beauty, and becoming more and more popular each year as a summer resort.

At Arnold's Park on the east end of this little lake is a Friends meeting, of which Grace M. Elliott is pastor. For several years she has had a vision of the large service which might be rendered, not only to the little church but to the throngs of worldly summer people which visit the place at this season of the year, by holding a school of missions there.

A year ago she spoke of her deep concern to Mrs.

Dudley of the M. E. Church at Indianola. They were both of one mind and decided in September last to issue a call for a meeting of the State Chairmen of the Women's Missionary Organizations of all the evangelical churches. Several responded and an organization was affected for perfecting and carrying out the plans for the school.

Mrs. Dudley was selected chairman, Miss Elizabeth Pearson, for thirty years General Secretary of the Des Moines branch of the W. F. M. S. of the M. E. Church, was secretary. Grace M. Elliott was chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, and Mrs. Towle, of the Congregational Church at Grinnell, was chairman of the Program Committee. These are women of faith and vision, but more, they are women of untiring energy and zeal, and they have realized in the fulfillment of their desires more than they had even dared to hope.

The school opened on July 23, in a most beautifully located pavilion, built out over the water. This building was opened for the use of the school free of charge. Missionaries were present from six different countries: Miss Jean Morrison from the north of India; Miss Bertha Johnson from southern India, now traveling secretary for the Mission to Lepers; Miss Minnie Mills from Smyrna, Turkey; Mrs. W. I. Kelsey from Mexico; Miss Lulu Golisch from China; Mrs. Garst from Japan, and Mr. and Mrs. J. P. White from Egypt.

Mrs. J. P. White gave lectures daily on the study book of the W. F. M. S. for next year, "The King's Business." These were able and exceedingly inspiring. Mrs. Oner S. Dow gave three lectures on "Tithing." Mrs. Herford, State President of the W. C. T. U., lectured on Temperance. On July 29th, Rev. Howland Hanson, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Des Moines, gave a stereopticon lecture on a trip to Oberammergau. Mrs. Whiting, of Whiting, Iowa, had charge of the Young People's meetings each day, and Mrs. W. I. Kelsey of the Children's Hour. All the missionaries gave lectures and talks of great inspirational value, furnishing a world-wide view of missions.

The keynote of the school was "The Mission of the Church is Missions." The registered attendance amounted to about three hundred, the Methodists leading with one hundred and ten. The Friends were second with an attendance of thirty-three, the Congregationalists third with twenty-nine. The audiences on Sabbath morning and for some of the evening lectures exceeded four hundred. Among the regular attenders were some persons of gay, worldly lives, who were receiving their first vision of the blessedness of a life of real service and of the world's deep need. Many were profoundly impressed.

The treasurer, Mrs. Dowell, reported a balance of about $90.00 in the treasury after all bills were paid. At the business meeting on the afternoon of July 31, it was unanimously decided to make the school a permanent institution. We believe it will prove of inestimable value to the churches of Iowa, and to a needy and perishing world.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. The Proposed Gift of the United States to the Palace of Peace

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

Traditional Representations of War and Peace

Students of the peace movement who are solicitous that all means of education along peace lines be sound have been again and again offended by the inadequacy of the representation of peace through the medium of plastic art. Sometimes, indeed, they have been outraged by the absolute misrepresentations of that dignified, active and far-sighted force which is stronger than could be suggested by any timid maiden-figure with olive branch. Those who attended an international congress of peace in Europe some years ago will not forget the endeavor made by the followers of a certain artist to have his sculptured group "Peace and War" approved by the congress as suitable for future setting up at the Hague. In fact, ever since, many of those present have been particularly anxious that intellectual and physical power be combined in a statue of peace with the traditional loveliness of spirit. Also there has been a general desire that the low mentality, the indolence and the unproductiveness of war be visualized. At the particular time to which reference has just been made, namely at the International Peace Congress at Munich, the work of art to be passed upon consisted of a pedestal supporting a prostrate victim whose arms and legs projected beyond its limits. Above a "glorious figure" of the god of war arose with uplifted sword and also the exquisite form of a gentlewoman whose restraining hand endeavored to stay the execution of evil purpose. One is reminded of the influence the majestic figure of Satan has upon the reader of "Paradise Lost." The representatives at the peace congress must have felt it was the god of war and not the delicate feminine figure of peace which secured the admiration of the beholder; at least they did not ask that the group be secured for any position at the Hague.

America's Sculptural Problem

In the meantime the Palace of Peace, the great world-temple about to be presented by our countryman, that American citizen who prizes also his world-citizenship, offers us as a nation the problem of translating the peace message into a sculptured group. One fairly revels in the description of the gifts to the Palace of Peace by the various nations of the earth. The list always includes the work of sculpture to be presented by the United States government and to be installed at the head of the first landing. "Peace through Justice" has been suggested as the theme for our group, it being an embodiment of the thought of this great temple of justice. The true interpretation of war and peace and not the traditional one is an absolute necessity if we prove ourselves worthy donors in this most desirable of positions in the great palace.

A hateful mistake, war has been, a hideous monster and if war must be shown in the group it must be as a "bull-necked, low-browed creature of a primitive type" as Mrs. Mead pictures the god of war. It is no less important and perchance no less difficult a task, to rectify the inadequacy of the picture of peace which lingers in the minds of even enlightened advocates of world federation. Few indeed have learned to make concrete their best thought on world peace, to visualize their thoughts concerning man's conquest over the forces of nature and concerning his conquest in that other struggle which has in view the ennobling and humanizing of the common life of man.

A Friendly Task

And now comes the point to which all the above reflection is intended to lead. The gift of the group of statuary from the United States cannot be ready for the Palace of Peace at the time of dedication on August twenty-ninth, nor indeed at any date in the near future. Congress has appropriated $20,000 as the financial provision for the gift, but the more difficult contribution yet to be appropriated is the conception which the artist is to work out. It has been wisely suggested that those who understand the peace movement in its fullness and those who know the significance of the Peace Palace must first provide the general conception before assigning the practical working out of the problem to any sculptor. The committee which has charge of the matter of preparation of this gift, of which the Hon. Richard Bartholdt is chairman, is anxious to receive suggestions as to the general conception and can be reached through the Peace Association of Friends in America at the address given above. Presumably very few readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND have had extended training in the execution of sculpture or even in the appreciation of sculpture from the technical point of view, but, presumably also, no body of persons aside from the membership of the peace societies has had so genuine a preparation for thinking out the problem of how to represent peace so that the idea of justice and mercy, world economics and international industry will be all included. Belief in the possibility of world peace is the natural attitude of the Friend. Acquaintance with the symbols of Hebrew literature and the poetry of the Old Testament which one reared as a member of a Friends family almost unconsciously obtains, is of itself a preparation for the task the American committee on the provision of a gift has in hand and in the execution of which they crave assistance. Are there not some Friends whose love of truth in art, whose patriotism for America, whose loyalty to their world citizenship, or whose love of the Prince of Peace moves them to study the problems suggested above? Are there not some moved by all these forces to seek Divine leading concerning a fitting theme for the sculptured group through which our country has been given the privilege of interpreting the peace movement in its new headquarters at the Hague?

Andrew Carnegie could give the funds with which to erect a great Palace of Peace, Henry Van Dyke could go as a fit person to minister at the Hague, the peace capital of the world, William J. Bryan could become the organizer of a net-work of peace treaties, Benjamin Trueblood was ready to direct the work of the American Peace Society; have you decided what you can and will do as your contribution to the peace movement? Does this article suggest a particular duty?

Peace Resolutions in Japan

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Peace Society of Japan, held Fourth month 15, 1913, after a thorough discussion of the pending Californian Land Legislation, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, the Legislation under which it is proposed to regulate the ownership of land by foreigners in the State of California has become a matter of wide and somewhat heated discussion, the Executive Committee of the American Peace Society of Japan (composed of Americans representing all walks of life, professions and business connections) thinks it proper to make it known its convictions concerning the situation.

The passage of a bill or bills involving discrimination and antagonism, whether they be afterwards signed by the Governor or not, would do great damage to the record which America holds in Japan for international courtesy, justice and fair play. Already the effect of this impending action is keenly felt in Japan. Therefore, the American Peace Society of Japan begs the Legislature of California to pause in its action and urges upon the whole people of the United States a protest against this legislation.

Be it Resolved Therefore, That the American Peace Society of Japan deploras the action of the legislature of California in proposing to pass bills appearing to discriminate against Japanese residents.

That the American Peace Society of Japan begs of the American Peace Society and our allied organizations to take prompt measures to point out to the people of the United States and to the State of California how serious an error would be the passage of such bill.

We believe that such legislation would do great injustice to the Japanese people, injure our commerce, and create a painful situation for Americans who reside in Japan, recipients of continued courtesies and the protection of the laws of this country, but the American Peace Society of Japan has full confidence that the United States Government, supported by the people, will see that treaty obligations are upheld and that full justice is done to all.

A Meeting on the Roof of the World

Forty miles Northeast of Simla the Hindustan—Thibet Road—a track for ponies and coolies, excellently engineered and five or six feet wide,—an extravagant width for a hill-road—tops a ridge standing at the head of a long narrow valley, and the traveler suddenly finds the immense canyon of the Sutlej valley 6,000 feet below him. On the farther side of the river is the wild land of Kulu, and beyond that the central chain of the Himalayas, a mighty rampart of huge snow peaks, the nearest some thirty miles distant, stretching away in either direction as far as the eye can see. In the foreground, to north and east, the steep and craggy mountain slopes are covered with hoary forests of enormous pine-trees, the home of leopard, bear, and grey Himalayan langurs; below the forest, the deep valley-bottoms are terraced with yellow corn-fields, amongst which are scattered scores of tiny villages, their houses, with peaked slate roofs and overhanging carved balconies, clinging dizzily to precipitous slopes.

On the ridge itself, some 9,000 feet above the sea, stand two or three weather-beaten bungalows, and a cairn adorned with red and yellow scraps of cloth offered to the spirits that love to dwell on high passes. One of the bungalows is perched on the very summit of the ridge, in such a fashion that the rain which falls on one side of its roof finds its way eventually to the Jumna and the Bay of Bengal, whilst that falling on the other side drains into the Indus and the Arabian Sea. Here, for two Sundays, a Friends meeting has been held, attended by some eighteen people, Indian, American, German, Irish, Scotch, and English, gathered from the ends of India and from many differing religious communions. Here, with that glorious prospect of snow-peak, forest and valley, spread out before us, we have been drawn into the fellowship of the living Christ, and have known Him to break the Bread of Life in our midst.—J. S. Hoyland in London Friend.

My share in the work of the world may be limited, but the fact that it is work makes it precious. * * * Darwin could work only half an hour at a time; yet in many diligent half-hours he laid anew the foundations of philosophy. * * * Green, the historian, tells us that the world is moved along, not only by the mighty shoves of its heroes, but also by the aggregate of the tiny pushes of each honest worker.—Helen Keller.

All the difference there is between what looks like a worthless stone and a gem is in the cutting and grinding; all the difference between bullion and coin stamped with the king's face is in the smelting and the minting; all the difference between a wilderness and a garden is wrought by weeding and pruning; all the difference between a block of marble and a statue is produced by the mallet and the chisel.—*Minot J. Current Items of Interest to Friends

On Sabbath evening, August 10, a report of the recent Missionary Laymens' Conference at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, was made by the delegates attending, at an open meeting at the South Eighth Street Friends' Meeting, Richmond, Indiana. Gurney Hill presided and reports were made by Folger Wilson, Professor Arthur M. Charles, and Francis Anscombe, on the part of Friends who attended. Brief addresses on the subject of missions were made by Dr. Conrad Huber and George H. Knollenberg, of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in the city. The prayer was offered by Dr. Huber. There was a good attendance considering the warm evening, and much interest was aroused.

Dalton H. Lewis, who has been serving as pastor at Dublin Meeting, has resigned, and has accepted a call to New Castle Meeting for the coming year.

On August 14, a company of women gathered at New Garden Meeting house grounds at Fountain City, Indiana, to celebrate in picnic fashion the days they spent as girls at the New Garden school in days gone by. The school is no longer kept up, but the house remains. A most enjoyable time was had in the renewing of old acquaintances. A permanent organization was effected with the following officers: President, Della Cogshall; Secretary, Addie Hiatt; Treasurer, Mary Woodard; Chairman of Program Committee, R. Elma Nicholson.

We note with satisfaction a steady growth at West Milton, Ohio, particular meeting, both in interest and in attendance. A new piano has been placed in the church, which adds great interest among the young people. We note with deep regret the illness of our pastor's wife, Cora Kittrell, who has been confined to her room for more than two weeks as a result of a serious paralytic attack. It is hoped that her condition is better, and that she will soon be restored to health and her work for the Master.

A very acceptable day was enjoyed at Friends' Back Creek Meeting house, near Fairmount, Indiana, on Sabbath, August 10, when an old settlers' meeting was held. The services of the day included reminiscences by a number of former members, a bountiful dinner, and two helpful and inspiring sermons by Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, Superintendent of Evangelistic work in Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa, is without a pastor. There is a good field for somebody.

Oskaloosa—Friends are busy getting ready for Yearly Meeting. The new meeting house, which is one of the finest of its kind, is rapidly approaching completion.

Dr. and Mrs. S. M. Hadley are dividing their vacation time between Le Grand, Iowa, and a restful retreat in Northern Michigan.

Mead A. and Anna L. Kelsey enjoyed a brief vacation in Minneapolis and its environs.

Friends will be pained to learn of the probably fatal illness of Della Edwards, wife of President Edwards, of Penn College.

Expecting a large attendance at Yearly Meeting, special pains are being taken to secure places of entertainment for Friends. Those desiring to engage rooms should address R. H. Williams, Oskaloosa.

Ross Hadley, son of Stephen M. Hadley, of Oskaloosa, who is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in India, is on his way home, and will spend some time studying before returning to his work in that country.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Sterling Monthly Meeting has lost both of its men overseers in less than three months. The membership also has been greatly reduced by death and otherwise, within the past few years, so that the meeting feels keenly the loss of these two dependable officials.

New England Yearly Meeting

Samuel L. Haworth, who has served the meeting at Fall River, Massachusetts, as minister for nearly two years, concluded his service the first of August. After a few weeks' rest he will begin pastoral service at Minneapolis. His departure is deeply regretted by the Friends at Fall River, and the following words of appreciation were unanimously adopted by the meeting:

"Samuel L. Haworth, our beloved minister, after two years' of service, is about to leave us for another field of labor. We would record our sense of profound appreciation of the helpful ministry and fellowship of our brother, and also of the devoted service of his wife, Evelyn M. Haworth, who has ably seconded the labors of her husband. We feel a deep sense of loss in the departure of our friends, but they leave with us a healing balm of courage and a message of good cheer that shall never die. We bespeak for them the confidence and fellowship of all those with whom their lot may be cast, and may God's richest blessing rest upon them."

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

On the beautiful summer afternoon of Seventh-day, Eighth Month 2nd, a company of about one hundred, composed largely of neighbors and friends, gathered at Horsham meeting house, to attend the annual Tea Meeting. The addresses in the meeting house were listened to with eager attention. Agnes L. Tierney read an interesting and valuable paper on "True Toleration," which helped one to realize the need there is to lay aside judgments one of another and to be filled with the broad spirit of charity. Max I. Reich, from England, followed with an address on "Enthusiasm for Jesus," arousing the strong desire for that deeper knowledge of and closer touch with Him which would kindle true enthusiasm. The social hour was greatly enjoyed out of doors, while the company partook of refreshments.—The Friend.

Western Yearly Meeting

The Friends at Paoli, Indiana, and vicinity have arranged for a centennial anniversary service at Lick Creek Meeting, two and one-half miles east of Paoli, on Wednesday, August 27. In the forenoon, following a period of silent worship and devotion, a "History of Lick Creek Meeting" will be read by Belle T. Braxton, followed by reminiscences by Aaron Maris, Homer Hill, Laban Lindley, Sr., Morton Hall, Thomas Maris, Sr., and others. After a basket dinner and a period of rest, the following program will be carried out: "George Fox," by Nettie Osborn; "Margaret Fell," by Dorothy Farlow; "Elizabeth Fry," by Mabel Trimble; "Stephen Grellett," by Nannie Lindley; "William Penn," by Walter Newlin; "Peter Bradford," by Carl Thompson, to be followed by an address by S. E. Nicholson, of Richmond, at three o'clock. In the evening, a meeting at Paoli will be addressed by S. E. Nicholson. Music will be furnished by the choirs of the two meetings, to be assisted at the evening meeting by the Union Choir and a male quartet. On the following day the Hall family reunion will be held.

The General Secretaryship

Friends will remember that at the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, held in Richmond, Indiana, April 22, Roscoe Coffin, Assistant State Secretary of the Minnesota Y. M. C. A., was offered the position of General Secretary of Friends, an office created by the last Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis. Mr. Coffin was not satisfied in his own mind at the time that he ought to change his field of work, much as his loyalty to Friends prompted him to do. He therefore asked for time in which to consider the matter carefully and prayerfully.

He has finally decided that duty calls him to remain in his present position, although profoundly conscious of the wide opportunity which the suggested position would open to him. This news has been received with deep regret by the Committee, and will be so received by the church at large. Roscoe Coffin, however, was at no time an applicant for the place, and he has only done what seemed to him right.

This leaves the Secretaryship still an open question. Several names are being canvassed, but in all probability no action will be taken until the next meeting of the Executive Committee in October, when it is hoped that a satisfactory selection will be made.

Home Coming at Mill Creek

Eighty-four years ago a meeting of Friends was established, at Mill Creek, in Hendricks County, Indiana. Others were established, including Spring, and West Branch, later Amo, Hadley, Summit Grove, and Walnut Chappel. Three of these have been discontinued, Spring, West Branch, and Summit Grove. At the approaching Quarterly Meeting, to be held at Mill Creek, near Danville, Indiana, on September 6 and 7, there will be held a home coming service, in the afternoon on Sabbath.

As many persons who formerly lived in this territory, and were members of some of these meetings in former years, have removed to various places and are widely scattered, special request is made that so far as possible these come in person, but where this is not possible, that they send a letter of greeting, which will be read on the occasion; such letters should be sent to Chester Haworth, Secretary of local Committee, Danville, Indiana, R. F. D. No. 5.

Death of Two Continental Friends

From the London Friend we learn of the death of two prominent Friends who resided on the European Continent, Louise Peitsmeyer, of Minden, Germany, and Christian P. Baegaard, of North Jutland, Denmark. A writer says, "One cannot think of German Friends apart from Louise Peitsmeyer, and her loss will be deeply felt." Christian Baekgaard joined Friends while young, and was for many years prominent among the few Friends in Denmark.

It is hoped that the new legislation by Congress providing for the arbitration of disputes between capital and labor, will prove effective in averting the threatened strife of eastern railroad employees. A strike means industrial war, no matter how peaceable the mode of procedure may be, and arbitration is always a proper substitute for war. The Arbitration Committee is now in session.

AN OLD NURSE

Persuaded Doctor to Drink Postum

An old faithful nurse and an experienced doctor are a pretty strong combination in favor of Postum, instead of tea and coffee.

The doctor said:

"I began to drink Postum five years ago on the advice of an old nurse.

"During an unusually busy winter, between coffee, tea and overwork, I became a victim of insomnia. In a month after beginning Postum, in place of tea and coffee, I could eat anything and sleep as soundly as a baby.

"In three months I had gained twenty pounds in weight. I now use Postum altogether instead of tea and coffee; even at bedtime with a soda cracker or some other tasty biscuit.

"Having a little tendency to Diabetes, I used a small quantity of saccharine instead of sugar, to sweeten with. I may add that today tea or coffee are never present in our house, and very many patients, on my advice, have adopted Postum as their regular beverage.

"In conclusion, I can assure anyone that, as a refreshing, nourishing, and nerve-strengthening beverage, there is nothing equal to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.—adv.

Letter From England

DEAR FRIENDS—My husband arrived here on July 8th, as I had decided to remain in the work here for some months longer, and had asked him to join me. We are all well, and the dear Lord is blessing us in the work, which is planned for us to the last of October. After that time I would like to return to America and take up pastoral work if the way opens. Any Friends wishing to correspond with me may use the address given below.

We have just attended a splendid summer school at Mundesley on the Sea, and also Atan General Meeting of Friends, where there is a good school which closed last week. Friends are very kind in providing good homes everywhere we stop, meeting us at stations and looking after baggage, all of which equals American hospitality.

This is a very nice summer here, not so cold as last year, although I have not gone to church without my coat. Wheat is not harvested before September. All grapes, tomatoes, and many other things grow only under glass. Many things are very delightful, but the greatest curse is drink. I often see women go into the saloon in London to drink. If woman's ballot could improve conditions she should have it. We attended a woman suffrage meeting in Hyde Park, London, which was very orderly and nice, over 5,000 women, besides several hundred men marching with music for miles before they reached the park. There twenty platforms for speaking awaited them, with many more thousands of people. The colors were red, white and green.

Most Friends are favoring the ballot for women, but disapprove the methods used by some to secure it. Those who have become desperate, and are doing unlawful things, burning buildings, etc., are no doubt hindering the cause. But surely the Christian mother who has the interest of her boy at heart should be allowed to vote.

The Lord bless the approaching Yearly Meetings in America, and may they be times of preparation for more efficient service. Pray for us that we may make good the opportunity here and be Divinely led back to the home land.

L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

(Ball Bearing—Long Wearing)

In buying a typewriter you want a satisfactory answer to three questions:

*What will it do for me?
How well will it do it?
How long will it do it?*

By answering these queries with the needs of the typewriter owner and user in mind, the L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Company has attained the front rank in the typewriter field.

Some people think that a typewriter is a typewriter and that is all there is to it. Machines may look alike but there is a lot of difference in efficiency.

The new Model Five is built not only for straight correspondence but for tabulating, billing and in fact for every service needed in the average business.

Its ball bearings at all points where friction develops through action, permit close adjustment and insure correct and accurate typewriting.

We would like the opportunity to tell you more about it.

AUGUST 31.

TOPIC—Missionary Essentials, Home and Abroad. II. Prayer. Ephesians 6: 10-20.

Prayer is the key that unlocks the bounties of God's storehouse. It is the one method in which all may participate, by which the greatest success in service for God may be assured.

What an inspiration it is to know that we in the home land may reach the work in the foreign field by way of God's throne through prayer!

It is related that John Mott was addressing a great throng of students in China. The message had to be conveyed through an interpreter, and no great immediate results were expected. To his surprise intense interest developed, and many manifested their determination to know more about Christianity. Then it was that Mr. Mott happened to remember that that was the day set apart in Christian America for prayer for colleges and students throughout the world, and he was no longer in doubt about the cause of the awakening in that far away student body. The success of many undertakings often is assured through prayer.

AN EVENING PRAYER

FORGIVE us for the smiles we failed to give—Smiles on which saddened hearts may live—

And yet—and yet we failed to give!

Forgive us for the words we've left unsaid—
Words that feed hungry hearts like bread,
And yet—and yet were left unsaid.

And for the little deeds we've left undone,
That might have cheered some lonely one—

And yet—and yet were left undone.

Forgive us, Thou who knowest us so well,
That we have failed our love to tell
By smiles and words and deeds as well.

Jogging the Memory a Little

We find that a considerable number of subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND are in arrears for their subscriptions. A number have waited until after the harvesting of the crops before remitting. This deficiency is somewhat embarrassing to the management at this season of the year, which is busy enough with the daily duty of getting out a creditable paper, without having to struggle with the inability to meet printing bills. We appeal earnestly to those who know themselves to be in arrears that they make every effort to remit at once. We cannot emphasize the urgency of the appeal too strongly. A Message for the Hour

At a time like the present, when the relations between the United States and Mexico are the subject of anxious thought, it is well to recall some words of the Honorable Elihu Root, spoken more than four years ago. He was addressing a society made up largely of those who did not have the direct responsibility of carrying on negotiations between this and other nations, and as a message to citizens, not to officials of the government, his words come with so much force to us today as to those to whom they were then addressed. As emphasizing the great truth that every citizen has some influence in international affairs, and therefore some duty at just such a time as this, the message deserves to be read with care and passed on to our neighbors and friends:

The Duty of Diplomatic Representatives.

There is a peculiar situation created when a diplomatic question arises between two countries. It is the duty of the diplomatic representatives to argue each the cause of his own country; he cannot turn his back upon an opponent in that friendly contest and state to his countrymen the weakness of his own position and the strength of the other side's position, and it is one of the greatest difficulties of peace-making and peace-keeping that the orators, the politicians, the stump speakers, aye, often the clergymen of each country, press and insist upon the extreme view of their own country, and impress upon the minds of the great masses of the people who have not studied the question, the idea that all right is upon one side and all wrong upon the other side.

The Duty of All Citizens.

*If you would help to make and keep peace, stand behind the men who are in the responsible positions of government, ready to recognize the fact that there is some right on the other side. * * In the exercise of those duties in which the ambassadors of Great Britain, of Brazil and of Japan have played so great a part with us in the last few years in Washington, the great obstacles to the doing of things which make for peace have not been the wish of the diplomatist, not the policy of the Government, but the inconsiderate and thoughtless unwillingness of the great body of the people* of the respective countries to stand behind the man who was willing for the sake of peace and justice to make fair concessions.

The methods by which we can "stand behind the men who are in the responsible positions of government" are many and varied. But whether our opportunity comes in public address or in an unexpected conversation on the street or by the roadside, or in some other way, we may all "help to make and keep peace." We may help to do it now.

For the Peace Association of Friends in America,
ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

North Carolina Yearly Meeting held its 216th annual session at Guilford College, August 6-11. An article in one of the leading daily papers of the State said: "From the ancient record of the Religious Society of Friends, it appears that a few of their numbers settled in the Albemarle district of North Carolina (now Perquimans County), about the year 1660." This paper further stated that the Friends Yearly Meeting is the oldest religious body in the state, and one about which probably less is known outside of its own members, than any other similar organization in this country, never exploited by itself, never bickering with sister bodies, but peacefully and unostentatiously attending to its matters of church polity without the flare of publicity which so often characterizes similar conventions.

The Yearly Meeting opened with a good attendance, with Dr. L. L. Hobbs presiding at the clerk's desk. Nearly all representatives responded to the call of names. Of the large number of Friends with minutes from other Yearly Meetings, most were present at the first session. These are as follows:

Joseph Sopher and wife (elder), of Iowa; Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana; Willard O. Trueblood, Indianapolis, Indiana; Albert Copeland, Cincinnati; Amos Carson and companion, Edwin Barker, Indiana; George N. Hartley, Fountain City, Indiana; Alonzo Cloud and W. T. Boyce, Baltimore Yearly Meeting; J. Edgar Williams, Carthage, Indiana; John Kendall, Mooresville, Indiana; and Harrison Hooker of Indiana. Tien Lu Lee, of the M. E. Church, and Professor in the University of Peking, China, was a guest of the Yearly Meeting and rendered acceptable service.

The reading of the London General Epistle had the closest attention, and its excellence and fitness to present-day needs were remarked by many.

Three sessions of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight were largely attended, and there were many energetic expressions in favor of going forward. Two Quarterly Meetings reported the urgent need of increased ministerial work. After discussion, the matter was endorsed and brought to the attention of the Yearly Meeting, which gave its approval without dissent. It was urged that all our members look well to

Working for Community Betterment

If every Friends meeting in America were to set out with a determined and well defined purpose to make its own community better, we are inclined to wonder what the result would be both to the communities and to the denomination. Many of our meetings have a purpose that is too general. They are in a rut and are apparently content to remain there.

If the children quite generally are in the Bible School, if one-third of the membership are fairly regular in their attendance at the Sabbath morning service, and if a faithful handful continue to come to prayer meeting week in and week out, the average meeting is fairly well satisfied to continue its course, wishing now and then under the stress of some special inspiration that conditions were better, but apparently powerless to make them so.

No meeting can remain long at a standstill. Either it must go forward or it will go backward, and all too many are following the latter course. A diagnosis is sometimes an unpleasant task, but often it is a necessary step toward the eradication of a serious ailment.

The negative church will never make itself felt in any community. Religion is a positive force, and finds its highest expression in service for others. No church can long maintain its standing that expends all its activities upon its own membership and within the circle of its own communion.

Community betterment is an ideal that ought to bring inspiration to any religious congregation. It will mean first, that a mighty passion for the salvation of souls, a burning spirit of evangelism that will seek to carry the gospel into every home, must possess the membership as it seeks to extend a helping hand in the neighborhood.

It will mean that a concerted effort must be made to relieve distress and suffering that is the outgrowth of a social order that has felt the blighting touch of sin. It will mean that men and women who have seen Christ and felt His presence must place their lives along side the lives of their fellows in a Christian brotherhood that is uplifting and inspiring. It will mean that the personal touch of Christian sympathy must be manifested, not only at the meeting house, but in the social life, on the highway, in the field, at the counter, and in the factory.

It will mean that as holiness hates sin, evil must be opposed and never condoned. Any custom or system that padlocks the heart and the conscience against the gospel of redeeming love, must be attacked and eradicated. The saloon, the brothel, the gaming table, profanity, desecration of the Sabbath-day, lawlessness of every kind, the rental of property for unholy purposes, the slums where poverty and vice hold sway, the sweatshop, the oppression of the poor, dirty politics, neighborhood carousing, the corruption of youth, must all feel the effective antagonism of a church that is truly alive. The gospel cannot make bed-fellows of any of these.

What a field of work there would be for a committee on community betterment appointed in every monthly meeting! And what a harvest there would be throughout Quakerdom if the spirit of this endeavor were to possess all our membership! "Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto the harvest." "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest."

No Occasion for War

One cannot but deplore and condemn the persistence of a jingo spirit that seems bent upon driving the United States into a war with Mexico. Undoubtedly there are grave abuses in that country that cry loudly for settlement, but two wrongs never make a right. Intervention would mean a recourse to arms, and in the end the terms would be settled by diplomacy, which can be applied now, if not as easily, at least with as great exactness toward the administration of justice.

The hands of the administration at Washington should be upheld, for evidently every possible attempt at a peaceful solution of the situation is to be made. The United States does not want Mexico, and there can be no assurance that a forced peace, as applied to the internal affairs of our Spanish-speaking neighbors, will be abiding.

At a time like this, our great country should show its prowess as a leader and a helper rather than as a revengeful master, who seeks to punish because there exists the ability to do so. While hoping for the best, the situation may grow even worse, but we can conceive of no conditions under which the United States, even though guided by the doctrine of expediency, will be justified in taking a course that must inevitably lead to war.

Religious Status of Women in the Non-Christian World— Her Status in the Ethnic Religions

BY MURRAY S. KENWORTHY

(An address delivered at Farmland, Indiana, before the Ministers' Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and published by request of the Association.)

"The condition of women is the truest test of a people's civilization. Her status is her country's barometer." This observation is not less true of a people's religion. By this criterion the religions of the non-Christian world present a condition deplorably low in the scale of human development. Two quotations will best contrast the extremes in the religious world. I. "For ye are all sons of God, through faith in Jesus Christ. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ. There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female; for ye are all one man in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3:26-28. II. "What is the chief gate to hell? A woman. Who is the wisest of the wise? He who has not been deceived by a woman, only to be compared to malignant fiends." (Manu.) The first statement sounds the emancipation proclamation for women everywhere, the other degrades her to the depths.

There are probably a half dozen religions opposing the Christian advance. Two or three of these are offering formidable resistance and showing great powers of readjustment in methods and ideals made necessary by the coming of higher Christian conceptions. All of these religions place a low estimate upon the worth of women, and consistently depreciate her spiritual importance.

In reviewing the attitude of these faiths, in the matter in question, the full truth may not, in all cases, be printed. Western modesty and sense of propriety will not tolerate their recital. Western governments would hardly permit detailed descriptions to pass through the mails, classing them as obscene literature. The British government finds its tactfulness sorely tried in dealing with the Indian situation where in the name of religion scenes rivaling a Bowery brothel are of daily occurrence. Those knowing all the facts may well wonder if the pictures they bring to mind are not of more harm to the aesthetic senses than the knowledge of them does good. Some of the facts, however, will assist us in better appreciating the place to which our Christian faith has brought us, and the great debt we owe the women of the non-Christian world.

Practically all of these religions have evolved from that worship (Animism) which peoples the visible and invisible world with spirits—some good, and some bad. No matter how far any faith may by this time have gotten from its primitive form, in many of its tenets it still rests upon its earlier base and has carried along with it primitive methods, customs and ideas. Consequently we may expect to find, and do find, in their ideas conceptions of womanhood native to savage natures and ages. Here a woman was, almost without exception, reckoned as property and was so treated, bartered, sold, traded, stolen, given, loaned, loved, petted, hated, worked, abused, or killed, according to the caprice of her owner. She had no rights to be respected, no feeling to be pitied. She was a beast of burden, "a necessary machine for the rearing of children," a source of profit as was a sheep, or a war club, and to be treated accordingly. There were individual and tribal exceptions, even tribes where the opposite was true, but these exceptions were rare. This is her status to-day in every primitive tribe where the old Animistic ideas of religion prevail, whether in Africa or the hill sections of China or India.

When Shintoism reached a higher stage of development, a better appreciation of womanhood gave to our sisters in Japan a freer, purer life. In fact, Shintoism gave them a position as good, if not better, than that accorded by any other of the ethnic religions. Here members of her sex have been exalted even to the plane of deity. Japanese literature boasts of heroines and empresses. In religion she was of sufficient worth to be enrolled in special orders and was permitted to officiate as a priestess. Though this lauding of women was not all theory, yet that same literature praised her dumb bearing of certain requirements which Western Christianity would not for a moment tolerate. Wives and daughters were not accorded the position and protection which was their due. The property idea still obtained and was generally enforced. Only that liberty was accorded her consistent with the purposes of husband or father to whom she was, with little reserve, subjected. The life of a child was in the hands of the father who might kill or spare at his will. Even in these later days when Occidental ideas have changed many Oriental methods, the father may sell his daughter to a life of shame, or lend her to a private individual for immoral purposes. This is frequently done and she usually quietly submits, knowing no other law or opportunity. In more recent years missionaries have, by "Underground Railroad" methods, been able to save a number, who have fled to them for protection from this foul life. It may be suggested that even in our country similar conditions at times prevail, but it must be remembered that while this may be true it is done contrary to the prevailing religion, while there in accordance with the ancient and national faith; for Japanese religion and literature celebrate it as a virtue that woman give her body into vice to satisfy the debts of husband or father. This state of affairs of course cannot long prevail, for Christian ideals will soon change these practices just as Christian civilization has been changing other ancient customs.

The two native religions of China have much in common, for both base their tenets on the ancient customs of the land, and both have in many respects remained Animistic at heart. Laotse and Confucius did nothing for women of any practical value. Their religions were for men and for only the few—those who could so far dispense with material things as to give themselves to certain exclusive requirements. Women were therefore left where Animism had placed them. Confucius taught that "Woman can determine nothing for herself and should be subject to the three obediences—to her father, husband and son." "Her business is to prepare food and wine. Beyond the threshold of her own apartments she should not know for evil or for good; if her husband dies she should not marry again." "She is as earth, her husband is as heaven." "She may not perform the sacrifices, she may not worship her ancestors"—"Indeed, she has no ancestors to worship since she joins her husband's clan." "It is a just law of nature that women should be kept under control of man and not allowed any will of her own. In the other world the condition of affairs is the same, for the same laws govern there as here." These and other laws and customs of similar tenor served to fix her religious and social status as rigidly as any other phase of "unchangeable" China.

A custom which prevailed in China, in common with other countries of the east, was polygamy and concubinage. Laws and customs might vary somewhat in the different countries, but everywhere the results were practically the same. A man was not governed by any codes of virtue approaching the Christian standards. He was usually free to enlarge his harem as his powers of purchase or domestic felicity might permit. The only error committed when he stepped beyond his own harem was what might, for a better term, be called larceny against another's property, which could be atoned for by a fine or some compensation satisfactory to the owner. There was no thought of a crime against the woman. But woe to her if there was any lapse from the narrow road. In the harem or zenana were ranking wives and concubines and these orders gave the children their respective standing or caste in the family or clan. Divorce was easy. Mere displeasure often sent the wife or concubine back to her people, adrift in the world or to the slave market—unless there was a dowry to return or angry kinsmen to be appeased. In China a woman when she married became the virtual slave of her mother-in-law, by whom she was often cruelly treated. The husband could not interfere for her even when he wanted to do so, for by a strange turn of custom he must first obey his mother even if it meant suffering to a loved wife. These and other conditions made life for the women and girls a very uncertain quantity. Thousands of girls anticipating the cruelties of the married state committed suicide before the wedding day. Since women were of uncertain market value and apt to be an encumbrance, girl babies were at times as unceremoniously disposed of as are undesired kittens; and it was no religious crime. It was a mere question of economics and we may presume that these acts were performed with little or no compunctions of conscience. China's two great sages left many wise and virtuous sayings, but in this estimate of womanhood they riveted all the more securely upon China a degrading social custom.

If the status of women in China was bad it was certainly worse in India. No more pessimistic people ever lived or discouraging religion ever developed than here among our Aryan cousins. No where in the world, ancient or modern, have women in theory and practice been so completely condemned to the deepest depths. The full truth cannot be told—it is too awful to tell. In the ancient Vedic times she may have been on a par with the women of other faiths and climes, but certainly not during the later and modern periods.

In Manu's (B. C. 500?) conception she was "The chief gate to hell." Even Gautama, the founder of Buddhism, gave her no religious standing at first. Later he reluctantly granted her a subordinate order. But of course she must be re-born as a man before she could enter the direct Buddhistic line. If it be true that Gautama thought of her in the lowest scale of the descent in the transmigration of souls—even below insects—it may be left to the imagination to think of the years, and even centuries, that would pass before, by virtuous living, she at last would become a man. Gautama was thankful that he had escaped the three curses "of being born in hell, or as vermin or as a woman."

Later Hinduism has driven Buddhism from India; and all but displaced the Jainists and other offshoots of ancient Brahmanism, but in all the changes of the centuries the estimation of women has not seemingly improved, for "One should never sit in a lonely place with one's mother, sister or daughter; for the senses are powerful and master even a learned man." (Manu.) "Though destitute of virtue, or seeking pleasure elsewhere, or devoid of good qualities, yet a husband must be constantly worshiped as a god by a faithful wife." "Day and night women must be kept in dependence by the males of their families." "For women no sacred rites are performed with the sacred texts, thus the law is settled; women who are destitute of strength and of the knowledge of the Vedic texts are as impure as falsehood itself, this is a fixed rule." Once a missionary sought to teach the wife of a Hindu and received this reply, showing the husband's contempt for her mental ability: "You can try and teach my wife and if you succeed I will bring around my cow."

There are certain phases of degradation to which women in India have been consigned almost unknown to other countries. Probably one of the greatest curses to which a religion ever gave its sanction is that of child marriage. Mr. Eddy says there are 2,273,245 child wives under ten years of age; 243,502 under five, and 10,507 baby wives under twelve months. This bad matter is made worse by the fact that these child wives, even baby wives, are often married to old men whose tenure of life is, at the best, of short duration, and when a husband dies his widow may never marry again. This rule is seldom broken, and as a result it is said there are in India 26,000,000 widows, of whom 115,285 are under ten years of age; 19,487 under five, and 1,064 under twelve months. A former custom permitted these widows to obtain religious credit by being burned on the husband's funeral pyre, but the British government has done away with this practice. After a child becomes a widow she is stripped of her finery, her head is shaved, she is clothed in a coarse cotton garment and consigned to the meanest quarters of the house, becoming a slave assigned to the dirtiest work about the premises. She receives this and baser treatment because—as is taught in their religion—in a previous life she killed her husband and as a punishment she has been condemned by the gods to be a child widow in her present life. The status of a child wife is by no means a pleasant dream. She is a wife and missionaries sometimes meet with her as a mother at the age of twelve. If the wife in India does not present her husband with a son, her lot is a hard one indeed, for, though there are some 5,000,000 fewer women than men, girl babies are not welcomed here more heartily than in China. The lengths to which they follow custom in making sacrifices and doing acts of merit in order to appease the gods and obtain a son is shocking indeed. Among other things they often live in quarters plastered with material from the stables of the sacred cow. Many of these sonless wives end their weary existence as suicides rather than endure the treatment accorded them. The Hebrew laws of purification for women seem harsh to Christian senses, but they are not in the same category with those of India and Persia—where they are so severe that they are seldom, if ever, put in western print.

In India sensuality has been deified and has millions of devotees. Thousands of pretty girls are married to this god and virtually become public prostitutes. These Nautch girls are gaudily dressed and live in the temples. They are quite generally sought for and become guests of honor at wedding functions where they take a conspicuous place in the ceremony and are supposed to guarantee to the bride and groom future happiness and prosperity. Such was and is India and her ways.

In the quiet retreats of Arabia, near Mecca, Mohammed claimed to receive from God His last revelation to men. With this idea the self styled prophet of Allah proceeded to fasten upon the world his religion. Nor did his efforts end in a mere boast for some 200,000,000 followers face the sacred Kaaba when they pray. In North Central Africa he is gaining followers much more rapidly than is Christ. And what did he do for women? To start with, he told his fellow Arabians that it would be much more profitable for them to cease killing their little girls (they did not kill them when babies) and let them grow to womanhood. By making them do the work in the meantime they could, with the advantageous marriage possible, thus profit themselves. It must be said in fairness that his motives were humanitarian rather than commercial; and this was a ruse by which to accomplish his ends. Yet women have very little place in his religion, for his too was a man's religion. "Men shall have pre-eminence over women." "Women whose perverseness ye shall be apprehensive of rebuke; and remove them into separate apartments and chastise them." This is the last revelation from God? Every good Moslem was allowed four wives and any number of concubines—from the women taken in war, and Africa suffers to this day. As the prophet of God he had a special allowance by "Divine revelation" and took seven wives. Divorce was a mere matter of sending a wife from the tent. He could re-marry her three times, but no more, unless in the meantime she had been the wife of another and by him divorced. Sometimes a capricious man would go the limit, and, repenting, desire to take his wife back. To do this, he would get a friend to marry and divorce her. Heaven too was a man's paradise—a place where he could feast and carouse, where the senses never tired and foods never nauseated. Here he was to revel while the beautiful black eyed Houras waited upon his every wish. Whether on earth or in heaven the chief function of woman was to contribute to the sensual desires of men. It not only was to be, but it has so far been an awful fact among Moslems.

So the great sages, the founders of the great religions of the east gave her no rest. Forever down the ages, in this life or that, she wearily climbs the ceaseless treadmill of sensual desire, giving her beauty, her charms and virtues to the consuming flames.

O that these could sit with the holy family at Nazareth, eat with Jesus and His friends in Bethany, view His tender love on Calvary and worship HIM. But there are those who do not believe in Foreign Missions.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

Wilmington Yearly Meeting convened for its Twenty-second Annual gathering on August 13th. Notwithstanding the extreme heat, the attendance was good, and a lively interest in the business and the devotional meetings was maintained throughout the sessions. Emma S. Townsend, who has served as recording clerk for ten years, felt that she could not continue the service, and Mary Mills was appointed to that office. The other clerks were Albert J. Brown, presiding clerk; Clayton Terrell, reading clerk, and Reuben Peelle, announcing clerk. There was a hearty expression of appreciation of the faithful service of Emma S. Townsend.

The following visiting Friends were present: Joseph and Mary Sopher, Iowa Yearly Meeting; George N. Hartley, Richard Haworth, George Levering, Frank Cornell, James B. Unthank and W. O. Mendenhall, Indiana Yearly Meeting; John Kendall, Western Yearly Meeting; George E. Kent, Elizabeth

Ward, and Bessie Cordelia Ballard, Ohio Yearly Meeting. These Friends contributed much to the interest and helpfulness of the meetings, as they were used in brief remarks, addresses and Gospel sermons.

Two sessions were devoted to the consideration of the state of society, and proved to be seasons of much profit. The reading of the London General Epistle produced a strong impression, the effect of which was evident until the concluding minute. The thought from this epistle that there must be a great dedication or a great sin, became the keynote of several sessions.

A communication from Center Quarterly Meeting concerning the importance of family worship, met with a warm response. A minute of suggestions as to the observance of such worship, and plans for its encouragement, was sent down to subordinate meetings. The Committee on Correspondence was changed to a standing committee, and members appointed for one, two and three years.

In response to invitations, Emma S. Townsend was appointed as fraternal delegate to the 50th anniversary of Iowa Yearly Meeting and Mary Mills as alternate. Ellison R. and Harriet W. Purdy were appointed as honorary delegates. Albert J. Brown was appointed as fraternal delegate to Ohio Yearly Meeting, and Robert Luttrell as alternate, and Reuben Pelle as honorary delegate.

The Bible School Board reported a prosperous year. About one-half of the schools have made ten per cent, or more, increase in average attendance. At this session Richard Haworth delivered a stirring address. On the evening devoted to Home Missions, George N. Hartley gave an interesting account of the relation of Friends to the Indian Work; and Bessie Cordelia Ballard spoke of the new Friends Orphanage under the care of the Cleveland Friends. It has been a good year for our Home Mission Work in Tennessee. The temperance address was given by Sam Small, D. D., to a large crowd.

Josephus Hoskins was re-appointed evangelistic superintendent. He reported an evident quickening of interest in nearly all parts of the Yearly Meeting. This is especially manifest among the young people. There is an increase of attendance at most of our meetings for worship. Notwithstanding the fact that the additions to membership were about the same as last year, there was a net loss of 76 members. This is due to the fact that the death and removal rate was larger, and a few meetings reported a considerable number discontinued. George Levering delivered an address on evangelism, and a subscription of one thousand dollars was taken for the needs of the work. The call for a vigorous effort at ingathering claimed the attention of the Yearly Meeting through a minute from the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and a special committee was appointed to aid the evangelistic forces in promoting this concern. Not less than 1,000 additions for the next year, was declared to be the fixed purpose.

The usual interest was manifested in the educational session. Alexander Purdy gave the address. He reviewed the history of the attitude of Friends toward education, and its lessons, and urged the support of Wilmington College. President Samuel Hodgkin followed with a strong appeal, and $1,500.00 was subscribed in scholarships and other contributions. The college will add a Domestic Science Department under the direction of Myra B. Binford. Considerable improvements are being made on the dormitories.

On Peace evening James B. Unthank gave an interesting address, in which he logically presented the utter failure of military methods. John Kendall followed with a few words comparing the achievements of war and peace. The committee on Young Friends Activities have held several successful week end conferences. Clayton Terrell, delegate to Winona, gave an enthusiastic report and Thomas Kelly was appointed as delegate for next year. On Christian Endeavor night W. O. Trueblood gave a helpful address on personal work, showing the character and demands of true friendship with Jesus. The young people were more than usually active this year. A number of short devotional periods were arranged for and conducted by them at the close of the afternoon sessions. At the Foreign Mission session the Yearly Meeting put itself on record as recognizing its obligation to more than double its contribution. Stirring addresses were given by George Levering and Charles Tebbetts on the imperative demand of the present crisis. A subscription of $717.00 was taken.

Richard Greene was re-appointed statistical secretary, and his faithful service commended. The plan of having all statistics under the care of one secretary was continued. The work of the music committee under the leadership of Virginia Pelle in providing appropriate selections for the different conferences, contributed greatly to their success. The committee was heartily commended. Richard Greene served the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight as clerk, and Matilda Greene as assistant. Levi Mills, who has served the meeting in this capacity for a number of years, was unable to continue on account of his duties as Probate Judge.

Frank Cornell delivered an address on "Quakers and Quakerism" at one of the evening sessions. Joseph Sopher, George E. Kent, and Elizabeth Ward, as well as the others mentioned, were favored in bringing a number of helpful messages. A large crowd was present on First Day; a number of sermons preached, and two children's meetings were well attended. The offerings taken up during the Yearly Meeting were larger than last year. The final session closed with a few words by our aged Friend, John Watson, followed by an impressive silence.

To stand with a smile upon your face, against a stake from which you cannot get away—that, no doubt, is heroic. But true glory is not resignation to the inevitable. To stand unchained, with perfect liberty to go away, held only by the higher claims of duty, and let the fire creep up to the heart—this is heroism.

faithful family worship; that our young people listen for a divine call to the ministry or other Christian work; that parents and teachers be so spiritually alive as to aid in developing this call; and that the members of subordinate meetings provide for the education of young ministers and workers, and arrange for moral and material support. All this, and more, was sent, through the minute of advice, to the home meetings. It was reported that some ministers had been neglecting appointments without giving reasons therefor. Such were admonished to be more faithful or give place to others.

Three well attended conferences of Christian workers were held, in which home and visiting workers participated freely to the mutual benefit of all. Intense interest was developed in community service, not only for our membership but for those in our neighborhoods not Friends. Bible School work was shown to be aggressive the past year. Some conferences were held in different Quarters, and a Summer Bible School conference was arranged to be held at Guilford College for a week immediately following the Yearly Meeting, the program for which is good and quite elaborate.

Peace exercises have been held in some day schools as well as Bible Schools, especially in connection with Hague Memorial Day, May 18th, and the World's Peace Sunday just before Christmas. Some sermons have been preached on the same subject and some lectures given. The chairman of the Peace Committee enlisted all the eligible colleges of the state in the Intercollegiate Peace Oratorical Contest, and thirty-three peace orations were delivered in the local college contests. These were by students from five southern states, and the thirty-three orators represented thirty-three hundred students in the leading colleges of North Carolina. One from each college entered a state contest, and the best received a prize of $75.00, with a second prize of $50.00. The first prize man represented the state in the Eastern Interstate group at Easton, Pennsylvania. Bryant Smith, of Guilford College, who last year won the state prize of $75.00, this year as a Senior in an essay contest, open to all the colleges in the United States and Canada, won out over more than fifty competitors, and received a prize of $100.00. The Chairman of the Peace Committee assisted in the organization of the North Carolina Peace Society. A goodly number of the members joined after Dr. J. J. Hall, Director of the American Peace Society for the South Atlantic States, had delivered a fine and able address to the Yearly Meeting on "The Church and Universal Peace."

The report of the Committee on the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic showed that progress has been made in the development of a stronger sentiment against the drink evil, and in the better enforcement of our state prohibitory law. The recently enacted Webb law on the interstate traffic, together with the enactment of the "Search and Seizure Act" by our own Legislature, aided by a growing public opinion, have all combined to make the enforcement of our law more easy. O. S. Stringfield, a Baptist minister, made a unique and severe arraignment of the liquor traffic as a crime. He said that he had spent fifteen years building school and college edifices, but he found so many graduates were becoming drunkards, he would build no more until the criminal liquor traffic is stopped. Liquor destroys so many bodies and souls that he would not accept the pastorate of a church till the traffic is destroyed. It was decided to put a temperance lecturer in the field.

Especially satisfying was the report of Blue Ridge Academy in the edge of Virginia, the result of mission work begun by Friends many years ago. In that desolate region there has been developed a Friends Monthly Meeting, and a thriving Academy, from which have gone out a goodly number of young people to other communities and states preaching and teaching successfully. During the past year there has been more teaching and studying among children and young people about missions, and more preaching on the subject of foreign missions than ever before.

The presence of Charles E. Tebbetts and his strong sermon on "As the Father sent me into the world, even so send I you," aided in bringing deeper conviction as to the importance of this work. The subject was further elucidated and impressed by Tien Lu Lee, who addressed the Yearly Meeting on "The Present Outlook for Christianity in China." He said the outlook is good if the Christian world is prompt and persevering to an extent commensurate with the enlarged opportunity in the new Republic. He greatly deplored the fact that in many places the agents for cigarettes are so active. Arthur and Ella Pain reported progress in their work in Cuba, and were helpful all through Yearly Meeting and in the children's meetings especially. The missionary mercury of the Yearly Meeting is rising.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension work seems to be the most important department in the Yearly Meeting, one in which it has more effort and money invested than in any other. Increased activity and unity are reported from most Quarters. Revivals have been held in many places. The report shows thirty-eight series of meetings with 557 sessions. There were 540 professions and 123 requests for membership at these meetings, and 295 have been added to our membership by request. A new meeting house has been built at Symonds Creek, in Pasquotank County, where once was the first house of worship in North Carolina, or one of the first, in which a meeting was held for 176 years, but for the last sixty-seven years none has been held because of emigration and other causes. Another new house is being built in Yadkin County, at Branon.

The report also shows that 2,537 family visits have been made, and that 229 families report family worship, that the attendance at morning meetings for worship has been 119,018, that the amount to aid ministers and other workers was $4,177.76, that the amount expended on church property was $7,952.85. The meeting manifested much interest in the work of the committee and took an offering for the work next year. One Friend gave $200.00 and the meeting made a liberal appropriation in addition.

The report of the President of Guilford College, which had been printed in The Friends Messenger, and was not read, shows a healthy growth in that institution. The largest graduating class in its history was reported. There is a more promising outlook than ever before. The trustees reported an endowment of $176,000, which is small in comparison with other like colleges of the state. Guilford's endowment should be increased as soon as possible to $500,000.00. The enrollment of students the past year was 252, of whom 110 were children of Friends.

New Garden Hall is a home for worthy girls of meager means, who board themselves well at cost (one dollar per week), and where they have the benefit of a trained matron and teacher of domestic science. A collection was taken for this hall. The health of the college has been remarkable. An educational meeting was held under the auspices of the Old Students' Association of New Garden Boarding School and Guilford College. Willard O. Trueblood gave an address on "Life's Investment," and in an earnest, eloquent manner emphasized the importance of conserving the strength of our youth, quoting the statement of Dr. David Starr Jordan that "Forty per cent. of young manhood is wasted in youth." The afternoon and evening were great events in the history of Guilford College.

Some time was devoted to the consideration of the needs of the children. The need of the family altar was emphasized. Daily meetings were held especially for the children.

A very appropriate and highly appreciated memorial of the late Josiah Nicholson was read, recounting his long and excellent, exemplary life as a Christian, in the Church and in the affairs of the community and state. He has been an efficient clerk in all the meetings, Preparative, Monthly, Quarterly and Yearly. He had rendered very acceptable service in all positions and offices of the Society except that of the ministry. Touching and tender remarks were made concerning the model life of the deceased, and these remarks also touched upon the work of his brothers, William, deceased, and Timothy, who is yet living. A memorial for Rodema Wright, a less widely known and a much younger Friend, was also read. Her life as a member and minister was delineated as one dear to all who knew her, and useful to the church and community.

The claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented forcefully by J. Elwood Cox and others. It was stated that as it is now the organ of Friends in the United States and Canada, it should go into all the families of our denomination. On Sabbath, two simultaneous meetings for worship were held, both in the morning and afternoon, while at night one meeting was held at which George N. Hartley delivered the message. David E. Sampson and wife were liberated for service in London and Dublin Yearly Meetings. Unusual harmony prevailed throughout the Yearly Meeting, and there was much good teaching and preaching from visiting Friends and others.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

International Congress of Students

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

Internationalism Among Men of Learning

Six hundred fourteen international or semi-international learned societies, indexed with present officers and a brief history of each organization, make a large list of names and facts. Our general notions were made more definite in this particular a few months ago when the book entitled "Internationalism—Pure Science and Letters," proved to be the list of these societies, all of them embracing in membership representatives from more than one nation and many holding world congresses. Literature, geodesy, theology, photography, history, technology, one of these or some other subject of interest to students, absorbs the workers in these various organizations; but while these interests are being advanced scientifically, a far more magnificent thing is happening, for the members of these societies are learning to know one another and through their international friendships are becoming disciples of the doctrine that international disputes can and ought to be settled by pacific means.

Not to dwell upon any one of these many organizations, perhaps we might mention as the strongest of them the World's Student Christian Federation, which met for its biennial conference at Lake Mohonk last June. In commenting on the indifference of students to great moral issues, a wise man recently said that there are some things too small to be seen and some things too big to be seen until persons have time to readjust their mental focus. "Then they make a discovery!" It was several years before any considerable per cent. of the student body of North America saw the value of a small local student association, and now they are just beginning to discover the significance of their union with the world's federation. When the Conference met in Tokyo, Japan, in 1907, it was the first world's convention of any kind held in the Orient and thousands of keen-minded students there gained convincing proof that the humble citizen of Nazareth commands the intellectual strength and loyalty of the nations today. As has been pointed out, they saw strong men and women sinking their national differences of opinion in a common purpose to bring in the reign of the Prince of Peace. Again in Constantinople, in 1911, a great work was accomplished, but our point is simply to reiterate what really ought to be taken for granted, that thus international friendships grow strong. "If one can only live through the first stage where national differences loom large, and go on to the second stage where likenesses and mutual sympathies grow real, one is freed forever from provincialism." THE AMERICAN FRIEND was fortunate in being able to publish a report of the Conference held at Lake Mohonk last spring, written for the Friends of America by a delegate who himself is full of world patriotism. Though one of the strongest, we must realize that this organization is only one of the six hundred fourteen referred to above.

Among the scientific and literary organizations which have more than national scope, all are of value in the movement toward world federation, but it is doubtful if those which include specialists of experience and renown can be of more value as pacificators than the student organizations which sprang into life at the demand of the youth of our land to know youths of other lands the world over—their brothers in heart—in spite of the obstacles of race, language, and religion.

"Corda Fratres"—Brothers in Heart

Without doubt the most comprehensive international organization of students yet established is Corda Fratres, International Federation of Students, which has as its object the promulgation of the idea of unity and brotherhood among students without regard to their religious or political beliefs. Established in Italy fifteen years ago, the students of that nation gave expression to their ideals of world brotherhood by calling an international students' congress at Turin. At that time representatives of seven European nations banded themselves together under the motto, "Corda Fratres," which motto because of its true interpretation of the object of the association soon became its name. Corda Fratres in Europe and the association of Cosmopolitan Clubs organized in North America five years later, were soon endeavoring to form a confederation of themselves together with student associations of South America. This central organization now includes the following national clubs: Consulates of Corda Fratres in Italy, Holland, Hungary and Greece; the Union Nationale des Associations des Etudiants de France; the Verband der Internationalen Studentenvereine in Germany; the Liga de Estudiantes Americanos; and the Association of Cosmopolitan Clubs in North America. These are indirectly, but indeed miniature Hague Conferences, as a Frenchman once called them.

The Motto on the Stone Bench

The official sessions of the Eighth International Congress of Students (Corda Fratres) will be held at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, August 29th to September 3, 1913, under the auspices of the Association of Cosmopolitan Clubs of North America. The Cornell Club is to be the host, and the newspapers have much to say of the royal way in which it will entertain its foreign guests under the roof of its $50,000 club house; but those who know and love Cornell can mention other and more significant reasons why students from every country will find there a most suitable meeting place. It was a Cornell student from the Argentine Republic who founded the first of American Cosmopolitan Clubs more than ten years ago. It is another Cornellian, John R. Mott, who is spending much of his energy in cultivating a spirit of harmony and union among the students of the world, notably through the above-mentioned World's Student Christian Federation. It was Andrew D. White, Cornell's first president, who was the leader of the American delegation at the First International Peace Congress at the Hague. But finally, and this is the best reason of all, it was at Cornell that its one-time professor, Goldwin Smith, had engraved on a stone bench which he presented to the University forty-two years ago, the following motto, "Above all nations is humanity." The bench is there now, and these words which have been taken as the motto of this International Congress of Students can be read by the delegates in their original setting. The delegates would, however, feel the motto in the atmosphere of the University life whether they knew the words or not, for there its spirit has been growing as the generations of students have passed that bench for far into a half century.

Supporters of the Approaching Congress of Students

The committees appointed to prepare for the Congress have received considerable support from the division of International Intercourse and Education of the Carnegie Peace Foundation which has granted a subvention of $2,500 to finance the undertaking, and from the World Peace Foundation of Boston, which, besides co-operating in many other ways, has made it possible for President George W. Nasmyth of the Central Committee of the International Federation of Students to spend most of his term of office in Europe, where he is arousing the student bodies of the Old World to the importance of the coming international meeting. Among the names on the Honorary Committee for this approaching Congress, aside from representatives of the educational world, are found many such as would be chosen to make up a committee for a great peace convention to be held in this country; namely, President Woodrow Wilson, Andrew D. White, Edwin D. Mead, Samuel T. Dutton, Hamilton Holt, David Starr Jordan, Edwin Ginn, Frederick P. Keppel, and Benjamin Trueblood.

In gathering material for this statement of the forthcoming Congress the local committee on arrangements at Cornell University has been found especially responsive as have also the representatives of the Cosmopolitan Student, the national organ of the American branch, the publication of which is made possible through the generous co-operation of the World Peace Foundation of Boston. When I look over the program of travel for the delegates who go in a party, beginning with Buffalo on September 3, and disbanding in New York City on September 19, having visited Niagara, Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore, with their varied interests, I am impressed with the fact that the friends of peace are showing their appreciation of the young scholars of the world. For instance, the American Peace Society is host for a day in Washington, and the New York Peace Society gives a banquet in New York City. The spirit of international brotherhood for which the organization stands, is recognized as worth while by those who have most at heart the federation of the world.

Purpose of the Clubs

From the beginning the individual Cosmopolitan Clubs set before themselves as a goal toward which to strive the acquisition of a club house in which men from every country might live under the same roof and by close personal contact learn to respect and admire each other.

It has perhaps already been made clear enough in the course of this paper that the general object is international friendship rather than the agitation of a peace propaganda. A positive rather than a negative purpose, these students of the world have set before themselves.

Much might be said of the practical objects of the forthcoming Congress. Briefly, they may be classified under two heads, namely, (1) To devise and create means by which closer international contact, mutual understanding, and friendship between students of all nations may be produced; the committee has gone much into detail on these points; and (2) The other practical object of the Congress is "to consider problems common to the students of all nations." These problems have been classified as follows:

I. Economic problems, including Student Co-operative Societies; the establishment of student financial bureaus for loans and financial aid to students in need; opportunities for employment; insurance against sickness; university and other scholarships and fellowships.

II. Problems of Hygiene and Morals: Student housing and food; athletics; medical examination and care; alcohol and tobacco; the social evil; sexual and other contagious diseases; student duels.

III. Social Reform and Education: Education and Citizenship; University Settlements; the part of the students in the abolition of illiteracy; hygienic education of the people; the education of the agricultural classes; ethical and religious student movements.

IV. Student Government: The relations of students and faculty; the honor system; student organizations and representation; student publications.

Much might be said about these purposes if there were space. Much will be thought concerning the topics by the readers of this sketch, which is of far more moment.

A Factor in International Conciliation

It is, of course, recognized by all educators that the influx of foreign students to every large university of the civilized world offers tremendous possibilities for world friendliness, and as the secretary of this great world organization has enthusiastically put it in his

"Internationalism Among Universities," this organization brings together in its local meetings the world over at the most formative period of their lives picked young men, foreordained to become leaders of thought and action in their respective countries, and "shows them that the 'other fellow' is animated by the same high ideals for which they take credit, acquaints them with other peoples and civilizations and teaches them that humanity is a bond of union transcending national, racial, or color lines of demarcation." One young man mentions as an illustration the names of three Chinese students who were among the closest of his friends in college days. The first is now assistant director of the gigantic railway system of China; the second, a professor of political science in a Chinese provincial college; and the third, a press correspondent at Shanghai for eight leading American newspapers and for the Reuter International News Agency. The above-quoted enthusiastic young secretary, Louis P. Lochner, has said in his pamphlet, "The Cosmopolitan Club Movement," what will meet the approval of thinkers wherever he expresses this conviction:

As a factor in international conciliation the cosmopolitan movement ranks equal with anything yet evolved. Our pacifism, though the very nature of our organization will perhaps prevent our ever identifying ourselves with any particular peace society, is nevertheless of a positive character; where many organizations aim at the prevention of war, our endeavor is first and foremost the promotion and upbuilding of friendship. When our members from so many different countries—and be it remembered that our foreign students are for the most part picked men, men coming from the best and most influential families, men in many cases sent by their governments and destined to become leaders of public opinion—when, I say, these young men at the most impressionable and formative periods of their lives learn by close contact to know each others' characteristics, idiosyncrasies, and viewpoints, they cannot help but return to their native countries apostles of international goodwill, of world brotherhood.

Local Church Federations

The National Office of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, desires to publish a descriptive directory of all the local federations of churches in the country.

In order to insure completeness, readers of this notice, and especially the secretaries of local ministerial associations, are requested to send immediately information regarding such federation to Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary of the Federal Council, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

The print of the nails was the sign of the cross, and the cross today, as then, is voluntary sacrifice—suffering, pain for the good of another, not grief, nor sorrow put upon you for your own good.—John H. Boyd, D.D.

We pray too little face to face with God each day. Looking back at the end, I suspect there will be great grief for our sins of omission—omission to get from God what we might have had by praying.—Andrew A. Bonar.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held at Somerton, Virginia, July 19-20. Visiting ministers present were, L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore, and Annie D. Stabler and Esther G. Frame, of Washington City. On Saturday, the concern of the meeting was that Friends might appreciate and enter a life of service. The temperance question as related to the State Fair came before the meeting, and a petition was sent to the Board of Managers asking that the sale of liquors on the grounds be stopped. On Sabbath the Bible School convened at 10:45 and the meeting for worship at 11:45. A meeting for the young people was held at 5 o'clock. These meetings were well attended, and we hope proved a blessing.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Friends of Whitewater Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, have arranged with their pastor, Alpheus Trueblood, to remain with them for another year. This meeting is doing a splendid work in North Richmond and vicinity, and is continually reaching out after those who need the gospel.

Friends at Anderson have set September 14th as the date for the dedication of their new church building, the purchase of which from the Congregationalists was recently announced in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Full details of the dedication will be published later, but all interested Friends in the Yearly Meeting are invited to be present.

Luke Woodward is expecting to attend the sessions of Ohio Yearly Meeting at Mount Pleasant, at which time the centennial of the organization of that body will be observed.

In the absence of the pastor, Murray S. Kenworthy, West Richmond Friends heard sermons from Prof. Edwin Morrison on August 10, and Vincent D. Nicholson on August 17.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

A record prayer meeting attendance was made by the Friends University Friends Church at Wichita on the five Thursday evenings in July, the record being as follows: 67, 137, 118, 99 and 76, the average being 99 for that hot month.

The annual reports of the Wichita meeting present an exceptionally low death rate. This year, out of a membership of 772, there were but three deaths, and one of them was caused by a stray bullet fired by a careless hunter. Last year, out of a membership of 721, there were but three deaths. In the eleven years' history of University Church, only forty members have died.

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Haviland, Kansas, August 9-10. William Pearson, of Friends University, brought the message on Saturday morning, and Charles Lescault on Sabbath morning, preaching from the text, Psalms 8:4, which was the crowning service. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Stafford. The corn crop in these parts is a failure, as it has been very hot and dry. There has been no rain, except in a few places, since the 10th of June.

Abel Bond of Stafford, Kansas, was at Fowler Quarterly Meeting, August 15-17, and at Gate Quarterly Meeting last week. He is a strong minister and very effective in his work. He is the son of Abel Bond, who was the walking tract-distributing minister that went from ocean to ocean.

Melissa S. Fellow writes from Beaver, Oklahoma, under date of August 20th, to the effect that she was much blessed in talking to the people at a school house after their Bible School on the previous Sabbath. The temperance pledges were signed by nearly all present. A W. C. T. U. medal contest is to be given there soon, and another at Bethel, ten miles away.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

Lydia Maria Dean has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Friends meeting at Central City, and will take up the work there about the first of September.

Eli Perisho, President of Nebraska Central College, who has been visiting different parts of the Yearly Meeting in the interests of this school, reports that prospects are bright for a large attendance during the coming year.

Prof. Esek H. Perry, who has been a member of the faculty of Nebraska Central College for two years, leaves this place to accept a position as head of the Biblical Department of Whittier College. Prof. Perisho, who was Acting President of the College during the past year, will continue his work as head of the Departments of Science and Mathematics.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

Immediately upon the close of the Yearly Meeting, a Summer Bible School for Friends was opened at Guilford College, which continued from August 11-17. In addition to a number of instructors from the local Yearly Meeting, which included Raymond Binford, Earle J. Harold, Clara I. Cox, Dudley D. Carroll, Alice Paige White, Joseph H. Peele, Mary Boyles, Clara Harold, Bessie Cox Saunders, Mary M. Petty, Lewis W. McFarland and A. W. McAlister; the following had places on the program from elsewhere: Charles E. Tebbetts, Willard O. Trueblood, Wilbur K. Thomas, and Tien Lu Lee, Missions, Bible Schools, Social Reform, The Race Problem, Young People's Problems, the Country Church, and other similar subjects claimed the attention of the school.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Raisin Valley, Michigan, August 1-3. Eber Hobson, of Lupton, which now belongs to Adrian Quarter, had the principal part of the service on Sixth and Seventh days. The usual business was transacted preparatory to sending reports to the Yearly Meeting. One new monthly meeting has been established this year at Selkirk, and three persons have been recorded as ministers: Elizabeth H. Mott, of Tecumseh; George I. A. Short and L. Luella Short, both of Selkirk; and at Adrian Monthly Meeting on the 14th, Merrill M. Coffin was recorded. On Sabbath the services were held in the Seminary Building, and continued at that place through the Christian workers Conference. Mary Barrett Pim preached Sabbath morning from Isaiah 12:2, "I will trust and not be afraid." In the afternoon a missionary address was given by Martha B. Hixon, who is about to sail for China, to assist in the Girls' School in the Friends Mission at Nanking. Her address was very interesting and instructive. In the evening Edgar A. Wollam preached, and most of the evening services through the Conference were conducted by him.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

The Friends Foreign Missionary Association of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting asks all to contribute to its box for Japan. Please mark articles with the donor's name, and with the value of the gifts, for insurance and custom's duty. Please send gifts to 20 South 12th Street, Philadelphia, before Ninth Month 2nd. Some articles desired are dressed dolls, a, b, c blocks, children's books, dark woolen bags for carrying books, safety pins, black and white darning cotton, filled work bags, mufflers, dress goods, outing flannel, baby bibs, tea towels, narrow toweling, cotton blankets (colored), single and double sheets, napkins and two yard wide table cloths. Gifts of money will be gladly received by the Superintendent of the Box Department, Emily B. Stokes, 1504 Locust St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Western Yearly Meeting

Gertrude M. Reinier is finishing her first year as pastor of the meeting at Noblesville. It has been a successful year, and the meeting has arranged for the continuance of her services another year.

The eighth annual home coming meeting of Friends at New London, Indiana, will take place at the meeting house on August 31st. Edward Woodard, Superintendent of Evangelistic work in the Yearly Meeting, is expected to be present to preach the home coming sermon. All Friends are urged to be present and enjoy again a hand-shake with old acquaintances.

On August 10th, William Smith, of Westfield, preached at North Branch, morning and evening, beginning a series of meetings, which were continued later by Gurney Lee and Carey Jessup. One conversion was reported.

On August 3rd, Mary Jessup, of Mooresville, preached morning and evening at Highland meeting. Dinner was served in the shade on the lawn. The service was greatly enjoyed.

White Lick Quarterly Meeting was held at West Union August 9-10. Visiting ministers present on Saturday were William Smith, of Westfield, and C. W. Swander, of Wabash. Their messages were much appreciated. On Sabbath morning, Charles Swander gave the message from Ephesians 5:18, to the edification of the audience.

Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, of Hartford, Wisconsin, The World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction of the W. C. T. U., will address the temperance session of Western Yearly Meeting, Friday evening, September 19th. She comes recommended as one of the very best speakers. Do not fail to hear her. On behalf of the Board of Temperance and Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, Jane D. H. Moore, Superintendent.

The Christian Endeavor Department of Western Yearly Meeting is planning great things at Yearly Meeting time. On Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock they will have a young people's rally. Lillian E. Hayes, of Dunreith, Indiana, Secretary of the Young Friends Movement in America, will speak. Also the delegates to the Winona Assembly will give a short report of the Conference this year. At the regular session on Saturday evening, R. A. Walker, Field Secretary of the Indiana State Christian Endeavor Union, will give the address. Do not fail to hear him, as his messages are inspiring and very helpful. Harriet C. Stephens, Superintendent.

Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held at Bloomington, Indiana, August 15-17. Annual reports of the various departments of work indicated a good degree of interest and considerable progress. Superintendents were appointed as follows: Evangelistic, Charles Woodward; Temperance, Mary Spencer; Peace, Book and Tracts, William Paddock; Missionary, Myra Jenkins; Social Purity, Miriam T. Lindley; Bible Schools and Education, Lenora N. Hobbs; Christian Endeavor, Mearl Cook. In the Missionary Conference, Enos Harvey gave an able address. In the meeting for worship on the 16th, James H. Parr, of Pilot Grove, Illinois, brought a message of inspiration. On Sabbath morning in the Educational Conference, Nathan Pickett and H. Paul Kelsey discussed Denominational Education. Roland Campbell recited in a pleasing way, "A Sermon in a Saw Mill." Tressa Stevens, of Cleveland, Ohio, gave the story of her life, how she was led out of Catholicism into the Protestant faith, which her hearers found intensely interesting.

The Alumni Association of Bloomington Academy held its annual meeting on the evening of August 16th at the time of Quarterly Meeting. Talks were given by H. Paul Kelsey and Ben W. Kelley, of Richmond; Mearl Cook gave two piano solos. A stereopticon lecture, "Through the Diamond Fields of Dixie," gave the audience an impressive story of the needs of missionary work among the negroes in some parts of the South.

Prof. W. O. Mendenhall preached an edifying sermon at the First Church, Indianapolis, on August 17, in the absence of the pastor.

Arrangements have been made by the Friends of Plainfield, Indiana, to retain the pastoral services of E. J. Carter for another year. His work has proved a blessing to the meeting.

We learn that the work of rebuilding the Yearly Meeting house at Plainfield is progressing rather slowly, but the contractor thinks he will have the floor in the main auditorium and the roof on in time for use at the coming Yearly Meeting the middle of next month.

Conference of Christian Workers

The Conference of Christian Workers, held at Raisin Valley, Michigan, immediately following Adrian Quarterly Meeting, the first of the month, consisted mostly of lecture periods, conducted by Mary Barrett Pim and William Kirby. From sixty to seventy persons were inmates of the building for the two weeks, some of whom boarded at the table with Howard and Mary Moore, while a large number boarded themselves in the girls' kitchen.

The four special days during the Conference were times of special interest. The Bible School picnic on August 6th was attended by about 300 people, and in addition to the program which the schools presented, William Kirby gave an address and Major J. H. Cole participated. Major Cole also had the service that evening. August 8th was missionary day, and Esther Baird, one of our missionaries from India, gave an address. Evangeline Reams, from the Rescue Home in Columbus, Ohio, was also one of the speakers, and later had a special meeting for women and girls. J. Walter Malone, Jr., Superintendent of the Children's County Training Home, at Amherst, Ohio, was present with four little girls from the school, who participated in the exercises.

August 13th was the reunion of the old students of Raisin Valley Seminary. Over 300 attended, about half of whom were old students and enjoyed the cordial hand shake of old acquaintances and school-mates. Howard and Mary Moore provided for those who chose to go to the dining room, and the lawn presented the appearance of a vast picnic. After the registration tent had been well patronized by old students and visitors, the sound of the old bell called to the school room that was so familiar to many of us both as students and teachers. A short program followed, as well as a business meeting. Officers were elected and steps taken to make the organization permanent. Howard Moore, who with his wife have purchased the property, invited all old students to help make the auditorium attractive and suitable for future gatherings, and to help sustain a regular summer school of Bible Study each year. A general response followed.

August 14th was Christian Endeavor day, and Ralph Coppock, of Damascus, Ohio, was present to assist in the services. On August 17th, the closing day, a large audience attended three services. Raisin Center dismissed its meeting so that all could attend. Eber Hobson preached in the morning, Ralph Coppock in the afternoon, and Edgar A. Wollam in the evening. Mary Barrett Pim attended the meeting at Tecumseh. The closing services were especially interesting, and, in response to the altar call, several came forward as seekers after some blessing.

On the whole, the Conference was successful beyond all expectation, and was made possible by the self sacrificing labors of our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, Howard Moore, and his devoted wife, who under God's leading give themselves to the Lord's work.

Mary C. Wood.

Timothy B. Hussey

Just as we were going to press last week, news was received of the death of Timothy B. Hussey. Since then we have received the following account of his death. Timothy Hussey was known to Friends throughout America, who will mourn his loss:

NORTH BERWICK, MAINE,
8th Mo. 19, 1913.

Editor of American Friend—

Our dear friend, Timothy B. Hussey, passed away here today peacefully at the age of 82, respected and beloved. His sickness has not caused very acute pain. In the last six months, while his physical life has been steadily sapped, his mind has been clear and cheerful. He has expressed thankfulness for sense of divine presence and has taken an interest in all matters of human welfare. Thus has closed a life of self-sacrificing activity in the care of the educational work of Friends, which seemed to open to him as a divine call. His devoted wife died at the Friends' Mission School at Ramallah in Palestine, four years ago.

Sincerely thy friend,

SAMUEL BUFFUM.

In the Northwest

A letter received from Prof. Elwood C. Perisho, a member of Western Yearly Meeting, and now Professor of Geology in the University of South Dakota, and State Geologist of that State, brings the information that he is on an enjoyable trip through the North-West. On August 15th, he was in Glacier National Park, which is designated as a wonderful place, "full of wonder and—geology." It contains eighty live glaciers, two hundred and fifty lakes, many wonderful rivers, picturesque waterfalls, deep valleys, cool canyons and mighty mountains.

On June 17th, Prof. Perisho gave the class address at the United States Indian School at Rapid City, South Dakota, at which there were thirteen graduates, and an elaborate program rendered.

Come to Iowa Yearly Meeting

You are cordially invited to attend the dedication service of the New Yearly Meeting House at Oskaloosa, Iowa, on Friday, September the 5th, at 2:00 o'clock p. m.

May all join in one united prayer of praise and thanksgiving for this great accomplishment, and for the splendid new home of Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends.

In the forenoon of the same day will occur the exercises of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Yearly Meeting.

On behalf of the Committee on Arrangements. STEPHEN M. HADLEY, Chairman.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, August 15, 1913.

An Appreciation

We are constrained to print the following statement of appreciation from an Indiana Friends minister, which is somewhat typical of communications which not infrequently find their way into THE AMERICAN FRIEND office. Such messages are like oases in a desert to a tired traveler, and an editor's office is a place to get tired, and all but discouraged sometimes.

FARMLAND, INDIANA, 8-21-1913.

Dear Friend:—

After reading this week's issue of our paper, I am constrained to send a word of appreciation to you. The editorials on the liquor question and the message we should preach are simply splendid and will no doubt bring rich harvests in the church. I like the paper as a whole, the editorials are always vital. I want to encourage you with my support and what help I can give.

Sincerely,

M. S. HINCKLE.

Declaration of Faith

Friends Book Supply of Wichita, Kansas, which, as we understand, represents the Book and Tract Committee of Kansas Yearly Meeting, has issued in small pamphlet form of 54 pages with cover a booklet entitled "The Declaration of Faith of The Society of Friends in America."

It is published in three sections, of which Section One is a reprint of "Some Essential Truths," found in Section 3 of the Uniform Discipline under the heading, "Beliefs;" Section Two is the complete Richmond Declaration of Faith; and Section Three is the letter of George Fox to the Governor of Barbadoes written in 1671.

An Explanatory Note says:

"The publication of the Declaration of Faith of the Society of Friends in America meets a long-felt demand for a comprehensive authoritative statement of Friends' doctrines. Owing to their different origins there is much difference of style and repetition of thought in the three declarations of faith; but such an evident unity runs through them all together that they really constitute one Declaration of Faith."

It is stated that the Scriptural references have been made to conform to the Revised Version.

The various utterances of Friends upon doctrinal beliefs have not been placed before in such comprehensive and usable form, and the booklet should find a ready sale. Price, single copy, 10 cents; six copies, 50 cents. Order of Friends Book Supply, Wichita, Kansas.

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built Up on Right Food

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics—drugs.

New material from which to rebuild wasted nerve cells, is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"Two years ago I found myself on the verge of a complete nervous collapse, due to overwork and study, and to illness in the family," writes a Wis. young mother.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics prescribed by physicians, but their effects wore off shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me and I gained no flesh nor blood.

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts before retiring.

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained 20 lbs. in weight and felt like a different woman. My little daughter whom I was obliged to keep out of school last spring on account of chronic catarrh, has changed from a thin, pale nervous child to a rosy, healthy girl and has gone back to school this fall.

"Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish the happy results."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

SEPTEMBER 7.

SUBJECT—The Ten Commandments.

LESSON—Ex. 20: 1-11. Commit verses 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind."—Luke 10:27.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

SEPTEMBER 7.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. IX. His Faith. I John 5: 1-15.

Faith is the biggest asset in the life of the true Christian. There are always possibilities ahead, not revealed as yet, but seen by the eye of faith, which beckon onward and upward in the Christian life.

Faith is always the measure of blessing to every life. Dare to prove God, honestly and sincerely, and faith will grow. He is always faithful and true to His promises.

With faith in God, consecration becomes an act of joy. There are no risks in committing all to Him. Faith is trust in Jehovah, not a blind reliance, but a living confidence that all is well.

Read the Eleventh Chapter of Hebrews as God's honor roll of those who triumphed mightily through faith. Enlarge the roll by considering other saints of God in mediaeval and modern history.

Editorial Comment on Current Events

The effect of the every-member canvass was to raise the annual contributions for missions in the United Presbyterian Church from $600,000.00 to $800,000.00. It is a system that should be extended to every denomination. Every member of the Church, young and old, should be taught to give something with persistent regularity. It will mean the solution of all missionary problems, and the proper financing of greater projects for the spread of the gospel.

The daily press has announced the report that Emperor William has renounced intoxicants of all kinds. Whether or not the report is true, it is known that the Emperor for some time has been concerned over the prevalence of beer drinking, especially in the army, and upon more than one occasion has sought to pledge the youth especially to total abstinence. Thus even beer is being stabbed in the very house of its friends. An enlightened civilization cannot long tolerate the liquor traffic.

The scope of the parcels post service is being enlarged. On August 15, the weight limit on packages was raised from eleven to twenty pounds, and the charges for transportation were sharply reduced. The "banking by mail" feature was also added. It is said that more than $50,000.00 per year will be saved by the interchangeable use of the parcels post stamp and the ordinary postage stamp. Secretary Burleson announces that the various changes will contribute to the creation of a surplus for the first time in the history of the postal service.

It is deplorable that the new Chinese Republic should have been called upon to suppress a rather formidable rebellion so early in its history. Perhaps in the present status of civilization in that country, it was inevitable. Reports show that the government is winning at almost every point, and that the rebel forces are dwindling in nearly every province. Surprise has been expressed that Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the former Provisional President, is on the side of the rebellion, and what his fate will be is uncertain. There have been reports that he had fled to Japan, but this is not entirely authenticated. While the strife is most unfortunate, it would seem to be in the interests of the best civilization in China that the government at Peking should be the victor. The downfall of Chinese democracy at the outset would have been a calamity, and would have affected disastrously the future status of Christianity in that country.

Sweden is evidently awakening to the evils of Mormonism, which is apparently seeking for a foothold in that country as elsewhere. The government has recently appropriated a sum of money with which to carry on a propaganda, educating the people against the evils of Mormon teachings. The campaign has gone so far that Mormons who are American citizens have been expelled from that country. In the face of such strenuous efforts to safeguard the faith of the people, we in this country are strangely apathetic. Norway is to act in concert with Sweden in the campaign that is on. America might learn lessons from others.

One of the most remarkable events of the recent International Medical Congress at London, attended by 8,000 physicians from every part of the world, was the report on alcoholism. It was said that total abstinence is becoming the practice more and more in both the army and navy in England, and that the use of alcohol in hospitals by the medical men of that country has greatly decreased. The president of the Congress made an appeal to the physicians that they endeavor to check the use of medicated wines, which he said without exception are mischievous in their effect. Such reports mark real progress in the movement for temperance reform in the world.

The central committee of the United Missionary Campaign is making extensive plans for the campaign of next winter, which is expected to include 2,500 missionary conferences and to be followed in March by a simultaneous every-member canvass of practically all the evangelical denominations of the country. At the last meeting of the committee, the decision of the Protestant Episcopal Church not to participate was announced, and in consequence Bishop A. S. Lloyd, President of the Protestant Episcopal Mission Board, who has been elected chairman of the central committee, offered his resignation. Dr. Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Presbyterian Foreign Board, was elected in his stead and accepted the office. George Innes, the secretary loaned to the campaign by the United Presbyterians, reported the adherence to the plan of 16 denominations in the United States and Canada, which number 15,000,000 communicants in 200,000 congregations.—Missionary Review.

In Russia there is antipathy to all religion, with the result that there has been a terrible decline in morality. In a population approximately one hundred millions, there are 100,000 students, of whom 25,000 are women. These have little, if any, moral education. The school expects the church to look after morals, while the church turns the problem over to the home. The home turns the matter back to the church, and in consequence responsibility exists nowhere. It is fortunate that the Y. M. C. A. has been able to get a foothold in Russian centers of education, and the future will ere long not be so dark. Russia needs the gospel of Christ to illuminate the darkness of that benighted country.

With Our Contemporaries

One of the most serious undertakings in the form of constructive Christian work that has come to our notice recently has just been started in the city of Los Angeles, California. After months of careful study and deliberation, and after numerous conferences with the mayor, the chief of police, the judge of the Superior Court (who also presides over the Probationary Court), and the heads of the compulsory department of the public schools, the Methodist ministers of Los Angeles appointed a committee to be known as "The Committee on Public Morals," with Chaplain O. J. Nave as chairman.

This committee, with the assistance of the officials named, has worked out a plan to secure the co-operation of all the churches in the city in solving the problem of civil government, especially with respect to the wayward elements of society. Back of the movement is the deep-seated conviction that each prisoner who, because of his criminal tendencies, becomes the problem of the city, should also be the problem of the Church, and, as the city undertakes to restrain him, the Church should undertake to reclaim and help him to become a better citizen.—Western Christian Advocate.

We have no union of Church and State, and want none. Nevertheless, it is true that the safety and growth of the State depend on the prevalence of the principles inculcated by the Church. The more men fear God and keep His commandments the better they will serve the country.—Herald and Presbyter.

Experimental Religion

In the midst of the materialism of this age there is abundant need that the faith and teachings of the Society of Friends be emphasized increasingly. Friends have ever stood for the essence of things—the essence of true discipleship, the essence of worship, the essence of Christian living.

The early Friends did not revolt against the forms of the established Church so much as against their emptiness, their unreality, their hypocrisy. Had George Fox found within the Church the rest of soul and the spiritual sustenance which he sought, he would not have been the founder of a new sect. It was the sham, the shallowness, the religious pretexts which he found within the Church, against which his soul revolted, and against such every sincere Christian man and woman must ever revolt.

Far be it from us to sit in judgment upon our brethren, within or without our denominational fold, but may it not be that the lack in religious power, so often deplored on the part of the Church, is a lack in religious experience and in personal contact with Christ? The magnetic power of the early Friends lay not in a personality that differed from others, nor yet in any outward peculiarities that circumstances led them to acquire, but rather in that personal consciousness of the overshadowing presence of Christ their Savior, whom they had come to see and know as an all-sufficient friend and helper in every circumstance of life.

There are great problems of humanity today that are awaiting solution by some sympathetic agency, but they can never be solved by a Church that is formal, whose ministry and workmanship are professional rather than realistic. Professional Christianity will never save the world. It must be experimental or it is lifeless. Regular attendance upon the appointed services of the Church will not alone constitute a Christian, no more than the rental of a room in a college building will of itself produce a college graduate.

The world and the world's problems need men and women whose lives have been flooded with Christ's holy presence, who, because the love of Christ constraineth them, have the true spirit of brotherhood as they mingle with their fellows in the daily tasks of life. Sinful men and women can never be won by patronizing them, but by giving them a brother's hand, into whose grasp flows the current of sympathy and fraternity.

The times need a revival of the Quakerism of our fathers who saw the Light and turned not aside from its leading. By prayer, by dedication, by consecration, we may know the Spirit's voice as did Fox and his followers, if we are diligent to seek after Him. And the testimony of a life that walks with God has lost none of its efficacy with the passing of the years.

Jogging the Memory a Little

We find that a considerable number of subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND are in arrears for their subscriptions. A number have waited until after the harvesting of the crops before remitting. This deficiency is somewhat embarrassing to the management at this season of the year, which is busy enough with the daily duty of getting out a creditable paper, without having to struggle with the inability to meet printing bills. We appeal earnestly to those who know themselves to be in arrears that they make every effort to remit at once. We cannot emphasize the urgency of the appeal too strongly. Address THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

Paul was never quite able to cease wondering at the great mercy which could save an offender like himself. We are too prone to cheapen salvation. It is not something to be accepted or to be let alone at will. Rather it is the pearl of great price to be sought for with diligence and profoundly appreciated when once obtained.

Christ came that the world might have life more abundantly. Life means freedom from sin, freedom from death. It means joy in service as well as gladness in existing. To accept Christ means more than a mental assent to His divinity. It is to be engrafted into His life, and to be partaker of His bounties.

Many a person finds fault with foreign missionary activity who never contributed a cent to gospel work in the home land. The grouch has no place in God's economy.

"Consider Christ Jesus" Heb. 3: 1.

BY LUKE WOODARD

No. 5.—The Atonement

In treating of this fundamental doctrine I shall not concern myself with the objections of infidels, or the speculations of theologians. Since it is a matter of revelation, my appeal shall be to the Holy Scriptures which are allowed by evangelical believers to be the only source of information on this important theme, and the standard by which all doctrinal controversies are to be judged. Their testimony is therefore conclusive.

The word atonement is the same in the Greek as the one which is translated in the Revised Version, reconciliation. Webster defines it in its theological sense as "The expiation of sin made by the obedience and personal sufferings of Christ." Thus the word designates that by which atonement or reconciliation is effected. This, in the New Testament is ascribed interchangeably to the death, the sacrifice or sufferings, the blood, and by way of autonomy to the Cross of Christ, varying terms signifying the same thing.

The unprejudiced student of the New Testament can not fail to perceive that both Christ and the apostles attach to the death or blood of Christ, an importance which they attribute to nothing else in connection with His person. It is the means of revolted man's reconciliation. "We are reconciled to God by the death of His Son." While other men come into the world under the necessity of dying, Christ came into the world for this purpose. "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He himself likewise took part of the same that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death are all their life time subject to bondage."

"For this cause He is the mediator of the new testament that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions which were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."

The blood of Christ is not merely a means, but the means of human salvation. What else is meant by His own expression: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood ye have no life in you"?*

"We have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of our sins." It is in virtue of His blood that our natural enmity is removed, and the penitent sinner is reconciled to his offended Lord. "For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell and having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things to Himself: by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven. And you that were some time alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprouvable in His sight." Col. 1: 19-22. In this brief passage we have a comprehensive summary of the doctrine of the Atonement, both in its objective phase—the exalted person of Christ and His efficacious sacrifice; and its subjective phase in the experience of those who truly believe.

The blood of Christ as an atonement was pre-figured in type and foretold in prophecy. "All things under the law were purged with blood, and without shedding of blood, was no remission of sins." The paschal lamb was the first born child's redemptive substitute, and the blood thereof was Israel's means of deliverance. "When I see the blood," was the divine proclamation, "I will pass over you." The apostle bases on this typical rite its anti-typical significance. "Even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us," clearly implying the redemptive and substitutionary character of His sacrifice. The same truth is clearly taught in the fifty-third of Isaiah: "He was wounded for our transgressions. He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."

The New Testament abounds in expressions in confirmation of the truth that the blood of Christ is the indispensable means of man's salvation. (For brevity's sake I must limit my quotations.) At the last supper our Savior in passing the cup said, "This is the cup of the new testament in my blood which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Paul says, "We are justified by His blood"; and Peter, that "We are redeemed by the precious blood of Christ"; and John, that "The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin." The innumerable multitude which John saw in heaven had all "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," and the song of the glorified was, "Thou art worthy, for thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood."

In one aspect the death of Christ was the lowest point of His humiliation, in another, it is the summit of His majesty, the hour in which "the Son of man was glorified." The Jews sought by putting Christ to the ignominious death of the Cross, to put an end to the career of One they hated, envied and feared; and to throw over Him such an eclipsing infamy as would render His memory odious in the minds of His admiring followers. But "why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" The cross did not eclipse His name; He transfigured the cross, so that from that time henceforth, through all succeeding ages the language of adoring love and triumphant faith is: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

* Our Lord often spoke, as in this instance, in figurative language; but it is highly important, in explaining this passage, that we place the figure on the right word, that is, on the eating and drinking. We eat His flesh and drink His blood, when by faith we partake, in a spiritual sense, of His body that was broken for us, and His blood which He shed for us, thus spiritualizing the eating and drinking, rather than the flesh and blood.

A true estimate of the death of Christ requires a right answer to the question, "What think ye of Christ?" The material cross on which Christ died, and the manner of His being suspended upon it were not unlike those of the two malefactors who were crucified with Him. Other things must be taken into the account. They died justly as individuals for their own sin. Christ died, "the just for the unjust" and being the Son of Man, He died as the representative of the entire race of man. He was "the propitiation for the sins of the whole world."

He was the Son of God as well as the son of Mary and surely it was His infinite dignity in the glorious godhead that stamps that atonement with infinite merit, that ransom price with incalculable value.

There is something about the death of Christ as recorded in the Gospels that carries with it the evidence that it was an event unparalleled in the history of the world. His antecedent agony in the Garden, when human hands were not yet upon Him—an agony so intense that it extorted from Him groans of anguish, and sweat of blood, can be explained on no other ground than that He was about to drain a cup due to the accumulated sins of a revolted world.

Then, again, His comparative calmness when hanging on the cross; His filial thought for His mother; His address to the penitent thief, on the one hand; on the other, the attestation of nature as if something unusual had startled her—the noonday sun shrouded in darkness as if it could not brook the sight; a great earthquake that burst the rocks and opened the graves from which the bodies of many saints arose, after His resurrection, and went into the holy city and were seen of many; the rending from top to bottom of the vail of the Temple—these diversified and miraculous occurrences, proclaimed with emphasis, that that death was not that of an ordinary man and justified the exclamation of the centurion, "Truly this was the Son of God."

The suffering of Christ as God's chosen Lamb is the highest conceivable exhibition of His love and mercy. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

It is at the same time the supreme exhibition of His righteousness, and of His abhorrence of sin. If sin by the commandment is made exceeding sinful (Rom. 7: 13), how much more when the sovereign Law Giver Himself voluntarily takes upon Him its awful penalty!

The way of salvation through Christ and Him crucified, affords a ground upon which God, the unchangeably holy One can forgive sin, and restore the penitent rebel to His favor, without lowering the authority of His throne, or impairing the sanctity of His perfect law. Grace is triumphant it is true, but it reigns through righteousness (Rom. 5: 23), and in such manner that the sinful heart is cured of its malady, and he who has received the abundance of grace has come to know not only the fellowship of Christ's sufferings, but also the power of His resurrection, and being dead to sin, can no longer live therein. A comprehensive and beautiful epitome of this method of salvation is given us by the apostle in Rom. 3: "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time His righteousness that He might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

John Woolman: The Quaker

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON*

If one wishes to take a long journey into a quaint and strange place, let him dip into the Journal of George Fox. It is like a little rusty gate which opens right into the heart of the seventeenth century, so that when we go in by it we find ourselves pilgrims with the quiet old Quaker in the oddest kind of England. What an England it was, hot-blooded, undignified, fantastic, and in many ways inconsequent.

Ecclesiastically the country was in chaos. The pulpits of the Episcopacy were filled with Puritan preachers. All sorts of queer sects flourished, some of them small enough to be called insects. A kind of nominal toleration was in vogue, and all the land, good, bad and indifferent, was eager for religious argument. Everywhere, in church, in market-place, and in courthouse, the wordy warfare went on. Men used Bible texts as clubs wherewith to belabor each other, which is ever a sure sign that religious life is at a low ebb.

George Fox, born eight years after the death of Shakespeare, was the son of a weaver, and early apprenticed as a shoemaker. Unlearned in the schools, he was a man of great ability, "religious, inward, still, and keenly observing." Brooding much over the state of religion in his day, he felt the stirrings of the Spirit of God within him to proclaim the gospel of the Inner Light as superior, though not necessarily opposed to the authority of Church and Bible. In 1643 he set forth on his great black horse "to declare the day of the Lord," and many adventures befell him. Truly he was an arresting figure, and his service to the liberty of faith and the reality of the inner life of the spirit, entitle him to high honor.

Now that immovable old Friend said some keen things about our religious ancestors, but, like the soldier who saw him assailed by a mob, we are ready to say, "Sir, I see you are a man." He never took the bark off his words, and they were sometimes a bit rough. He called all churches steeple-houses, and all preachers priests and hirelings. Naturally this did not add to his popularity among the clergy, and as he insisted on speaking out in meeting he spent much time in jail. When he appeared in a village the clergy would assemble with their Bibles, and attack him with arguments. He never lost his temper; he left that to his opponents; and when he got the best of the argument, as he usually did, they would pound him first with their Bibles, and then with fists and sticks. Next day he would appear in the village again to the amazement of all, who thereupon would give him respectful attention.

After that, there was nothing to do but to bring him up before the magistrate, where another argument usually took place. Fox outwitted the bench as well as the pulpit, and it was in one of these parleys with Justice Bennett, when he "bid the judge tremble at the word of the Lord," that he was first called, in mockery, a Quaker. What a scene was that before Judge Glynn, then Chief Justice of England. Fox was brought in and uttered his usual gentle blessing, "Peace be among you."

"What be these you have brought into the Court?" asked the Judge of the jailor. Then turning to the prisoners, he said: "Why do you not put off your hats?"

"Where did any magistrate, king, or judge, from Moses to Daniel, command any to put off their hats? Where does the law of England command any such thing? Show me that law," asked Fox with that imperturbable serenity so exasperating to his foes.

"Take him away, prevaricator, I'll ferk him," cried the Judge, hot with anger, his face as red as a berry in a bush. So Fox went away to jail. After a while the Judge thought he had an argument that would silence the prisoner, and had Fox brought into court again.

"Come," said the Judge to the prisoner, "where had they hats from Moses to Daniel; come, answer me; I have you fast now."

"Thou mayest read in the third of Daniel that the three children were put into the fiery furnace with their coats, their hose and their hats on," said Fox quietly.

"Take him away, jailor!" cried the Judge, more angry than ever. Fox was led away and thrust among thieves where he was kept a great while.

None the less, between spells in jail the old Friend went about his mission and won many followers, who were filled with an ardent zeal to convert others. Some of them went to the West Indies, to America, to Jerusalem, to Malta, and Mary Fisher—for women were among their preachers—went to Smyrna and Greece, and even sought audience with the Sultan. Everywhere they suffered bitter persecution. Not until 1689, the year before Fox died, did England grant them toleration. Carlyle has left us unforgettable pictures of the interviews between Fox and Cromwell, and how each strong man hailed the other instantly. Fox had no notion of forming a separate sect, believing that his truth would conquer the church, as it seems well nigh to have done. Yet his followers naturally drew together and formed a church in 1666.

"I was sent," said the gentle Quaker, by the divine Power and Spirit of God, to bring people off from their own ways to Christ, the new and living way, and from their churches which men had made and gathered to the Church of God, the General Assembly written in heaven. And I was to bring the people that they might know the pure religion, might visit the fatherless, the widows, and strangers, and keep themselves from the spots of the world."

Happily such teaching is now far wider than the Society of Friends; in the heart of it, it is as wide as the world. The England of George Fox has passed away, and much that was distinctive of early Quakerism has passed away also. For us the name Quaker evokes visions of drab coats, silver-gray heads, and old-fashioned speech, of fragrant lives and sweet deeds of charity, and faces benign in their serenity and goodness. In their revolt from external form and their plea for more inwardness, and therefore for more reality, in the religious life, Fox and his followers helped forward the cause of faith and the higher life.

Review of New England Yearly Meeting

BY THOMAS J. BATTEY

(Substance of a Review given Sabbath morning, July 6, at the Providence, R. I., Meeting.)

Many of us, perhaps, have during the hours of the past week, found ourselves harking back, as it were, to the experiences of Yearly Meeting the week before. We have reviewed its discussions and listened again to its messages of instruction. We may well ask ourselves, as the sounds of its many voices are gradually fading out in the distance, "What was its predominant note? Did it have one, and if so, did our ears detect it?" Out of all the variety of expression; in all the differing shades and multiplicity of opinions, did there finally crystallize a product that can be labeled and treasured as something worthy to be preserved in memory; something that we shall be able to look back upon as amply justifying the strenuous experience of the week through which we passed? Certainly there were no signs of stagnation. Activity, movement, keen interest in affairs were enough in evidence. New, aggressive, and, we trust, far-sighted policies were inaugurated. There were blessedly few notes that jarred the general ear, and fewer still, that left any sting behind. All these things give cause for gratitude, and, as far as they go, inspire with hope and courage for the future. But is our question yet answered? What was the predominant note; the strain that struck the marching step of the Meeting, if we may use such an expression? Did not our ears catch the undertone of a great harmony, that as we think of it, overmastered all else; not always very clear, perhaps; sometimes, it may be, lost in the din of discussion, but then rising again in clearer tones, until in the closing session it became the master key to which we could all keep step? If the feeling, or impulse, or prevailing sentiment which these words try to describe, could be put into speech at all, we should have to quote the text, "Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." If New England Yearly Meeting is really marching to this music, though as yet with somewhat uneven step, there is hope for her. If this is growing to be more and more the predominant note, as I believe the experiences of this year showed it to be, we may well thank God and take courage. This is the real "Music of the Spheres" and if our ears can only catch it in its fullness, our pulses will quicken; our pace will quicken too; our burdens will grow lighter because there will be more to share them; the forward march will be better timed, and when we strike the blows will be more effective.

I hope we are not mistaken in taking this view of the matter. It certainly ought to be true, and if we are all fully persuaded of this, will not our believing it to be true, help to make it so? If we can set this before us as a supreme ideal; if we can accustom our ears to hear and listen for its music, perhaps we shall find that we are helping to make that music ourselves. Let us examine the passage from which the text is taken, somewhat in detail, that we may catch its spirit and the fullness of its meaning. We find it in Matthew 23: 1-12. It is a part of one of those great discourses uttered during Passion Week,—that life and death struggle with the blindness and bigotry of Pharisee and Sadducee on the one hand, and the dullness of loyal disciples on the other. The Christ realizes to the full how short his time is before the ranks of opposition close him round, and the night cometh when no man can work. He speaks with the shadow of the cross darkening over him, and his words are impressive beyond measure, when he says to the multitudes and to his disciples—

"The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not. For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers. But all their works they do for to be seen of men; they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, and love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi. But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ: and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted."

Let us bear in mind that we are beholding here the wise Master Builder, laying broad and sure the foundation stones of the Kingdom of God. And let us mark well four of these stones, including the Master himself, who is the chief corner stone.

1st. Recognition of the fact that one is your master, even Christ. The headship of Jesus Christ and heart loyalty to him—nothing can take the place of these. They are the supreme essential for membership in the Kingdom of God. In vain shall we call him our Master if he has not mastered us. If we have not seen in him the masterful spirit that compels by its absolute supremacy our glad and willing submission, we still have the first primary lesson to learn. Our knowledge may be crude, our obedience slow and halting, our mistakes many, but unless he looms large as the bright particular star in our mental sky, what right have we to the name of Christian? One is your master, even Christ, and let us beware that no "ism" or theory or social fad blind our eyes to the fact, and let no pet indulgence obscure our vision of his face.

The second foundation stone is, "all ye are brethren." Heart acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Christ, ought to beget love of the brethren just as naturally as water flows downward from the spring. This is what St. John means when he says, "This is the commandment which we have received of him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." This is the dominating thought in the Master's prayer in John 17: "And the glory that thou hast given me I have given unto them, that they all may be one, even as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou didst send me. And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given unto them: that they may be one even as we are one; I in them and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that thou didst send me, and lovedst them even as thou lovedst me."

Do we catch the great meaning of these words? Do we note the far-reaching consequences of a love of the brethren like this? the oneness of a group of believers, obediently loyal to a master mind; a brotherly love that does not end in good fellowship merely, finding its satisfaction in a round of social amenities and pleasurable companionship? Mark his words "That the world may know that thou didst send me." We shall never understand our Christ until we realize two things, that his is the master mind, and that his ambitions are world wide. It is no narrow aim, therefore, that he has in view, as though he were binding to himself a select few who should enjoy his fellowship and their own, and soon get through this vale of tears to enter upon endless felicity on the golden streets of paradise. Not that; it is a world conquest on which he is bent, and the fellowship of the saints is an essential factor in that age-long work.

This focuses our attention on the third foundation stone of the Kingdom, viz., that greatness consists in service. Listen again to his words, "He that is greater among you shall be your servant (or minister), and whosoever shall exalt himself shall be humbled, and whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted." This thought of helpful service to others is set forth as the great thing, the honorable thing, the antidote and foil to the smallness, self-seeking and hypocrisy that prides itself in social distinction, in chief seats, in broad phylacteries, in long prayers, and the admiration of the multitude. "Yea, they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with their fingers." How these words flood with light the inmost heart of the great Burden-bearer, and reveal the vastness of his plans for human betterment.

One thing more remains to be noted, "Call no man your father upon the earth, for one is your Father which is in heaven." Here we have it now complete. The fatherhood of God, the headship of Jesus Christ; the brotherhood of believers; humble, helpful service, the means employed for a world conquest. Thus founded the great temple, the new Jerusalem of Revelation, stands four square to all the winds, its gates open to all the world; the length, breadth and height of it equal.

Was it some intimation of this fourfold harmony that our late Yearly Meeting gave us? Is she really getting more and more into step with this music? I, for one, am hopeful that she is, and I look upon it as the promise and potency of better things in store. Her members may go on declining for a time. Real strength does not lie in numbers only. If there be no dry rot at the core; if the precious seed be yet sound, the germs of a new and fuller life may yet be warmed and nurtured into a growth that shall cover the needy fields of New England with an abundant harvest for the Master's garner.

"Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth more laborers into his harvest."

North Carolina Summer School

BY ALICE PAIGE WHITE

At the close of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, a summer school was held at Guilford College from August 11th to 17th. This was planned by the Yearly Meeting's committees on Bible Schools, Missions and Young Friends' Activities. After a brief meeting for devotion and inspiration each morning, classes were held until 11:30, and then followed an informal conference on some practical question, e. g., the Race Problem, the Graded Lessons in the Bible School, the teaching of missions in the Bible School, etc.

The following program of classes gives some idea of the scope of the work:

8:30 to 9:30—Classes.

1. Class to study the Bible School lessons for the coming year. Leader, William T. Boyce.
2. Class for the study of the nature of the child and youth. Leader, Irene Boyles, Greensboro.
3. Class in Missions—Text-book, "Servants of the King." Leader, Clara I. Cox. Charles Tebbetts in attendance.

9:30 to 10:30—Classes.

1. Class for the study of the graded lessons. Leader, Clara Harold. Demonstrations by Bessie Cox Saunders.
2. Class for Bible Study, "The Gospels." Leader, Wilbur K. Thomas.
3. Class in Mission Study, "The Up-lift of China." Leader, Tien Lu Lee, University of Peking, China.

10:30 to 11:30—Class for the study of Friends' History, Willard O. Trueblood.

The studies of each of the Gospels by Wilbur K. Thomas were very illuminating and gave the members of his class a clearer perception of the individuality of each Gospel. The presence of a Chinese scholar gave reality to the study of China and Mr. Lee's class was large and enthusiastic.

The evening addresses were well attended by the community and were all inspiring. Willard O. Trueblood especially won the hearts of his hearers and fired the zeal of all who heard him, particularly the young. Vesper services were held each evening on the big porch of Founders Hall or on the Library steps. One afternoon an excursion was taken to the Guilford Battle Ground, when Herbert W. Reynolds acted as guide, as he in turn had been guided in his college days by Addison Coffin who learned each spot from the mouth of one who had actually helped to bury the dead after the battle.

Another afternoon about forty went to the White Oak Mills in Greensboro, where an opportunity was given to see every process in one of the largest and best conducted cotton mills in the country. On another day the young people of New Garden gave an informal out-door reception to the attenders of the Summer School.

The instruction was all of a high order, reverent and clear. The good fellowship as we mingled at meals and on the beautiful campus was a joy to all. The interchange of thought and closer acquaintance was a rare privilege and those who were in attendance went to their homes feeling an added sense of responsibility.

It may be truly said that this conference was fully up to the standard set by the summer schools Friends have held in other parts of the country. It is hoped that this gathering, coming as it did in a growing Yearly Meeting and in one with a large proportion of young people, is an earnest of many more in succeeding years. Such assemblies will help to train our young people to take hold of the work of the church with zeal and intelligence.

The success of this school is largely due to the labors of Raymond Binford and William T. Boyce, but the hearty co-operation of all who attended was a great factor in that success. Eighty-five attenders were registered and many came in from the community without registering. There was often over a hundred in attendance at one class. All but one of the eight Quarterly Meetings were represented and there were six visitors from other Yearly Meetings.

Throughout the time the atmosphere was earnest and the words of our conference hymn, written by our Quaker poet, Whittier, voice the aspiration of the attenders at this summer gathering—

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways!
Reclothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives Thy service find;
In deeper reverence, praise."

Thinking and Being

BY ALFRED YOUNG

Notes of an address given at Wellington, Ontario.

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." Prov. 23: 7. Man is a composite creation, he has diverse parts of being, and according to the working out of given laws, so reference is made to those parts of his being, which, so marvelously divergent in their separate and respective spheres, are yet one great whole. Some one has said, "Mind is superior to matter," and, in so far as the actions of our life are largely controlled by our mind in thought, or in other words, deeds, which are but the fruit of thought, we find ourselves in accord with the words of our text.

That these divergent parts of our being have their place we gain evidence in our daily life. To loathe sin with a whole-souled loathing is significant, for it is the soul that sinneth which shall die. The body, casket, or covering, will, in the natural order of things, die, but we do not speak of the body hating sin and death. The affections are invariably associated with the heart, and we think of and speak about love and affection from that standpoint, as though it were a distinct and separate part of our being. When we deal with our thoughts we connect mind and brain with still another of the wondrous functions which serve to make up the mighty whole of body, soul and spirit.

In the text before us we are confronted with a very succinct statement, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." I have no desire to split straws by a scientific and exhaustive study of anatomy in order to prove that a man's thinking power lies in his brain and not his heart. I am willing to concede this to save time to get to a more important matter, viz., the thoughts of a man; emanate where they will, from heart or brain, it is the thought of a man which control his life. In this connection let us ever remember the natural condition of man's heart, before the regenerative work of the Spirit of God has been carried out, is that of deep depravity, wickedness and deceit.

Long years before the advent of the world's Redeemer, the old prophet Jeremiah had found out and warned the people that "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." Jer. 7: 9. So that it was no new theory, no new and wondrous story, the Lord Jesus had to tell, when he said to those about him, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth. Those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. These are the things which defile a man." Matt. 15: 11, 18, 19.

And in connection with those words let us in passing note; the climax of evil thoughts is, blasphemous utterances. What an awful gap lies between the first and the last may well be left to our own imagination to conjecture, and ponder over. But let us for the moment leave that thought and hasten on to the second, which we may gather from our text. While it is a self-evident fact that man's heart is, in its natural state, deceitful and wicked, it is also equally true that there is much evidence of a restlessness and unwillingness to remain so. Aspirations after holiness, longings for a purer condition, strivings after light mark the desire of the soul to be free. In his wild struggles for freedom, in his blind gropings in the dark for a ray of sunshine, man is led, albeit oftentimes blindly, to the full blaze of light and truth in Jesus Christ and thenceforth he lives in sweet and blessed communion with his God.

Let us briefly examine the modus operandi of this transition from darkness to light, from the power of sin and Satan into the liberty of Jesus Christ. First, that which is natural; afterwards, that which is spiritual. First darkness, deceit, uncleanness; afterwards, light, sincerity, purity. First, evil thoughts and the whole category of heinous sins attached thereto; afterwards, pure thoughts and the beautiful bunch of luscious grapes which grows upon the tender twig of the vine, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, etc.

Between that first and afterwards, what heart sorrows! What failures! What struggles! The aspirations after holiness and purity are in the heart, but like Paul of old, we are led to exclaim, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Or in the words of the poet we may say:

"Like wandering sheep o'er mountains cold,
Since all have gone astray;
To 'Life' and peace within the fold,
How may I find the Way?"

And into that darkness, that despair, that sinfulness, that wretchedness, comes the golden beam of hope. It is at first a tiny ray of sunshine creeping through the heart's door, a faint whisper of a loving voice heard amid the clamorous sounds of earth. The inhalation of a breath of the sweetness and fragrance of the Heavenly hills.

Then follows the craving for more, then men's hearts yearn for the life and power, the peace and blessedness which are the characteristics of the Lord Jesus Christ. The faint ray of hope leads men on, gently, gradually, but none the less surely men learn this great truth. "Every man hath his hope, i. e., the hope of being a son of God, and seeing Christ as he is; purifieth himself even as he is pure." I John 2: 3. Humanity does this in obedience to the exhortation to "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." 2 Phil. 12-13. God's good pleasure is, that all may live that none should die. Man is confronted with the stern, relentless fact. In the natural condition his heart and thoughts are wicked continually and lead down to darkness and death. Side by side with that, however, is another and a greater fact, God in Christ Jesus came to destroy this darkness and death by bringing light and life and thus leads men upward by sweet thoughts and pure. The antidote to evil is good. The contrast to death is life. Darkness and light are antagonistic, and so the real true fight commences. With a wondrous vision of the Christ life granted to him, mankind begins to "Think on those things which are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report." Inwardly he prays, that if there be any virtue (power) which will aid him to a good, sweet, wholesome life, by thinking on these things, he may have grace granted him so to think. This means the fountain or source of his thoughts is to be changed. Pure thoughts and a clear, sweet life, can only be produced by making the source clean. It is in response to the cry—"Create in me a clear heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me," that this becomes possible. Just so long as the fount or source is contaminated, whether it be of water or thoughts, so long will the stream be contaminated. The purifying of the source can be accomplished alone by the Spirit of God. We are only able to work out, or give out, pour forth, what He gives in. Our deeds are but the tangible expressions of our thoughts. Our thoughts arise from one of two distinct sources. Either from the heart in its natural condition which is productive of evil thoughts, or the heart in its new and spiritual condition which is conducive to thoughts of purity, peace and power.

In this new life and power, when man has been translated from darkness to light, from the power of evil, to the power of goodness, man begins by revelation to see God through Jesus Christ. Let us note man does not become pure in heart, because he sees God. His ability to see God is the reward for becoming pure in heart. Our blessed Lord Jesus said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Man in his natural depraved nature cannot see God. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared Him." John 1-18. We become pure in heart by sharing the purity of the heart and life of Him who loved us and gave himself for us. The transforming power of the indwelling Christ is the secret of altered lives. In response to man's pitious appeal for help to break free from sin and death the loving Savior comes as an integral part of our life and being. Henceforth man realizes it is no longer "I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me!" Gal. 2: 20. The I in man dies daily, in order that thy might become the dominant factor of his life. It is no longer my but thy thoughts. The my will gives place to thy will. My desires are overruled by thy glory. The old things have passed away, all things have become new, all things are of God. Man's thoughts become pure because they are controlled by the sweet spirit of the pure and holy one who indwells his heart, the source of his thoughts. His life becomes pure as a consequence of his thoughts being pure. Because his life, thoughts and heart are pure, he sees God. He lives in a new creation, and his friends in his conduct God's likeness shall see.

Then with the gift of holiness within us;
We not less human, but made more divine;
Our lives replete with heaven's supernal beauty,
Ever declare that beauty, Lord, is Thine.

So I earnestly desire for us all that we may say: .

Lord, we Thy presence seek,
Ours may this blessing be;
O give this pure and lowly heart
A temple meet for Thee.

Western Yearly Meeting Conference

The Bible School and Y. P. S. C. E. Departments of Western Yearly Meeting met in their annual assembly at Vermilion Grove, Illinois, August 5-7. The opening address was given by E. M. Woodard on "The Price of Victory," and the music for the first session was furnished by the choir from Pilot Grove.

On Wednesday W. O. Trueblood, pastor of the First Friends Church in Indianapolis, spoke on "The Object and Aim of the Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting"; Richard Haworth, of Indiana Yearly Meeting, gave an address on the "Forward Movement in Bible School Work"; and Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, an address on "The Brotherhood of Man."

Wednesday afternoon Chester Reagan spoke on "Young People's Societies in Social Service," Lilian Cope of Plainfield on "A Live Young People's Society," and Charity Owens of Noblesville on the "C. E. Society in the Friends Church in the Past and How Shall we Regard it in the Future." "The Tragedy of Adolescence," given by Simon Hester, was discussed by Horace Carey of Indianapolis, instead of Homer Furnas. The Wednesday evening address was given by George H. Moore of Westfield on an up-to-date Bible School. The music was furnished by the Georgetown choir.

Thursday morning addresses were given by Enos Harvey, Bloomington, on "The Bible School a Live Factor in Young People's Life," and Wm. Cleaver, New London, on "Conservation." At eleven o'clock, the hour of Vermilion mid-week meeting, Gertrude Reinier, Noblesville, preached the Assembly sermon from 1 Tim. 4-16 and 2 Tim. 2-15. Some of the delegates to the Winona Meeting of Young Friends made an enthusiastic report and it is hoped that Western Yearly Meeting may have a large delegation next year.

The Thursday afternoon program consisted of a Round Table on Teachers' Training conducted by the superintendent of Bible Schools and Education and a Symposium on C. E. work. Fred Emmerson gave an address on "The Relation of Young People's Organization to the Church" and Mabel Quigg a paper on "The Ideal Endeavorer." The Thursday evening address was by Richard Haworth on "The Touch of Life." The music was by the Ridge Farm choir.

J. Ord Fortner of Russiaville is retained as Superintendent of Bible Schools and Education and Fred Emmerson of Vermilion Grove is Superintendent of the C. E. Department; Lena Henley remains Secretary and Treasurer and Mabel Quigg is Junior Superintendent.

The music of the assembly was in charge of Elizabeth Holaday and was enjoyed by all and was a source of inspiration. Stella Morrow and Mrs. Miller sang solos. The Quiet Hour was in charge of E. James Carter of Plainfield.

The theme of the whole Assembly was greater loyalty and devotion to our organization, our church and our God, and the thought of conservation, of conserving our forces, our young men and women. We were urged to make our Bible Schools more efficient, more up-to-date, to fall in line with the work of the State Department.

The report of the C. E. Superintendent showed 29 societies, an enrollment of about 1,000, and $332.22 given for missions. Russiaville gave the largest amount, $80.00 for missions, and holds the banner. We feel that not only the Bible School work but the Young People's work is gaining ground and that these annual assemblies are times of great help and blessing. The place for holding the meeting next year will be announced at Yearly Meeting, but it is to be hoped it will be near the center of the Yearly Meeting.

LENA HENLEY, Secretary.

Our Name

BY ELWOOD SCOTT

Well, what is it? We used to call ourselves "Friends" and our church "The Friends Church."

For two hundred and fifty years we were known by this name, or the Society of Friends. During the great revival period in the early church, when all England was stirred to its foundations and our forefathers were imprisoned by the thousands, we adhered strictly to our chosen name, "The Friends," though in derision called "Quakers" by the adversaries in those days. During the late revival through which we have just passed, we still adhered to our ancient and well chosen name in every country throughout the world, and we held legitimate pride in the name.

But as in ancient days when another king arose that knew not Joseph, nor esteemed his descendants, so now another generation has arrived who seem not to know our family name nor take commendable pride in its maintenance, who now style themselves "Quakers" and speak of our Quakerism, our Quakerly ways, our Quakerish doings, etc., and by every means are hastening the change into popularity, when all the world shall call us Orthodox Quakers instead of The Friends Church.

Well, now I am wondering what we are to gain by such a change. If there is no gain, then why seek another name? We do not need the two. We were called Quakers in derision, beginning with Justice Bennet, of England, who derided Fox after Fox had bade him and those about him to quake at the word of the Lord. We can gain nothing by such a change, neither is such a change coveted by the masses of our church. But by the constant use, both by the ministry and the press, we accustom ourselves to this as to anything else.

If our church papers and our ministry and other public speakers could only get this novelty for a change out of their heads, we might soon straighten up, and command the respect which is due to a people which has wrought for the moral and spiritual uplift of the Nations.

For my part, I do not covet the title of Quaker. It never sounds good to me, but rather is a weakening of our well earned reputation as the friends of Jesus. If there are good reasons for such a change, let it be clearly stated in our periodicals, and let the change come down by a recommendation from the Yearly Meetings, and not from the out-posts of our skirmish lines.

The titles of all our prominent churches have been chosen by the official bodies of the denominations, and not by some editor or young preacher. The name of our denomination should be taken up by the Yearly Meetings, with suitable time for discussion, and their decisions forwarded to the Five Years Meeting, where it might be fully settled. If we wish to adopt the title of "The Quaker Church," then drop out the name of Friends, and then change the title of all our church property from the Society of Friends to the Society of Quakers or the Quaker Church.

But if we wish to retain our present title of The Friends Church, then take steps to see that the name is honored and not trampled under foot, either by priest or people.

Marion, Indiana.

Moody Bible Institute

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is broadening its work this fall along two important lines, the preparation of Sunday School experts, and women workers for women and children. To meet the needs of the first class, it is establishing chairs of pedagogy, psychology and Sunday School history, management and methods; by means of which young men and women may be qualified for any department of such service from that of teacher in a local school to a state or county organizer.

With reference to women workers for women and children, the purpose is to equip them for all modern demands which churches make upon them, such as domestic science, home making, home nursing, sewing, club management and industrial work for boys and girls. The Institute has also introduced a department of English and a department of Italian, and offers all its advantages without cost to Christians of all denominations who are able satisfactorily to fill out its application blanks.

Canada Yearly Meeting

Sabbath August 17 was spent by Ernest and Daisy Howard in filling the pulpit for the Methodists at Adanac, Saskatchewan, in the absence of the minister on a vacation. Three services were held, requiring a drive of a distance of thirty miles during the day. There were large and appreciative audiences. There is not a school house within many miles of Swarthmore in which services are not held by some denomination every Sabbath, and it is believed that the time is at hand when as the result of the seed sowing there will be a rich harvest of souls. The request comes for the prayers of God's people for the work in that north-western country.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Rockford Meeting in Van Wert Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, bids fair to be noted for the making of evangelists. In 1911 O. H. Trader, who had successfully served the meeting as pastor for two years, resigned to take up evangelistic work. He was succeeded by Bertha E. Day, the converted Catholic girl, who took up the work in September. In January she held one of the largest and greatest revivals the little town of Rockford had ever known. Sixty souls were saved, and what seemed to be remarkable thirty-one were men. Fifty-two united with the Church. The attendance grew until it became necessary to enlarge the meeting house. Miss Day took up this work in April and in November the Church was dedicated. But with all this to encourage a pastor the call into the evangelistic field became louder, until at the close of the year she resigned and took up evangelistic work. She was succeeded by Robert A. Pelt; he took up the work in October and very successfully arranged and planned for the dedication of the new building, which occurred a few weeks after his arrival. But with a beautiful new Church, a congregation that is generous and loyal, he has also resigned to go out into the evangelistic work.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society at Des Moines held its regular meeting August 21 in the parlors of the Church. After the business of the meeting, the study of the lesson was taken up with interest. At the close of the meeting ice cream and wafers were served. The Society is doing home missionary work, as well as foreign. Mrs. Harry R. Keats is president of the Society.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

On August 16th, Lydia M. Chace celebrated her 90th birthday at the home of her son, Henry V. Chace, in Kansas City, Missouri. A feature of the occasion was a birthday cake surrounded by 90 candles. She has enjoyed a good degree of health all summer, notwithstanding the long hot dry spell we have had. She has been able to attend meeting nearly every Sunday, and has often taken part in vocal service by prayer or testimony. She is very thankful for the continued health she enjoys, and while she has undergone the sorrow of burying two of her children during the past two years, her son, Thomas, and daughter, Mary C. Wright, yet she is cheerful and awaits with marked patience her call from her Heavenly Father. She extends her love and blessing to her many beloved friends in all our Yearly Meetings. She expects to return to Acme, Texas, again this fall and spend the winter with her daughter, Phoebe M. Barnard.

New England Yearly Meeting

China Monthly Meeting of Friends held at South China, Maine, August 20, was a season of inspiration to all. The hour for worship was refreshing and uplifting. The business session before lunch gave opportunity for an able address by Wilmot R. Jones on "An Ideal Monthly Meeting," which was the theme of the program for the day. Under one beautiful admonition, that he gave us, lay much to be remembered, "Do not dodge the responsibility that has been placed upon you." After the dinner hour we enjoyed a lively praise service conducted by Linwood W. Jones. Leroy Jones, of Oak Grove Seminary, presented a paper. Perry D. Macy gave us the statistics of the church and the community, which was very instructive and suggestive. The discussions participated in by many throughout the day were very interesting. Other addresses followed: "The Church and the Men of the Community," by Mr. Bansom; "The Church and the Social Life of the Community," by Elam Henderson; "The Church and the Children of the Community," by Frank E. Jones. A feature of the afternoon was singing by the children. With proper concluding services the members retired to their homes carrying a strengthened purpose to live and work for Christ and the Church.

R. Ernest Lamb, who has so efficiently acted as pastor of Manchester, N. H., Friends Meeting for more than a year, preached his farewell sermon August 24th. On September 4th he will sail from Quebec for his home in Wheatfield, Portadown, Ireland. His labors among Manchester Friends have been especially blessed. Under his care the meeting and Sabbath School have been built up and a Junior Christian Endeavor has been organized. Besides this, he has been active in the social and religious work of the city, serving as Secretary of the Ministerial Association. As an appreciation of his services, Friends held a farewell reception for him Eighth Month 22nd which also happened to be his birthday. After a musical program and speeches by a representative of the city Ministerial Association and by visiting Friends, he was presented with a liberal purse on behalf of the meeting as a token of the place he holds in their hearts. No one has yet been secured to fill R. Ernest Lamb's place. Friends have an open field and a growing work at Manchester and the need of a worker is urgent. It is hoped that some young man will soon be found to take up the work there.

On August 24, the meeting at Salem, Massachusetts, extended a public welcome to new members who have been received within the past few months. Through the effective service of Josephine H. Carr, formerly of Amesbury, as a pastoral worker, there have been received by request, four; by certificate, one; associates by request of parents, five; and two associates transferred to the active list by profession of faith. Harry R. Hole, of Lynn, was present as an official representative of the monthly meeting, and in a sermon based on John 15:14, set forth some of the fundamental principles of Christianity as professed by Friends.

New York Yearly Meeting

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at South Starksboro, Vermont, August 9-10. The visiting minister was J. Edward Ransom, of Hiland, New York. We greatly enjoyed a trip on Mount Philo, near Lake Champlain, and then by auto through the valley to Bristol village, beautifully situated at the opening of the mountains; thence up the "Nine Bridge road," where the water streams down over a rocky bed for one or two miles, which is picturesque in the extreme. J. E. Ransom's gospel services were much appreciated. There were also on the platform, Elizabeth G. Underhill, of Brooklyn, who is tarrying here for the summer; Charles N. Franklin and Samuel Miles, of Monkton Ridge, Vermont, and E. J. Meader, of Bristol; also T. R. Hill, of Lincoln (Baptist). The house was well filled on Sabbath. Luncheon was served and seats had to be brought in for afternoon services. A valuable letter was received from J. L. Spicer, the former superintendent.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Amos M. Kenworthy held a series of meetings in Newberg the latter part of July, closing August 2. There were twenty-six meetings altogether, including his services in the regular meetings. His ambition was to hold up God's word as a looking-glass before the people and lead them to examine their lives by it, and through earnest conviction seek the necessary changes. Victories were gained and there was much serious thought on the part of those who heard him, which must result in much good, if only his message of full surrender and absolute obedience to God's will, exemplified by his own life, is heeded. Amos Kenworthy appreciated the support which the pastor, Charles O. Whitely, gave him and his work. He thought that he had the interests of his congregation at heart in a very marked and unusual degree, which to him was an evidence that he was a true undershepherd of his flock.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

A public meeting for divine worship was appointed by Concord Quarterly Meeting's Committee to be held at Middletown Friends' Meeting house on last First-day afternoon, Eighth month, 31, at 3 o'clock. A cordial invitation had been extended to all.

Western Yearly Meeting

Professor Elbert Russell occupied the pulpit at First Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, Sunday morning, August 24th, in the absence of the pastor, W. O. Trueblood, who is making quite an extended visit among the various Yearly Meetings. The pastor expects to take up his work again early in September, after attending Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Charles and May Replogle

The following taken from the Everett (Washington) Daily Herald, under date of August 9th, concerning Charles N. and May Replogle, will be of interest to Friends throughout America. The prayers and good wishes of all our membership will go with our Friends to their new work in the far Northwest.

Charles N. Replogle to-morrow will conduct the farewell services of his pastorate of the First Friends Church in Everett, and next Friday morning, at 1 o'clock, he and his wife, May Replogle, will sail from Seattle on the steamer Senator for Nome, Alaska. With the services here to-morrow is to terminate the relations of the minister with the local church; relations that have existed for nine years. Last Monday night the members of the Ministerial Association bade them farewell; to-morrow the members of the church will unite in an expression of goodwill they feel toward the departing workers and wish them Godspeed in their journey and every blessing in their new work.

It is to a cold and desolate land the leaders of the Friends' flock in Everett will go. Fourteen or fifteen days will be spent aboard ship. They will go to Nome on the Senator, and there embark on the steamer Corwin to Deering, nearly up to the Arctic circle. There, where the days and the nights are approximately six months long, they will enter upon a new work, but a work for which they have been prepared in a great measure by nine years of work at Douglas, Alaska, in the southeastern part of that great territory. The new work is among the Esquimaux; that at Douglas was among the Indians. The present work is one of representation of the Bureau of Education of the United States government; that work was under the direction of the Friends' Board of Missions.

Deering is 250 miles northeast of Cape Prince of Wales. From early autumn to late spring the place is ice-bound and no vessels may reach there. During the open season ships reach there every two weeks; during the winter months the only access is by way of Prince William Sound, where meagre supplies may be landed and mail, first class only, is dispatched by relays of dog teams over the frozen wastes, once each two weeks.

Deering is a place. It cannot be designated as a town. It is the location of a government school and a store, conducted by a white man. The nearest community is Candle, 35 miles away, a mining town of about 500 persons, including only a dozen women. There a hospital is maintained. Except for the storekeeper at Deering the people at Candle will be the nearest white neighbors of the Everett minister and his wife in the immediate future. Their stay in the north is indeterminate, but certainly will not be less than two years.

In the new work upon which the Replogles are entering the teaching of the gospel message is to be incidental to the instruction of the natives in the things pertaining to civilization. Deering, however, is the most southern station of the mission territory of the Friends' Church, a territory as large as the states of Washington, Oregon and Montana, and extending to Icy Point station, half way to Point Barrow, and for a distance of 50 miles into the interior, one mission station being maintained 250 miles from the coast line.

The work of the Everett workers will be to teach the Esquimaux industry. All the natives, youngsters and adults, will be required to attend the school and learn the things taught in the common school grades in the United States. The boys are to be taught carpentry, blacksmithing, cabinet-making, etc.; the girls sewing, cooking, home-keeping, fancy work and painting. All are to be drilled in the rudiments of sanitation, induced, if possible, to bathe, and instructed in business methods. Incidentally the work will include the training of herders for an immense herd of reindeer, the Friends' Missionary Society there owning the largest herd of these animals anywhere in the world, but over which the federal government exercises a sort of sovereignty. The purpose of the government is to teach the Esquimaux to live in communities, to abandon their nomadic life, and to learn how to support themselves. Few persons, perhaps, know that the natives in that country are not self-supporting, and that their maintenance costs the government of the United States a pretty penny each year. In the hope of making them self-sustaining the government is maintaining special schools.

In so far as the religious training of the natives is concerned, the government has an attitude of neutrality. The religious work of the government teacher is not essentially that of a missionary, but to teach the native converts how to establish and carry forward religious efforts. In whatever the native may do in such matters as organizing Y. M. C. A., Sunday Schools and churches, the government teacher is not a missionary, but an instructor.

During the nine years spent by the Replogles at Douglas they were in charge of a mission home for Indians, in which were twenty-six Indian girls. This period was from 1893 to 1902. After leaving this work the Everett minister and his wife went to Europe, engaged upon a work peculiar to the

The Flying Hours

Twelve little birds fly by in a row—
 Bright little birds are they;
 Shining and free and as blue as can be,
 And these are the hours of the day.
 The sun shines brightly across their wings
 As they flutter their way along,
 And now and again, in their joy of things,
 They carol a daytime song.
 Twelve little owls fly by in a row—
 Silent and dark their flight;
 Gray little things with shadowy wings,
 And these are the hours of the night.
 But the last of them all, as he hovers
 low,
 Is flushed with a radiant pink.
 This is the good little sunrise owl—
 I like him the best, I think.

Conrad's Beautiful Easter

When the first gray morning light crept over the silent Alp, Conrad, the goat-boy, led his flock to drink at a quiet pool in the bend of the rushing torrent, and then guided it to a level nook where the tender young grass was growing green. Far below from the valley, hidden by the veil of silvery mist, he could hear the mellow sound of the church bells.

"Down in the world they are keeping the great Feast," he said; "singing the hymns, giving their offerings, and praising the Risen Christ; and I am up here, alone, with no one to greet me with 'Christ is arisen!' and to whom I may answer, 'Alleluia!' I may not join in the praises of the church, and I have no offering; but still," he continued, as the sweet reminding bells rang on, "still I can say the prayers, here on the mountain, and sing the hymns." So he knelt reverently, then, standing, sang the same hymn of praise that the people in the valley church were singing.

As he sang, he saw, coming down from the higher mountain slopes, a stranger, who paused, smiling on him, and said: "Christ is risen!"

"Alleluia!" Conrad responded, wondering who this was, and why he was so early on the Alp.

"Wilt thou point me out the way to yonder village where the church bells are ringing?" asked the stranger.

"Yes, gladly, sir," the boy replied; "but the way is long and steep, and if perchance thou art come from far, thou mayest need food." Then he drew from his leather bag his own breakfast of coarse black bread, which he laid on a rock for the stranger, who ate of the bread thankfully, and drank the clear water which Conrad brought, talking as he ate.

"So, my little lad, thou art alone, keeping thy Easter Feast?"

"Not really keeping the Feast," replied Conrad, sadly; "for I may not praise God in his house with his people. And beside, I have no gifts for an offering. Would that I had!"

"Hast thou not then learned that who truly wills in any place may worship God and give him glory? And who truly wills to give God gifts in his heart gives them? And who truly wills to live the risen life, remembering God in all his ways and desiring to know and serve and honor him, assuredly doeth this all? Believe me, my child, thy Easter prayers and gifts are both truly given and truly accepted."

Then, suddenly, the stranger was gone, and Conrad, looking and wondering, could see no trace of him upon all the high Alp. But a strange new beauty had come to the mountains; the sunshine which now flooded the slopes lay warm upon the young grass; in the glancing spray of the foaming stream trembled lovely little rainbows, and at Conrad's feet were unfolded the faintly blue, frail, fragrant waxen bells of the first hyacinth of the year. And upon the rock lay no longer fragments of coarse black bread, but shining white wheaten wafers, which, when he tasted, the boy found to be wondrous sweet.

"What," Conrad asked himself, "hath wrought this wondrous change?"

"Christ hath risen and passed this way," a voice seemed to say in answer to his question; and, falling on his knees, he whispered, "Alleluia!"

"Thou hast not forgotten me and I will never forget thee," the wonderful voice continued. "Prayers, praise and gifts are all accepted; and in other days it shall be given thee to offer these in other ways. But know henceforth that all true giving begins in the heart's true desire, and that all desires of all hearts are known to me."

Conrad still knelt, glad and wondering, gazing at the delicate beauty of the faint blue flower at his feet, the tiny, jewel-like rainbows of the flashing water, and the verdant slopes rising up to the gleaming white snow-peaks that soared into the dazzling sapphire of the Easter sky; and from all he seemed to hear the joyful cry: "Christ is arisen!" "Alleluia. He is risen indeed!"—Alice Ranlett, in The Young Christian Soldier.

E. Everett Morgan

Word has been received that E. Everett Morgan died at the home of his sister at Plainfield, Indiana, on August 28. For some time he has been one of our Friends missionaries in Mexico, but last spring went to Battle Creek, Michigan, for his health. Following an operation, he had an apoplectic stroke, since which time he has been in a serious condition, resulting in his death as above stated.

LIGHT BREAKS IN

Thoughtful Farmer Learns About Coffee

Many people exist in a more or less hazy condition and it often takes years before they realize that tea and coffee are often the cause of the cloudiness, and that there is a simple way to let the light break in.

A worthy farmer had such an experience and tells about it, in a letter. He says:

"For about forty years, I have had indigestion and stomach trouble in various forms. During the last 25 years I would not more than get over one spell of bilious colic until another would be upon me.

"The best doctors I could get and all the medicines I could buy, only gave me temporary relief.

"Change of climate was tried without results. I could not sleep nights, had rheumatism and my heart would palpitate at times so that it seemed it would jump out of my body.

"I came to the conclusion that there was no relief for me and that I was about wound up, when I saw a Postum advertisement. I had always been a coffee drinker, and got an idea from the ad. that maybe coffee was the cause of my trouble.

"I began to use Postum instead of coffee and in less than three weeks I felt like a new man. The rheumatism left me, and I have never had a spell of bilious colic since.

"My appetite is good, my digestion never was better and I can do more work than before for 40 years.

"I haven't tasted coffee since I began with Postum. My wife makes it according to directions and I relish it as well as I ever did coffee, and I was certainly a slave to coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with the addition of cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

Friends' church, and visited isolated families of members of that denomination. This work was principally in England, Ireland and Norway, but extended also into Russia, Germany, France and Denmark. Upon the return from this trip to the old world Mr. and Mrs. Replogle came direct to Everett and assumed the pastorate of the local church.

When Rev. and Mrs. Replogle came to Everett a tent, on the ground where now stands the High School, was the meeting place of the Friends. The owner of the ground charged no rental, and one day Ringling's circus came to Everett, rented the lot, and ordered the "church" to vacate. It vacated. The tent was removed to Twenty-third and Wetmore, and either the lot was too small or some other providential reason interposed, and not again was the congregation forced to move. On that site now stands the church edifice of the Friends, a structure completed late in the summer of 1910.

Member of Temperance Commission

The President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has named S. E. Nicholson as one of the members of the Temperance Commission of the Council, which Commission is one of the regular departments of the Council's activities. The Commission is planning for important work through the denominational bodies, and for a better organization of temperance activities.

Church Dedication, Anderson, Indiana

The Friends Church at Anderson, Indiana, will be dedicated September 14. There will be appropriate services in the forenoon, afternoon and evening. The regular dedication sermon will be preached at 10:30 a. m. by W. O. Trueblood, pastor of the Friends Church at Indianapolis. Thomas C. Brown, of Plainfield, and other workers will assist in the work of the day.

Meals will be served in the church basement. All Friends are cordially invited to be present at all the services.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

SEPTEMBER 14.

SUBJECT—The Ten Commandments.

LESSON—Ex. 20: 12-21. Read Ex. 20-24. Commit verses 12-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself." Luke 10:27.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

SEPTEMBER 14.

TOPIC—Favorite Verses. IV. In the Gospels. John 1: 1-14.

The majority of members will at once think of John 3: 16. Others will remember those assuring words of the Master in John 14.

Still others will think of Christ as the vine in John 15, of Christ as the way, the truth and the life, of Him who will ease the load of the laborer and give him rest, of Him who will receive all who come unto Him for any relief.

The Gospels are the realm of the Christians' hope and delight; the Beatitudes, the parables, the model prayer of our Lord, the feeding of the multitudes, the gracious teachings by the sea side.

But none the less important are His "woes" pronounced upon evil. "Woe unto thee Chorazin; woe unto thee Bethsaida!" Assign the recital of at least two gospel texts to each member, and mark their variety and the wideness of their scope.

STYLETTO

COULD ye not watch with Me one hour?"
The waiting Master said,
When in His time of deepest woe
His loved, with sleep, were dead.

They could not realize the depth
Of anguish which He knew,
The weariness of earth was theirs,
Although their hearts were true.

So 'tis with us, no one can watch
Our agony of soul,
We must unto the Father come
His love will keep us whole.

He understands our every care,
And sees our deepest pain,
His ministering angels He will send
To comfort us again.

A Correction

In the article by Luke Woodard in last week's issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, in the next to the last line of the second paragraph, the word "autonomy" should be "metonymy." Readers will take notice of this.

Federal Council of Churches

The Secretary of the Federal Council, Rev. Charles S. McFarland, has issued his semi-annual report under the title "The Progress of Federation Since the Second Quadrennial Council." The Joint Commission on Theological Seminaries has organized and appointed a sub-committee to prepare recommendations relative to courses of study on social and industrial matters.

The request from American missionaries in Japan that a commission be appointed to make a deliverance on the question of international relationships between the two countries, is now under consideration. The Commission on the Church and Social Service has appointed a committee on the Church and Country Life, with Gifford Pinchot as chairman, and has issued an authoritative survey entitled, "The Country Church," by Rev. Charles O. Gill, who has been appointed for special field work in this interest.

Perhaps the most significant matter under way is the proposed religious campaign in connection with the Panama Pacific Exposition, for which a national committee is now being appointed. Resolutions relative to the exploitation of commercialized vice at the Exposition are being sent to the authorities from religious bodies all over the country, and Dr. Macfarland is to go to the Pacific Coast in October and initiate the campaign. The Secretary has visited all of the spring meetings of the constituent bodies, and reports that they are all taking the Council more and more seriously. The only doubtful body was the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, which, however, after long discussion voted to remain as a constituent body, with only 27 votes in the negative.

Dr. Macfarland reports an encouraging growth in local federation. The various denominational Secretaries, especially those in the Social Service Departments, have been representing the Federal Council as Associate Secretaries in their campaigns in connection with their denominational work.

A special guarantee of financial support is reported for both the Committee on the Church and Country Life and the Commission on Peace and Arbitration. Conferences have been held with the government departments at Washington relative to the immediate increase of Army and Navy Chaplains, and President Wilson has expressed his personal interest in the proposals of the Council. The campaign, which has been carried on for two years, for One-Day-in-Seven for industrial workers resulted this year in the passage of laws of the several State Legislatures.

An indication of some of the problems of the Council is given by Dr. Macfarland in these words: "The chief difficulty is that each denomination tends to estimate the Council on the basis of its own status of relationship and neglects to take account of the twenty-nine other denominations. Hence it is that while some are restless because the Council does not move with quicker steps, there are others who feel with equal certainty that it is moving somewhat too rapidly in the very direction relative to which the others would urge more hasty procedure." He also adds, "Any doubt of its work is invariably the result of misunderstanding."

The Homiletic Review

The series of "Studies of Representative British Theologians," by E. Hermann of London, has been resumed; the subject in the September number of The Homiletic Review is "Peter Taylor Forsythe, D.D.," the versatile principal of Hackney Theological College, Hempstead, London.

The Rev. F. W. Butler of London, England, gives his third and final article on "Personality and Revelation" in this number. This third article deals with the "Goal of Personality."

Among the other articles of a particularly helpful character are: "The Essential Unity of the Christian Church" by the Rev. J. E. Compton, Studley, England; "The Enlarging Background of Moral and Religious Sanctions" by the Rev. Charles E. Hesselgrave, Ph.D., Chatham, N. J.; "The Choice of Subjects for Sermons" by the Rev. J. S. Rutherford, Belfast, Ireland; "How to Tell a Story" by the Rev. Albert Sidney Gregg, Cleveland, Ohio; "The Conversion of the Church to Christ" by Josiah Strong, D.D.

The Department of Sermonic Literature has an unusually fine lot of sermons: "The Loneliness of Life" by the Rev. J. Warschauer, Ph.D., Bradford, England; "The Last Resort" by T. Calvin McClelland, D.D., Brooklyn, N. Y.; "The Narrow Way and the Other Way" by the Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, Bloomington, Ill.; "Much More" by the Rev. G. Eales, Hanley, England; "Our Eyes Shall See Things Whole" by the Rev. Albert C. Dieffenbach, Hartford, Conn.

Establishing Christian Character

Stripped of all unnecessary verbiage, the one great and ultimate purpose of the Church in the world is the development of Christian life and the establishment of Christian character. Possibly there are religious enthusiasts who will challenge the statement, and assert that its chief purpose is to get men and women converted, that repentance and conversion and holiness are the prime embodiment of the messages which the Church must ever proclaim.

As it seems to us, these are only two viewpoints of the same thing. To argue that the primary aim of the Church is to get men converted, is to argue strongly for death-bed repentance, so far as practical results are concerned. The average man who views religion only as a means of saving him from hell and insuring to him the eternal blessings of the redeemed in heaven, will be strongly tempted to postpone the day of his surrender to God until he faces death in the way, or some great calamity comes upon him.

We have had far too much of this short circuit Christianity. Many a man who is converted upon impulse, in an emergency and through the stress of an impassioned appeal, has been prone to forget his profession under the changing circumstances of his life. Hence we have the multitudes, who with periodic regularity go on the church rolls and off again in a never ending procession.

We are not to be understood as questioning the necessity of conversion, or as challenging the work of evangelism. On the contrary, we believe that no one can enter the Kingdom of God without being born again, as Christ so plainly taught, and as experience so strongly testifies. Our concern is that the emphasis be laid where it belongs, and that the Church cease its efforts to save the world by methods that cheapen salvation and reveal to sinful humanity a wrong perspective of their obligations both to the world and to their Heavenly Father.

The chief purpose of man's existence here is not to be converted, but to glorify God both by his living and by his testimony; and the being converted and the being made holy are but the necessary means to the end of this great accomplishment. And when the Church through its preaching and through its evangelism gets ready to lay the high emphasis upon Christian living and upon Christian character as a religious force that is abiding and all powerful, and that alone, so far as human agency can effect it, will be the example to win the world to Christ, we are constrained to believe that the Church will take on new life and Christianity will have a new message and a new meaning for a sinful world.

The Christian life that is seasoned in service and the Christian character that exemplifies the glorious realities as well as the potentialities of Christian living are the ideals to be emphasized by the Church everywhere and always. Christ taught the doctrine of faithful discipleship quite as strongly as the doctrine of the new birth. Man is to be saved, not alone for his own sake, but that he may serve God, and through serving Him may help his fellow men to find their way to the blessed Christ.

If sinful man can be made to feel that he is missing the high purpose of his existence by remaining a sinner, and that God wants not only his allegiance, but his life and his faithful service, there are multitudes ready to respond to such an appeal, that now are hesitating and indifferent. A Christian profession may change with changing environment. Christian character is as abiding as the eternal hills, and it should be the great mission of the Church to emphasize its value and to labor for its establishment.

Special Numbers

It is our purpose to make the issue of October 16th of THE AMERICAN FRIEND a special Bible School number. In addition to valuable articles from noted Bible School workers, we are anxious to have Bible School news relating to Friends Bible Schools, which should be in not later than October 9. Two weeks later (October 30) it is our purpose to have a special young people's number devoted to the work and news of young people's activities, especially among Friends. Again we want appropriate news which should reach us by October 23.

Optimism is an essential characteristic of the Christian religion. Discouragement is a species of infidelity that lacks faith in the ultimate triumph of the right. God's promises are sure and will continue sure to the end.

How Elders and Overseers May Help the Ministers

BY ARTHUR JONES

The substance of a paper read at Hesper Quarterly Meeting of Ministry and Oversight, held at Prairie Center (Eudora), Kansas, June 13, 1918.

Every gift for Christian service is related to every other gift. The most fundamental conception is that there shall be no envy or strife between the members. The hand must find out that it is a hand, and then set about learning to do most skillfully the things a hand may learn to do. Blind people learn to do with their ears and hands some of the things the rest of us use our eyes for. But as delicate as the senses of hearing and touch may become, it is always a distinct loss to be blind. Persons can never learn to see without eyes. Neither can an eye take the place of a paralyzed arm. Each has its distinctive task to perform. This is no new doctrine. It comes almost word for word from St. Paul.

Furthermore, as a corollary to this, these members of the body are to assist one another. I walk out under one of these beautiful shade trees and hear the notes of a bird. They sound strange to me. I cannot quite recognize the kind of a bird that is singing. I shade my eyes and search about among the branches until I find it, and if I am familiar with bird lore it is at once known to me. Even its song becomes at once familiar, since I know the kind of a bird. My eyes help my ears. Or I am going along the highway and come to a fork of the road, and know not which way to turn. On the opposite corner I perceive a sign board. But I am a little too far away to read its direction distinctly. So I step across nearer to it, and it at once becomes plain. My feet help my eyes. When a physician examines a diseased part of the body he not only looks at it, but he feels of it. His sense of touch will tell him almost as much, and sometimes more, than the sense of vision. Just so in the church, each one must not only exercise his gift for its own value, but he must also strive to supplement the talents of others.

Of the ways in which elders and overseers may increase their helpfulness to the ministers, I will consider first of all that which I believe is most important. It is the spirit of the elders and overseers. This is a hard thing to describe or define, yet it is the all-important thing. It is the spirit of a meeting that makes it a success or a failure, not what is said or done. It is the spirit of a church that makes it either a magnet or a piece of dead scrap iron; a fire that thaws out chilled hearts or an iceberg that puts souls in cold storage. It is not a grand church building that makes a church worth while. It is not even an eloquent preacher that makes a church. A church may become great without any of these things. It is the spirit of the leaders that makes a church alive or dead. The elders and overseers should be the leading spirits in a church. If they are live spirits, it is well. If they are dead spiritually, the church will resemble a graveyard.

In a negative way I can indicate some of the things

I mean. On one hand it will not do to cherish a secret antagonism for the minister. You cannot do spiritual work with a person in whom you do not have confidence. If you are holding a grudge against your minister, or if he is unbearably obnoxious to you, you must overcome that feeling, or else either he or you must get out. If you do not feel right toward your minister, it is probably because you do not really know him. Get acquainted with him. Get him to go fishing with you. Get him to help make hay some day, or gather fruit, and work alongside him—any simple way to get acquainted with him. The idea of cherishing ill-feeling, even though you keep it to yourself, is a snare of the devil.

Then, there is the opposite of this—the nagging elder. The one who always wants to know why you did not do so and so. Why did you do this, or say that thing, which was so out of place? One dreads to meet such a person, for he is nearly sure to be complaining about something. He is a good deal more disagreeable than the close mouthed fellow, but he is much safer. He really wants you to succeed, or he would not be always suggesting things. I would not speak against the occasional helpful suggestion to the minister. He must have these. Nor against the person who goes to the minister with a real concern about something. The minister should be glad to hear such persons. It is the fellow who habitually wants to know why things are not done differently, who becomes a thorn in his pastor's side.

Now, remember, all of this is concerning the spirit of the elders and overseers. It is not so much what they do, but the spirit in which they do it. It is not what they say, but the spirit in which they speak. I wish you could all have been at our last pastoral committee meeting in Kansas City. It was a grand illustration of what I mean by the spirit of the elders and overseers. With almost the full committee present, we were giving our individual convictions on what we considered the ultimate object of a church. As one after another gave expression to the purpose of bringing men and women face to face with Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit seemed to fall upon us. Eyes became moist, and we separated with a spontaneous fellowship of prayer. That is what I think is the spirit in which a pastoral committee should work.

I want to speak of one specific thing, and the spirit of it. That is attendance at meetings for worship. I understand that attendance at our meetings is not the ultimate goal, but it is the chief means used to reach that goal. A store advertises to get people to come to it. But to get the aisles crowded with people is not the real purpose of the store. It must sell goods, or it will come to grief. In my opinion, a church has not sufficient reason for existence merely to keep its own pews filled up. I know a little of the pleasure of that. I have tasted the satisfaction that comes from having a line of camp chairs the whole length of the center aisle at an ordinary Sabbath evening service. But that is not the end. The people must be brought to reach out and take hold of God, "Whom to know is life eternal," or the church will not be fulfilling the mission of our Master. The meeting for worship is the means of accomplishing that, for the most part. This is what makes a religious meeting a matter of far-reaching consequences. It is not a thing that can be attended or neglected at our convenience. Tremendous issues—the values of eternity are involved in it. Carelessness about going to meeting indicates a low valuation placed on the object of the meeting. Now it might be said it is superfluous to speak of this to elders and overseers. Surely they do not need to be reminded of the opportunities and obligations of public worship! But I fear there is some need of it. I have heard of elders or overseers doing the following things: Inviting a group of friends, taking lunch, and going to the woods for a picnic, at the hour of the Sabbath evening meeting; going to a theatre on prayer meeting evening; staying at home Sabbath morning to entertain friends who were abundantly able to entertain themselves, or else accompany their host to the house of God. I think I have known personally of elders or overseers being so tired out with the scramble for dollars, or to get the house set in order, or to prepare a great dinner, that they felt too weary to go to church, and did not go. It may be that all of these were valuable church workers, and probably none of them realized the effect their absence might have. The point is this. If a minister goes into his pulpit and sees that two-thirds of his pastoral committee are saying by their absence that they have more important business than attending a religious meeting, he knows his case is lost for that day. He knows no eloquence of his can overcome the silent testimony of the absent witnesses.

Nearly every minister is largely dependent on his congregation for inspiration. Philip could interpret the scriptures to the Ethiopian all alone; Paul could give assurance to the Philippian jailor; Jesus could answer the questions of Nicodemus, and tell the woman at the well of the living water of life. But it was when the great Teacher looked around, "And seeing the multitudes," that the greatest sermon of history was preached. The pastor of the largest church in Kansas City said at the ministers' alliance this last winter that he is dependent on his audience for half his sermon. It is not altogether the size of the audience, but the interest the audience manifests, that brings about the desired condition. In some way a large audience will enthuse itself. Go into a church or hall that is crowded with people, and all is life and vibration, even before the meeting begins. Enter a hall with just a handful of people, and they will be looking blue, as if wondering why the other people do not come.

Elders and overseers are very largely responsible for the atmosphere of enthusiasm. They can either make it or chill it. A religious meeting is a great opportunity for influence. Not only will it help the minister, but if you really act as though you mean business, other people will catch your zeal.

John Woolman: The Quaker

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWMAN*

Quakers came early to our shores, but even here they were not very kindly received. So dense was the cloud of prejudice in those "good old days" that these gentle folk were held to be dangerous. Four of them, Mary Dyer being one, were hanged on Boston Commons—think of it! They settled in West Jersey under Fenwick, and in Pennsylvania under Penn, and no influence has been a greater blessing to our national life. When the old Quaker laid off his drab coat and picked up his axe, he laid the foundation of some of the best things among us. A quietist in faith, he has been nobly active in all good things, from the days of Penn to Lundy and Lincoln, and from the songs of Whittier to the service of Jane Addams.

Into this tradition of sweet piety and earnest endeavor, John Woolman was born in West Jersey, in 1720, and the record of his beautiful life, as he has left it in his "Journal," is a precious legacy. "Get the writings of John Woolman by heart," said Charles Lamb, who more than once in his essays speaks in praise of this saintly man. There is, in truth, a rare beauty in the writings of Woolman, an exquisite sweetness and purity of spirit. He was no master of high literary art, and his Journal, like that of Wesley, makes such use of Bible words and phrases as to blur, at times, his own individuality of style. Yet it is a golden book, and style was the last thing he thought of. No one can read it without feeling that here was a citizen of the Kingdom of Heaven, a man whose only ambition was to know the will of God and do it. Only a humble tailor, as Jacob Behman was a cobbler, yet he was a man mighty in gentleness, and if some unseen hand were to write the real history of his influence, what a testimony it would be.

"I have often felt a motion of love to leave some hints in writing of my experiences of the goodness of God," runs the first line of his Journal. That was the key-note of his life of benign industry in the cause of liberty, righteousness, simplicity, and peace. His religion, which was his life, may be summed up in the word Love. He held the faith, so little acted upon, that God is Love, and that to live with Him in "inward stillness of heart and happy humility," working out his loving spirit in our lives, is the whole duty of man and the highest wisdom. He thought of humanity as a pantheist thinks of God, identifying himself with his fellows in their sorrows and, vicariously, in their sins. He had the humanistic temperament which made him an heir to all the woes of man and beast. His pity was a spring always flowing. Like Francis of Assisi, he felt a kinship with all breathing things, and his charity knew no limits. Only rarely do such men appear upon earth, and surely no purer or sweeter soul has walked in this new world.

With what artless grace of simple words Woolman tells the story of his life, leaving out many things lest he too much exalt himself. Here are brief pictures of Quaker life in the old Jersey home, with its dignity, its simplicity, its refinement alike of habit and faith. As a boy he once killed a mother robin by accident, and the horror of it haunted him for days and sent him to his knees to beg forgiveness of God. A discourtesy to his mother cast a shadow over him for weeks, afflicting him sorely. Delightful it is to read of his religious experiences in those early years, particularly at the time of his adolescence. Here is a passage to ponder, if so that we may feel a like regret when we say more than is required of us.

"One day, being under a strong exercise of spirit, I stood up and said some words in meeting; but not keeping close to the Divine opening, I said more than was required of me. Being soon sensible of my error, I was afflicted in mind some weeks, without any light or comfort, even to that degree that I could not take satisfaction in anything."

Woolman was one of the first to see and feel the horror of slavery, and much of his life was spent in inducing the Quakers to abjure it. So we find him journeying to and fro, working at his trade as a tailor to pay his way, from one Yearly Meeting of Friends to another, all the way from New England to the Carolinas. He had not the vehemence of an agitator, but spoke, rather, in sorrowful remonstrance against an evil which weighed heavily upon his soul by night and day. He moved among men as an embodied conscience. Yet he was so gentle, so gracious, so lovingly wise, withal, that men could not be offended even when he probed them most deeply. It was largely through his influence and labors that the Friends repudiated slavery. Once at least it was granted him to see, in a rapt and prophetic vision, the fulfillment of his dream. Towards the end of his life he saw—

"The day of the Lord approaching when the man who is most wise in human policy shall be the greatest fool; and the arm that is mighty to support injustice shall be broken in pieces; the enemies of the righteous shall make a terrible rattle, and shall mightily torment one another; for He that is omnipotent is rising up to judgment, and will plead the cause of the oppressed; and He commanded to open the vision."

Whittier, in a note on this passage, says that some may regard these as the words of a distempered imagination, but that those who have eyes will see their explanation in the civil war. At times the simple words of the simple Woolman took on a lofty and stately demeanor, and marched with majestic tread. Take these lines, which are the noblest in the Journal, written shortly after his vision of victory.

"The place of prayer is a precious habitation; for I now say that the prayers of the saints were precious incense; and a trumpet was given me that I might sound forth this language; that the children might hear it and be invited together to this precious habitation, where the prayers of the saints, as sweet incense, arise before the throne of God and the Lamb. I saw this habitation to be safe—to be inwardly quiet when there were great stirrings and commotions in the world. Prayer, at this day, in pure resignation, is a precious place; the trumpet is sounded; the call goes forth to the church that she gather to the place of pure inward prayer; and her habitation is safe."

The Christian Endeavor Society in the Friends' Church in the Past, and What Shall Be Our Attitude Toward It in the Future

BY CHARITY OWEN

(Read at Western Yearly Meeting Conference on Bible Schools and Christian Endeavor, at Vermilion Grove, Illinois, August 6.)

Early in the seventeenth century was born a lad peculiarly brought up; one in whose heart the Lord began His work quite early in life. When he was eleven years old he was converted and knew to a great degree the purity of a Christian experience. He had been well trained in the outward forms of religion, but following his conversion he soon learned to be faithful to the inward leadings of the Holy Spirit. Being very positive and strong in his convictions, and perfectly fearless of man, he was led in paths distinct and apart from those around him, until he was called to leave relatives and friends and follow the leadings of the Lord. Not many years elapsed until he was recognized wherever he went as one of the greatest leaders of men the Christian world has ever known.

And now, after almost three hundred years have passed, his life lives among men, and we are proud to look back after this lapse of time, and study carefully the history of George Fox; revering him as the founder of the Friends' Church. We know the early history of our Church, and yet I would like to ask, do we know its history well? Do we even know well its doctrines of today?

If we could pass back along the ages until we came upon George Fox and his first little band of followers; if we could look in upon that first "Friends' Meeting," and then look upon the real live Friends' Church of today, I think we might find the resemblance between them not much stronger than that shown if we were able to place Benjamin Franklin's first lightning rod alongside of today's greatest achievement in telegraphy. But just as the great principles involving the use of electricity have changed the crude inventions of that day, just so has the vital principle underlying the founding of the Friends' Church, brought about every good result that the church has since known.

The name of "Friends'" was first taken in accordance with the declaration of the Master, "Ye are my friends if you do whatsoever I ask you." The truth proclaimed by them at that time, was that "Man's salvation is a personal matter, between his own soul and God's, and does not depend on the administration of any rite, ordinance, or ceremony."

The early Church stood for "Christ crucified for the sins of men; Christ come as a Comforter to the end of the world." In the early history of the Church it was customary to hold silent meetings for worship, and yet in these meetings many were constrained to speak words of thanksgiving, to pray or give exhortation; and always such service was received as being from the Lord. They did not believe in one man as leader, and admitted freely the preaching of women. George Fox taught that Christ and His disciples established a spiritual Kingdom; and that no outward rites or ceremonies were commanded by Christ; thus, water baptism, the Lord's Supper, and communion were not accepted. Believing that this is the time when men should worship God in spirit and in truth, they saw only the spiritual relation between man and Christ.

The foundation on which the Church was built was sure, and marvelous has been the result, and more marvelous yet will it be. The Church has passed through perilous straits; tares have sprung up; there have been times of sore lethargy, times when the Church has sunk into conservatism and formality; then again it has been struck by the wave of fanaticism. There has had to be a sifting and sorting out of evil things; and there have been times of stagnation and drought. But the Lord has been by its side, as He was with the children of Israel, always giving victory when close in His path, but allowing them to suffer when following after false Gods. And today, we believe we are a Church of God's choosing. Not one of us is willing to say that the principles on which the Friends' Church was founded are weak, or that we can find a better church home elsewhere; or that the Friends' Church has outlived its usefulness. But rather will we uphold the old church, build on the strong foundation to fit the ages, progress of course, until we have as far outstripped the past as has the great wireless telegraph of today surpassed the first crude line that announced James K. Polk president of the United States, but remember always, that the great underlying principles must ever remain the same.

Along the same line I would like to follow the wonderful Christian Endeavor movement, the greatest school of evangelization and Christian training for young people the world has ever known. We know its early history. We know of that grand, good man, Francis E. Clark, and his first little Christian Endeavor Society. We know of its rapid growth and progress in the Christian world, the floods of enthusiasm, the enormous Christian Endeavor conventions when public halls were filled, yes, crowded. It was popular then, to belong to the Christian Endeavor Society. When Father Endeavor Clark's name was spoken, great audiences were moved, and the signal for the chautauqua salute brought a flood of handkerchiefs and wild enthusiasm. This has been a wonderful movement. There was the Evangelistic side, the Foreign Missionary and Home Missionary Departments, the Bible Study course, the Temperance, Musical and Sunshine Departments; but back of this great movement and underlying these great fields of work, is the principle on which it is all based, the solid foundation on which the great movement was built—the pledge. Oh, that great big Christian Endeavor discipline or creed of faith, the Christian Endeavor pledge, which, summed up and rounded out, is expressed plainly in this: "I will endeavor by God's help as much as I know how to live a consistent Christian life!"

I would like to pause for a moment while every Christian renews within themselves this pledge, a pledge that has meant so much to Christ's Church, that has developed such fields of usefulness. But it seems to me in later years, we are not appreciating as we should, this great field of Christian activity. A lethargy has settled over the Church in this line of work. We have always been glad to term our loved friend, Levi Rees, the "Father of Christian Endeavor" in Western Yearly Meeting of Friends. In 1889 the first Christian Endeavor Society in this Yearly Meeting was established in Indianapolis, where he was then pastor. Others followed the example, and soon Friends recognized it as a department in the Church, and Levi Rees was made the first Yearly Meeting superintendent of this Department. The movement grew rapidly for some years and none of us can tell of the good accomplished by this organization.

Social life has been bettered by it. I have found where the spiritual life of the Church has been very much strengthened, and where the Church has been unified by it. But I have found where seemingly the Church has been weakened, and where it has not seemed to be helpful. But the basic principles remain and never has the true principle of Christian Endeavor been at fault; and we can invariably attribute such weakness to local conditions, and lack of true Christian zeal or wisdom.

Christian Endeavor is the right principle, and the lethargy that has settled over our young people is just now ready for the awakening that is to come; and I believe that the old time vigor will be aroused, and it will mean more to the Friends' Church than ever before. I have found places where the complaint is made that Christian Endeavor separated the old and young in the Church, but true Christian Endeavor is not guilty. In all such conditions, somebody or some other cause is at fault. You know we have old young people and young old people, and then we have very old, old people, and very young, young people. But the ideal home is where the parents and children are of the same age, and the ideal church is one that knows not young and old ideas. In a little book published by E. Howard Brown in 1899, I find these statements in regard to Christian Endeavor work in the Friends' Church: "It has been a great blessing not only in putting our young people to work, but in holding them in the Church when other denominations were bidding for them." He gives three great reasons why Friends should stand by the Christian Endeavor movement. First, "Because it fits into our organization so perfectly." Second, "Because it brings some of our doctrines before the world and into practical use that we have been teaching for two hundred and fifty years."

Third, "It has opened a great door for usefulness for our young people."

At about this time the Christian Endeavor movement was at high tide in the Friends' Church. The statistics given in the same article show in Western Yearly Meeting fifty-two Christian Endeavor Societies with one thousand one hundred and nineteen active members. Today's reports show twenty-seven societies with about seven hundred active members.

We have stated that about this time the Christian Endeavor movement in the Friends' Church was at its height; and we also notice that soon after this time it began in some degree to decline. I wonder if we might associate with these facts, the truth that, at that time our strongest and best leaders were pushing the movement and throwing might and soul into it, and may we feel that in part at least, the slow progress which we are now making may be attributed to the lack of strong leaders?

During the last five years I have been in close touch with the work of the young people in Western Yearly Meeting. All over the Yearly Meeting I have found both ministers and lay members of the Church who readily say, "I owe my success and my Christian experience to the Christian Endeavor Society." I find where the society has done wonderful things in the past. But for the past few years it has been a hard fight to keep it up to the old standard. I maintain, however, that if it has done so much good in the past, if the organization is of the Lord, and the foundation on which it is built be sure and steadfast, we must build on it to fit the ages; progress according to the needs of the Church, thus making it again the greatest Christian force of the day. I would like to enumerate some of the hindrances which I have found to the growth of this movement in our own church, and which I feel may be easily overcome by tact and wisdom:

First, the local Christian Endeavor Society has been fed too strongly from Christian Endeavor conventions. In the earlier years we have attended, perhaps, one member of a little society away out in the country, the great crowded convention hall, where everything went well. We heard the reports of officers, took notes of all suggestions, and fell heart and soul into the enthusiasm; then went back home well loaded with ideas (in note book), but alas! our little society of eight or ten members seemed so slow after the great convention, and our note book ideas did not fit our needs, and by and by, there seemed to be no need of a society in that small Friends' Church, and we just quit.

Second, "We have gone to seed on the Christian Endeavor World. It is a little astonishing to learn how many Christian Endeavor Societies of today are conducting prayer meetings just as they did in the early years of the organization by passing clippings of the C. E. World to some members and assigning references to others to be read; in fact, following exactly the suggestions given in the C. E. World."

A school teacher, who reads journals of education and attempts to apply methods and plans suggested literally to his own classes, is usually in part at least a failure. It is only when ideals and truths presented become inspirational to the mind of the teacher that books and journals are truly helpful. The minister who reads another man's sermon or attempts to lead his own congregation according to plans laid out by some book of sermons or prayer meeting outlines, always fails to instill into that meeting the spiritual life desired; but when the pastor studies great sermons, when the plans and methods studied become inspirational to the pastor they are truly helpful.

Next we have in the past allied ourselves as a society more closely with the "State and District" organization than with our own denomination, thus violating that part of our pledge, "I will be loyal to my own church." We have interpreted this phrase literally, seeming to feel that it means only, that we identify ourselves with the Friends Church and attend its regular services often enough to satisfy our conscience in regard to the keeping of the pledge.

Being loyal to our own church means much more than many of us comprehend. In this one phase I think the C. E. work in our own church has suffered most from the lack of the leadership of good strong pastors. It is the wise pastor who must carefully lead the young people into the paths of the church, induce them to organize classes in church doctrines and history, hand out to them the food that will inspire the organization of the Young People's Missionary classes, and carefully instruct along lines of church loyalty.

Another thing in which we are failing just now is the development of our young people in public work. We say that the C. E. prayer meeting is such a good opportunity for the young to learn to give public prayer and testimony. But I would ask, of what good is it to our young people to teach them to offer public praise and prayer in the little C. E. prayer meeting if they are given no further opportunity in this line of service.

The program services common in some of our churches for the Sabbath morning services and even at times in the regular church prayer meeting, is just now one of the hindrances to the good results desired from the effort of the Christian Endeavor. And while I deplore the conditions where a tedious "talk meeting" spoils the effect of a good sermon, yet I would like to plead for a short, concise prayer and praise service, conducted by a wise leader on every Sabbath morning. It is helpful to our young people and a delight to our fathers and mothers. And who of us in years to come, will not have a more tender recollection of the broken, earnest testimony of the Christian Endeavorer, or the loving words of praise spoken by a dear old mother or father than for the rich anthem song by an irreligious choir?

Now just one other place in which the church is making her young people weak, and losing them to other organizations. We do not treat them as if they were intelligent, conscientious beings, and equal to that which the church needs. They are treated too much as some parents often treat their children, continually coaxing and bribing them in order that they may be satisfied to remain at home.

The church is continually introducing some phase to "interest the young people" that they may not want to go to other churches.

The pastoral committee is afraid to adopt church measures according to convictions for fear it "may not please the young people."

The pastor must not preach against social evils for fear it might "offend some of the young people."

Why our young people, the young people of the Friends Church, and those we are to win, are bright, intellectual, educated boys and girls, often brought up in true Christian homes, and they will love the church, not for its power to play with them or to entertain, but for its true Christian principles.

The world laughs and scoffs at the church playing at Christianity, but the world itself looks with admiration on the true Christ-life manifested in the church. When parents introduce into the home, questionable amusements in order to "keep the children at home," they are only hastening the day when the children will leave the home for the gayer pleasures offered outside, while the Christian influence of the parents is always weakened by such leniency.

If we would hold the young people for our church and for Christ we must raise the standard of Christian living, make them feel that they are a part, and an equal part of a noble Christian denomination. We can and must instill into the young a pride in true Christian life. In the past the C. E. Society has done this for numbers of young lives. Shall we not be a unit for its revival on broader and deeper lines than in the past; and renew our faith in the pledge, "By God's help I will endeavor to live a consistent Christian life"?

The Embarrassment of Success

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

A recent letter from Emory J. Rees speaks as follows:

"A few days ago when we made out the quarterly report for Marigoli station and its out-stations, some thoughts were suggested by what that report indicated, and these apply in large measure to the work of all our stations.

"We found for Marigoli, that we have schools at four points, each consisting practically of two schools since the boys and girls are taught separately. We found 1110 boys and girls enrolled, and that there has been an attendance of 835. Now we have not been trying to increase the numbers in these schools. Rather we have been trying to reduce them to numbers that can be cared for with our meager equipment.

"To care for these 1110 young people we have eight schools, held in four miserable temporary buildings of which we are ashamed every time we are visited by a government official or by any other visitor. There are no seats but the floor; no desks but the often-bare black knees of the vaguely aspiring youth. Only one school room has a table of any sort, round which table some girls who have learned to write might have been seen a few days ago, kneeling before their open copybooks. We have no books to meet the constant requests for "Kitabu," the 300 First Reading Books having been long ago sold out. We have only a few charts made by rubber stamps, or on the typewriter, and children are passing from these few charts with their simple sentences to the reading of the Gospel of Mark, of which there remains but 200 of the original 450 copies. There are no adequate blackboards; no properly qualified native teachers—in a word, there is not enough of anything except of ignorant, black, degraded native boys and girls, with a vague and ill-defined desire for something better than their own heathen life can offer. And to crown all there is no money to supply these essentials.

"As matters now are we are doing something, though not enough. There is a constantly increasing demand for books, schools and school buildings, which on our present lines we have no expanding resources to meet. We are getting farther and farther behind the educational needs of our field, and we shall find it increasingly difficult to overtake these demands. May we not look for definite steps for 1913-14 toward meeting the need for school equipment, including buildings for our stations, furniture for the buildings, and such printed matter as may be needed? Much of the material for the printed matter is already in MSS. and with proper arrangements more could be found.

"No one measure that we could put in force would do more to put the Mission in better standing with the government, than would the opening of a properly equipped Boarding School. We have always shown weakness in our educational work, when compared with the Missions of the Church of England, and of the Roman Catholic Church. We should frankly admit this weakness, and set about the task of remedying the evil. This we shall not be able to do without special effort. What should have been the natural growth of the past ten years, must now be produced to order, with the disadvantage of being behind with the task. Prompt vigorous and definite steps are needed to put our educational work upon a proper footing. To accomplish this will give larger returns in the future of our work, than any other kind of work to which we might at this time turn, and those returns will be of the most desirable sort."

This plea from Africa should set Friends to thinking, especially those who want to make investments which will count most largely in results in the uplift of a needy race. This demand of the youth of Africa should be met while it is vigorous, and not be allowed to chill. Our Board is prepared to meet it in small part, but there must be a large increase in funds to meet it at all adequately. Are there not some Friends, or groups of Friends who would like to equip one of these schools. We have awakened the mental hunger of these young people, and now we must not let them starve. Who will come to the help of our Board in this work?

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. A Message From the Friends in Kansas City

The Monthly Meeting in Kansas City, Mo., has felt the importance of wise activity at the present time in helping to keep the peace, and has prepared a letter as printed below which makes an appeal to Friends everywhere in the United States. The form of memorial used by Kansas City Friends is also given herewith and is to be commended for its brevity and directness. The form used is, however, of minor importance; the important part of the matter is that the officials at Washington should know that a large body of citizens wholly approve the policy of the present administration, and pledge themselves to the active support of efforts to find a peaceful solution of the present international difficulties.

A Memorial from the Kansas City Monthly Meeting of the Society of Friends (being the Executive Meeting of that body) to the President, the Secretary of State, and the Committees on Foreign Relations of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

Believing as we do that war is not a Divinely appointed instrument for the settlement of questions arising between nations, we desire to convey to you our sympathetic appreciation of your expressed purpose to avoid a war with Mexico and we desire and pledge ourselves to use the means in our power to strengthen and support you in your efforts to preserve peace.

(Signed by the officers of the meeting.)

To all Monthly Meetings of Friends in the United States

DEAR FRIENDS—We are impressed at this time with the consequences which would follow a war with Mexico, and with the necessity of avoiding such a conflict.

In the present fluid state of public opinion some overt act might instantly crystallize a war spirit, and we believe that the best means of guarding against such a calamity is to organize and to express the peace spirit of this country to the end that we may not be hurried into war.

Should war take place, it is not from the aged and the feeble that it will exact its toll, but from the young and the strong on whom have been centered the hopes and efforts of our lives.

War is a stern master; it is not a matter of floating banners and lively music, or even of active heroism, but one of sickness, death, discouragement and demoralization.

After a generation of effort, we have reached the point where it seems possible to make an effective struggle against intemperance and vice; if war were to take place it would divert attention from these issues and indefinitely postpone the victory over these social evils.

Those of us who desire to see equal opportunities for all of our citizens must realize that nothing will so entrench the power of present possession as a war which will enhance the value of everything, raise the rate of interest, increase the cost of living, and hamper us with a debt which will preclude reforms or improvements for many years.

In no event can a war with Mexico mean other than disaster to this country. The South and the West are now trying to assimilate so much foreign blood that it taxes their courage and patience, and if they are to be swamped by an immense increase of it, they must relinquish their effort in despair.

Having these things in mind, we have, ourselves, prepared a memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Committees on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the House of Representatives, thanking them for their determination to avoid if possible, armed intervention, and assuring them of our unfaltering adhesion to the cause of peace, and our desire to support and strengthen them in all efforts in this direction.

We also desire by all means in our power to retain, at this time, a calm temper, to preserve and stimulate the spirit of peace, and to decry the spirit of violence and war; and we desire that we may be preserved in faithfulness to the trust which has been reposed in us in this matter, and that we may be kept outspoken and fearless in the presentation of our principles before men.

Above is a copy of the Memorial which we have sent to Washington, and we would suggest to our fellow Monthly Meetings at once to take this means, and to use such other methods as they can for the preservation of peace.

Very sincerely,

[Signed] C. C. PICKETT, Clerk.

Awake, O Sword and Smite

BY E. B. MENDENHALL

Yes, the sword and the use of it have the divine sanction; even Christ himself said, "Let him that hath no sword sell his garment and buy one." Yes, he wanted a keen, bright sword, and expected it to be used; and when the impulsive Peter drew his and smote off the ear of Malchus, there came, "Put up thy sword for all that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Hence the divine sanction and use of the sword is forever withdrawn. "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." Are you a servant of Jesus Christ? Then you cannot fight.

Indeed it is strange that so small a per cent. of the Christian world has been led clearly to see that all wars are incompatible with the Christian religion. True, the organization of the World's Court of Arbitration was a great event in the history of nations, but disarmament would be greater. Yet men, multiplied thousands of them, are training and being trained to send shot and bomb and shell crashing through iron-clad and Dread-naughts.

When Jesus was asked by His disciples, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and when," He answered,

"Take heed; * * * there shall be wars and rumors of wars; famines and earthquakes: these things must needs come to pass." I wonder—O, I wonder!—"Must needs come to pass"? Certainly, so long as the Prince of the power of the air rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience, that long will there be "wars and rumors of wars."

But the time will come when the devil will be cast into the bottomless pit; then will Christ appear plainly as the Prince of Peace, and the nations will cease to beat implements of husbandry into implements of war. Then will they cease to "learn to make war" any more. Marshalltown, Iowa.

David Tatum

The following Memorial of the life of David Tatum has been adopted by Chicago Monthly Meeting, to be forwarded to the Quarterly and Yearly Meetings:

In the removal by death of David Tatum, our church has lost one of the most interesting and remarkable men it has ever produced. His interest arose, not so much from great ability or in learning or eloquence, as from single-hearted obedience to his Divine Master and willingness to serve him without regard to his personal comforts.

As he entered into the service of the ministry in early life, he had no opportunity for the acquisition of property, and passed through life with very little means, often very short of money. He and his wife served as pastors for the church at Cleveland for several years, and were very faithful in building it up from an exceedingly small base to a good-sized meeting. He traveled much in the service of the Gospel, especially in the Southern states.

He was thoroughly versed on the subject of Temperance in all its aspects and was able to make a most interesting discourse on that question. He has held many meetings and delivered many addresses on this subject. He often went from place to place on foot and with very little money in his pocket. Upon arrival in the town or city, he sought a person of similar views and feelings, and was often directed by the Holy Spirit to such persons without the intervention of any other person.

He had the gift of discernment and prophecy, and was able frequently to speak of the private life of an individual. He published at one time a book giving illustrations of spiritual insight in many instances.

His sermons were not long, but were clear and distinct and always contained an acknowledgment of Christ as the Savior of men and directed his hearers to Him for forgiveness of sins.

His wife was also a minister of the Gospel; was closely united with him in the work in which they were engaged. She died several years before him, and the latter part of his life was spent mainly with his children and grandchildren. During this time, while too feeble to leave his home, he sent out many postal cards and letters of salutation to individuals and members.

As a member of our meeting, he was always present when able and when not engaged in the work of the ministry elsewhere, he generally took some part in public exercises of the meeting. He lived to the advanced age of nearly 89 years, and during the last few years of his life was unable to leave home and to pursue the work to which he devoted his life, but he maintained a calm, restful spirit and looked forward with anxious hope to the close of his life, which occurred at the residence of his son at Joplin, Mo., on the 7th of September, 1912.

Sarah Goddard Newlin

Sarah Goddard Newlin, a minister of the Gospel and for many years a member of Falmouth Monthly Meeting, Portland, Maine, was called to her eternal reward on the 29th of July. As a true wife, a faithful mother, and a consecrated minister of Jesus Christ, she rounded out more than fourscore years of valued service. After many years of patient waiting she obeyed the summons, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Her outlook was world wide and in so far as strength and time permitted she endeavored to follow in the path thus revealed to her. She was not a foreign missionary in the sense in which the term is now used, but nevertheless, in her many missions for her Master she traveled all over this country, preached in the British Isles and visited different parts of the continent of Europe.

The burden of age and weakening faculties kept her for many years deprived of the activities in which she had spent her life and sacrificed her powers, but her faith, her spiritual perception and her love and appreciation of eternal things grew stronger with the passing months and years. Her spirit was young—a fact which kept her always in the deepest sympathy with youth and its varied enthusiastic expressions. She loved young people, and they always reciprocated her feeling.

While her ability as a preacher was by no means small, she will be specially remembered by her gift in prayer. In the meeting for worship, in the prayer service, or at the family altar the sound of her voice never failed to bring God nearer, and open the heavenly windows that the showers of blessing might fall upon those who shared with her those hours of spiritual fellowship.

In the closing years of her life she was obliged to learn the difficult lesson that "They also serve who only stand and wait." "She waited for the summons" and though oft the waiting was weary the brightness of her spirit never dimmed, and in the closing days of her life when friends and earthly surroundings were fading from her mind she arose to perceive in her spirit that the Master's messenger was at hand with the welcome release and call to higher service.

She hath passed to her reward. Her many friends in America and Europe will miss her, but the strong lessons of her life will remain sweet and fragrant as the odor of flowers.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at New Garden, Indiana, on the 22 and 23 of August. The usual session on Ministry and Oversight was on Sixth-day. Several Friends were present from other Quarterly meetings, among whom Levi Cox, from Winchester Quarter, bore a prominent and acceptable part in the ministry. After the transaction of the usual business a recess was taken, and a basket dinner partaken of in the adjoining school building. This was enjoyed by all who were attending Quarterly Meeting, and was planned in order that all present might remain to attend a Bible School conference held at 2:30 P. M. Ethel Bond, wife of the pastor at New Garden particular meeting, and superintendent of Bible School work in the Quarterly Meeting, presided over this session, and opened it with explanatory remarks as to what it means to be a front line Bible School in Indiana Yearly Meeting. Representatives from each of the Bible Schools had a part in the program. Some of the topics discussed were: The Graded Lessons, The Organized Class, Our Lesson Helps, How is the Missionary thought being advanced in our schools, The best method of teaching Temperance, and How Friends' schools can best keep the spirit of what is called "Decision Day."

Following the Bible School conference there was held a Christian Endeavor session, of which Rena Thomas, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in the Quarterly Meeting, was the leader. She opened the meeting with a talk upon the place the Christian Endeavor holds in our Quarterly Meeting work, and how its members may be brought into closer connection with our older members and their work. Her remarks were followed by reports from the various Christian Endeavor Societies of the Quarterly Meeting, after which, all present, older and younger, were asked to take part in a model Christian Endeavor meeting. This was participated in by as many as could find opportunity in the twenty minutes allowed for this part of the program, no one person being allowed more than three minutes, and many taking less time. During both conferences the young people of Arba and Concord particular meetings favored us with some splendid songs, and one or two fine recitations. These conferences indicate an earnest desire on the part of our members to come into line with all the different boards of the Five Years Meeting as soon as our Yearly Meeting's committees can be brought into harmony therewith.

Fred E. Smith, of Fountain City, Indiana, has accepted a call to Friends' Meeting at Greensboro, North Carolina. His ministry of three years in the Fountain City Meeting has been very satisfactory, and the Friends there have given him up with great reluctance. The Meeting has prospered, and the Sabbath School increased so much, that a larger house is needed. We rejoice that Fred E. Smith is going to such an attractive field of labor, and he will have the prayers and best wishes of his many friends at Fountain City, but it leaves that Meeting without a pastor. It is a place for great usefulness, and the right man would find it a very desirable and successful field for pastoral work.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

At their home at Kildare, Oklahoma, August 13, Joshua Moffitt and wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Four generations were represented in the sixty-three persons who were present, and all enjoyed the occasion exceedingly. Many beautiful presents were received, and $35.00 in gold. Dinner was served by their two daughters, Mrs. A. J. Weesner, of Dahinda, Illinois, and Mrs. D. M. Jones, of Kildare, Oklahoma. About one-third of those present were relatives from Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois and Missouri.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

A series of meetings at Graham, North Carolina, conducted by J. M. Cain, of White Plains, was a great blessing to the church. About twenty persons were converted and reclaimed. Fourteen gave their names for membership. Deep conviction took hold of the people at the first, and God was glorified in the results. Penitents were urged to confess their sins and believe in Jesus Christ, the Atonement for sin. The meetings closed on August 28, with four conversions at the last service.

The late Yearly Meeting in harmony with most religious denominations, recommended to the families of Friends "The Family Altar League," 602 Lakeside Building, Chicago, Illinois. All information concerning this nation-wide movement can be obtained by writing to the above address.

Western Yearly Meeting

From Silent Evangel, we learn that the average attendance of Indianapolis First Friends' Sabbath School for the first six months of 1912 was 138; and for a like period this year, 195. The average attendance for the primary department for the same time in 1912 was 28, and for this year, 35.

At its last session, Plainfield Quarterly Meeting agreed to send an appeal to the Yearly Meeting that provision be made for the building of safety vaults to contain the complete records of each subordinate meeting, said lists of records to be forwarded to the Yearly Meeting in 1914, and the records to be printed in the Minutes for future reference.

During the months of July and August the Friends' Church at Paoli, Indiana, has joined with the Baptist and Presbyterian churches in holding a union service each Sunday evening on the lawn of the court house. Benches were arranged out of lumber and removed each week, and chairs were furnished by Aaron Maris, so that about two hundred could be seated, and many others made themselves comfortable on the grass. All seemed to appreciate these services, and many heard the gospel that would not have found their way to the churches. Beginning at seven o'clock, and closing early also helped to keep up the large attendance. Splendid song services were led by the union choir.

As a result of the College students' picnic held in Jackson Park, Chicago, in July, a desire has arisen to bring into closer fraternal relations the Friends attending the University and the alumni of Friends' colleges residing in the city. Another picnic or social is planned for this fall. Some effort also is being made by the Friends in the University to form a Quaker Club. Any desiring information concerning room and board should correspond with Herman Newman, 1817 Republic Building, during September, or with William Cary, 1232 East Fifty-seventh Street, after the first of October.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

Samuel Haworth and wife spent a few days at Wilmington, Ohio, on their way to Minneapolis, where he will serve as pastor during the coming year. He preached at the Wilmington Meeting August 31.

The Evangelistic Committee of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, the Special Committee appointed on the increase of membership, and the committee on Young People's Activities, held a joint meeting in Wilmington, August 29. There was a large attendance and a profitable conference.

Homer Biddlecum, who will continue to reside at Cuba, Ohio, where he has served that meeting as pastor, will visit the Martinsville meeting every two weeks.

The Seattle Conference

A conference of unusual importance and interest was held in connection with Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting at Seattle, Washington, August 1-3, when delegates from British Columbia Quarterly Meeting joined with Friends of Washington in a helpful interchange of ideas and precious waiting upon the Lord.

President Pennington, of Pacific College, and his wife, Rebecca Pennington, were present as fraternal delegates from Oregon Yearly Meeting. A large number of the members of Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting are Friends by conviction, who have hearty sympathy with Friends' principles, but who feel that the influence of British Columbia Friends, who by education and training are familiar with the older meetings, is very helpful. The conference was planned to meet the needs of this particular field, and the papers presented the subjects with a view to strengthening the ideals and methods of work in the great Northwest.

Edwin Coventry, of Victoria, British Columbia, read a paper on "Birthright Friends," in which he dealt with his subject as one who had made it a special study, and presented to the meeting clearly and forcibly the rise of birthright membership and the value of the education of young people in the church. Other papers of interest were "Methods of Reaching the Masses," read by Letta Gregory, of Everett, Washington. "The Place of a Young Friend in the Church," by David Priestman, of Vancouver, British Columbia, and "What Constitutes a Call for Vocal Service in a Meeting," by James Cass, of Victoria, British Columbia.

In a paper entitled "Prospects of a Northwestern Yearly Meeting," Charles Replogle presented many reasons for a closer fellowship between British Columbia and Puget Sound Friends. The similarity of location, the community of commercial interests, the same religious problems, the distance from the Yearly Meetings make British Columbia and Puget Sound natural sisters to each other, and the difference coming from different ancestry only makes the two meetings mutually helpful, as the dignity and deep thoughtfulness of the one may hold in check and still be inspired by the enthusiasm and youthful zeal of the other.

At the close of the conference resolutions were offered and adopted with a view to perpetuating the conference, making it become an annual affair.

Centennial at Lick Creek

On August 27, between four and five hundred people assembled at Lick Creek Meeting house, two and one-half miles east of Paoli, Orange County, Indiana, to celebrate the centenary of the organization of the Monthly Meeting at that place. It was an enjoyable occasion, and successful in every respect, due to the efforts of Walter W. Brown, pastor of the Friends' Church at Paoli, who acted as master of ceremonies during the day, as well as to those who spent time and effort to make the program entertaining; to the Lick Creek young people who furnished music, and to the good housewives who prepared a bountiful basket dinner.

The program began at 10:30 o'clock, with a meeting of silent worship and voluntary devotion. Following this, Bell T. Braxtan read an excellent paper on the "History of Lick Creek Meeting." This meeting was established in 1813 by Friends who had come to Indiana Territory, principally from North Carolina, because slavery existed there. From this meeting and from the school established by it went out an influence which was felt throughout the country.

An interesting feature of the morning program was a period of time devoted to reminiscences, led by a paper by Aaron Maris, followed by talks by Homer Hill, Dr. Laban Lindley, Morton Hall, of Azalia, Indiana, Enoch Dixon, Carmel, Indiana, and others.

The afternoon program consisted of papers on lives of early Friends, prepared by some of the young people. The young ladies who participated wore the quaint garb of early Friends. An interesting address by S. Edgar Nicholson on "The Awakening World and the Relation of Friends thereto" closed the exercises of the afternoon.

In the evening Mr. Nicholson gave an address at the Friends' Church in Paoli on "Friends in America and the Federation of Churches." A union choir rendered good music.

The centenary was a day well spent, and one enjoyed by all, by the older members to whom the program recalled the events of early times, and by the younger ones as well, to whom Mr. Nicholson in his address pointed out a world of opportunity in service.

Earlham Field Secretary

Vincent D. Nicholson, of Richmond, Indiana, has recently been appointed as Field Secretary of Earlham College, to succeed Morton C. Pearson, who resigned to fill the position of secretary of the Federated Churches of Indianapolis. This appointment is in line with the recent financial policy of the college, which provides for a secretary in the field continuously. His duties will consist in securing additions to the endowment, binding together more closely the college and its constituency, and so advertising it as to insure a consistently large enrollment of students.

Mr. Nicholson brings to the position considerable experience in similar work, in that he held the position as agent of the Anti-Saloon League, Field Secretary for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, was prominent in the Earlham debt raising campaign, and has served the past year as secretary of the campaign to raise $100,000.00 for Oak Grove Seminary. He is a Junior in the Harvard Law School, and son of the editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE DOCTOR'S GIFT Food Worth Its Weight in Gold

We usually expect the doctor to put us on some kind of penance and give us bitter medicines.

A Penn. doctor brought a patient something entirely different and the results are truly interesting.

"Two years ago," writes this patient, "I was a frequent victim of acute indigestion and biliousness, being allowed to eat very few things. One day our family doctor brought me a small package, saying he had found something for me to eat.

"He said it was a food called Grape-Nuts and even as its golden color might suggest, it was worth its weight in gold. I was sick and tired, trying one thing after another to no avail, but consented to try this new food.

"Well! It surpassed my doctor's fondest anticipation and every day since then I have blessed the good doctor and the inventor of Grape-Nuts.

"I noticed improvement at once and in a month's time my former spells of indigestion had disappeared. In two months I felt like a new man. My mind was much clearer and keener, my body took on the vitality of youth, and this condition has continued."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A Meeting for Worship at Karuizawa, Japan

The little company of Friends now gathered in Karuizawa, the most popular summer resort in Japan, have been favored for more than a week with a visit by Isaac Sharpless, the president of Haverford College, and his wife, together with their daughter, Edith, who is a resident missionary in the country. On First-day, the 17th of August, a meeting for worship with them was held at the house of their hosts, Dr. Inazo and Mary P. E. Nitobe, which will be a pleasant spot in the memories of those who were so happy as to be there.

Silence was first broken by Elizabeth R. Gillett, who offered thanks to our Father for the privilege of being permitted thus to meet in His name, and for His protecting mercies over our friends in their journeyings. After this, Isaac Sharpless spoke from the words, "Thy will be done," touching on the blessedness of being able to use these in times of affliction, as well as on the great importance of taking this as the ruling principle of our whole life and work. As we look back over the past, we have fallen short in this respect, but yet can thankfully recognize that at times we have been made, perhaps even unconsciously, the instruments of God's will.

Lettice Braithwaite followed with the words, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life," laying special stress on the word "entangleth." The affairs of this life necessarily engage our attention, and in the rush of modern life in England, to avoid becoming entangled in them is not easy. There is more need therefore, of our profiting by the opportunities, which we can take or make, of retirement for prayer.

After another interval of silent waiting, Horace E. Coleman spoke of the resurrection power which distinguishes Jesus Christ from every other religious leader of history, which made it impossible for the grave to hold Him, and which still pulsates in the life of His followers.

Lastly, Elizabeth R. Gillett reminded us of Paul's exhortation, "Set your affection on things above," and, in connection with this, of Christ's command, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." Our minds should be pointed heavenward habitually. Going about to railway stations in her mission to railway men she had often been taught a lesson by the telegraphic needle which, though deflected when in action, always resumes its position of pointing upward when at rest.

Silence then once more fell upon the meeting, in which we may hope our hearts too, were pointed heavenward.

The Pocket Testament League

Many of the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND do not know what this league is. It is simply a pledge to read a portion of the testament every day.

According to J. Wilbur Chapman in the American Messenger, it originated with a daughter of that noble Christian Quaker philanthropist, Joseph Cadbury, of Birmingham, England, who, wishing to interest her associates in reading the Bible, had a little pocket made in her dress in which to carry a testament, not realizing that she was forming any league, however.

She afterward married Charles M. Alexander, and in their travels with J. W. Chapman they introduced it wherever they went. Now it is estimated that

THE AMERICAN FRIEND until January 1, 1915, for $1.75. It is a great offer. Tell your friends about it.

A PERSONAL WORD

I take it for granted that all Pastors, Sabbath School Superintendents and members of the various Sabbath School Committees, are interested in having the very best literature obtainable in the Friends' Sabbath Schools.

For over twenty-two years I have given my best efforts to this work. It is not necessary to state the sacrifices of time and money spent to build up the Sabbath School publishing and supply business for the Friends' Church in America.

I have reached the age when I must soon "ease up," and am looking toward that time. I have made offers to the Publication Board for taking over this work; but for the present their time and thought is to get the AMERICAN FRIEND thoroughly established. It may be two or three years before they can consider this work, and it may be that way will not open for it before the next Five Years Meeting.

In the meantime, I shall continue to do my best, although feeling that younger men ought to have the burden of the work. I want to get all the supply business for the Sabbath Schools concentrated, so that when the time comes to turn it over to the church, it will be something Worth While.

TO THE POINT.

Now, to the point; it so happens that some of the Friends' Sabbath Schools prefer other lesson helps and papers to ours, (although we are supplying fully 80 percent. of all helps to Friends' Sabbath Schools). There is nothing improper in this. All schools have a right to their own personal preference, and to use what they really believe to be for the best interest of the School.

If these Schools only knew how much they could help us by ordering their supplies through us, they would surely do so. I am agent for all the Sabbath School supply houses, and am constantly ordering from other houses for Friends' Schools.

GRADED HELPS.

Three years ago I was appointed agent among Friends for the Syndicate publishing the Graded system of lessons and began at once a systematic campaign advertising these Helps. The results, as seen by the reports of the Bible School Commission of the Five Years Meeting, is that 93 Friends' Sabbath Schools are using, to some extent, these Helps. This work is largely the result of my advertising, as agent for the Syndicate, and I am in a position to give correct information on the Graded Helps. I can also send prospectus, prices and order blanks.

AN APPEAL.

My appeal to all Friends' Sabbath Schools is to use as many of our Quarterlies, Youth's Friends, and Child's Lesson Leaf, as possible, and give us their orders for all other supplies. We can supply you with any Publications or Lesson Helps published by any publishing house in the world. These will not cost any more than to order direct from the publishers. We can supply you with Bibles, Maps, Record books, Class books, Reward cards, Blackboards, Cradle Rolls, and in fact, everything for the Sabbath School. Send for our complete catalogue.

Sincerely yours,

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Our Colleges Opening

The usual annual pilgrimage of our young people to the colleges and universities is on. Probably a greater number will be enrolled this year than ever before. Many are marching away to experiences that will mark a turning point in their career. Few will return to their homes with unchanged characteristics and tendencies. Probably the college more than any other institution save the church has a greater transforming power over young manhood and womanhood. Yet the average youth will find at college largely what he seeks. How essential that the ideals be correct and the purposes exalted! College life means character building and training quite as much as mind development; and it should mean no less spiritual growth and betterment. The world needs more and more the all rounded product, the cultured mind, the well established character, the consecrated Christian life; and the college administration is sadly lacking that does not contribute equally to all.

Prison Reform

Prison reform has moved forward with rapid pace within the past two decades. The old idea of "an eye for an eye," which found its counterpart in the modern systems of punishment meted out to criminals has yielded to the more modern humanitarianism that aims first of all to reform the criminal, regarding the idea of punishment as the merest incident in the equation. Society can get no satisfaction out of the imprisonment of a man, and no protection in the last analysis except as the imprisonment becomes the schoolmaster to lead to a better life. The American Prison Association will hold its annual meeting at Indianapolis, October 11-16. There will be an elaborate program and a large attendance is expected. These men and women are to be regarded as among the greatest benefactors of the race, in that they purpose to rescue the derelicts of human life and transform them into trusted citizens as a part of the world's working force.

The Mexican Situation

Mexican affairs are still chaotic, but there seems to be strong reason to hope that President Wilson's peaceful policy will finally prevail. The jingoes have gone to cover for the most part, and talk of intervention has subsided at least temporarily. No one as yet can predict the future however. Undoubtedly the Huerta administration is resorting to every possible method that gives promise of sustaining its policies if these may be really said to have an existence. Meanwhile the rebellion is uncrushed, although rebels and Federals are both waiting to see the outcome of the diplomacy of the Wilson administration at Washington. It is too much, perhaps, to hope for a speedy settlement. It is supposed that Huerta is on his last legs financially, but it is not certain that he will eliminate himself as a candidate for the future Presidency.

Hope of ultimate peace, however, does not appear to lie in any other direction. Meanwhile all citizens must approve the patience and extreme caution being practiced at Washington, and all should pray that the God of Nations may help still further in a peaceful solution of a much tangled and delicate situation.

Possible Climatic Changes

Hon. William M. Calder, a congressman from New York, has introduced a resolution providing for a national inquiry into the feasibility and cost of a gigantic jetty, running two hundred miles into the Atlantic, southeast from the coast of Newfoundland. At present the cold Labrador ocean current which sweeps down from the North, is not only thrown against our Eastern Atlantic Coast by the Gulf Stream, after interception south of Newfoundland, but in turn disrupts the Gulf Stream, breaking it up into smaller currents, which find outlets, one up by Greenland, one by way of the British Isles, and a third to the southeast. The purpose of the proposed jetty would be to deflect the Labrador current out into mid-ocean as a protection to our Eastern seaboard. What the effect would be is problematic, but it has the appearance of changing radically the climates of the Eastern United States, the British Isles, Greenland, and possibly Iceland, if perchance the project should ever prove to be a feasible one.

Our Japanese Problem

The Japanese do not seem disposed to allow the Californian alien land question to rest without further consideration. On August 26th, a note from Japan to our government made it clear that that country is unwilling to submit the question in dispute to the decision of our United States courts, and that it is a matter for diplomatic settlement. The note raises the question of the power of the United States to guarantee the rights of another nation. These are questions that are fundamental to this unfortunate international dispute, but we have no reason to fear that our State Department will depart from the path of rectitude in their determination. America's responsibility lies just now as much in the way of a high example to the Japanese government and people, quite as much as in the protection of our own interests against the limited number of aliens who reach our shores. The manner of our procedure and the spirit manifested in this troublesome question will leave their impress upon world civilization.

Temperance Union

The ninth International Convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union will meet in Brooklyn, October 24th, 10 a.m. Representatives will be present from all civilized lands and the program includes speakers of world-wide reputation and subjects of world-wide importance. A reception to the foreign delegates is to be held on the evening of October 23d, and an all-day meeting of prayer for the conference will be held in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on October 23d.

The Call of the Autumn

Vacation days are over, and the religious world no less than the secular, is facing the usual period of reconstruction, otherwise known as the fall campaign. It is regrettable that the Lord's work must be governed by the times and seasons, and that all too frequently the church must spend weeks in the autumn recovering from the stagnation and inactivity of the summer. But so it is, and the remedy is not yet apparent.

These autumn days are or ought to be the period of constructive religious endeavor. The religious services will be better attended, the Sabbath schools will be recruited, the revival spirit will begin to take on new vigor. What the springtime is to nature, the autumn is to the church.

What of the sowing, and what of the harvest? The query is a vital one to the Church as a whole and to every local congregation. Will the membership be satisfied with last year's record merely, or will it catch a vision of unrealized possibilities and strive for their attainment? What kind of ideals are there for the meetings, for the Bible school, for the young people, for mission work, for education? Will the emphasis be laid upon mechanical procedure or upon genuine spiritual development? Is there a purpose to reap a real harvest or only a spirit of contentment that is satisfied with a mere existence?

We believe the time is opportune for a season of unexcelled activity in all Friends meetings throughout America. The coming year can be made a banner year for Quakerism, but it will require careful planning, earnest prayer, self-sacrifice, definite consecration and a spirit of fellowship and unity that is not always in evidence. In the things of the Spirit we get what we seek and what we strive for quite as truly as in the things of the world. The law of cause and effect is operative in the religious world no less than the secular.

Who can measure the influence of a three-month's season of well directed prayer by any local meeting within our borders, in which the whole congregation is prostrated in heart before the Lord, seeking Divine guidance and Divine assistance in the accomplishment of certain concrete results? It is easy to believe that a revival of interest and life would soon break out that would envelop the whole community.

We commend to all our monthly meetings the plan of going into committee of the whole upon the state of the meeting and the neighborhood, to consider what may be done to build up the congregation and secure new interest in all departments of the meeting, at the same time having in mind the moral and spiritual welfare of the entire community. Many meetings have lost connection with their localities. The residents are made to feel that attendance upon the services of worship is optional, and when they do attend it is more from a sense of duty than of real enjoyment and profit. A sort of Lookout Committee would be a splendid adjunct to every local congregation, to put heart and soul into the invitations that would reach all the negligent and unconcerned; while a Committee on Ways and Means that would endeavor to plan for a live working mechanism in which all the membership is expected to be a part, would be invaluable if rightly directed in its activities.

Finally, we are concerned that the spirit of fellowship and sympathetic interest may take possession of our entire membership. As an abnormal outgrowth of our independent polity, Friends are too critical and too suspicious one of another. No denomination can thrive upon antagonisms. We belie our denominational name when suspicion and condemnation take the place of friendly counsel and sympathetic consideration. We commune at too great distances. The wireless has been substituted for the handclasp of the olden days, and too often the message is distorted in the transmission.

In these autumn days that are harbingers of a religious awakening, let us individually and as a denomination yield ourselves to the call of the Spirit, and be obedient to His leadings, determined to set a new mark of progress in our Christian living and in our Christian service. In our planning we can afford to take risks that loom large upon the horizon of our faith, knowing that Jehovah will be ever present with us to succor and to help as emergencies require.

Some people will be satisfied just to be able to "squeeze" into heaven. But heaven will never be gained by any such method. Those who enter will march in because it is their natural habitation, because they have gained a mansion there by the life they have lived here.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools

BY HARRY R. HOLE

Many persons have never heard of the existence of an organization to promote a plan of work named in the above heading. The method first came to my attention through a social service expert in the Men and Religion Movement a year and a half ago. After taking up pastoral work in a central location in Lynn, Massachusetts, where there is much to suggest the relation of social service to religious work, I was interested in further learning of ways and means of bringing about such an effort locally. It was then that I found out about an organization with headquarters in New York and conducting this year over 300 schools in different parts of the United States; and a branch for Boston and vicinity, with eighteen schools this season, of which our own was one.

The plan provides for a term of six weeks beginning on the Monday following the Fourth of July. Sessions are held for two hours each, on five days of the week. The program includes, after a preliminary hour in which the staff may visit homes and make registrations if necessary, first devotional exercises with song, the repeating of a psalm and of the Lord's prayer; a two-minute talk on habits, a number being suggested in the manual with which teachers are supplied; a music period, with songs partly religious and partly other kinds that appeal to children; a Bible story period; an industrial period, with hammock making, basketry, raffia work, sewing, and kindergarten classes; a play-time; and dismissal with a salute to the flag, the singing of America, and the children's benediction.

In our own case there was a fulfillment of an ideal condition in which the school was supported, not by one congregation, but by a group in the same vicinity, thus emphasizing the fact that it was as largely as possible, a community affair. This fact was further emphasized by the fact that among the children who came, there were represented as many as eleven creeds, namely, Catholic, Greek, Episcopal, Swedish, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Christian, Universalist, Unitarian, and Friends. If we had been in a Jewish district, that religion would also, if the usual history were repeated, have been represented.

The object of such a school is not direct evangelism. It is most evidently social, though it is equally, or even more strongly, religious. The religious work, however, is confined to the broadest and most fundamental matters held in common by all who acknowledge the one and only God as seen in the earlier revelations, regardless not only of denominational views, and of the attitude toward the claims of larger groups that have arisen in the course of the Christian dispensation, but even of the attitude toward those truths which to the Christian are never for one moment to be regarded as secondary. Thus the movement seeks to make the Jewish child a better Jew, the Catholic child a better Catholic, and if there were a Mohammedan child it would be treated with like consideration. This does not mean that the effort is to make them more loyal to the perversions of their faiths, nor to the ecclesiastical organizations; it does mean that stories from the Old and New Testament are so presented as to inculcate faith and goodness in so far as can be done without, for the time being, arousing the prejudices to which the child may have been an irresponsible heir. The object as stated by the organization, is to bring together three waste products, and make them into something decidedly worth while, namely, idle church buildings in summer, idle students on vacation, and idle children on the streets. A few local experiences may help to illustrate the working of the method.

We were very late in arranging for our school. We knew nearly nothing about conducting such a work. We did scarcely any advertising, and found only a little enthusiasm in prospect. But our attendance ranged the whole time from 50 to 111, the average being slightly better than 79. There was one paid worker, who, with the pastor, was present every day. A large number of other persons served as volunteer helpers, on different days, there usually being from four to ten a day. Once a week some kind of an afternoon good time was provided either in the meeting house, the lawn, or by an excursion.

Great interest was manifested, once things were started. The leading local paper gave the school much publicity, including photographs of children with their work, and a lively write-up. Adults in the community were warm in their praises of the practical value of the work, and some felt that it was the finest undertaking of the meeting in many years. The children's interest may be judged by the fact, that there was practically no visiting of homes or canvassing of the neighborhood for attenders after the first day, and very little even then. It was advertised by bulletin, newspaper, and by those who came, to such an extent that we now have the total enrollment of over 200 children as a means of further efforts to do good about us; and the good will shown by us to our neighbors has met a response that bodes well for future efforts in a variety of directions.

By-products may be represented by the kindergartners who, when their dirty hands and faces had been washed, held them up in glee for another application; they said it was fun, and, that their mothers never did that! By the bright and clean Catholic girl who wondered how much it cost to get books from our library, and who, when given one freely, brought it back the next day and was ready for another. By the unusually close touch into which the minister is brought with young people who in the perplexities of their student lives, may be about making shipwreck of their faith or character, but are ready to be reached by any well-grounded man or woman who can show a sane reason for the hope that is within, and for living a life of consecration to God and dedication to the service of his or her fellow beings.

Withal, this plan represents a method that has been tried and proven eminently practical and beneficial, at least for cities, throughout a dozen years under almost every conceivable class of conditions; and one that should appeal strongly to those who are looking for ways and means of doing good in the Master's name.

Lynn, Massachusetts.

John Woolman: The Quaker

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON*

(CONCLUDED)

Woolman took to wife Sarah Ellis, a sweet girl who was at once devoted and devout, and lived in a tiny whitewashed cottage on Rancocas Creek in West Jersey. There, amid his apple trees which he planted and cultivated, he was most happy, what time he was not going to and fro, spreading his gospel of purity and pity. It was an humble abode, but he was content. He regarded agriculture as the business most conducive to moral and physical health, and was wont to say that, "If the leadings of the Spirit were more attended to, more people would be engaged in the sweet employment of husbandry, where labor is agreeable and healthful." He did not condemn honest wealth, but he saw that luxury rots men and deforms women.

From his little farm he looked out with a mingled feeling of wonder and sorrow upon the fret and unrest of the world, and especially was he grieved to see luxury overgrowing the early simplicity of his own religious society. He regarded the merely rich man with unfeigned pity. With none of his scorn, he yet had all the feeling of Thoreau for men who went about bowed down with the weight of broad acres and great houses on their backs. Near the end of his life he went to England on a religious errand, traveling in steerage, despite the protest of his friends, rather than endure the luxury of the cabin. There he saw the hardship of the life of the sailor, and it haunted him to the end. A storm came up mid-sea, and for a time all seemed lost, but Woolman, inwardly still, went about among the panic-stricken company giving words of cheer. It reminds one of a like day in the life of Fox, when his ship was pursued by pirates, "but there was a spirit in her that could not be taken."

Arriving in England almost ill, Woolman was coolly received at first, but later was given warm welcome among Friends. During the four months of his stay, he went many places, wrote several essays, and labored abundantly, but somewhat sorrowfully. On all sides he saw the intimate connection between luxury and oppression, and the burden of the laboring poor lay dark upon his sensitive spirit. He would not ride on stage-coaches because of the harsh treatment of the horses. In his lonely wanderings in the rural districts and in the manufacturing towns, he saw one class eager and greedy for gain, while the many were physically and morally degraded. It broke his heart, and his health and vitality failed. At York he fell ill with smallpox and after a few days' suffering died, in 1772.

His death was beautiful with "inward stillness," as befitted his life. Words of prayer and praise and resignation to the will of God were always on his lips. Never in his life did he offer prayers for special personal favors, but always for the universal well-being. He was, to use his own words, so mixed with his fellows in their misery that he did not consider himself a separate being. In his last prayer, beautiful beyond any words save its own, he remembered "my fellow-creatures separated from the Divine harmony." It closed with the words, "Thy will, O Father, be done." His last uttered words, written down with great difficulty, were: "I believe my being here is in the wisdom of Christ; I know not as to life or death." That was all, and that was enough both for wisdom and for faith.

Of the Quakers we may say in the words of Woolman: "I found no narrowness respecting sects and opinions, but believed that sincere, upright-hearted people in every society, who truly love God, were accepted of Him. So we find him writing of Thomas A. Kempis and John Huss as friends and fellow-lovers of one God and Father. He made his own the great saying of Penn, so dear to the heart of Lincoln, that the meek, the just, the pious, the devout, are everywhere of one religion, and that when death hath taken off the masks of flesh, they will know and love one another. Of that invisible church of the Spirit, to which all good men belong and which over-arches all sects, Woolman, like Fox and Whittier, was a God-illuminated prophet.

Indeed, if one would know the genius of the Quaker, and the depth of his "silent worship," one must go far back and high up. Quietism has been the quest of the greatest souls of the Christian centuries, and the achievement of a few. That passage in the confessions of St. Augustine—the greatest passage outside the Bible—in which he describes his "one moment of knowledge" is a perfect description of the vision of Fox and the Quakers. All down the ages one can trace this stream of sweetness and earnestness, of quietness and confidence. It flowed through Molinos and Fenelon down to our own Emerson, whose secret was "a holy and wise silence in which God dwells." When Emerson was asked by Mark Rutherford who were his chief friends, he said, "The Quakers."

After all, what we need most in our noisy age is to find the way to the place of quietness—that holy habitation of prayer, where Woolman said there is safety, and where we may learn the meaning of the words spoken of old: "Be still and know that I am God." Once having learned that, all else will be added unto us.

Young Friends Conference at the Whittier Guest House

There are few Quaker shrines on this side of the Atlantic Ocean, and one of the most interesting is that of the Whittier country on the borders of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Here in beautiful New England country in sight of the sea, one is constantly reminded of the great religious sacrifices of the past, and may be brought through Whittier's messages into touch with many of the inner meanings of life.

Among these surroundings there has gathered during the past week a conference of some forty young Friends to look through far-sighted glasses at Quakerism in all the world. We began at the far side of the world so as to get, if possible, a new perspective on ourselves, and spent a day in Asia with American and English Friends; in Japan; in China, near the mouth of the Yansi River and far up near its source in Tibet; with the members of the Brooklyn Meeting in their native town of Hok Shan in the District of Canton, and with individual Friends in the University at Peking, and at the Canton Christian College, and elsewhere.

In India we stayed a few minutes with Friends in the Central Provinces and in Ceylon, and with Jack Hoyland at Simla. Eleanor D. Wood, who had just returned from Jerusalem, took us to Ramallah and Brumana in Syria, and a long step carried us to Australia and the scattered groups of Friends there. Our hearts were warmed with love and sympathy with them in their isolated groups facing the Defence Act which requires military training for every boy over twelve years old and when, toward the end of our meetings, we heard that some of their Quaker boys had been thrown into prison for their refusal thus to prepare to kill their fellowmen, we rejoiced that the Society of Friends had still the power to suffer for conscience' sake.

In connection with Africa we visited the work in British East Africa, Pemba, Madagascar, and the scattered Friends in South Africa, who are so cleverly held together by their excellent paper and by the list which is published each year giving the names and addresses of Friends there resident, however isolated. The modern movements in all the State Churches of Europe show a wonderful opportunity for the message of Friends, and we were deeply interested in the openings in France, Germany, Norway, Denmark, and among the Turks, and in the groups of Friends and those interested in Friends in all those countries.

The study of England, Ireland and Scotland seemed like more familiar ground but showed much of absorbing interest to the student of our world-wide service. The possibility of civil war in Ireland as a result of Home Rule is deeply stirring the hearts of Friends there, and they ask our prayers that peace may prevail. Our own continent presents the questions of Latin America, Jamaica, Alaska and Canada. The Yearly Meetings in the United States were divided into four groups, those on the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts, and those east and west of the Mississippi River. There was a very deep interest and sympathy with all these groups and their varying methods, and the feeling for our points of similarity rather than of difference due to surroundings, gripped us strongly.

The conference met in the mornings and evenings. In the afternoons we had joyful excursions to Whittier's birthplace or to the ocean or other inspiring spots, but best of all were our times of united worship, both morning and evening, in the lovely garden, or our barn meeting house or in the meeting house at Amesbury where Whittier was accustomed to worship. On Sunday evening some fifty of the people of the village united with us in a time of deep worship on the basis of silence, though most of them had never been to a Friends' meeting before. The Whittier Guest House will be opened again during the Summer of next year, and all Friends and Friendly persons are welcome to make it a center for excursions in Whittier's land. There will probably be other conferences next year.

The following suggestions have grown out of our present meetings:

SUGGESTIONS

1. Let us have many conferences, both large and small, all over the world to exchange opinions and to think together as to our Friendly service, and seek to know the Divine will for us today.

2. May all be encouraged to visit meetings other than their own, both yearly and quarterly, as well as meetings for worship, and thus learn to honor each other in loving forbearing unity.

3. We would suggest that all yearly meetings publish maps in their minutes showing the location of all their meetings, that travellers and those planning to settle in new districts may be drawn toward Friendly centers. A comprehensive map showing all the meetings of Friends in the United States might thus be prepared.

4. We believe that a card catalogue of all the Friends living at a distance away from the meetings of which they are members ("lonely Friends"), might result in discovering many centers in which new meetings could be formed. We ought not to let this easy means of church extension go untried.

5. We believe that all meeting houses should be plainly marked as such with a hearty invitation to the public to attend.

6. At least once a month there should be published in our Society's papers, giving the time and place, a list of the meetings of Friends in our large cities, where it is difficult to discover our places for worship. Friends may well keep advertisements also in local papers and in hotels, libraries and Christian Association buildings.

7. Many who do not know of Friends might be drawn to us by frequent articles in secular and religious papers other than our own. We would encourage those who are in touch and sympathy with the Socialist movement to write for their papers explaining the Quaker social ideals.

8. In large cities there is a tendency for Friends to scatter, and our city meetings are encouraged to maintain centers where Friends may be able to meet socially, and where Friends' books and papers may be consulted.

9. We desire that Friends everywhere may read and study as to Friends' ideals, and that books for this purpose may be made largely available and that we may study each other's differing points of view.

10. New Quaker books are needed, especially those suitable for boys and girls from twelve to sixteen years of age, and for parents suggesting ways of awakening spiritual life in our children without creating prejudice to be later overcome.

11. We believe that all Friends' colleges should offer elective courses in Quakerism, and that in other colleges we should see that courses on comparative religions treat adequately the history and principles of Friends.

12. We suggest that Friends should search out members in the faculties of colleges not connected with Friends whose sympathies with Friendly teachings are such that young Friends or others may be referred to them for guidance in reading and thought in connection with work in history, philosophy and psychology.

13. We believe that Friends should exercise especial care in welcoming young Friends just returning from school and college, and in weaving in their interests with those of the meeting and of the community.

14. We believe that those who habitually use a program for their meetings would find great benefit in holding special meetings from time to time for meditative worship without a program, and that those accustomed to having all meetings on the basis of silence would find it helpful to arrange some programmed meetings for instruction on some religious subject.

Indiana Yearly Meeting Greetings

The following greetings to Ohio and Iowa Yearly Meetings were prepared by Timothy Nicholson of Richmond, Indiana, in consultation with some other Friends, and sent to be read upon the Centennial anniversary occasion of Ohio Yearly Meeting last month, and the semi-centennial of Iowa Yearly Meeting this month.

To Ohio Yearly Meeting on its One Hundredth Anniversary:

Ohio's only daughter, in her ninety-third year, though she has greatly outgrown her mother, sends filial greetings and the Apostolic Salutation, "Grace, Mercy, Peace from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord." Indiana also expects her four vigorous daughters from four states to honor their grandmother's century anniversary.

Your daughter respectfully presents a brief account of her past and present.

In 1821 Ohio Yearly Meeting organized Indiana Yearly Meeting with two Quarterly Meetings in Indiana and three in Western Ohio. All these still exist without change of name, three of them forming the greater part of Wilmington Yearly Meeting and one of them a part of Western Yearly Meeting.

It is not known how many members constituted Indiana Yearly Meeting at its opening. In 1827, just before the Hicksite separation, a committee of the Meeting for Sufferings reported there were 13,945. Since its opening in 1821 it has established twenty-nine Quarterly Meetings in six states of this country; making thirty-four that have belonged to it. One of them at its own request was joined to Ohio Yearly Meeting; five were taken to constitute Western Yearly Meeting in 1858 with about 7,000 members, leaving 13,000; five to constitute Iowa Yearly Meeting in 1863 with about 6,500 members, leaving about 10,000; four to constitute Kansas Yearly Meeting in 1872 with 2,500 members, leaving 14,700; and three to constitute Wilmington Yearly Meeting in 1892 with 5,421 members, leaving 17,147; and there are remaining seventeen in five states and numbering in 1912, 21,081 members.

The members left every time after setting off a Yearly Meeting were greater than that of any other Yearly Meeting in America.

As these daughters were set up housekeeping they were assisted according to their need as follows: Western $6,000; Iowa $5,000; Kansas $2,500; Wilmington $842. The Indiana Yearly Meeting house has recently been remodeled at the cost of nearly $12,000.

Indiana Yearly Meeting has twelve Endowment Funds amounting to nearly $160,000—the principal of which are the Women's Supporting Fund, $52,000; Southland College, $39,000; Ministerial and Gospel Fund, $36,000; Foreign Missions, $25,000. Friends Boarding School was established in 1847 and in 1869 it was chartered as Earlham College, which since 1880 is the joint property of both Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings. The value of the institution including the farm, buildings, and equipment is estimated at $360,000, and the endowment funds $425,000. There are two large flourishing academies, one at Spiceland, the other at Fairmount. Each of them has a handsome endowment fund. The school building at Fairmount has recently been materially enlarged and the one at Spiceland is being rebuilt at an estimated cost of $25,000.

White's Indiana Manual Labor Institute was established by Josiah White of Philadelphia in 1851; he purchased about 600 acres of timber land in Wabash County, Indiana, and a school for dependent children is now maintained and managed by a Board of Trustees appointed by Indiana Yearly Meeting. About 200 children are now being cared for; they are sent to the Institute by the Commissioners of various counties in the state and by the judges of Juvenile Courts. Extensive improvements have been made in the way of erecting good substantial buildings. The property is valued at over a hundred thousand dollars, and an endowment fund of $48,000.00 is well invested.

To Iowa Yearly Meeting Upon Her Fiftieth Anniversary:

Indiana Yearly Meeting congratulates her second daughter, Iowa Yearly Meeting, and sends maternal greetings and the Apostolic salutation, "Grace to you, and peace be multiplied in the knowledge of God and the Savior Jesus Christ." II Peter (R. V.).

In 1860 Indiana Yearly Meeting decided to organize a Yearly Meeting in Iowa in 1863, with the following Quarterly Meetings: Salem, Pleasant Run, Red Cedar, Bangor and South River, with a membership of about 6,500. In these quarters there were fifty-five congregations. These five Quarters paid thirty-eight per cent. of the money directed to be raised by Indiana Yearly Meeting, which was rather more than the average for the other nine Quarters.

In 1861 the following minute was made by Indiana Yearly Meeting: "By the epistles which we have received from all the other Yearly Meetings with which we correspond (except North Carolina, from which no epistle has been received), we are informed that they all assent to the establishment of a Yearly Meeting in Iowa, as concluded upon at our last Yearly Meeting. The concurrence of our Friends in other Yearly Meetings on this important measure, which so much affects the society at large, has been very acceptable and comfortable to us."

In 1862 Bangor Quarterly Meeting requested the Yearly Meeting to defer opening the Iowa Yearly Meeting until 1864, but the Yearly Meeting did not think it proper to grant the request, and Red Cedar asked the Yearly Meeting to make an appropriation to assist Iowa Friends in building a Yearly Meeting house. This request was referred to a committee which reported in substance, that until Iowa Friends had selected and purchased a location and had adopted plans and specifications for a house it was not proper for the Yearly Meeting to make an appropriation.

A committee was appointed to attend the opening of the new Yearly Meeting and the next year, 1863, that committee reported as follows: "That the undersigned attended, and that we met there committees of men and women Friends from New York, Baltimore and Western Yearly Meetings, making thirty of us in all. The Meeting was opened at the time proposed, at Spring Creek Meeting House near Oskaloosa, Mahaska County. It was largely attended and was a solemn and interesting Yearly Meeting and manifestly owned by the Head of the Church.

"It afforded us much comfort to mingle with our Friends and we feel encouraged with the belief that the establishment of the meeting will be useful to the church, and tend to glorify our Father in Heaven.

"Our Friends in that state have, with great unanimity, settled upon a location for their Yearly Meeting house, and are about erecting a house which will probably cost from $15,000 to $20,000. The cost will be a heavy burden upon our Friends there, many of whom are not well able therefor. We would suggest to the Yearly Meeting, whether some pecuniary assistance is not due them from us." Joseph Cox, George Evans,

Then, immediately following is this minute: "The Meeting, taking into consideration the expense about to be incurred by our brethren in that State, in building a Yearly Meeting house, unites in judgment that it will be right for us to render them some aid therein; and directs our Quarterly Meetings to raise their respective proportions of $5,000.00 and forward it to our Treasurer as early as practicable; and he is directed to pay over the funds, as received, to the order of the Building Committee of that Yearly Meeting."

The treasurer's report the next year states that the entire $5,000.00 had been forwarded as directed.

The remainder of the message to Iowa Yearly Meeting was identical with the history given above in the message to Ohio Yearly Meeting.

Letter From England

Dear Friends in America:

I have had a new experience in soul winning. For many years here a well organized soul winning mission has followed the horse racing season which is characterized by much gambling by both men and women. This year I was asked to assist in the mission, and as I knew the work was well supported by Friends, I gave five days to it.

There were about fifteen of us with song books and bibles and three musical instruments. In the morning from ten to eleven o'clock we had bible readings which I conducted, while from one to four o'clock during the racing we were seated in a circle facing with the speaker in the midst. The racing only lasted about three minutes, during which time we were always on our knees in prayer. As soon as the applause stopped we began singing, which attracted attention at once. After one song and two or three prayers, some one of the many speakers would speak not more than fifteen minutes; then another song and another speaker, etc.

During this week there were many conversions, three of whom were gamblers. One man who had graduated with the thought of preaching, and who was a trained singer, was converted and preached twice on the race course before he left for home in Glasgow, Scotland. He sent a telegram to his wife as follows: "Dear Etta—I have found my Savior on the race course. Am coming home tomorrow. Love."

The dear Lord is wonderfully blessing me in the work. Praise Him. We are now at Great Ayton in a series of meetings. From here we go to Sunderland on the East Coast. Pray for us that we may do the will of the Lord while here and know when to return to the home land. The Lord bless the coming Yearly Meetings in America.

FOR HOME READING

The Commencement of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Eliza J. Trimble Thompson, one of the founders of the W. C. T. U., tells in the Union Signal, how, on the evening of December 23, 1873, Dr. Dio Lewis delivered in Hillsboro, Ohio, a free lecture on temperance, and the results that followed it. She says:

"I did not hear Dio Lewis' lecture because of home cares that required my presence; but my son, a youth of seventeen, and my daughter were there, and they came to me upon their return home, and in a most earnest manner related the thrilling incidents of the evening; how Dr. Lewis told of his own mother, and several of her good Christian friends, uniting in prayer with and for the liquor sellers of his native town, until they gave up their soul-destroying business." Dr. Lewis said: "Ladies, you might do the same thing in Hillsboro, if you had the same faith," then turning to the men upon the platform, he added: "Suppose I ask the women of this audience to signify their opinions upon the subject?" They all bowed their consent, and fifty or more women stood up in token of approval. He then asked the men how many of them would stand as "backers," should the women undertake the work. Sixty or seventy arose. "And," continued my son, "you are on some committees to do work at the Presbyterian Church in the morning, and the ladies expect you to go out with them to the saloons!"

My husband, who had returned from Adams County Court that evening and was feeling very tired, seemed asleep as he rested upon the sofa, while my children in an undertone had given me all the above facts; but as the last sentence was uttered, he raised himself upon his elbow and said: "What tomfoolery is all that?" My dear children slipped out of the room quietly, and I betook myself to the task of consoling their father with the promise that I should not be led into any foolish act by Dio Lewis, or any association of human beings, but added: "If the Lord should show me that it was His will for the women to visit places where liquor was sold and drunk, I should not shrink from it."

After some time my husband relaxed into a milder mood, continuing to call the whole plan, as he understood it, "tomfoolery." I ventured to remind him that the men had been in the "tomfoolery" business a long time, and suggested that it might be God's will that the women should now have their part.

Nothing further was said upon the subject until the next morning after breakfast. "Are you going to the church this morning?" asked the children. I hesitated, and doubtless showed in my countenance the burden upon my spirit. My husband walked the length of the room several times, and finally said, "Children, you know where your mother goes to settle all vexed questions. Instead of family prayers this morning, let her alone to make her decision." I went to my room kneeling before God and His Holy Word, to see what would be sent me, when I heard a step at the door, and upon opening it, my daughter stood there. With tearful eyes she handed me her small Bible, and said with trembling voice: "See what my eyes fell upon. It must be for you." She immediately left the room, and I sat down to read the wonderful message of the great "I Am" contained in the forty-sixth Psalm. And, as I read, new meaning seemed to attach to those promises (so often read before), and the Spirit said: "This is the way, walk ye in."

No longer doubting, I quickly repaired to the Presbyterian Church, and took my seat near the door. Several of my friends came, and urged me to go up to the front. While hesitating, I was unanimously chosen as president or leader, Mrs. General McDowell, vice-president, and Mrs. D. K. Fenner, secretary, of the strange work that was to follow.

Appeals were drawn up to druggists, saloon-keepers, and hotel proprietors. Then the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. McSurely, who had up to this time occupied the chair, called upon the chairman-elect to come forward. But I could not. My brother, Colonel Trimble, observing my embarrassed situation, said to Dr. McSurely: "I believe the ladies will do nothing until the gentlemen of the audience leave the church."

As the last man closed the door after him, strength before unknown came to me, and without hesitation or consultation, I walked forward to the minister's table, and opened the large Bible, explained the incidents of the morning; then read, and briefly (as my tears would allow) commented upon its new meaning to me.

I then called upon Mrs. McDowell to lead in prayer, and such a prayer! It seemed as though the angel had brought down "live coals" from off the altar and touched her lips—she who, by her own confessions, had never before heard her own voice in prayer.

As we arose from our knees (for all were kneeling that morning), I asked Mrs. Cowden, the Methodist Episcopal minister's wife, a grand singer of the "olden style," to start my favorite hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," to the familiar tune of St. Thomas, and turning to the dear women, I said: "As we all join in singing this hymn, let us form in line two and two, and let us at once proceed to our sacred mission, trusting alone in the 'God of Jacob.'"

It was all done in less time than it takes to write it. Every heart was throbbing and every woman's countenance betrayed her solemn realization of the fact that she was going "about her Father's business."

As this "band of mysterious beings" first encountered the outside gaze, and as they passed from the door of the old church and reached the street beyond the large churchyard, they were singing these prophetic words:

"Far, far above thy thought
His counsel shall appear,
When fully He the work hath wrought
That caused thy needless fear."

Many people are allowing other people's faults to keep them out of the Kingdom.

TEMPERANCE

Texas continues to show prohibition gains by counties, and is about ready for state deliverance from the traffic.

There are about 200,000 insane persons in the United States and 90,000 epileptics. Of these cases from one-third to one-half are due to alcohol.

It is said that the Emperor of Germany, the King of Italy, the Tsar of Bulgaria, the King of Sweden and the King of Spain are all total abstainers.

The Michigan temperance people are circulating petitions, under the referendum law, looking toward a state-wide prohibition election in 1914.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has stopped work on the extension of the Navy Yard at Port Royal, South Carolina, until the authorities stop the illicit sale of liquors at that place.

You cannot build a slaughter house in your block without consulting the people around you, because you cannot confine the odors to your own land, and yet you would establish a saloon and fill the air with poison and then say to the people who must breathe it and suffer from it that they have no right to protest.—W. J. Bryan.

From statistics that are believed to be approximately accurate, it is shown that in 1906, the sum of $14,578,000.00 was expended in the building and extension of breweries and distilleries in this country, and $5,632,731.00 for the erection of churches. In 1912, the figures for breweries and distilleries were $2,937,783.00 and for churches $14,870,506.00.

There is a prospect that Sweden will soon adopt total prohibition as a national policy. Laws to make it an offense to drink intoxicants are even being contemplated. Recently the Prime Minister declared that prohibition is the only effective remedy for the prevention of drunkenness. The King is a strong temperance advocate, and the Crown Prince a total abstainer.

In Indiana since the first of January, 99 local option elections have been held in cities, towns and townships. Out of this number there were 72 dry victories and 27 wet ones. Eighty-one of these units voted in 1911, resulting in 33 wet and 48 dry victories. Of these same units, 22 went wet and 59 dry this year. In these the wet majorities have decreased from 3,250 two years ago to 1,789 this year, a decrease of 45 per cent., while the dry majorities have increased from 3,667 in 1911 to 6,686 this year, an increase of over 80 per cent.

Our Cause is Marching On

TUNE: BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC

Mine eyes have seen the tokens of the coming temperance day,
For the heavy clouds are lifting and are rolling quite away;
And the routed hosts of evil are told we've come to stay,
Our cause is marching on.

CHORUS:

Look up, look up, day is breaking,
Cheer up, cheer up, night is fading,
Look up, cheer up, victory cometh,
Our cause is marching on.

Mine ears have heard the rumbling of the gathering mighty host

For the Rum Fiend long has ruled us, and that at awful cost,
But now the battle rages, and the Demon knows he's lost.

Our cause is marching on.

CHORUS:

Mine eyes have looked with sorrow on the wreckage made by rum,

Mine ears have heard the orphan's cry, the widow's deepest moan,

My soul's bowed down with anguish at the fearful ruin done.
Our cause is marching on.

CHORUS:

But a better day is dawning, soon will brighten all our land,
For whiskey, rum and beer and wine of every style and brand,
Shall be fully voted down, and only as an out-law stand.

Our cause is marching on.

CHORUS.

Oakland, California.

Gideons Meet in Maine

A conference of Gideons at Old Orchard, Maine, August 11-13, attracted a large number of members of this order to New England. Thousands of Bibles were exhibited which will be placed in the hotels of that part of the country. The Gideons already have put 200,000 Bibles into American hotels and there is no diminution of their efforts to see that each hotel has copies of the Scriptures.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Canada Yearly Meeting

We glean the following news from the September Canadian Friend:

John R. and Margaret D. Webb attended the opening of the new meeting house near Sunbury on August 10th, and spent three weeks there and at Wellington.

Alfred Young, wife and son, spent several days in special meetings at Sunbury.

Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting will be held at Pickering, September 27th. Friends should come on the morning train and plan to spend Sabbath. Alfred Young will be in attendance.

Westlake Monthly Meeting was held at Wellington August 21. John R. Webb was present and brought an acceptable message.

J. W. Dorland, of Pasadena, California, was at Newmarket on August 3, and gave an account of the International Christian Endeavor Convention at Los Angeles in July. On the following Sabbath Alice E. Pennington gave an account of the Winona Young People's Conference.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was held at East Main Street in Richmond on September 5-7. On Saturday the religious messages were brought by Sarah B. Woodard, of Fountain City, Seth Brown, and others. The annual reports of departments were read, showing a prosperous year's work. There has been a net gain of five members during the year. Following reports on the subject from the various monthly meetings, the meeting consented that the two monthly meetings composing Westfield Quarterly Meeting should become a part of Whitewater Quarter, and the information was forwarded to the Yearly Meeting. Elbert Russell and Murray S. Kenworthy were granted minutes to attend Western Yearly Meeting.

On September 6-7 Westfield Quarterly Meeting was held at West Elkton, Ohio, in all probability for the last time. This is the smallest Quarterly Meeting in Indiana Yearly Meeting and is composed of Elk and Salem Monthly Meetings, the latter near Liberty, Indiana. The meetings are twenty-three miles apart, and without railroad facilities. In the early day and up to a few years ago, this was no barrier to Friends. They looked forward to their Quarterly gatherings as a Pentecostal feast, and were always ready to face the chilling blasts of winter, to travel through mud and snow or the fervent heat of summer to attend. The conditions have changed. The Quarterly Meeting is held alternately at Elk and Salem, and often in late years some Quarterly Meetings have been held without a single delegate from the other meetings. At the Quarterly Meeting held at Salem, Indiana, last June, a request was made by Salem Monthly Meeting to withdraw from the Quarter and unite with Whitewater at Richmond, it being more convenient to attend there on account of railroad facilities. This left the meeting at West Elkton, Ohio, out in the cold. At the Monthly Meeting in August they decided to follow in the footprints of Salem and apply to Whitewater for admission. If we are accepted, Westfield Quarterly Meeting will be a thing of the past. For eighty-nine years this Quarterly Meeting has been held between these two points without a single failure. Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, attended the Quarterly Meeting and brought messages of cheer and comfort to all who heard him. Fannie Elliott is the present pastor of our meeting at West Elkton, and her services, which have been acceptable, have been secured for another year.

A "Farewell Social" was given James B. and Emma Unthank on the evening of September 13, at the home of L. W. Crandall, Dayton, Ohio. About seventy-five persons were present; the large home and yard were well lighted with Japanese lanterns and ice-cream and cake were served. During the evening a number of informal talks were given by several members, expressing the deep appreciation of the work of these good people and their untiring effort on behalf of Dayton Friends' Church. While it was a pleasant occasion for members of the church to mingle socially, still a vein of sadness ran through the evening at the thought of losing these dear friends.

President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, together with his wife, returned home on September 11, after two and one-half months spent in England and on the continent of Europe. They returned by way of Quebec and Montreal.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, August 30-31. Harry R. Keats preached Saturday morning. Alsina Andrews, a returned missionary, was present during all the services and gave some interesting talks about her work in Jamaica. A lunch was served in the dining room in the basement during the noon hour on Saturday. In the afternoon the usual business was transacted preparatory to sending reports to the Yearly Meeting. Richard R. Newby, the pastor of Des Moines Meeting, delivered the sermon Sabbath morning. The attendance was larger than usual during all services.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

On Saturday and Sunday, August 9 and 10, Orlando C. Tomlinson, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, held a two days' meeting at the Friends' Church in Lawrence, Kansas. He was enroute home from Cherokee, Oklahoma, where he had been serving as pastor for some weeks, and we were glad to have him with us in these few services. We feel that all who heard his clear, forceful messages were helped and inspired to greater effort in the cause of Christ.

Friendswood Quarterly Meeting was held at League City, Texas, August 24-26. We were glad to have with us our Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent, L. C. Hinshaw, and wife. This is the first visit from the Superintendent for seven years and we enjoyed his presence and some good practical teaching. They spent a few days at League City, and also a short time at Friendswood. We are several hundred miles from any other meeting but hope Friends will not forget us. Friendswood Academy begins the year September 15, with Professor F. H. Clark as principal.

Cherokee Monthly Meeting in Stella Quarterly Meeting, Oklahoma, has had the privilege of having for two months as our pastor, Orlando C. Tomlinson, of Bellefontaine, Ohio. He was called here to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of our former pastor, and only on account of the health of his family was he not engaged for the coming year. We consider his coming to our meeting very opportune and a God-send to us. His warm handshake and messages of love and good cheer always brought comfort to us, and while his stay was short, we feel that his coming this way was a great strength and inspiration to our meeting. May God richly bless him and his family wherever they may go.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

At ten o'clock on the morning of September 2, Arthur and Ellen Woody Payne held a missionary meeting at Centre. A large company were present and the missionaries had a fine opportunity. Much interest was shown by all present. Some of the fruits of the meeting were shown in the minds of the children when the Bible School lesson on the Commandments was recited. "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image" was well understood. A prayer band was organized at the close of the meeting, which is to meet at the close of Monthly Meeting to pray for missions.

Centre Meeting for this school year is furnishing five teachers, six students for college, and several pupils to high school. The common school district in which Centre is located, has a graded school with two teachers. The pastor of the meeting is to be principal of this school for this year.

The Meeting at Concord is growing in interest and power since the coming of Herbert W. Reynolds as pastor. The Bible School has been re-organized, and on the days when the pastor is not present they hold a prayer and testimony meeting following Bible School.

On the afternoon of September 9, a number of the members of Centre Meeting gathered at the parsonage in a pleasant surprise to the pastor and his family. After a time spent in a social way the visitors set a fine luncheon on the lawn and invited the pastor and family out to eat. Those who know the pastor are aware that he did justice to this token of respect. Several gifts of a substantial nature were left by the visitors, which were thankfully received by the family.

Western Yearly Meeting

Peter W. Raidabaugh has been chosen pastor for another year at Bridgeport, Indiana. It will be his ninth consecutive year in service for that congregation.

Willard O. Trueblood, after visiting North Carolina, Wilmington and Iowa Yearly Meetings in his capacity as chairman of the Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting, is back at his home in Indianapolis, and preached at the First Church, of which he is pastor, on September 14.

Morton C. Pearson began his work on September first as General Secretary of the Indianapolis Federation of Churches, having resigned the Earlham College Field Secretaryship to accept this position.

It is announced through the daily press that the new Yearly Meeting house at Plainfield cannot be completed in time for the sessions of the Yearly Meeting this week, and that the services will be held in a large tent. Committees will meet in Central Academy on the lot adjacent to the Yearly Meeting grounds.

A Friends-Presbyterian Meeting

Seeing from the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND there was a Friends' minister in Pensacola, Florida, the writer turned aside to see him and hear his message. Charles W. Dickinson was the minister, and he spoke to a church of Southern Presbyterians where he is supply preacher, from the text: "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." The speaker's smoothly shaven face and the light in his eyes revealed that soul culture sure to be found in real Friends of advanced years.

Before he stood to speak it was noticeable that all things were being done "decently and in order," following a Scripture that is a great favorite with Southern Presbyterians. There were hymns, one following the other quickly, not that living stillness that preceded a Friendly message years ago, but on the other hand, could Friends in those days have worshipped with Presbyterians to edification? Much less could a Friend then, have acted as pastor for the spiritual descendants of John Calvin. These erstwhile ecclesiastical enemies (?) tolerate each other now—even more, they are hospitable to one another, as is evidenced by the cordial relations existing between Charles Dickinson and his congregation.

The Sunday-school lesson for the day treated of the progress of the children of Israel, and in the beginning of his sermon Friend Dickinson reminded his hearers that God called the Israelites in their day to high experiences in worship and service, and that He is satisfied with nothing short of our very best in our time. To serve God acceptably, we must adopt in its entirety the Bible standard of life. Anything short of Bible salvation is on a par with no salvation at all.

In the matter of apprehending the truth, the speaker made it plain that we see it, rather than reach it, through a course of reasoning. He cited John the Baptist's exclamation, "Behold the Lamb of God," and such passages as begin, "Lift up thine eyes," etc. But it was pointed out also, that one must be full of expectancy if one is to see the real significance of things. A matter of first importance is that we are all tinctured with sin. "All we like sheep, have gone astray." John had the burden of the sinfulness of mankind upon him, as he spoke in the wilderness, and it must have been a happy moment when he looked and saw Jesus, and in the same moment realized that He should take away the sin of the world.

To be in John's frame of mind and to have his vision, puts one in the way of solving the vexing question as to how we are to get rid of sin. For Christ is ever present now, as he was then, and ever ready to do his work and his part toward eliminating sin. What is sin? We speak of lying and stealing and bearing false witness as sins, but these are only expressions of sin. Sin may properly be termed a nature, or the "old man." Christ utterly destroys this sinful nature, and when this is done, individual sin or the expressions of sin in evil acts and thoughts will disappear. Our part in attaining that holiness, "without which no man can see the Lord," is to be wholly consecrated to Christ and His service.

At St. Mary's, Ohio

I want to take this means of thanking all who have contributed by their means and their prayers to the establishing of the Friends' work in this city. We have been successful in liquidating the debt on the new meeting house. A large amount of the funds have come from Friends throughout Indiana Yearly Meeting. The city too, has responded liberally. The books show that for the new church property, cash receipts to this date amount to $7,277.00. Nine hundred individual subscriptions, besides the Yearly Meeting donation, five Quarterly Meeting offerings, ten local meetings, and the offerings of thirty Sunday-schools, go to make up the cash receipts. Besides, there was donated to the church by way of labor and material, the sum of $1,266.00.

This has been one of the greatest demonstrations of the possibility of church extension work among Friends that can possibly be produced. The congregation is in excellent condition to move up to its coming year's task. The pastoral committee has secured Homer Phillips as my successor. We expect to bid farewell here September 21. The nearer the time comes, the greater becomes our interest in this work. With the best of fellowship and good-will existing between us and the people, it is with reluctance that we leave for new fields of labor. We decided to make a change in the belief that such would be good for the work. Having been near this people for the last nine years, we believe it is due them that others should contribute of their talents for the developing of the spiritual interest of the congregation.

Again, thanking all Friends who have responded so heartily to the Macedonian cry from St. Marys, and to the Church Extension Committee, and the Yearly Meeting Trustees, who came to our rescue in time of need, we remain your brother and sister in the cause of Christ and the Quaker Society,

A. J. FURSTENBERGER AND WIFE.

Friends University

It should be generally known, that Friends' University conducts a comprehensive curriculum of biblical and theological education, in these three liberal courses: The English-Biblical, for students without Greek, a course from which nine ministers have been graduated in the past three years; the Classical-Biblical, which may be completed by well selected undergraduate work; and the Graduate Course, which, with the satisfactory prerequisites and one year of graduate work, admits to the Master's Degree. One may so select his work in the Classical and Graduate Biblical courses as to complete a year after graduation from college, about two and a half years in the most important subjects of the ordinary theological course.

The biblical instruction is advanced, thorough, critical, constructive, positive, genuinely evangelical, attracting to the classes Christian students of various callings, especially including students for the ministry, and ministers of experience as well. Being broad in spirit, yet always accentuating the essentials of Revealed Truth and of the Christian Faith, as judged by all spiritually minded teachers, the Biblical School welcomes serious students of divers denominations, and even those of no denomination, in its zealous quest for the realities of pure religion. Contrary to the custom of many teachers, the true order puts Biblical Theology, which is the progressive revelation of God in providence and in history, after thorough preparation in Biblical history, language, literature, and exegesis, where it becomes the epitome and the test of Biblical truth. There can be no short cut to biblical scholarship.

The Biblical School is the more thorough Friendly from the fact that it is entirely unsectarian and so largely meets the essential demands of many denominations of Christians. This it does in the broad spirit of the Society of Friends, with the definite purpose to promote the fulness of the Divine life and fellowship in the whole Church. It is the first aim of Friends' University to further the Christian faith and the Christian forces of the Kingdom of God. It seeks to give its critical and doctrinal biblical instruction so faithfully, fearlessly and fully as to leave no excuse for seeking those pretentious, yet superficial schools which discredit considerable portions of the Holy Scriptures and deny their authority.

The Biblical School particularly urges on the part of genuine students the necessity of the practical mastery of the New Testament as against present-day shallow theories of Christian education. While ministerial and missionary students may profit immensely by such a course as the English-Biblical one offered in Friends' University, students called to the ministry should not be content, so far as in them lies, without thorough training in Greek exegesis, with the very helpful side-lights now made available by recent discoveries. Only thus can one acquire the pure taste for Truth vouchsafed in the Revelation of the New Covenant; in which all truly Christian education must focus and find its real motive.

Indispensable as intellectual instruction and development is in this as in every other department, the first aim of the Biblical School is to use the mental exercises for the upbuilding of the spiritual man. We are even more concerned, as every true teacher must be, to develop character than scholarship, to make men and women than ministers and missionaries. Much as we value sound doctrine and systematic theology, we desire, above all, to be baptized into the Divine life and character, and to "keep the unity of the Spirit among brethren, that they may all be thoroughly equipped unto the work of ministering and attain unto the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God."

Address, The Biblical School, Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas.—From Friends' University Bulletin.

Josiah Nicholson

The following resolution was adopted and ordered spread on the minutes:

"Whereas, Since our last regular meeting, our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, has seen meet to remove from our midst—from works to reward—Josiah Nicholson, who has been one of the Trustees of the College for many years,

"Therefore, Be it resolved by the Trustees of Guilford College in meeting assembled, that in the death of Josiah Nicholson, his wife has lost a devoted husband, his children a kind and gentle father, the community an upright and honored citizen, and the College and church a loyal and faithful friend and supporter;

"That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy be published in The Friends' Messenger and in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and a copy be sent to his wife, with the assurance of the heartfelt sympathy of the Trustees of this institution in her affliction."

Taken from the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Guilford College, North Carolina, held August 8, 1913.

DAVID WHITE, Secretary.

GROWING STRONGER

Apparently, with Advancing Age

"At the age of 50 years I collapsed from excessive coffee drinking," writes a man in Mo. "For four years I shambled about with the aid of crutches or cane, most of the time unable to dress myself without help.

"My feet were greatly swollen, my right arm was shrunken and twisted inward, the fingers of my right hand were clenched and could not be extended except with great effort and pain. Nothing seemed to give me more than temporary relief.

"Now, during all this time and for about 30 years previously, I drank daily an average of 6 cups of strong coffee—rarely missing a meal.

"My wife at last took my case into her own hands and bought some Postum. She made it according to directions and I liked it fully as well as the best high-grade coffee.

"Improvement set in at once. In about 6 months I began to work a little, and in less than a year I was very much better, improving rapidly from day to day. I am now in far better health than most men of my years and apparently growing stronger with advancing age.

"I am busy every day at some kind of work and am able to keep up with the procession without a cane. The arm and hand that were once almost useless, now keep far ahead in rapidity of movement and beauty of penmanship."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with the addition of cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

With the Children

Mother's Way

Whenever I am bad all day
Until I'm really 'shamed to pray,
I wait till mother comes to say
"Good night, dear child." That's mother's way.

And then, somehow, I don't know why,
I tell her everything and cry.
She hugs me then, and right away
I feel less sad. That's mother's way.

And mother kneels down by my bed
And pulls my face close to her head,
And we both snuggle down and pray,
That's why I'm glad for mother's way.

The Pony That Was Loaned

When Amos Gibson came downstairs the morning of his birthday, there was not a single package by his plate where he always found his presents.

"A happy birthday, my son," said Mr. Gibson.

"And many happy returns of the day," was his mother's greeting.

Amos gave them a smiling "Thank you," but there was a puzzled look on his face. His parents had not forgotten it was his birthday, but it was the first time they had ever failed to give him a present. He had felt sure he would get a knife, at least.

"Look in the driveway, Amos," he requested.

Amos opened the side door and saw a fine Shetland pony. He gave a shout of delight as he rushed to the pony and began to pat him.

"Why, father and mother, how did you happen to get me a pony?" he asked, joyfully. "You never could have found anything else I liked half as well. I will call him Star," he went on, without waiting for an answer to his question, "because he has a star in his forehead.

The boy was so excited that he could scarcely eat any breakfast, and he rode most of the day. In fact, a part of every day was spent in riding his pony. A week after his birthday Amos and his mother were going to spend the afternoon with his aunt.

"Mother, I believe I'll let Carry Nelson ride Star this afternoon," he said, when he came in to dinner. "She doesn't have many things to play with and she always looks as if she would like a ride."

"That is a very nice idea," agreed Mrs. Gibson, "and I would do it, for Carry's parents cannot afford to buy her a pony or many toys."

Carry Nelson was a very happy little girl when Amos took the pony to her house and told her she could use him all afternoon. She invited two little friends to share her fun. When Amos put the pony in the barn that evening he came into the house with an earnest look on his face.

"When I go away for an afternoon I am always going to loan my pony to some girl or boy," he announced.

Six months later, Mr. Crandall, Amos' uncle, came for a visit at the Gibson home.

"Amos, I have never known a pony to give as much pleasure to so many little folks as yours does," he said one day. "It is because Star has an unselfish owner."

Amos' face lighted up at the words.

"It's funny, but I enjoy Star more myself the day after I have loaned him to somebody else," he declared stoutly.—Herald and Presbyter.

What One Girl Did

A little girl attended a meeting and heard about the Savior, and gave herself to Him.

When she returned home, she went to an old man who was a Christian, and said to him:

"Can't we have a prayer-meeting?"

"We!" said he; "I don't know of another Christian in the district."

"Well," she said, "you are a Christian, and I am a Christian; can't we have a prayer-meeting?"

They did have a prayer-meeting. The next day two or three more came. God answered their prayers, and between twenty and thirty found the Savior.

Do You Use a Crooked Ruler?

"The Bible is so strict and old-fashioned," said a young man to a gray-haired friend, who was advising him to study God's Word if he would learn to live. "There are plenty of books written nowadays that are moral enough in their teaching, and do not bind one down as the Bible."

The old merchant turned to his desk and took out two rulers, one of which was slightly bent. With each of these he ruled a line, and silently handed the ruled paper to his companion.

"Well," said the lad, "what do you mean?"

"One line is not straight and true, is it? When you mark out your path in life, do not take a crooked ruler."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

SEPTEMBER 28.

SUBJECT—Deliverance and Disobedience. (Review.)

LESSON—Reading Lesson only. Nehemiah 9: 9-21. (See also Acts 7: 30-44.)

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and abundant in loving kindness. Nehemiah 9: 17.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

SEPTEMBER 28.

TOPIC—Missionary Essentials, at Home and Abroad. III. Giving. 2 Cor. 9: 6-15.

Giving is a necessary part of missionary work, not merely because funds are needed to carry on the work, but because the spirit that prompts the gift reveals a heart interest in the cause of missions so essential to its success.

We are interested in the things we pay for, and a substantial investment is a guarantee of genuine concern for the enterprise in which the investment is made. He who invests in missions is more apt to pray more earnestly for their success, and is sure to keep informed about the procedure in the mission field.

A few minutes of the meeting should be devoted to a consideration of ways and means by which your local society may increase its yearly subscription to missions, both home and foreign. Every member should give something and give it regularly. There are few societies where the members cannot readily give from two to twenty-five cents per week, according to ability.

It is to be feared that a great many persons agree in practice, if not in theory, with the idea of a certain Washington schoolboy to whom the question was put: "What is a synonym?"

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Currency Legislation

It seems unfortunate that the banking interests of the country and Congress seem unable to agree upon a time when currency legislation shall be enacted. It is generally agreed, however, that some speedy relief is necessary. There is no issue raised as to the stability of our money or the standards of money. There are times, however, when crops are to be marketed, for instance, when trade should not continue to be hampered by the inability to secure ready funds. The currency doctors are disagreed as to the details of the remedy, but Congress, spurred on by the President, will likely pass a bill upon the question at the present session. It is well to have it out of the way of other matters when the regular session convenes in December. After all, any system will have to be tried to determine its merit with exactness, and the sooner the experiment is put into operation the better for the country.

The Railroad Problem

The constant recurrence of disastrous wrecks upon the railroads is fast raising an issue that cannot be ignored much longer. Until in recent years the great problem which the railroads were constantly seeking to solve was the problem of safety to the traveling public. We are now confronted with the sorry spectacle, wherein safety has apparently been sacrificed to speed. Few deadly wrecks occur in which it is not stated that the engineer was either overworked or was trying to make up lost time. New safety devices may accomplish something, but unless the railroads take it upon themselves to regulate the speed of trains within moderation, Congress should apply itself to the task of finding a remedy. Human life is too precious to be sacrificed so ruthlessly.

A Triple Alliance

At the convention of the American Bar Association at Montreal on September 2, Viscount Haldane, the Lord High Chancellor of England, in an address suggested that the United States, Great Britain and Canada form a triple alliance for the purpose of establishing a new code of ethics for the reform of the world. He declared that lawyers were called upon to mold opinion and to encourage the nations of this group to develop the obligations they assume toward each other. There are startling possibilities in the suggestion. With a common inheritance, with the same traditions and with similar ideals, particularly in the realm of jurisprudence, these nations have it within their power to lead the nations of the earth to higher levels of justice and of civilization. By proper concert of action these may with propriety undertake to create a foundation for a new kind of international faith that will change the whole history of the human race henceforth. It would seem that the destiny of civilization is largely within their keeping.

Revising the Vulgate

A commission headed by Abbott Don Gasquet, appointed by the pope, is busy gathering material with which to revise the Latin Bible, or Vulgate. When completed it is promised to give the world the most accurate copy of the Latin Bible since the fourth century, when St. Jerome completed the task. The Commission has been searching the archives and libraries of Europe, and for that matter of the whole world. Manuscripts that have not been disturbed for centuries are being rescued from the dust of the ages, and in the massive file, 14,000 Biblical manuscripts, containing 30,000 pages, have been brought to light. For the most part these have been photographed and are therefore at the command of the Commission whenever wanted. It is said that when completed, this will be the most unique as well as the most valuable collection of manuscripts of this kind in the world. Were it not that the Commission may be expected to put the usual Catholic interpretation upon all its discoveries, eliminating such parts as may suit their polity, the product of its investigations would have a greater meaning in the Biblical world.

A New Liquor Law

On December 13th, all liquor licenses will expire in the state of Arkansas, and no further license will be granted, except upon the petition signed by a majority of the adult white population in any town or city of the Commonwealth. By this process the negro is eliminated and white women as well as white men are enfranchised to determine the status of the bar-room. It is a new procedure in temperance reform, and its outcome will be watched with interest everywhere. It is known that with few exceptions, the bulk of the colored vote is thrown en masse for the perpetuation of the liquor traffic, and in this instance the Arkansas legislature seems not to have been enacting race legislation primarily, but has made an attempt to create a new kind of temperance statute that will undoubtedly prove effective. It is predicted that not a single saloon in the state can survive, and that practically by this process Arkansas will become the tenth prohibition state.

Many Friends have been expecting to canvass their neighborhoods for new names. This is the best opportunity that will be offered. Back numbers cannot be furnished, and the canvass should be made at once. $1.50 to new subscribers for fifteen months.

Reading the Queries

A somewhat ancient custom among Friends, that formerly was the embodiment of a deep spiritual concern that affected for the most part the great body of the church, is in danger of losing its potentiality as the conservator of moral as well as spiritual power in our denomination. Time was when the reading of the queries and the consideration of the state of society marked the high tide of spiritual power and discernment, wherein the church, as a whole, and the membership, as individuals, were brought face to face with their responsibilities both to their fellows and to their Creator.

In later years, in large sections of American Quakerism, the queries are the merest incidents in denominational procedure, preserved largely as a traditional form, considered, if at all, in a most perfunctory way with little, if any, of the life which characterized their consideration by our forefathers. May it not be that this disinterestedness marks the passing of an element in our career as Friends that is the measure of our decadence in certain high characteristics that formerly were the rich heritage of our Quaker faith?

This subject is discussed most profitably by the editor of THE FRIEND in its issue of September 11th, in which he says in part:

It is probably no exaggeration to say that in their origin the Queries were almost entirely an effort to make it imperative upon Friends to realize the Scripture ideal, "we are members one of another." The Society had been led out of priestcraft. A very fresh sense of the shrinking of human nature from the personal responsibilities involved in expressions like "the priesthood of believers" and the "communion of life" must have been in the minds of Friends for years afterward. Believers can accept these ideas under the fervor of a great revelation, but how can they practice them generation after generation?

Now the Queries in their method and their scope are not more wonderful in any respect than in their capacity to develop the gifts of individuals, so as to make a positive protection against inroads of ecclesiasticism on the one hand, and of mere machinery on the other.

* * *

The point in the Monthly Meeting often seems to be no more than some refinement of accuracy in making an answer. If it is actually no more than that, one cannot wonder that the custom of answering queries is condemned. The rich privilege of the occasion—the intended purpose of it—is that the whole membership of a meeting should be stimulated into activity on one another's behalf. The meeting may act as a whole in response to this exercise of answering queries, it may issue an epistle to its members or to others, it may appoint a committee for some special service or effort, but each member of a Monthly Meeting, each time the queries are answered, is face to face with a personal duty toward fellow members, toward great principles (the principles of Truth), toward the world at large. No other device in Church government of which we can think, places a more direct responsibility, not upon officers, not upon committees, not upon the meeting at large, but directly, distinctly upon individuals. Nothing short of what in modern terms is called a "motor response," can in any worthy sense fulfil the demands of such a situation.

In the evolution of our denominational activities, upon which the emphasis has been laid increasingly these past decades, may it not be that we have sacrificed something of life and character and stability to what we have called the more practical movements of the church? There can be no profitable action without life, and life is the most fruitful that is most sensitive to its responsibilities.

The reading of the queries may seem to some a dead and unnecessary form, as their answers have been regarded in many places for many years, but to the extent that they bring the membership face to face with the personal responsibilities of living and conduct and service, they represent an element in our religious life with which we can ill afford to dispense.

The condition of our Society is fundamental to its highest service, and the remedy for some of our denominational problems will lie in a closer inspection of our denominational life and conduct. Introspection as applied to moral and religious conduct is a procedure often too lightly ignored, and the Church may with entire propriety revive its old time customs in this regard. Meetings for business are oftentimes dull because things which are vital are dealt with in a formal way, and because the discussion deals in generalities rather than in concrete terms that awaken personal interest.

The tendency is to get away from the queries altogether. Our plea is that they be revived as instruments of life and power as the membership is called upon to measure themselves by the ideals of conduct and helpful service.

Rural Life Teachings of the Bible

ADDRESS BY PROF. LIPPINCOTT AT MANHATTAN, KANSAS

The Bible is a rural book. It grew out of the life of a rural people. Its ideals are bound up with the sturdy simplicity of country communities. Its prominent characters and great leaders were, with few exceptions, country bred. The problems of the Old Testament and the parables of the New found their origin and inspiration very largely in rural life, or in the conflict that waged between the city and the country. It is not until we come to the next to the last chapter of the last book of the New Testament that we find city life in any way idealized and held up to beckon men into better living.

As we look over the long list of Bible men who stood out from among their fellows as pioneers and leaders in thought and action, and find how many of them were born and brought up on the country side, one is very strongly reminded of the rather startling modern fact that sixty-five per cent of the men who are today considered as of enough importance to have their names listed in "Who's Who in America," were raised on the farm or in the rural village. Cain and Abel (Gen. 4: 2-4) are described as country boys, as is likely to be the case with pioneers. It makes little difference whether we consider them as historical characters or as representative types, as some would have us believe, the significant fact is that they are not only described as farmers, but as specialists. Abel was a live stock farmer while Cain was a grain farmer, and in the account of their doings is recorded the beginnings of the age-long conflict between the stockmen of the range and the more settled tiller of the soil.

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were stockmen of the wandering type, such as have only rather recently disappeared from our western plains. They depended upon good range for the sustenance of their flocks and herds. You will remember that (Gen. 13: 1-18) it was when the range became short that the herdsmen of Abraham and Lot quarreled and bid fair to make trouble between these kin folks. It was necessary for them to separate in order that they might find feed for their cattle. In this connection, it might be noted that Lot made the fatal mistake of choosing some good land without reference to the fact that it was in a bad neighborhood, and a further mistake in moving to the city to become to all intents and purposes a retired farmer with the all together too common modern result of dissatisfaction and trouble.

Isaac was a farmer who married into a tricky family and had a tricky son as a reward. Jacob was shrewd enough with the help of his scheming mother to cheat his brother out of his rightful inheritance, and had to leave home in order to escape his brother's anger. Because he was a skilled stockman, he was able to get a job with his uncle, Laban, who tricked him into working for him over fourteen years and changed his wages ten times, and we should judge from Jacob's complaint that the revision was downward. Jacob retaliated by selecting the strong lambs for breeding purposes in his own flock and allowing the weak ones to breed in Laban's flock. He also seemed to believe in prenatal influence and tried to induce spotted and striped sheep, which by agreement belonged to him, by placing reeds in the drinking troughs at the time of breeding. While the possibility of accomplishing this is not admitted by modern science, an astonishingly large number of farmers still have implicit faith in its possibilities.

It was to Esau, another live stockman that Jacob could make as an excuse for traveling leisurely that "the flocks and herds with young are with me and if men should over-drive them one day, all the flock will die." Jacob married two of his tricky mother's nieces and it is no wonder, as Uncle Henry Wallace points out, that all of Isaac's grandsons but one turned out bad because they were practically inbred with reference to sharp practice.

In the character of Joseph, the one boy who turned out well, we find a fine illustration of the law of heredity which is called 'atavism,' or the creeping out of characteristics from remote ancestry. In Joseph is found the character of Abraham, but developed and broadened. It was Joseph, the son of a farmer, who was able to lay out a program for cornering the grain market of Egypt and present the program to the king in such a convincing way that he was given the job of carrying it out. And carry it out he did to such good effect that when a famine came on, he was able to wrest the land from the powerful and threatening native Egyptian aristocracy and centralize the title of all real estate in the name of the king.

The king of Egypt at that time was one of a foreign dynasty known as the "Shepherd Kings" because of their fondness for live stock. The Egyptians had religious scruples against the use of meat as food and had no skill in animal husbandry. It was because of their skill as stockmen, that Pharaoh welcomed the father and brothers of Joseph and gave them land in Egypt. Among the Egyptians, he was not able to find herdsmen who could look after his flocks nor people who could make use of the abundant pasture that was watered by the Nile. When the new dynasty came upon the throne of Egypt, that was not favorable to stock culture, the children of Israel came into disfavor. They had farmed to such good advantage that their wealth and numbers had increased until they attracted the jealous notice of the new monarch. He put them to work in the brickyard.

Moses, the greatest lawyer of all times and the man who later led them out of their difficulty, was educated in the university of Egypt, but was a failure until he had had several years practical experience as herdsmen for his father-in-law, Jethro, to sober his judgment and develop him physically and mentally. In common with many of the prophets of Bible times, Ahijah, the man who placed Jereboam over the ten tribes of Israel, was a rural man. Elijah, who outwitted the brilliant and scheming Queen Jezebel, went about preaching in his shepherd's mantle and carrying the shepherd's staff as though proud of his country origin.

Of Elisha, his successor, we are told, that at the time when Elijah offered him a job as his helper, he was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. The fact that it is recorded we would interpret to mean that he was considered a skillful teamster. Amos, the first man who wrote "God" with a capital "G", who first preached that Jehovah was not simply a local or tribal god as was Marduk of Babylon, Chemosh of Moab and Ashur of Assyria, one god among many, but was the God of all peoples, who judged them not according to their acts, was a shepherd and a dresser of sycamore trees. We might perhaps class him as a general farmer because the fruit of the sycamore tree was ground into flour out of which a coarse bread was made, which was consumed by the poorer classes. Who but a live stockman would think of condemning the aristocracy for eating the "lambs out of the fold and the calves out of the midst of the stall?" It was not in accord with his ideas of thrifty husbandry and good breeding practice.

Micah, the man who gave the best brief definition of religion that had been offered in his day and which has not been surpassed since, "What does the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and walk humbly with thy God," was the son of parents who homesteaded on the borders of the Philistine plain when it was thrown open for settlement by king Uzziah. Jeremiah, the stalwart progressive in religion, who was tried for heresy because he was far seeing enough to predict that if the people did not change their ways, their enemies would overrun the country and destroy the temple along with the rest of the town, was from the little country village of Anathoth, which lay a few miles north of Jerusalem. The regulars in religion thought the temple could not be destroyed and considered him unorthodox when he said it could.

The birthplaces of Isaiah and Hosea are unknown, but surely the burden of their messages marks them as at least having had a country experience. It was Isaiah, you remember, who said (40: 11) "He shall lead gently those with young," something that in its various applications is being taught at the agricultural colleges today. When Saul first comes to our attention in the Old Testament, he was out on the range looking for his father's asses that had broken away from the picket or escaped the wrangler. Later we find his coming after the herd out of the field. David was a red-headed farm boy, called from keeping the sheep to have Judge Samuel pass compliments upon him to his father and point out the great possibilities he saw in the boy.

The problem which confronted the people of the Old Testament, and the questions involved in current legislation have just as modern a ring as has the tremendous preponderance of country-bred folks who were listed among the eminent and great. One of the problems which they had solved and which we have not, was that of co-operation among farmers. Another was the question of concentration in the ownership of land with its attendant evil, the absentee landlord. The laws deal with titles, modes of inheritance, land tenures, the removal of land-marks, live stock regulations, sanitation and hygiene, the conservation of soil fertility, pure breeding, and even the question of immigrant farmers. And at least one conversation is recorded upon the subject of the wickedness of city life. You will not find the subject of co-operation discussed as such in the Old Testament, perhaps, but you will find it put into practice.

The Mission of the Church in a Rural Community

BY LEROY JONES

(Paper read at China Monthly Meeting, August 20, when the meeting was considering what it could do in the community.)

Does God send sorrow? Some will answer yes to this question. He sends it, they will say, to draw the children of men to himself. But all sorrow is of sin and God cannot be the author of sin. So sorrow does not come of God. This does not mean that sorrow is never used of God to draw his children unto himself. All sorrow should so draw us. The child disobeying his mother, wanders away from home. He comes upon trouble in the shape of rough paths and tangled briers. If he be plucky, he pushes on for a time. But sooner or later he comes to the place where he can go no farther and he sits down and cries for his mother. The mother did not provide the stones and the briers to drive the child nearer to herself, but she does take advantage of the trouble that has come to the child to take him in her arms and say: "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

Ensconced in his pleasant home, the New England farmer finds himself, nine cases out of ten, able to take care of himself and family. Too often he feels within himself that he does not need God to help him out in this work. Oh, he does not say this in so many words. But he uses the forces at his hand to accomplish his desires and fails to give credit where credit is due. Seldom, if ever, does he come to the place where he does not know where to turn next. He always finds some way to take care of himself. He never comes to the place where he can do nothing and must throw himself on the mercy of God. The pioneer farmer of the west often came to the place where what the hot winds did not burn up, the grasshoppers ate, and if, by chance, there was any thing left, it was fed to his hogs to turn a little money to save his farm. But about the time they were ready for market, disease came and all was swept away. The hay and fodder were gone and the cows had to be sold for a song.

If the old work horses were kept they had little or nothing to eat. Then, if sickness came, and the doctor fifteen and twenty miles away, and the hard winter closed in around the suffering group, then it was that men's faith was tried. Is it any wonder that men came to know God in those days? There was no earthly aid at hand. There was no earthly power to save. Time and again, I have seen my father and mother driven in despair to their knees, crying: "Father, save, for our arms are too short." And he heard them; not because God had them where he wanted them, in a vindictive sense, but because they could no longer lean on the arm of flesh, because they had turned to God for comfort, with all other support gone, then God came into their lives. He came with such a filling and all-pervading and all-powerful sense, such as is hard for us to realize who sit in our comfortable homes with the coal bin stocked and the grocer at the other end of the telephone.

It is not my purpose to relate in detail the hardships of these pioneers, nor is it in the province of this paper to tell of the many ways of deliverance that were opened to these hardy people. The point is, these people recognized the source of their deliverance and gave honor where honor was due. They forsook not the assembling of themselves together, and they spake often to one another, telling of the blessings God had brought to them. Time after time, in the regular meeting, I have seen these rugged men and women so filled with the love of God that it ran over in the shouts of victory that would startle and even scandalize a meeting of the present day. Infidelity had no terrors for them. They knew in whom they believed. He was there in their hearts and all the powers of hell could not prevail against them.

There are those here today who have seen this same thing over and over. Men today are inclined to criticise and rail at these old fathers and mothers in Israel because they object so persistently and emphatically to the so-called higher criticism. I have all sympathy with them. They are honest in their belief that the present course is bound to destroy the Bible and in that old book they have found comfort and strength to carry them through trials such as we of the younger generation will never be called upon to endure. Theirs was the faith and the courage and the service that built up these country churches that are taxing our ingenuity and skill to keep alive. Theirs was not the question of maintaining any single country church. Their great work was to establish them as fast as the demand came to them.

Wherein does the present day differ? Was their mission different from ours? It was different in one respect. Then was the time of promulgation. Then was the time of spreading the Gospel as fast as settlements were made in the new country. Their time passed before the struggle to keep alive the little meetings was so evident. Theirs was not so much the problem of keeping up the plant to a working efficiency as it was the cost of building. Men have gotten away from the dire necessity that kept them close to God.

The younger generation found homes ready for them. Comforts and luxuries are theirs and they see no need of a God, a personal God, such as their fathers and mothers knew. Then the people went to church to worship God, to be inspired by a minister that knew not Harvey's Grammar, but had walked and talked with God. Now, too often, people go to church to be charmed by elegant phrases and dramatic effects. The fire of Heavenly love does not burn in their hearts and the perfunctory address given in the studied sermon does not kindle a flame in their cold hearts. They are content if there comes a faint glow of pleasure. The old soldiers of the cross wanted to feel the very presence of God which was to them an inspiration to service and a bulwark for the time of trial which they knew was to be theirs before the close of another week.

The foregoing must not be taken as a reflection on the present mode of life. I believe that all the comforts and even the luxuries are a part of God's plan for human life and endeavor. I do not think that God needs to have dire necessity come to His children to make them think of Him. But I do know that the present day people are thinking less of God than were the people of a generation ago. Three years ago I attended a meeting in which one of the speakers said with an emphatic tone: "Stop talking religion and talk football and camp life and you will get the boys out. Talk about the things in which they are interested." Now, I believe thoroughly in the idea of presenting a truth in as pleasing a way as possible, but I do not believe you will ever win men for the Kingdom of God if you talk everything else to them but Jesus Christ. I think a service may be entertaining, but it can never be effective if it is not more than that. It must be inspirational. This then brings us to the question of the mission of the church of today. The church of today must awaken the God in man. He is in the heart of every human being and is asking for recognition. It is the mission of the church to bring men to recognize their Master. It is the mission of the church to establish itself as the exponent of God's plan for His children here. It is for the church to show that the practical teachings of Christianity applied to the social life of the community require business integrity, education, culture, courtesy, neighborliness, co-operation, and civic activity, which are but other words for the living of the Christ life in the place in which we find ourselves. The central truth of the Gospel is the same today as it was two thousand years ago. But we live in an age when there is more universal knowledge of what that truth is. It is for the church to keep ahead of the people in the knowledge of truth. It is for the church to search out the unfathomable riches of God and to tell them to the people.

I have no sympathy for the thought that the church must out-do all other agencies in attraction. The world is going attraction mad. Moving pictures, theaters, clubs, fraternities, granges, all seek to outdo each other in attractions. I am not objecting to entertainment in its proper place. I am not saying that entertainment is out of place in the above organizations. But it is for the church to hold a steady gait, to hold fast to the fundamental bases of society and to expend every effort to stay the mighty sweep of the people after the enjoyment of the world. It is not the province of the church to cater to the desire for entertainment. Its work is so far above the mere momentary creature enjoyment that any time it stops with that, it is no longer worthy to be called the church of God. I know well the great cry that is going up: we must have more entertainment if we are to hold our young people. I say let them go, if it is going to take that to hold them. If they can see no farther than that, they are not worth the keeping.

This is not saying that the young people are not worth keeping. They are. But it is for more than entertainment that they are worth keeping. They have in them that spark of the Divine that calls for more than creature pleasure. Until this spark is aroused and made to control the life, it will fall far short of being worth holding for the church. It is not my province in this paper to say how this spark is to be aroused. Others that follow me will tell you that. The mission of the church is to show forth to the world the love of Christ as it is manifested in the very walks of life, a religion to live by, even more than a religion to die by. It must turn the hearts of the people to their God. It must be abreast of the times. It must be able to give an answer to the inquiring minds that will have the truth. There never was an inquiry for more light that was not prompted by the Spirit of God.

Let the church, then, keep in the van in its knowledge of truth. Let the members remember they are the exponents of the faith of the church. No church can prosper where everything else is put before the interests of the church. No church can prosper when there are dissensions among the very officials of the church. If you are to have the respect of the younger generations, let them see that your religion stands for something that the world does not have. I am not sure but what the man was right who said that at the center of the cause of the social problem of the rural church is the loss of faith on the part of the people, not in the doctrine or theology of the church primarily, but in the life of the church.

It may be a part of the plan to accomplish the work of the church to set its members at social service. It may be a part of the plan for the church to become a social center of the community. There are a dozen ways for the church to work. But the one central aim must be to fire the hearts of the people with the love of God. This done and the problem will be more than half solved. This is what was accomplished by the church in former days. Shall we say we are unable to do it now? Then do we admit that we are lacking God in our own lives and the mission of the church comes home to us.

A Great Fallacy

BY A. MORRIS CAREY.

Ex-President Roosevelt has, in the judgment of a good many wise people, made a tremendous contribution to the cause of Christian Civilization in his own generation. If he had done nothing else it would be a great thing to have preached, as he has in season and out of season, that if a nation or an individual is to be strong, it is not sufficient to be strong physically or even mentally, but back of these there must be moral backbone. But Mr. Roosevelt has disappointed at least some of his admirers so far as his position on peace is concerned.

He has asserted, and in the minds of a good many people established the view, that the terrible, devastating, barbarous method of settling disputes, known as war, is under certain circumstances not only right, but commendable. The great argument which he advocates for war under certain conditions is that there are worse things than war, and rather than allow these things to come to pass we must go to war. It is terribly wrong they say to kill one's fellows by the thousands, to desolate homes, to bring untold sufferings upon innocent women and children, but is it much more wrong for a nation to allow its honor to be involved, and so war in such case becomes right; in other words, it is right to commit an awful sin in order that a thing which we consider worse may be prevented. Now, the advocates of this theory go on to say in order that we may be ready for such a war, we must be prepared, and so we have our great navy and our elaborate military system. As a matter of fact, the same argument which applies to nations applies to individuals, and if it is right for a nation to go to war under certain circumstances, it is equally right for an individual to go to war under certain circumstances, and kill the man who has injured him or offended his honor, and what is more, it is right for him to be prepared, and to carry such weapons as may enable him to be prepared.

You cannot escape the parallel. If one is right and wise the other is right and wise. Fortunately for the cause of peace and arbitration, civilized Christian nations have decided that individuals cannot settle their disputes with their neighbors in this way even if it is a matter which concerns their so-called honor. They must take such matters into the Courts whether they like it or not. The mighty march of Christian civilization has practically swept away duellings and private feuds just as it is going to abolish war between nations.

Honor is a noble word but Duty is a nobler one. A man must keep his honor clean and bright and unsullied, but there may come a time when his duty to God and his fellowmen may demand his laying aside what the world calls his honor in order that he may fulfil his duty, and what is true for a man is true for a nation. And if a man or a nation faces a crisis where a decision must be made between duty and what seems to be honor, the only course to pursue is to do the right thing and commit one's honor to the keeping of God.

The world has yet to wake up to a realization of the tremendous power of the man or nation who moves along the line of truth. Running through this universe of ours, there are great moral and spiritual laws just as there are great physical laws, and to get in line with these laws makes a man or a nation invincible.

Ralph Connor in "Corporal Cameron," in his description of the North-western Canadian Police, tells of a gambler who was terrorizing a company in a gambling joint. He had drawn his weapon and was threatening to shoot when a young man with a red jacket and a "pill box" cap stepped up to him and more in a tone of curiosity than anything else said, pointing to his gun, "What are you doing with that thing?" "I'll show you," roared the man. "Put it down, there," said the young policeman in a smooth voice. "You don't need that in this country." The gambler amazed at the audacity of his opponent hesitated when the sharp, imperious command rang out, "Put it down, there, my man, do you hear—quick, do you hear," and he put his weapon down, and slunk away in the crowd to the great delight and amazement of the company.

The whole power of England back of him, do you say? Yes, but what did the backwoods' gambler care for English dreadnaughts? Force, the final thing which won out? No, the crook's pistol handle was notched with the number of men he had killed. It was the mighty, impelling power of a man moving along the line of his duty, and this is the power that will in future win our battles, defend our coasts, arm our sea-ports, and make us strong as a nation.

A Word About "Our Name"

BY C. F. MORRIS

There is now certainly nothing new as to our Quaker name. It is as old as the Church itself. Of course, that name was applied in derision. When George Fox told the people to quake at the word of the Lord he himself almost suggested the name Quaker. I think most likely the Disciples were called Christians at Antioch in derision. A thing in itself is not necessarily wrong and to be forever rejected, even though the motive may have originally been bad. At all events the Quaker name is in possession, and we could hardly go back on it even if we desired.

The name "Friends" is a tame one. The name Quaker carries with it much more readily all the great questions with which this church has been connected in the world, and has made itself universally conspicuous under that title. All the enthusiasm gathers around the Quaker name, because of their achievements which have been wrought out under that name. It is a bold, distinctive, significant name, and my own opinion has been for years that it would be a great strength to drop this confusion of names and adopt the only one that means all—the Quaker Church.

Now we are using the "Friends," the "Society of Friends," the "Friends Church" and "Quaker," so that unless unusually well posted, we are really at a loss to know just who we are.

THE RELIGIOUS LIFE

The Ministry of Intercession

Multitudes are behind in their praying. The prayer-life is essential for far-reaching and abiding souls. All can not preach, all can not sing, all can not give munificently, all are not gifted with magnetic personality, but all can move heaven in prayer. When folks go to praying something begins to happen.

It is recorded in the "Life of John Hunt," that apostolic missionary to the Fijians, that as he lay on what proved to be his deathbed, he never ceased to pray for the people of the island. When the end drew near he grasped his comrade with one hand, and lifting the other, cried, "Oh let me pray once more for Fiji! Lord, for Christ's sake, bless Fiji! Save thy servants, save thy people, save the heathen in Fiji." And then he fell asleep.

These mighty men of God toiled, wept and prayed until the awful cloud of paganism was lifted, and light from heaven flashed into many a benighted heart. Saving people is hard work, for the story of Calvary can be successfully told only by those who are suffering with the Lord Jesus.—Living Water.

Thy Kingdom Come

If you do not wish for His kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it—you must work for it. And to work for it you must know what it is. We have all prayed for it many a day without thinking. Observe, it is a kingdom that is to come to us; we are not to go to it. Also, it is not to come outside of us; but in the hearts of us. "The kingdom of God is within you." And, being within us, it is not a thing to be seen, but to be felt; and though it brings all substance of good with it, it does not consist in that: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost"; joy, that is to say, in the holy, healthful and helpful Spirit.—John Ruskin.

Christ's Life

In a mission in New York City, recently, a man who was "down and out" and who had been brought to a knowledge of the Savior, gave this testimony: "Jesus Christ gives his life for us; Jesus Christ wants to give his life to us; Jesus Christ will give his life through us to those who need his salvation." This is a practical and inspiring summary of the work of God in the human heart. It includes the three things that every human heart craves: sacrifice, cleansing, and service.

All in Christ Jesus

All treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hidden in Him. It must grieve Him to see us filling our minds with passing things, worthless things, dying after the fashion of the world, while Christ is crowded away into some bare and paltry place in our lives.—Robert E. Speer.

Ohio Yearly Meeting—Centennial Celebration

The one hundred and first annual session of Ohio Yearly Meeting was held at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, August 26 to September 1, 1913. For several months previous and all through the week of the Yearly Meeting there was the spirit of the unusual upon the little town of Mt. Pleasant, and it rested upon the delegates, visitors and people as they transacted the routine business of the various sessions, and colored every gospel service and special message.

The regular work of the Church was carried forward with increased impetus, looking toward the centennial day proper, which occurred September first after the close of the business at 9:30 a. m. Edward Mott was again chosen as presiding clerk. Ralph Coppock, Recording Clerk; Merrill M. Coffin, Reading Clerk; Paul Lindley, Announcing Clerk.

The general and special epistles were read and much appreciated by Ohio Yearly Meeting, for although it is not among the number of American Yearly Meetings composing the Five Years Meeting, she has a loving, cordial interest in all the work of American Friends, and ever welcomes the annual epistolary correspondence and the messages of visiting Friends as the seal "that binds our hearts in Christian love."

In the reports showing the state of the Society there was a manifest spirit of progress and increase along all lines. The Evangelistic and Pastoral Board reported a large ingathering in the special meetings held the past year, nearly all meetings being supplied with pastoral care. William Kirby, pastor at Columbus, Ohio, was made a member of the Board this year. John Pennington, President; Elizabeth Ward, Secretary; S. J. Santee, Treasurer; Edward Mott, Superintendent.

The Bible School Committee reported a decided increase, and arranged for B. F. Rhodes of Moundsville, West Virginia, to give the address this year. He was well received and his address started new lines of thought in Bible school work. The young people's movement has a large place in Ohio Yearly Meeting under the head of the Yearly Meeting C. E. Union. Rallies were held, a social hour was participated in one afternoon, and the number of young people who are being used in our important offices in the Yearly Meeting is a very important factor in the optimistic outlook for another century. On Sabbath evening the young people held a vesper service on the site of the old original meeting house built in 1807. Charles Haworth, the new President of the C. E. Union, presided and J. Shober Kimber of Providence, R.I., gave the address. While Ohio Yearly Meeting has no regular college, she is very much interested in educational work, as shown by her new building addition to the Cleveland Bible Institute the past year. This school is doing a great work in preparing Christian workers for a more efficient service, and also desires to encourage all our young people to strive for a higher secular educational standard. This is shown by the Bible doctrinal course which was arranged for this year, which requires the equivalent of a standard High School Diploma for matriculation. The old students held their annual reunion during Yearly Meeting when upwards of fifty young people talked and prayed together.

Daniel A. Poling gave an address on the C. E. work, in the afternoon and gave his great address, "The Conservation of Humanity," which set forth the temperance work of the year up to date, by proclaiming the slogan, "State and Nation Wide Prohibition."

Ohio Yearly Meeting is known everywhere as having a great Missionary spirit. This was evidenced this year by the presence of seven missionaries in attendance. Drs. Geo. F. and Isabella De Vol were just home on furlough from Luh Hoh, China. Dr. Geo. F. De Vol gave the annual missionary address on Friday evening. Esther Baird who sails September 16 for Nowgong, India, was present and she with Isabella De Vol led the Saturday morning devotional meeting. Miss Margaret Smith of New Castle, Pennsylvania, who was accepted by the Yearly Meeting as a new missionary for India, was present and was introduced to the Yearly Meeting. She has had five years' experience in mission work in India and will sail for Nowgong in October. Miss Martha B. Hixson was on her way to China and could not be present.

Jefferson and Helen Farr Ford, missionaries of Iowa Yearly Meeting from Jamaica were present, as was also Mary Hill. The Missionary Board has had heavy financial burdens to carry, but the Yearly Meeting came to the rescue this year and placed some funds at their disposal that enabled them to meet all liabilities up to October first. But the estimates for her work in both fields call for more money than she has been raising the past few years, and the board was given authority to take such steps as were deemed advisable to either raise a sufficient amount to carry on the work or make some arrangements to release the Indian work to some other Board.

When the missionary reports were presented to the meeting a public subscription was taken amounting to over $1,600.00. This was a slight increase over last year. The new officers of the Missionary Board are as follows: President, George E. Kent, Mt. Gilead, Ohio; First Vice-President, Alice M. Terrell, Cleveland; Second Vice-President, Elmer C. Wood, Mt. Gilead; Treasurer, Elbert L. Benedict, Marengo, Ohio; Recording Secretary, Carrie L. Chambers, Damascus, Ohio; Corresponding Secretary, Rachel Pim, 176 W. Oxford Street, Alliance, Ohio. George Hartley presented the work of Home Missions among the Indians and the work of the Children's County Training Home at Amherst, Ohio, J. Walter Malone, Jr., Superintendent, was also considered.

Throughout the entire week the spirit of worship was upon every session, but special devotional services were held at 8:30 a. m. each day and each evening and on the Sabbath evangelistic services were conducted by visiting ministers and evangelists.

On Monday, September 1st, the centennial opened clear and bright. A large and enthusiastic audience was in attendance to listen to the program of the day, which consisted of historical essays, sketches, biographies, doctrinal statements and addresses on things retrospective and prospective. A map on the platform showing the setting up of the different Yearly Meetings west of the Alleghenies was shown and was denominated the "Quaker Trail," starting with Ohio and ending with Oregon, with Nebraska added later. A letter from John Henry Douglas was read and was much appreciated. Mrs. Grace Updegraff Burgeson wrote an "Ode" to the century past and present, set it to music and sang it with great power and spirit. She and two sisters, daughters of the much beloved David Updegraff, sang beautifully at different times during the week.

Prof. Paul Wright of the Mt. Pleasant school gave a splendid paper on the attitude of Friends toward the anti-slavery movement. Many Ohio Yearly Meeting Friends were willing to be called breakers of the laws of man in helping on the underground railway, several stations being located near Mt. Pleasant, Ohio. Several local incidents in connection with this work were recalled. Edward Mott read a paper on the things we verily believe as Friends, which was a clear, lucid, logical statement of the fundamental doctrines as taught by the Holy Scriptures and endorsed and taught by Friends.

All of these will be printed in a book and published at an expense of approximately $2.00 per volume.

Perhaps the most helpful and interesting feature of the day was the time when "greetings" were given by our Mother and Sister Yearly Meetings. Ohio was set up by Baltimore Yearly Meeting in 1813 at Short Creek Meeting House, at Mt. Pleasant. The corner stone of this meeting house was on exhibit. The date, 1807, is clearly cut in the stone. Baltimore was represented by Samuel R. Neave and John C. Thomas, who told us of the Mother's love, and still felt it her prerogative to give us good advice along with her felicitations for our future welfare.

Indiana Yearly Meeting was represented by T. C. Kenworthy and Luke Woodard; Western by Frederic J. Cope; Wilmington by Albert J. Brown and John B. Peelle; Nebraska by Townsend Linton; Iowa by Joseph Sopher; New England by John Shober Kimber, and New York by Geo. Evans. A letter was read from North Carolina, while President Edmund Stanley, who represented Kansas Yearly Meeting, gave the address of the day in the afternoon. As the meeting came to a close and Friends took their departure from this old historic spot, feeling that perhaps it might be the last Yearly Meeting held at Mt. Pleasant, because of the inaccessibility from a railroad standpoint, many tender memories were treasured up for our recall through future years.

Many things of interest in the history of our country had their inception in this vicinity. The first abolition paper published in the world was published at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, by Benjamin Lundy, called the "Genius of Personal Liberty." Silk was first manufactured in this country here also. Broadcloth was first made at Steubenville, Ohio, a few miles away. Benjamin Stanton, known in the councils of the nation, was a native of Steubenville, Ohio, and was a Friend. "Free Labor Stores" were kept in Mt. Pleasant and the old signboard, "Free Labor Store," was on exhibition at this Yearly Meeting. This, together with the underground railway, the introduction of singing into meetings, the genesis of the evangelistic movement of 1875 among Friends, her great departments of work—missionary, evangelistic, educational, Young People's Union, Bible School, Church Extension—and her good start on another century, gives her a right to a place among the Yearly Meetings of America, a place which by God's grace she desires humbly to fill.

An Appeal for Prayer for the United Missionary Campaign

The Home and Foreign Missionary leaders of the United States and Canada have decided to engage this winter in the most extensive and important piece of co-operative work which they have ever undertaken. The object in view is to enlist a far larger number of church members as intelligent missionary workers, supporters and intercessors. Of the more than twenty millions of Protestant church members in North America, less than one-half of them are doing anything or giving anything to meet the missionary needs either at home or abroad.

In addition to aggressive educational plans to be carried forward within the various denominations, there will be several hundred two-day Missionary Conferences held throughout the United States and Canada. More than twenty teams of experienced speakers are already organized for the efficient conduct of these Conferences.

This extensive Campaign is planned to lead up to a simultaneous personal canvass in March, 1914, for all missionary purposes, on the part of all the churches of all denominations, so far as they will undertake it. More than two hundred speakers will participate in the Conferences. Probably hundreds of thousands of men will assist in the simultaneous canvass for missionary subscriptions. The entire effort should mean a marked quickening of the spiritual life of many thousands of churches, resulting in greatly increased Christian activity and liberality.

In view of the vast issues involved, the Executive Committee of the United Missionary Campaign appeals to Christian people everywhere to join in frequent prayer for God's clear guidance and manifested presence and power in connection with this entire undertaking. This quickening will come, and can only come, when fervent prayer is offered unceasingly to God, to this end. "In any land a revival will come when enough people desire it enough—that is, above everything."

"Ye have not because ye ask not."

"The harvest is great,—therefore pray ye."

"Concerning the work of my hands, command ye me."

Signed by officers and the Executive Committee of the United Missionary Campaign.

What the Master Found

The night was shading the landscape with winter twilight when a Man entered this town. He was no common Man, and was bent upon no ordinary mission. An empire was to be overthrown, and upon its ruins a new kingdom established. It was an enterprise environed with peril. Already it had cost precious lives and priceless fortunes.

The Man bore himself as one who journeys through a hostile country, knowing that his enemies swarmed about him, vigilant, fearless, powerful. He took from his breast a little book, glanced at the list of names written therein.

"I have in this community," he said, "a band of five hundred friends, who have vowed ever to be loyal to me, faithful to my cause. They know that it is in danger. This is the night of their own appointment for meeting me, that I may instruct and encourage and strengthen them."

The deep tone of a bell broke upon the air. "It is the signal for their gathering," said the Man, and hastened forward. Soon he paused before a large building, which, save for one dimly-lighted room in the rear of the basement, was empty and silent. A man, evidently on guard, stood at the door. He started as the Stranger saluted him.

"I am expecting to meet some friends here tonight."

The janitor looked suspiciously at him. "You'll have to wait, then," he said presently. "There won't be anybody around here for half an hour yet."

"You are a member of the band that assembles here?"

"Um," replied the janitor.

"Is there great zeal among the brethren of the fraternity? Are they united, loyal, eager, aggressive?"

"Well," replied the janitor cautiously, "things are a little quiet with us just at present. Times are hard, and there's a good deal of opposition. We had a great many things to discourage us. Maybe in a couple of months we may get some outside help and shake things up a little, but we don't feel justified in making any effort now. Will you walk in?"

The Stranger entered the room indicated by a sweep of the hand. Presently an old woman came in, glanced timidly about her, and sat down as far away from the Stranger as she could get. By-and-by came two women. Then a bevy of young girls fluttered in, sat down, bent their heads together for a convulsive giggle, and lapsed into silence. A lame man limped to a seat behind the stove. After a little while a group of women rushed in, one of them leading a reluctant boy. A tired-looking man in laborer's garb sank wearily into a seat apart from the rest. After a long interval there entered a man in black, who stealthily tiptoed his way to a seat behind the others. Others came dropping in, until twenty-three people were assembled in, or, rather, scattered through, the room. They were evidently there in peril of their lives.

Everything disclosed a scene of half-restrained fear. The repeated glances at the clock, the painful intense-ness with which they listened to every approaching footfall until it passed; the quickness with which all eyes were turned toward the door as often as it was opened, deepening the impression that this was an unlawful assembly.

The Stranger softly passed out, no one barring his way. Glancing at his book by the wind-shaken light of the street-lamps, he went searching for his absent friends. Three of them he found on a street corner, discussing the political problems of the government under which they lived. Seven men he found in a club-room, reading, chatting, smoking. A score he found at public entertainments, a few at their places of business, lying in wait for belated customers, half a dozen at a progressive-euchre party. Some were in a neighbor's house whiling away the hour by social intercourse. Many were at home, some too tired to go out, because they had been out all day and were planning to go out again tomorrow, and some doing nothing, and wearily tired of it. A few were sick, a few were ministering to them. Some were curing convenient headaches by reading the latest novels.

So in the course of the evening the band of five hundred was accounted for. Twenty-three at the rendezvous—four hundred and seventy-seven here, there and elsewhere, dawdling, sleeping—a discouraging outlook for a struggling revolution.

"And what is all this ancient history?" you ask.

Oh, nothing much. And not so very ancient, either. Only Jesus Christ dropping in at a recent prayer-meeting in your church. That was all. And where did he find you?—Robert J. Burdette in Presbyterian Standard.

Blessedness of Prayer

The privilege of prayer to me is one of my most cherished possessions, because faith and experience alike convince me that God Himself sees and answers, and His answers I never venture to criticize. It is only my part to ask. It is entirely His to give or withhold, as He knows is best. If it were otherwise, I would not dare to pray at all. In the quiet of home, in the heat of life and strife, in the face of death, the privilege of speech with God is inestimable. I value it more because it calls for nothing that the wayfaring man, though a fool, can not give—that is, the simplest expression to his simplest desire. When I can neither see, nor hear, nor speak, still I can pray so that God can hear. When I finally pass through the valley of the shadow of death, I expect to pass through it in conversation with Him.—Doctor Grenfell.

Salvation All the Way

Discipleship to Christ is not a long labor, or a long pathway, at the end of which we secure a reward in payment for what we have done. It is a life which has its inheritance, as its birthright, at the outset, and moves forward in the conscious possession of it.—Timothy Dwight.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

The women of Pasadena Meeting had a busy day on the second instant preparing an outfit of clothing for one of their number, Elizabeth Stratton, who had a short time before been appointed by California Yearly Meeting Mission Board a missionary to Alaska. Two days later she sailed for Seattle, and from there was to sail for Nome by the steamer Senator, on the tenth instant. E. Stratton is to be a companion and fellow-laborer of Martha Hunnicutt, in place of Rhoda M. Hare, recently returned to southern California.

At the last session of Pasadena Monthly Meeting thirteen persons were received into membership, one by request, and the rest by transfer. Included in the number were two ministers, Joseph John Mills and E. Inez Bower. Another minister, William P. S. Cattell, and family, formerly of Boulder, Colorado, have located in Pasadena.

Bunji Kida and family have removed from Los Angeles to Pasadena.

Pasadena Friends have abandoned their separate Japanese Mission work, and with the Congregationalists of the city, who have been maintaining a mission for some years, have organized a Federated Mission to conduct a union work for the Japanese of Pasadena. Other denominations will be welcomed into the federation. It is hoped that by joining forces the work may be greatly strengthened. Mr. Sawaya, General Secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union of Japan, but now on a six months' furlough in America, is temporarily serving the new union church as pastor.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The months of July and August are considered the hardest in which to keep up interest in the Sunday-school. So to overcome this in the First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, W. E. Darter, offered a free ticket to an entertainment to those who were present seven Sundays out of the nine in July and August. This stimulated the attendance, consequently a great many were permitted to enjoy an interesting stereoptican lecture on the "Life of Moses" given at the church Wednesday evening, September 10, followed by a social time at which ice cream and cake were served. Mr. Darter is untiring in his efforts for the welfare of the school, and as a result, we have one of the best

Sunday-schools in the city, with an enrollment of three hundred and forty. The efficient work of Nora Cammack, the assistant superintendent, and Vera Foster, the secretary, is also a factor in the success of the school. We use the graded lessons in the younger classes, and have eight organized classes, a splendid orchestra, and a very faithful corps of teachers. The Sunday-school gave about eighty dollars to foreign missions the past year.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

Julia S. White gave an interesting, instructive report of the World's Sunday-school Convention held in August in the city of Zurich, Switzerland, to New Garden Bible School on the fourteenth of September. On the same day, Raymond Binford preached a strong sermon at New Garden Meeting, suited to the more than two hundred students of Guilford College at their first meeting for worship this college year. The students meet with the general public at the eleven o'clock meetings in the new meeting house. About five hundred people were present on this Sabbath.

The Bible School at Centre has adopted the Graded Lessons for all classes up to the adults. This is the second school among the rural meetings in North Carolina to adopt the Graded Lessons.

Sarah E. Winslow, of Science Hill, attended Centre Meeting Sabbath morning, September 14. She taught school at Centre about forty-five years ago, boarding with Joshua Reynolds, whose youngest child is now pastor of the meeting.

The time of the general exercises in the Centre Bible School has been used in giving reports of the conference held at Guilford College recently. Fifteen members of the school attended the conference. The school is being helped by the reports of these delegates.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held in Greensboro, September 13. In the meeting on Ministry and Oversight the subject of "Duties of Elders," previously planned, was introduced by Earle Harrold, and discussed in connection with reading what the discipline says of the duties of Elders. Eight or nine other men and women engaged in the interesting and profitable discussion. A meeting for worship followed, with preaching by David E. Sampson from the text, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." Then followed Arthur Pain, a minister and missionary in Cuba, on "The Love of God." Julia S. White, just returned from attending Woodbrooke, England, London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, and the World's Sunday-school Convention at Zurich, Switzerland, made brief but fit closing remarks. After a satisfying luncheon provided and so cordially served by Greensboro Friends, the business session opened. It was mainly the usual reports from the recent Yearly Meetings with special emphasis on the minute of advice directed to the subordinate meeting and to the individual members. A committee was appointed with power to act, if the way opens, in the called session of the state legislature, soon to meet, to ask that all the county of Guilford may have a law to prevent railroads from delivering intoxicants in any part of said county, as is already the case in High Point Township, Guilford County, and in Macon County.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

Something of the spirit, the solemnity and the message of the early Friends' meetings was manifest at a public meeting held in the Friends' Meeting House in Burlington, New Jersey, on First-day evening, Ninth month 7th. To this old town, famous in the history of the Society, once the home of the converted French nobleman whose journal was the first to convince of the truth of the Quaker doctrine the Friend whose concern led him here from a distant land, was brought a remarkable message of the Holy Spirit and the Kingdom of God, which made a deep impression on the hearers. The meeting was attended by about one hundred and fifty persons, mostly non-members, whose words and manner expressed interest and satisfaction in the service. Besides Max I. Reich, Walter Moore spoke briefly. Several other Friends from nearby towns attended, including Friends from Bristol and Rancocas, who came at no little inconvenience from the storm and the late hour.—The Friend.

Western Yearly Meeting

The Young Ladies' Bible Class of First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, taught by M. C. Pearson, wishes to come in touch with any young ladies who may be coming to the city for the winter. A hearty invitation is given to all to become identified with this class.

Walter E. Dorland, of Chicago, is on a business trip to the West, and hopes to have a "look in" upon Friends in Washington, Oregon and California.

After a summer of comparative inaction, the various departments of First Friends' Church at Indianapolis, are rallying their forces with renewed energy for more effective service along their respective lines. Plans are being made for Promotion Day and Rally Day in the Sunday-school, which will be of special interest to the children.

No services were held at First Friends' Church at Indianapolis, on Sabbath, the 21st, the opportunity being given to all to attend Western Yearly Meeting in session at Plainfield.

Having been called to Chicago by the marriage of their daughter, Richard and Florence Simms, of Chester, Indiana, attended the Chicago meeting for worship on the seventh instant, and Richard's message was very acceptable.

Arrangements have been made by which Charles R. Axton will remain as pastor of the Union Street Friends' Meeting at Kokomo, Indiana, for a third year. His service has been very acceptable.

A forward step was taken by the young ladies of Pearson's Bible class in the Indianapolis Bible School, at their monthly class meeting in September, when a Tithing Committee was made one of the permanent committees of the class, the purpose being to organize a tithing band among the young people and create interest and sentiment along this line.

Simultaneous Revivals

The Evangelistic Committee of Western Yearly Meeting has arranged for a few days of simultaneous revivals in all their meetings. These are to be held beginning on Thanksgiving evening next, and running over the following Sabbath.

These services are not to take the place of the regular revival efforts, but are expected to be introductory and preparatory thereto. All meetings in the Yearly Meeting are asked to observe these days according to the plans outlined.

Report of Iowa

The report of Iowa Yearly Meeting has been received. Owing to a combination of circumstances, it is necessary to postpone its publication until next week.

On August 28, Boston gave its first municipal picnic to five thousand mothers and children. Refreshments were provided, and various recreation devices made the day a pleasure to all who attended.

At Poughkeepsie, New York

On a recent Sabbath evening, the Friends' Church at Poughkeepsie, New York, held a service in the interest of education. Many school teachers were present, including Professor Shear, Superintendent of the public schools, who at the close expressed his deep appreciation of the service.

The pastor, William J. Sayres, gave an address on "Public Education", in which the Church and the school were linked together as leaders for the up-lift of the race. Among other things he said:

"The founding of the first grammar school was the surest blow against despotism, and was the beginning of government for and by the people. The schools are the nation's best fortifications and cheapest defense, and instruction should be the object of government.

"There are four kinds of students, the hourglass variety in whom we see all that they are taught running rapidly in and out; the ones who take what they are given but add nothing; those who like strainers retain only the dregs and refuse, and those who like the miner in the diamond mine, retain from all that passes through their hands only the purest gems. These four classes of students have to be trained and co-ordinated with the everyday affairs of the world, by the teachers of the school.

"The task of the teacher is inconceivably difficult. The qualities which he requires beyond all others are tact and common sense. How can we hope to get men and women for this exacting work unless we reward them as they deserve? The boys and girls of the nation must be given an education at any price. We secure the best doctors for our children and never count the cost, why are we not willing to pay our teachers?

"And in this education there must be religion. This nation was founded in a religious spirit, and it is un-American to leave the Bible and religion and God out of our public schools. How these things shall be taught educators must decide.

"Like the sculptor working with his chisel on the marble block, the teacher by means of education must carve out the elements of beauty lying dormant in her pupils and she must develop them that their hearts may be educated as well as their intellects."

On September 3, a brewery agent made a murderous assault upon Dr. W. L. Overholser, publisher of Clean Politics, a prohibition publication at Winamac, Indiana. The doctor had been active with others in an effort to rid the town of liquor blind tigers.

Died

COLLINS—Thomas Collins died at his home in Marshalltown, Iowa, September 12, 1913, aged eighty-one years. He was a native of Vermont, and came to Iowa in 1867. He was united in marriage to Mary Stanley in 1867. He died the death of the righteous. Funeral services were conducted by Nereus M. Hodgin.

JOHNSON—Edna Winslow Johnson, wife of Fred Johnson, was born in Fairmount, Indiana, and died at her home at Yarba Linda, California, July 23, 1913, aged twenty-eight years. She was a birthright member of Friends and an active Christian.

The "personal liberty" folks in North Dakota are getting restive under a vigorous enforcement of the prohibitory law in that state, and are threatening to start a movement for its repeal.

The Agricultural Department has completed a motion-picture film of bees engaged in honey making.

HAPPY OLD AGE

Most Likely to Follow Proper Eating

As old age advances we require less food to replace waste, and food that will not overtax the digestive organs, while supplying true nourishment.

Such an ideal food is found in Grape-Nuts, made of whole wheat and barley by long baking and action of diastase in the barley which changes the starch into a most digestible sugar.

The phosphates also, placed up under the outer-coat of the wheat, are included in Grape-Nuts, but are lacking in white flour because the outer coat of the wheat darkens the flour and is left out by the miller. These natural phosphates are necessary to the well-balanced building of muscle, brain and nerve cells.

"I have used Grape-Nuts," writes an Iowa man, "for 8 years and feel as good, and am stronger than I was ten years ago.

"Among my customers I meet a man every day who is well along in years and attributes his good health to Grape-Nuts and Postum which he has used for the last 5 years. He mixes Grape-Nuts with Postum and says they go fine together.

"For many years before I began to eat Grape-Nuts, I could not say that I enjoyed life or knew what it was to be able to say, 'I am well.' I suffered greatly with constipation, but now my habits are as regular as ever in my life.

"Whenever I make extra effort I depend on Grape-Nuts food and it just fills the bill. I can think and write a great deal easier."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

With the Children

If You Could Only Know

BY FANNIE HERRON WINGATE

If you could only know, dear,
How deep the harsh words sting.
If you could only know, dear,
How long their echoes ring;
I think that you would leave unsaid
The words you sometimes say,
If you could only feel the pain—
The pain naught can allay.
If you could only hear the tones, dear,
The tones you sometimes use;
If you could see the frown, dear,
I think you could but choose
To put away such cruelties
That wound a heart of love,
And use the blessed gentleness
"That cometh from above."
For should the one you love, dear,
Be summoned from your side,
And you be left alone, dear,
In loneliness to abide—
Oh, sow not seed of vain regret,
But fill each passing hour
With gentle kindness, and thus Make happiness your dower.

The Man Who Couldn't Let Go

Walking on the street one day he saw a wire lying on the ground. Without thinking much about it, he stooped to pick it up. That was natural enough; why shouldn't he? It seemed harmless, to be sure. But when he grasped it he couldn't let go! He tried to, but he couldn't. It was a "live wire." A strong current of electricity was running through it. It was burning him cruelly and he cried out with the pain. His whole body was writhing in distress. But his hands still gripped the wire, and when men came running to help him, they had to drag him away from it by force.

That is one of the dangers of a live wire. If you once lay hold of it you cannot let go, no matter how much it is hurting you. I know a boy who grasped a live wire a while ago and it is hurting him cruelly. But he doesn't let go. He says he can't, even though his mother and father are begging him to and the doctor says it will kill him if he doesn't. The live wire is the cigarette.

The boy is only sixteen years old, but he is a slave. When he began smoking, he was holding the wire; but now it is holding him. He has a weak heart, already poisoned by tobacco. He has to give up some of the sports he loves because of it and he knows it is killing him. Yet he is clinging to it still, smoking every day, and nobody can stop him. If he were holding a live wire he might be dragged away from it, but no one can compel him to drop the cigarette.

You can see what habit is. We say a boy "has a habit." But after a while the habit has the boy. The only way to be safe with a live wire is never to touch it. And the cigarette is a live wire.—
Frank T. Bayley, in Congregationalist.

"Gather Out the Stones"

"It is such a stony little path between here and Mrs. Harvey's that I can't bear to go over it," said Jim.

"And Dick Harvey doesn't like it any better when he comes over here," said Frank. "I heard him say he had got ever so many bruises in that path. He was grumbling about it yesterday."

"Why don't you clear the way between here and your neighbor's?" asked Mr. Morris. "Much better to do that than keep grumbling about it."

"Why, we should never get all the stones out of that path," cried Jim.

"Not all in one day, nor by taking all the stones at once," said the father. "But if each of the boys who crosses there would take a stone out of the way every time he goes, the work would be done. Try it."

The boys did try it. Half a dozen young lads who used the path helped, and the path was cleared.

This is exactly the way to make it easier and pleasanter for others in this world. Let each one make it his business, as he goes through life, to take some little hindrance out of the way whenever he can. Little faults should be cured, and little temptations that cause unwary feet to stumble should be removed.—Children's Friend.

"Choose Ye"

When James A. Garfield, who afterwards became president of the United States, was president of Hiram College in Ohio, a man brought his son for entrance as student, for whom he desired a shorter course than the regular one.

"The boy will never take all that in," the father said. "He wants to get through," the father said. "He wants to get through by a shorter route. Can you arrange it?"

"Oh, yes," replied the president of Hiram College. "I can arrange for it. Your son can take the shorter course. It all depends on what you want to make of him. When God wants to make an oak,

He takes a hundred years; but when He wants to make a squash He requires only two months."—Young Christian Worker.

Five-year-old Tommy was being put through a test in numbers before the admiring family one day at dinner. Finally, papa asked him the question that had proved the Waterloo of the older children in past years. "Now, Tommy," said papa, "how many are two apples and three pears?" "Five fruits!" promptly answered Tommy.—Delineator.

"Why, Nellie dear," said the little girl's teacher, "I haven't seen you for several days." "Nome," replied Nellie, "I've been on an exertion with mamma."—Harper's Bazar.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. X. His
 Co-operation with others. Col. 4: 1-18.
 (Consecration Meeting.)

We are living in an age that requires team work in the service of the Lord.

Intensive personal religion is splendid, but fellowship in service will insure a harvest that is surprising.

The strands of a cable are essential, but it is only when bound together into a complete whole that strength and serviceableness are assured.

The exclusive Christian will not have many souls for his hire. Being burden bearers together implies unity and friendly sympathy one for another.

The spirit of yoke-fellowship should characterize all Christian living and activity. Co-operation, fellowship, unity, sympathy, are the gospel keywords to profitable Christian service.

Books Received

Study Notes. Vol. VIII. The Doctrine of the Person of Christ. (Post Biblical.) By Edward Grubb, M.A. By Woodbrooke Extension Committee and Headly Bros., 140 Bishopsgate, London,
 E. C., England. Price, 1 shilling, net.

This book concerns the early days of the development of Christian theology, and outlines the various views of Christology, through Ebionism, Gnosticism, Docetism, and Montanism, down to Arianism, Nestorianism, and through the various Creeds, giving a "look in" at the more modern theories of Servetus and Socinus, John Locke, and the still more modern German criticism. The notes are strongly marked by scholarship and close with a consideration of a strictly modern Christology that is regarded as satisfying, and as leading up to a better understanding of the nature and mission of Christ.

This is more than the story of a local saloon fight. It is a rare record of persistence amid persecution, extreme faith in God, and an ultimate triumph that is marvelous. It is the story of the writer's untiring war upon the local saloon, the remarkable escapes from oft repeated personal assaults, the resignation of the good wife, because she had committed her husband to the Lord. It is a thrilling recital, the more so because it is a true story of actual occurrences. The author concludes with these words:

 "Verily, it pays to be fearless in the right, not only morally, but financially as well. And remember, had God not been in this movement against the saloons in Berne, I would never have lived through it to tell the story. Therefore, praise the Lord, O my soul."

FOREIGN MISSION DEPARTMENT

Personal Report of Bertrell McClean, Holguin, Cuba, for year ending June 30, 1913

It often seems that the missionaries' wives are like Martha, "cumbered about much serving." But this seems a necessary and unavoidable condition. We have our houses to keep and our children to care for, which alone occupies most of the time of many of our sisters in the States. It is suggested that we should not be without help in our homes. But this is a difficult problem, more difficult than many realize. It is hard to find anyone who is willing to do house work. Trained help is more expensive than we can afford. New missionaries have the difficulty of not knowing the language well enough to direct those who are helping them. And when we take anyone into our homes we take the responsibility for their character and their spiritual welfare, as this is the prime object of our work here and of our association in any way with these people.

From the beginning of July till the middle of September we made one attempt after another to get help in our home. The twenty-third of September we finally took Mercedes Menacho, a girl twelve years old, into our home—the only help we could get. In the meantime I had been trying to study Spanish, but it seemed as if there was not a week passed without something special that took the lesson time. And I don't think I ever spent an hour in study without one interruption and sometimes three or four. It was very discouraging.

On the twenty-seventh of September our little Helen Mary was born. Through the grace of God and the help of the missionaries and our friends we were able to pass through this time which was very trying in a foreign land, especially as Clarence had more than enough to do with the opening of school.

As quickly as I could I tried to relieve him of the extra burden of the home and children. Looking after these was all I found myself able to do for some time. In January I tried to take up the drawing in the school, but as Mercedes had just taken typhoid fever, I found the added strain of all the house work and the school work too hard, especially as I had to guard myself for the sake of the baby. So I began the study of Spanish again. But still it seemed that I must take up the work in the school. The two small rooms were getting so badly crowded and the teachers could not do justice to the work they were trying to do.

In April I began the work in drawing and sewing and followed it by "busy work" for the little folks. For this latter the little folks came over into my home, thus relieving the congested condition of the school rooms for a little while each day. For the last six weeks of the school I had an hour and a half of actual school work every day including Saturday, and every free evening was taken up getting ready for the next day. An attempt to do this kind of work here is like trying to make bricks without straw. But it seems to me that there is no phase of mission work that can be made more effective than the day school. Next to the parent the teacher in his daily work comes into closer contact with these children and the inner working of their minds than anyone else, and so has a better chance to direct that mind and soul for good. In this work I felt the presence of God with me, and it was only by His help that I did, day by day, all that there was to do. "As thy day so shall thy strength be."

It did not seem wise for me to make the hard trip to Banes to attend the Conference with the three little children. So I prepared my paper and sent it to be read, and since have been trying to rest so that I can begin the study of Spanish again soon.

With the exception of the months of September, October and part of November, I have attended the regular meetings of the Christian Endeavor, Sabbath School and mid-week and Sabbath services. I have tried to do as much visiting among the people as my strength and my limited Spanish would permit. Sometimes in trying to talk to these people it has seemed as if "my tongue would cleave to the roof of my mouth."

In looking back over the year's work it seems as if I have been able to do very little of what is considered actual mission work. But to me the year has been a year of great blessing and I trust it has been to those with whom I have been associated. My prayer is that this year may be the foundation for a larger and better work for the Master in the future.

The Ability to Worship God

A sentiment expressed by a leading Friend at Western Yearly Meeting, to the effect that the ability to worship God truly is one of the most valuable experiences to which mankind can attain, laid deep hold upon the meeting. The utterance is fundamental to all Christian life. The worship of Jehovah is the most vital element in man's relationship to his Creator. It expresses that heart relationship to the Divine which must ever characterize Christian discipleship.

Primarily worship is reverence, adoration, homage, devotion, which the worshiper pays to God when conscious of His great beneficence and His all-wise providences. This attitude of soul may be manifested at any time, when the sense of God's nearness has enveloped man's whole being, but usually it reaches its most realistic fruition when, in the religious services, the soul is prostrated before the Lord and comes into blessed fellowship and communion with Him.

The value of worship lies in its effect upon the worshiper. No one can really commune with Jehovah without a conscious feeling of grace and spiritual power that renders the recipient sensitive to the Divine leading and the Divine anointing. The act of worship is the time when the consciousness of Jehovah's presence is most realistic and therefore the most precious.

When we worship we enter not only the throne room wherein God reigns as the highest embodiment of power and authority, but the throne room becomes the living room in which soul communes with Spirit in that most sacred relationship to which humanity may attain this side the grave.

How much it means when in the religious service every worshiper can find his way into the holy of holies with our Lord, when he can enter into sympathetic fellowship with all who through the leading of the Spirit are led to participate in the vocal utterances, when by faith the soul can get a vision of the enrichment of life and service that is the ideal of perfect consecration to the will of God! How much of blessing and enlargement of soul the multitudes are missing, when in lighter vein and with ill defined purposes they sit down merely to observe the forms of worship!

Worship is a function of the Christian life to be cultivated. Without it there is leanness of soul and barrenness of spirit that furnishes no equipment for Christian service. He who learns the art of thus communing with the Father wants no greater entertainment, for the soul has found the real joy of the Lord and the fountain of eternal blessing.

Simultaneous Evangelistic Efforts

Resulting from a burden conveyed to Western Yearly Meeting by Daisy D. Barr of Muncie, Indiana, in behalf of a simultaneous evangelistic campaign, the Evangelistic Board has agreed to ask every local meeting within that Yearly Meeting to observe four days of special services, beginning the evening of Thanksgiving day in November and running throughout the following Sabbath.

It is not meant that this effort shall supplant the usual evangelistic endeavors in the various meetings, but rather that it shall be preparatory to richer and more successful undertakings throughout the religious campaigns of the succeeding months. This concert of action will mean much for the Church and its individual members if undertaken in the proper spirit.

These should be days of earnest prayer together, days of planning and teaching, days wherein constructive work is attempted for the upbuilding of the Master's Kingdom. What an example it will be to all Christendom if Western Yearly Meeting in its entirety can be bowed in prayer at the same time and for the same purposes! Out of it must come enlarged visions of service and a larger power in service.

Indiana Yearly Meeting has caught the spirit of this co-operative movement, and has fixed January 18th as the beginning of simultaneous services in all its subordinate meetings. These may continue for a week or longer as circumstances warrant, but every local congregation in this great Yearly Meeting will be asked to observe the occasion.

There are possibilities in the plans of these two largest bodies of Friends in America that should enlist the prayerful sympathy of all Quakerism. It means united denominational interest in all the problems of the Church, and an earnest effort to find the key to the solution. Our processes have been too haphazard for the most satisfactory fruition, and in this plan lies the highway to denominational unity and denominational efficiency. The Evangelistic Boards of other Yearly Meetings may with propriety consider similar plans in their own work.

Rural Life Teachings of the Bible

So far as can be learned there were no isolated farm houses where single families lived alone. As a general thing a number of more or less related families united in forming a rural village. These were not cities in any sense, not even small towns, but little hamlets set in the midst of the fields and hills. The country districts were dotted with these tiny villages and we find constant reference to them throughout both the Old and the New Testaments. In the land laws of Leviticus, it says "The villages that have no wall round about them shall be reckoned with the fields of the country" (Lev. 25: 3). To city people, like the citizens of Jerusalem, these villages were considered as a part of the open country, as is indicated in the Song of Solomon (7: 11) where it says, "Let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages."

Every morning the men went out to the fields to work and at night they came back to the village for shelter. Thus in Judges 19: 16 it says, "And behold, there came an old man from his work out of the field at even." The village in question was Gibeah, which lay a few miles north of Jerusalem, and was the home of Saul, who became king of Israel. About Saul we read, "Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul, and behold Saul came following the oxen out of the field" (I Sam. 11: 4, 5). David looked after his father's sheep in the hills of Judah, but the family headquarters were at the little village of Bethlehem. And it was from this same rural village that Jesus came in later years.

In the same way most of the leading characters of Old Testament times grew up in these rural villages. Abijah came from Shilo (I Kings 11: 29). Elisha's home was the village of Abelmeholah (I Kings 19: 16). Amos was from Tekoa, in the hills of southern Judah. Micah lived in Moresheth. Jeremiah's home was the little village of Anathoth, northeast of Jerusalem (Jer. 1: 1 and 32: 7-9), and so on down the list.

The reason for this gathering into villages was that the farmers were under the necessity of co-operating against the attacks of enemies from the desert and the surrounding countries. They co-operated just as the sturdy pioneers of our own early colonial days co-operated in the use of the stockade, because they had to. And the trend of the times seems to be that the farmers of today are co-operating more and more for the same reason, because they find they have to. It's a case of self-preservation now as much as it was in Bible or early colonial times. The enemy is not the same save in the characteristic of being a common enemy. Then the necessity was military; now it is economic and social, but it is just as real. And there are those who have studied this question deeply, who feel very certain that the time will come when the American farmers will again be gathered into farm villages, as the farmers of Germany have already gathered under the pressure of economic necessity and as a part of a broad program of co-operation.

We are today hearing very much and doing comparatively little concerning the conservation of natural resources in general and soil fertility in particular. I suppose the majority of farmers in this and other states consider this as a very modern question and, perhaps, more or less of a temporary scare. And yet if you will turn to Exodus 23: 10, 11, you will find one of the ordinances of the primitive code of laws commanding, that "Six years thou shalt sow thy land and shalt gather in its increase. The seventh thou shalt let the land rest and be fallow." The law giver of that ancient day knew nothing of nitrogen cycle, of humus, nitrifying bacteria, of available and unavailable plant food or the theory of green manuring. But the practical advantage of a fallow period, one of the cardinal principles of dry farming practice today, was so thoroughly recognized that the land lay fallow one year in seven. In Leviticus 25: 3, 4, another statute reads, "Six years shalt thou sow thy field, * * * but the seventh shall be a sabbath of complete rest for the land."

It was at a time when the laws of God and the state, which were then considered to be the same, were being broken that Isaiah (5: 8-10) in a burst of burning eloquence cried out, "Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no room, and ye be made to dwell alone in the midst of the land!"

"In mine ears saith the Lord of Hosts, of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

"For ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and a homer of seed shall yield by an ephah."

Such a prophecy can only be classed as sanctified common sense. When the concentration of land ownership is the rule and land grabbing is a passion, the live stock will be crowded off the range and there will be little attention paid to a program of soil conservation. The only possible result can be that even the vineyards shall be reduced in bearing and the increase over the seed sown will be so small as to make it hardly worth while to farm. The progress is negative and straight toward the abandoned farm.

Such laws would be demoralizing under our present economic and social conditions. It was probably possible then only because of the theory of land ownership in vogue as shown in Leviticus 25: 23: "The land shall not be sold in perpetuity, for the land is mine, and ye are resident aliens and settlers with me." All laws were religious. God owned the land, therefore He had a right to legislate for its conservation and permanent usefulness. It is only a question of time, however, until there will be laws upon our statute books definitely regulating the care of the farm land in certain particulars with regard to the conservation of the soil's fertility.

Perhaps the most striking similarity between ancient practice in Bible lands and modern need is to be found in the land laws of the Old Testament. As already suggested, they faced the problem of the concentration of the ownership of the land and its attendant evils of absentee landlords and a dependent peasant class.

Micah (2: 1, 3), who was always on the side of the man who found himself at a social or economic disadvantage, cried, "Woe to them that devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds. When the morning is light, they practice it because it is in the power of their hands. And they covet fields and seize them, and houses, and take them away." "They practice it because it is in the power of their hand" may refer to the fact that the prophets made no distinction between seizing land as Ahab did in the case of Naboth's vineyard and foreclosing a mortgage. In their view, all concentration of land was wrong because it alienated from the soil the sturdy, independent farming class of the day. The prophets preached against it. The law givers formulated statutes against it and at least one prophet, Elijah, took the role which we now designate under term "invisible government" and started a political revolution and overthrew the ruler in power because he seized a tract of land that pleased his fancy. Samuel (8: 13, 14), arguing against the advisability of having a king over Israel, said, "He will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your oliveyards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants (that is his political constituency). Micah and Isaiah, as already pointed out, condemned the ruling class for adding field to field. Ezekiel (46: 18) demands that the prince shall not seize the people's land, so that the people shall not be scattered every man from his possessions. And the book of Deuteronomy (19-14 and 27: 17) curses the removal of landmarks and records a law forbidding their removal.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

Whither Are We Tending?

BY FRANCIS A. WRIGHT, SR.

[The following is part of a message delivered before the local Meeting on Ministry and Oversight at Kansas City, Missouri, last spring. It is proper to say, perhaps, that the choir vestments referred to are not worn regularly at the services, but only upon special occasions. It is felt that the message may have an application beyond the local situation.]

After prayerful consideration of the matter, it seems right for me to call the attention of the meeting to some thoughts as to whither we are tending. I do not wish to offer these in any spirit of fault-finding, nor do I desire that you should take any immediate or hasty action thereon, but I do desire that you may carefully consider them.

There has been a great change in the practice if not in the actual spirit of Quakerism since my boyhood. Then we had small meetings, such as the one I attended, where twenty or thirty persons met week after week and sat for an hour and twenty minutes on the forenoon of First and Fifth days of the week, as then spoken of, and for a full hour in the afternoon of First day in absolute silence, except on those rare occasions when some traveling minister was present. The women Friends all wore Friends bonnets, which my own sister commenced to do at sixteen. We were taught that it was almost sacrilege to sing at all, or to use the secular name for days and months or to address a single individual with the plural pronoun.

While a very great change has taken place, it has been a very gradual one and is, I believe, still going on. Will those who are young people now look back to as great a change when another fifty years has passed? Will there be any Friends Church then, and for what will it stand and how will its services be conducted?

In this period of change, there is a wide diversity of views and practices. Our own meeting at present stands, I believe, as one of the foremost in advocating and practicing things new to Quakerism. Are all our new practices wise, whither are they tending, and where will the changes stop, or is there any stopping place in sight? When an objection was raised to the use of vestments for the use of the choir, that this was a practice of the Catholic Church, the answer was made, that if it was a good thing, why should we not avail ourselves of it, even though the Catholics did use it? Well, we would certainly place ourselves in a wrong position if we refused to do anything that in itself was right simply because it was practiced by some other church. But we can view these questions in another light; the practices of the different churches are, to a large degree, the concrete working out of their doctrinal views. Especially is this the rule in the case of the old established churches, the Catholic and Episcopal, where there is a strong ruling force to resist change. Their practices are a consistent whole, and if we begin by using first one and then another of their practices, will we not ultimately be using all of them?

I did not attend the meeting held on the evening of Friday week, which, in accordance with old Quaker usage, is commonly known as Good Friday, because I considered the cautions given by the pastor in announcing it as debarring me from the right to attend. I learn that it was a very beautiful and impressive service, but that there was no room for any spontaneous or impromptu expression of any description. Everything was planned beforehand and each person sang or spoke or prayed in exactly the words of the printed program. This seems to me quite an advance towards a regular Episcopal service, from the mere use of vestments of a year ago. Whither are we tending?

Have we a right to do these things and retain our fellowship in the Society of Friends? I apprehend there are many people who would answer no. We not only call ourselves the Friends Church, but all our members under existing conditions, including all new ones we may take in, are members of one Church composed of all orthodox Friends both in this country and Europe and are supposed to work in harmony. This membership implies limitations which, it seems to me, make it almost dishonorable for us to adopt Episcopal practices.

But even if we have the full right to adopt these practices, is it wise for us to do so? Where will the stopping place be? Can we use the charm of beautiful and elaborate music and ceremonial without continually desiring more and more of it and drifting further and further from the simple worship of our forefathers? Do these practices promote true religion and pure spiritual worship or do they not? What has been the experience of Christians from the time of the apostles? Has it not been a tendency to drift away from personal, spiritual dependence upon the Lord and His guidance into forms and ceremonies, without the life? Paul wrote, "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? * * * Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?"; and again he claimed they were returning "to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage. Ye observe days and months and times and years." As a Friend, whose father had to face a mob because he believed it was wrong even to close his store on Christmas day, it seems to me a surrender of our privileges to observe Palm Sunday, Good Friday, Easter Sunday, etc.

I will freely admit that there are good, devout Catholics and Episcopalians, and that to those who have been taught such things from childhood, the fulfilling of their various ceremonies may seem an essential part of religion. But we have thought we had something better. Shall we go back "to the weak and beggarly elements"? Shall we make these things the ideal for our children and our new converts?

I well remember how in an article on ideals, written years ago by the late Dr. Richard Henry Thomas, he showed the effects of differing ideals thus: When a girl raised in certain surroundings felt the movings of God's spirit she would be impelled to a mourner's bench, while another child with different ideals, would by the same movings of God's spirit, be impelled to take the veil. If we are building up a Church in this neighborhood, have we not a great responsibility as to the ideals we shall form in young people, younger or older, whom we are drawing to us? Is the ritual of the Episcopal or Catholic Church the ideal for worship we desire to set before them? * * *

In writing this, I have no thought of having my personal desires set against what is the best thing for the church and community. When the proposal was made that instead of locating our new church where it would be most convenient for the old members, but where it would have an opportunity to do the most good for others, I heartily endorsed the latter proposition. I have endeavored ever since to promote that end and still wish to continue to do so, even though the measures which the majority of the church may think wise be at variance with my own wishes or judgment.

The onlooker sometimes sees the game best and, in one sense at least, I regard myself as an onlooker and am therefore giving you the benefit of my views, so that you may deliberately consider them and see whither we are tending. If it is the deliberate judgment of the Church that the best interests of the kingdom of our Lord in this neighborhood will be promoted by having a church service with an elaborate ceremonial then let us press ahead, even if it should result in our separation from the church of our forefathers. If, on the other hand, we believe that the more good will be done and more persons led to true surrender to the Master, by an avoidance of the ceremonial and by keeping music in a subordinate place, let us be warned in time and hold back now or even draw back before we have stimulated tastes in our people, younger or older, which we cannot ultimately fulfill.

* I will refer to one other matter before closing, that is, the question of "prearranged service." I have personally for several years advocated a prearranged service for our meetings in the forenoon, because it was our experience that without some such limitation on the liberty of speaking, our meetings were liable to be harmed by the well-meaning but inappropriate ministrations of spiritual cranks, either members of our church or otherwise. No one who has been a member of this church for many years will, I think, deny that injury was done to the meeting because of persons taking advantage of the opportunity formerly given for speaking at any time during the meeting, such persons sometimes preventing the delivery of the right message by the right person at the right time, or spoiling the effect of a good sermon by undertaking to drive it home. I agree with Mrs. Whitney in Leslie Goldthwaite that the use of the punch to drive the spiritual nail deeper into the wood is best left to the Lord Himself.

But a prearranged service is not synonymous with an unchangeable service, and I should like to see a little more pliability in ours. Is it essential that we should always have three hymns, neither more nor less, one reading in unison and one reading by the pastor, and one prayer by the pastor? Would not prayers or short messages from members be an advantageous change at times, and is there any more reason why they might not sometimes even be prearranged, as well as the pastor's sermon? If the latter is not always able to speak to advantage without notice, why should not others be given the same advantage of notice? Personally I think the old Friends erred in limiting the guidance of the Spirit to "immediate guidance" only, and not recognizing that this guidance could be given in other ways and in advance for definite service.

Unbelief is like a man with his back turned toward the sunshine, walking in a shadow—that he himself makes, while faith, reversing the order, faces the sun and then lives in the light of hopefulness with the shadows all behind it.—United Presbyterian.

The fifty-first session of Iowa Yearly Meeting convened from September 2-7, 1913. An unusually large number of Friends came to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary and the dedication of the new Yearly Meeting House. The business sessions throughout were participated in by a large number and deep interest was manifested in the activities of the church.

Acceptable messages were received from visiting Friends from other Yearly Meetings, among whom were, Ellison R. Purdy, Harriet Purdy and Emma Spencer Townsend from Wilmington Yearly Meeting; Charles W. Sweet, Daisy Barr and George N. Hartley from Indiana; Willard O. Trueblood and Jehu Reagan from Western; Samuel L. Haworth from New England; Alsina Andrews, Mary White and Sada Stanley, missionaries from Jamaica; and Charles Haworth missionary from Cuba.

The keynote, social service, was given at an early session and characterized the considerations of the departments of church work as they were presented. The characteristic meeting was the one devoted to Evangelistic and Church Extension work. The spirit of the meeting was that evangelism is not a department of the church, but is that which the church must accomplish in the Bible School, the Christian Endeavor and the College; that evangelism means social service with regeneration, and that evangelism is the constructive work of the church. There was a deep spirit of co-operation with the words of the report, "We must either take up the work of practical church extension or die. By the call of the Master as He commands us to 'Go', and the history of the past, let us decide once for all that the watchword of Iowa Yearly Meeting shall be 'Forward', that this may prove to be the beginning of a half century of deeper consecration to God, loyalty to each other, and the interests of the kingdom, so that we shall become a praying, loving, working and growing church."

The report on Penn College showed a remarkable amount accomplished with the given equipment, an increased attendance, the high rank of Penn graduates in other educational institutions, that Penn College has a ministerial club of fifteen members, and that a large number of Penn graduates are preparing for the ministry at Hartford Theological Seminary. An appeal was made to arouse greater interest in higher education in the local churches. The needs of the College are finance, prayer and intelligent investigation.

Deep interest was manifested in the reports of the delegates to the Five Years Meeting. They spoke of the delightful fellowship with Dublin and London Friends, and impressed the meeting with the necessity of social service; that prejudices were overcome by becoming better acquainted with those from other Yearly Meetings; that doing the work needed in one part of the field is helping the work in all parts, of their willingness to face the situation; that there is no difference in the fundamental doctrine of Friends in east, west, or central parts, all are one in Christ, and all are Friends. The general spirit expressed was the oneness of Quakerism, and a broad vision of service.

Willard O. Trueblood addressed the public Christian Endeavor Meeting, emphasizing conservation, vision, service, the personal touch, and the Big Brother movement. The C. E. Union pledged $1,200 for the Jamaica Mission work, $150 for home work, and $100 on the new church building. They agreed to work in connection with the Evangelistic Board and to pray for a revival in Christian service; to hold conferences in each Quarterly Meeting; to send delegates to the Summer Assembly; to make special efforts in the study of missions and church history; and pledged their financial and moral support to the Young Friends Movement. Their motto for the coming year is "Efficient Service."

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society has joined the School of Missions, at Lake Okoboji, a mission union of all churches in Iowa, whose purpose is oneness of action. The women of Iowa Yearly Meeting completed the organization of the Home Missionary Auxiliary, which was started at the Five Years Meeting.

An advance step was taken in the Bible School work. The need of the conservation of the boys and girls was presented. Richard R. Newby was appointed chairman of the committee on Bible Schools and Viola Smith was appointed Field Worker. Oliver H. Stewart, of Chicago, addressed a large audience on the subject of temperance, and Charles E. Beals, Field Secretary of the American Peace Society, gave an address on "International Peace" at the public meeting on Wednesday evening. A full and cordial expression was given in favor of patronizing THE AMERICAN FRIEND and to assist in increasing its circulation.

On Friday the fiftieth anniversary exercises were held in the new meeting house. Nearly all the Yearly Meetings sent fraternal delegates. Messages were received from John Henry Douglas and others. Over fifty persons were present on this occasion who had witnessed the opening of Iowa Yearly Meeting on September 10, 1863, at Spring Grove Meeting House, near Oskaloosa. Two persons were present who have attended every Yearly Meeting: Joseph Sopher, chairman of committee on anniversary exercises, and Sarah Jane Pickrell who gave a beautiful tribute to the reverence and impressiveness with which the business was transacted at the first Yearly Meeting in Iowa.

Of the delegates who were appointed by other Yearly Meetings to attend the opening of Iowa Yearly Meeting, only one, Charles F. Coffin of Chicago, survives, whose presence on this occasion was a precious benediction upon the Yearly Meeting. He was accompanied by his son, Elijah Coffin of Philadelphia, who was present also with his parents, fifty years ago. Charles F. Coffin with others happily presented the scenes of those early days. They spoke of the inconveniences of travel on account of the enormous task of transporting large bodies of Civil War soldiers and military supplies and food; of the Friends coming in covered wagons, bringing their bedding and food with them; of the novel out-door life; of the rude shed which served as Yearly Meeting House; of the Spring Creek Boarding School; of the separate meetings for men and women; and of the sacrifices and force of character and spiritual weight of those men and women who then composed Iowa Yearly Meeting.

They told of the adoption of the Indiana Discipline; that arrangements were made to build a Yearly Meeting House to cost from $15,000 to $20,000; that among the standing committees was one on "People of Color"; that David Hunt was clerk with Willet Dorland and Enoch Hoag assistant clerks; that "never before or since that time has any Yearly Meeting been so blessed by the presence of such a highly cultivated, liberal-minded, intelligent body of representative Friends."

The greetings from other Yearly Meetings were most inspiring. They brought messages of reverence for the past, reminding Friends of the debt to George Fox for civil and religious liberty; to Elizabeth Fry; to the New England martyrs, who with holy stubbornness persisted in sacrificing themselves for the liberty of the gospel. In accordance with the custom of a half century ago the congregation stood while Pliny Fry led in an impressive prayer. While the character of the meeting was historical a prayerful and reverent spirit prevailed. As a whole, the Yearly Meeting was impressed with the dignity and refinement of the simplicity of the "Quaker of the olden time," and recognized that history and reminiscence are valuable only as they inspire to the work of the future.

The new Yearly Meeting House is an artistic building, representing Quaker architecture relieved of its severity. In size it is 115 x 60 feet, with a seating capacity of 900. The frame is of steel, the walls are of hollow tile covered with gray matt brick with trimmings of Bedford stone. The roof is made of red asbestos slate. The building faces west at the corner of C Street and College Avenue, directly across from the College campus. The cost of over $31,000 was covered by subscriptions. One pleasant feature of the Yearly Meeting was the social time enjoyed together by partaking of the meals served cafeteria in the large dining room.

Ellison R. Purdy preached the dedicatory sermon from the text, "But I say unto you that a greater than the temple is here." The Meeting House was formerly dedicated at the close of the meetings for worship on Sabbath morning.

"Love much. There is no waste in freely giving;

More blessed is it, even, than to receive.

He who loves much alone finds life worth living:

Love on, through doubt and darkness; and believe

There is nothing which Love may not achieve."

—Selected.

The secret of life is not to do what one likes, but to try to like that which one has to do; and one does it in time.

"The straightest way, perhaps, which may be sought, Lies through the great highway men call 'I ought.'"

Anna G. Wood

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His Saints."—Psalms 116: 15.

On the third day of August, 1913, came the close of a beautiful life which had been rich in faith, fruitful in loving service and crowned with the favor and blessing of the Lord. This dear Friend was known and loved not only by her family and home circle, but throughout New England Yearly Meeting as a true Mother in Israel. She was born in New Bedford, Massachusetts, in 1822, being the youngest daughter of Reuben and Anna Russell. A birthright member of the Society of Friends, she became one by conviction also, and in early life under deep religious impressions, realizing her need of a Divine Helper, she sought and accepted her Savior's forgiving love. Of this early experience Anna Wood recorded late in life: "I was enabled to enter into covenant with Him by sacrifice, and promised by His help to serve and follow Him all the days of my life. This I have endeavored to do, though there have been many failures and I can with deep humility acknowledge that I have been an unprofitable servant, and need the unbounded mercy and forgiveness of a covenant-keeping God, and now in the eighty-fourth year I can bear testimony to the Lords' mercy and continued care and love."

"Her children rise up and call her blessed" and many a soul we may confidently believe could testify of having been brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ through her direct teaching or the influence of her saintly life.

In 1845 she was united in marriage to Henry T. Wood of New Bedford. They were kindred spirits and from that time on until his death in 1883 their married life was consecrated to the Lord. Their home was one of the stations of the "Underground Railway" preceding the Civil War and upon the dining room sofa one runaway slave after another came to rest his wearied limbs over night till it was safe to send him on to the next station.

For many years Anna Wood had borne her silent protest against slavery by abstaining from any but free labor products of food. To this house came also traveling Friends, ministers of repute with credentials from England and elsewhere, and also there came not a few more obscure individuals with little or no official endorsement. But the door stood on the latch to the Lord's messengers "toward them that were brethren and strangers withal."

Both Henry T. Wood and his wife were active workers in the Friends First-day School of New Bedford, and a weekly Bible class which met at their house was a source of blessing in establishing sound Scriptural truths in the minds and hearts of those privileged to attend it. Their mutual interests were closely identified with those of the Society of Friends. They served efficiently on its various executive committees, accompanied Gospel ministers on their journeys, and filled with acceptance other appointments to church service.

Anna Wood was an Elder, and served as Clerk of

New Bedford Meeting. For several years she filled the responsible station of Clerk of the Women's Yearly Meeting of New England. In this capacity she was a valuable leader, her clear judgment, her wise discrimination, her spiritual insight and skill in recording the sense of the meeting being tempered by her sweet and patient gentleness of spirit. Her life touched other lives on many sides always with helpfulness. We cannot here enumerate the many different enterprises of Christian usefulness with which at one time or another in her busy life she was connected.

It was a long pilgrimage. She was led on past Life's successive milestones. The allotted three score and ten was passed—then on to four score—and still ten more peaceful years were added. She died in her ninety-first year. During these closing years, as her earthly tabernacle failed more and more, she who had so faithfully ministered to others was in turn most tenderly watched over and cared for by her children.

The funeral was held in the homestead on Washington Square, County Street, New Bedford, Massachusetts, the house which has sheltered the family for sixty years. Anna Wood had always been a lover of flowers and now it seemed fitting that she was laid asleep in a bed of roses, lilies and other fragrant blossoms. The funeral was conducted according to the simple and impressive usage of Friends. Dr. Augustus T. Murray of the Leland Stanford University of California, a grand-nephew, was the chief speaker on the occasion and the sons and grandsons were the pallbearers, and so "He giveth His beloved sleep."

Introductory

There have already appeared in these columns some accounts of the situation in Australia and New Zealand with respect to the Defence Acts, but we in the United States have as yet scarcely begun to realize the hardships to which conscientious objectors there are now subject, or to understand how important it is that we should see clearly the lesson for our own land which military conscription is there teaching. It is impossible in the space at our disposal in THE AMERICAN FRIEND to give more than a mere outline of the course of events in the countries where the Defence Acts are in force, but since the details of the conflict now going on there do not, for some reason, find their way to any great extent into the newspapers, it is worth while noting some of the most important phases of the attempt to enforce compulsory military service, and the organized opposition to it on the part of the people in those colonies.

The System Authorized by Law

The present system prevailing for compulsory military training and service rests upon legislation known as the Colonial Defence Acts, passed in 1909, modified by amending Acts passed in 1910 and 1912. Enforcement of the provisions of the Acts began in the summer of 1911.

Opposition to the System

From the first there has been determined opposition to the compulsory clauses of the Defence Acts. In New Zealand the National Peace Council began its work on June 21, 1911, and within a week more than 2,000 adult citizens had signed a protest insisting that the compulsory features be repealed. In Australia the Freedom League was promptly organized, and according to recent reports has now over 35,000 supporters in the different Australian states. In these organized efforts to secure repeal of the compulsory clauses the Society of Friends and Labor and Socialist organizations have taken a leading part, but the Freedom League and Peace Council include also ministers of other denominations, teachers and professional men.

The extent of the opposition to the system is also indicated by the number of prosecutions for failure to comply with the provisions of the Defence Acts. A circular letter sent out by Friends in England states that the Defence Department of New Zealand published in the press of the Dominion on May 30, 1913, the following: "Since the inauguration of the Defence Scheme from March 1, 1911, to April 30, 1913, there have been 78 youths (over 100 to date) imprisoned, and 2,480 prosecutions against Junior, and 959 against Senior Cadets."

In report No. 2 of the Report of the Commonwealth Organizer for the Australian Freedom League, under date of July 29, 1913, is the following statement: "The authorities have now admitted that 12,373 prosecutions have taken place up to May 31, 1913. In all probability, up to date over 15,000 lads have been prosecuted. Nearly 300 lads have been incarcerated in military fortresses. This is worse than jailing the boys, because in military fortresses they are dead to Civil Law."

Kinds of Punishment Used

The Freedom League cites the following instances showing the kind of punishment used when boys refuse to comply with the provisions of the Defence Acts:

1. A report from New Zealand, dated July 18, 1913:

Batches of boys were marched through the streets under escort of soldiers with fixed bayonets, their destination being the fortress on Ripa Island, where they were to be placed for sixty-three days' detention.

The lads while at the fortress refused to carry out the Military commands, * * * and were illegally confined in solitary cells, rations were reduced, blankets removed all day, notwithstanding the bitter cold, and for twenty-three hours out of the twenty-four the lads were each confined in separate small cells. After all the punishment, the illegality was discovered, and the Magistrate was very hurriedly despatched with a Police Sergeant, who knew nothing of the case, and an impromptu Court was held at the fort; no public admitted, no lawyer for the defendants; sentence was passed for a further period of seven days' detention. One of the lads had taken seriously ill, but he was pulled out of bed, taken into the impromptu Court, practically unconscious, held up during the proceedings by soldiers, and remanded for fourteen days until he recovered.

2. A case of refusal on conscientious grounds:

Frank Giles, the son of Alfred Giles, the well-known Barrier Laborite, refused on conscientious grounds to be taught to kill his fellow-man. This brave lad was seized at his work, dragged to a court, and it seems that an attempt was made to starve him into surrender. Read the following extract from the Barrier Truth.

"On making inquiries at the gaol the father of the lad was informed that he would be permitted to send his son food during his incarceration, but last night a police-officer called at his house and informed him that the permission given to send the lad food had been cancelled, and that for the first seven days he would have to subsist on 1 lb. of bread per day, and as much water as he cared to drink."

3. A case in which attendance on drill interfered with work, and penalty for non-attendance caused him to forfeit his position:

A young man of South Melbourne, who was sent to Queenscliff Fortress, shares with his brother in the support of his widowed mother and younger sisters. The family are strongly opposed to military training, and it was only under protest that the young man registered. He was employed in a foundry and had to rise at five o'clock in the morning. He found that the drills interfered with his day's work and determined he would not go. For this he was sent to Queenscliff.

His mother wrote to his employer asking him to keep the job open for the lad when he returned. The employer replied that he could not do so. So the lad will be amongst the unemployed on his release.

4. A case of cruel treatment:

The sentence of this boy to the fortress illustrates not only the tyranny of Conscription, but also shows how our magistrates are in the military grip.

The boy had just recovered from an attack of pleurisy, and had forwarded to the military authorities his doctor's certificate of exemption. They said they did not receive it. When the boy opened his mouth to speak, the magistrate silenced him.

The lad's parents had not the remotest idea that he would be sent away, and when an officer came and asked that his clothing be sent on, they were dumbfounded.

In addition to the kinds of punishment shown in particular instances cited above, the Defence Acts provide for the following methods of dealing with those who do not comply with the compulsory provisions:

1. Fines from about $1.80 to $25.00.

2. Attachment of wages on refusal to pay fine. That is, an employer is obliged to pay to the Government in fines wages due an employee who has refused to pay fines assessed against him for violation of provisions of the Defence Acts.

3. The sentence to imprisonment carries with it sometimes hard labor with criminals of the worst classes, the wearing of convict clothing, and the taking of finger prints.

4. "The convicting magistrate may, if he thinks fit, in addition to imposing a fine, order as part of the conviction that the defaulter shall be deprived of civil rights for a period not exceeding ten years, and during such period he shall be incapable of being appointed to any office in the Public Service, such as Telegraph and Post-offices." A further clause also deprives one thus punished of the right to vote.

5. Failure to register or to drill are considered "continuing offences." That is, even if a fine for non-compliance be paid today, another fine may be assessed or imprisonment ordered tomorrow, and so on day after day indefinitely.

6. In New Zealand the Minister of Education, who is at the same time the Defence Minister, "requires the Heads of schools and colleges to withhold 'free places and grants' from any student unless he can present a certificate signed by the Area-officer to show that he has complied with the provisions of the Defence Acts."

One Concession Secured

Objections based on the ground of religious belief have received attention from the officers charged with enforcing the Defence Acts, but so far exemption from military duty can be secured in New Zealand only after the requirements as to registration have been complied with, and then only after a magistrate has been convinced that the objections are based upon personal religious beliefs which are sincerely held. When exemption from military duty has thus been secured, those to whom the exemption applies may be required to perform "such non-military services as the Governor may from time to time prescribe."

To those who feel free to comply with the regulations of the Acts concerning registration, the possibility of obtaining exemption on the ground of religious belief is a genuine concession. But to those who do not feel free to comply with registration clauses, there is no relief. In Australia there seems to be as yet no concession made even on the ground of religious belief.

Parental Authority Superseded by Military Authority

The text of the Defence Acts seems to fix upon parents the responsibility for registration of boys, and prosecutions of parents for neglect or refusal to register their sons are recorded. For instance, the following given by the Freedom League under date of July 29, 1913:

Two leading members of the League in Victoria, Mr. C. Flinn and Mr. T. Ratcliff, were prosecuted during the past month for refusing to register their boys. Mr. Flinn, who is a Quaker, took his stand on the ground that the teaching of Christianity is opposed to war and military training, and also his conscience would not permit him to have any dealings with military law. Mr. Flinn was fined one pound and costs, which he refused to pay and was therefore distrained. Mr. Ratcliff's case also aroused considerable interest. His counsel pleaded that the Defence Act interfered with the liberty of the individual, and with our civic rights. An adjournment was secured, but on the second hearing Mr. Ratcliff was fined seven pounds, and five pounds five shillings costs.

But in practice it seems that regulations recently adopted by the officials in charge of the enforcement of the Acts, gives officers in a given area the power to register boys who have not been registered by their parents. In an interview on July 26th with Senator Millen, Minister of Defence in Australia, his attention was called to the fact that the regulation giving officers the power to register boys was apparently in conflict with the Defence Act itself; his reply was, "Then the Act will be amended to make this possible."

Ministers in Victoria Oppose the Compulsory Clauses

Twenty-five ministers in Victoria have issued a manifesto giving the following specific grounds for opposing the "compulsory clauses and character of the Commonwealth Defence Act:"

1. The Abolition of Parental Authority. Parents have the moral and legal responsibility as well as the natural anxiety of rearing their children, and should have the right of deciding whether their sons should be trained as soldiers during their minority. The parents should not be thrust aside while military authority supersedes theirs, during the most critical years of a boy's physical, mental, and moral growth.

2. The Abolition of Freedom of Speech. Every trainee is prohibited by military law from discussing in public, or communicating to his friends, any information relating to his military duties; nor may he write to the press without special authority. This will prevent the public from learning of abuses which must inevitably occur, and prepares the way for military tyranny.

3. The Abolition of Civil Freedom. Every trainee is liable under military law, to the deprivation of his rights as a citizen, when, in the supposed interests of military discipline, the two are in conflict; and for alleged offences can be tried by a military tribunal (Court Martial), from whose decision there is no appeal to any Civil Court. "That no man is a soldier against his will is the badge of freedom in Great Britain and America," writes Professor D. Starr Jordan. There is no such badge of freedom in Australia.

4. The Abolition of Religious Liberty. No parent or child may have either religious principle or conscientious objection against this Act. The citizen's conscience is forcibly suppressed or ignored, unless it agrees with Compulsory Training. Religious Liberty has been won at too great cost to be thus wantonly set at naught.

An Opportunity to Help and to Learn

Australia and New Zealand Need Our Help

The article in this week's issue concerning recent events in Australia and New Zealand attempts to open the way for one kind of help which those states need, and which with a little care we can give, namely, publicity concerning the situation there. If the attention of the whole English-speaking world could once be fixed upon the methods used in enforcing the Defence Acts, and, more important, upon principles and motives underlying the Acts themselves, a long step would be taken toward securing relief from the conditions which now exist there, conditions which are intolerable to all who believe in political liberty and in the right of every man to act in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. There are also other ways in which we might help in the struggle for liberty in Australia and New Zealand, but this one method of helping to make the conditions there known is open to us all. The need is urgent. Let us give this help.

The struggle now going on in those states may soon be our own struggle here. It will be upon us soon if certain of our militarist friends can bring it about. Theoretically in this country now every able-bodied male citizen between the ages of eighteen and forty-five is a member of the militia. It is but the logical step in preparedness for defence to say that boys should be trained in military tactics before they reach the age when duties are heavier and the task of learning more difficult. Debates in Congress in recent years show how strong is the pressure to withdraw from Friends and other conscientious objectors the right to be exempt from military duty. (See extract from the Congressional Record quoted in minutes of the Five Years Meeting for 1907, pages 69 to 73.) Bills to increase the efficiency of the militia and to provide for rifle practice in the public schools have been recently before Congress, and some action may be taken at the next regular session. The Defence Acts in Australia and New Zealand came in 1909 as a surprise; the people were never given an opportunity to express their preference in regard to them. There are many lessons which we may learn from the Australian states; but let us at least be warned as to the inauguration of compulsory training; if such legislation be enacted here let us at least be able to say that we knew the danger and fought with all our might against it.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Amos M. Kenworthy began a two weeks' series of meetings at Seattle, Washington, on September 7.

A farewell reception was given by the Friends of Fountain City, Indiana, on the evening of September 19, to the pastor of the meeting, Fred E. Smith, and his family. The church room was beautifully decorated, and about two hundred of the members, young and old, gathered in honor of the occasion. It was one of the important events of the meeting within recent years. Arrangements were made by the Ladies' Organized Bible Class, and ice cream and cake were served in abundance. Short talks were given by Luke Woodard and others, and were responded to by Fred Smith. At the last service held by the pastor on the 21st, the house was crowded, and it was an occasion of deep feeling throughout. Fred E. Smith has accepted the pastorate of the Greensboro, North Carolina, meeting, and is moving there this week. He goes with the well wishes of all Fountain City Friends.

A farewell reception was given by the Friends of Dublin, Indiana, on the evening of September 22, to the retiring pastor, Dalton H. Lewis, and wife, Lilian Lewis. It was an occasion where good fellowship prevailed throughout the evening. The room was tastefully decorated with autumn colors, golden rod and Brown-eyed Susan. The Whittier Class of the Sabbath School served fruit juice and wafers. Music and short addresses, appreciative of Dalton Lewis' ministry constituted the program. Conspicuous among those who contributed toward the pleasure of the occasion were those who had come into the church under his ministry. About two hundred, including many from other churches, were present.

On Thursday evening, September 18, a fitting Memorial Service in honor of E. Everett Morgan, was held at the Friends' Church, H. Matamoros, Mexico. The church was decorated with an abundance of beautiful flowers, lovingly presented by the teachers and students of the school of which he was formerly superintendent. There was a large attendance, and the occasion was a solemn one. Workers from the Presbyterian College and church kindly assisted in the service. Everett Morgan had been engaged in missionary work in Mexico for a number of years. Being in ill health, he resigned his work as pastor of the Friends' Church at H. Matamoros, Mexico, in May, and went north to the sanitarium at Battle Creek, Michigan, where he underwent a surgical operation which eventually caused his death, August 29, 1913. He was a faithful worker and friend, and has touched the lives of many, who will long cherish his memory.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Mary White returned recently from Los Angeles, California, where she represented the Christian Endeavor societies of Minneapolis at the National Christian Endeavor Convention.

The Friends' Meeting at Minneapolis has been strengthened recently by the coming of Samuel L. Haworth and wife, formerly of Fall River, Massachusetts. Mr. Haworth begins his new pastorate with the most cordial welcome and the heartiest support of the entire meeting. In the meetings for worship, the Bible school, and the Christian Endeavor, are evidences of new spirit and fresh zeal. The coming of these Friends is especially helpful to Minneapolis Friends, as they have been for some months without a pastor. All are looking forward to a period of greater activity and service for the entire meeting.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Parker Moon has just closed a year as pastor at Fairview meeting, near Carthage, Missouri, a meeting which he helped to organize forty-six years ago. The meeting has selected M. L. Swafford, of Haviland Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, as pastor for the coming year. He has moved and has already entered upon the work.

Clarkson Hinshaw, Kansas Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic work, visited Friendswood Quarterly Meeting, held at League City, Texas, August 23. His gospel labor with us was characterized by deep spiritual teaching, which came as a great blessing to all who listened to his convincing sermons. A few meetings were held at League City and Friendswood the week following Quarterly Meeting, and all were very much appreciated. May God bless him and his wife in all their labors.

The following is an extract from minutes of Hesper Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, September 12, 1913:

"The meeting then entered into the consideration of the subject 'The advisability of a union of Protestant Denominations as one church.' The subject was introduced by John D. Mills, who presented the reasons usually advanced for the continuance of the separate denominations, and also those advanced for union. The meeting decided to continue the discussion at our next meeting, especially directed to the phase of the question, 'How can we best promote unity of action with other churches, and do the most good to the community surrounding us?'"

New York Yearly Meeting

Scipio Quarterly Meeting was held at Perry City, New York, September 26-28. At the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, Ida T. Parker, of the Biblical Department of Oakwood Seminary, gave an address on "The Relation of the Rural Church to the Community." On Saturday evening the subject of "The Relation of the Rural Community to the Church" was discussed by Eliezer Partington, of Oakwood Seminary. On Sabbath evening, Ida T. Parker had charge of the devotional meeting.

The Oakwood Seminary at Union Springs re-opened on September 16, with a full enrollment of eighty pupils, of whom seventy-six are in the Academic department.

Western Yearly Meeting

Charlotte E. Vickers, President of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America, has been appointed delegate to a meeting of Women's Boards to meet in New York City in October. She is one of eleven women appointed to this meeting, two of whom are from Canada, and eight are from the United States. One of the eight is Mrs. Peabody, who receives her appointment by virtue of her position as head of all our woman's interdenominational work, which makes Charlotte Vickers one of seven. This is an honor to Friends women which they should know and appreciate.

In the United States the percentage of attendance in the Sunday-schools to population is 16.6; in Newfoundland it is 17.8; in the Fiji Islands, 18.33; in Great Britain, 21.2; in the Marshall Islands, 26.5; and in the Samoan Islands, 29.1.

The Carnegie Endowment Fund for National Peace is sending to Europe a special commission to investigate the enormous cost and waste of the Balkan war.

CORRESPONDENCE

The following is an extract from a letter we have received from Charles F. Coffin, of Chicago, concerning his recent trip, in company with his son, Elijah, to attend the semi-centennial anniversary of Iowa Yearly Meeting:

"The next morning we took a carriage and drove to the new meeting house. There was a large attendance. They consider that the auditorium will now seat nine hundred people and it was full. There were probably fifty or one hundred Friends on the platform. The whole proceeding of the Centennial was well managed, and after a few preliminary items of business I was called upon to speak. I was able, with some exertion, to make them all hear, and gave them a full account of the organization of the Yearly Meeting fifty years before and of the circumstances connected with it. I was the only living member of thirty to forty Friends who were appointed by the different Yearly Meetings to attend the opening of the Yearly Meeting.

"With Elijah's help I had prepared a full written account in the first place of my father's visit to Iowa, upon the request of the Quarterly Meetings for the establishment of a Yearly Meeting. He attended them and gives an interesting account in his diary of the visit. We had selected this account and had it type-written, and I followed it with my account of the establishment of the Yearly Meeting, which was written on the ground fifty years before. The original copy is still in my possession, though very much faded, yet legible. I gave the names also of all the Friends upon the committees from other Yearly Meetings, and of the Friends living in Iowa who were guests of the same house in which we were all quartered. It was a crowded occasion and far from comfortable, but we were all happy and joyous, and made the best of it. Elijah, who was present with us—then fifteen years of age—added an account of his trip and of the condition of railroad travel at that time, and also his view of the Yearly Meeting and circumstances connected with it. We were followed by Friends from most of the Yearly Meetings, who were called upon for short addresses.

"I passed my written copy to the Clerk of the Yearly Meeting. Appended to it are the signatures of almost all the Friends who were on the Committee, which I have preserved carefully for years, but thought it best to commit to the care of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

"These ceremonies occupied about three hours. We returned to the hotel for dinner, and came back in time for the Meeting at two o'clock, which was devoted to the dedication of their beautiful new meeting house. There is nothing equal to it, in beauty and convenience, in the Society, and it is very creditable to the Friends and to the Yearly Meeting. Penn College is just across the street from it.

Conference at Darlington, Maryland

A week-end conference was held in the Friends' Meeting House, Darlington, Maryland, from September 5-7. It was arranged by the Conference Committee of Baltimore Quarterly Meeting. Besides the people of the Darlington neighborhood, we were pleased to have with us Elizabeth Hopkins, L. Oscar Moon, John R. Cary, and Alva D. Lindley, of Baltimore, Samuel R. Neave, of Hughesville, Maryland, Lindley D. Clark, of Washington, D. C., and L. Walter and Sarah C. Borton, of Moorestown, New Jersey. On Sixth-day evening the conference began with a meeting addressed by L. Oscar Moon on "The Logic of Peace." He made the subject very interesting, giving us up-to-date information upon advances made toward international peace. He reminded us that seventy percent. of the national income is expended for the army, navy and pensions. A discussion followed.

Seventh-day morning the conference began with a devotional meeting. At 10:30 Lindley D. Clark, of the Department of Labor, talked to the conference upon the subject, "Labor Problems—Some Methods of Meeting Them." He told of the necessity of trade unions and of the many laws now providing better and safer conditions in factories. He also spoke of workmen's compensation laws. The talk was interesting and very encouraging. It is gratifying to think that Friends have had a part both in work for peace and in social reforms, but we do not want to be content with priding ourselves upon what our ancestors did.

The same morning Alva D. Lindley gave an address upon "Christ's Kingdom Among the Nations." He spoke of foreign missions in general, but most particularly of China. Discussion followed upon the two subjects of home and foreign missions. It was felt that the morning had been an uplifting and helpful one.

Seventh-day evening at five o'clock, Charles Y. and Rebecca E. Thomas served a tea on their lawn, which was followed by a discussion opened by L. Oscar Moon, upon country neighborhoods, and in particular the Darlington community. The Boy Scout Movement, suitable amusements for country children and kindred topics were discussed by quite a number of those present. We were glad to have a number of neighbors at the meeting.

First-day morning, following the meeting, came the Bible class led by John R. Cary, of Baltimore. The meeting for worship that night, though small on account of rain, was an especially helpful one, although smaller than desirable. The conference was undoubtedly inspiring to those who were present.

The Baltimore and Ohio Road has fitted up a special car, and handed it over to the health authorities of the several states, to be used in the campaign against the "white plague."

DIDN'T KNOW

That Coffee Was Causing Her Trouble

So common is the use of coffee as a beverage, many do not know that it is the cause of many obscure ails which are often attributed to other things.

The easiest way to find out for oneself is to quit the coffee for a while, at least, and note results. A Virginia lady found out in this way, and also learned of a new beverage that is wholesome as well as pleasant to drink. She writes:

"I am 40 years old and all my life, up to a year and a half ago, I had been a coffee drinker.

"Dyspepsia, severe headaches and heart weakness made me feel sometimes as though I was about to die. After drinking a cup or two of hot coffee, my heart would go like a clock without a pendulum. At other times it would almost stop and I was so nervous I did not like to be alone.

"If I took a walk for exercise, as soon as I was out of sight of the house I'd feel as if I was sinking and this would frighten me terribly. My limbs would utterly refuse to support me, and the pity of it all was, I did not know that coffee was causing the trouble.

"Reading in the papers that many persons were relieved of such ailments by leaving off coffee and drinking Postum, I got my husband to bring home a package. We made it according to directions and I liked the first cup. Its rich, snappy flavor was delicious.

"I have been using Postum about eighteen months and to my great joy, digestion is good, my nerves and heart are all right, in fact, I am a well woman once more, thanks to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

Arthur and Eliza Dann

The Meeting for Sufferings gathered at 10:30 a. m. on the fifth instant, instead of the usual hour of 11:00. After the Clerk had mentioned that a large number of returning minutes had been received for Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, expressing warm appreciation of their service in America and Canada, Arthur Dann gave a long and very interesting account of their journeys and the meetings they had held during their second visit, which began a year ago. He spoke with special warmth of his experiences in and around Philadelphia, at Atlantic City, at Booker T. Washington's Institute for colored people at Tuskegee, and at New York shortly before his return home. At the last-named city a very impressive meeting was held with some hundreds of men of a very low class. In Canada a new meeting had been started at Calgary as the result of the visit. On the steamer by which they returned, our Friends had several comfortable religious meetings with the passengers, including those in the steerage. Arthur Dann, while returning his minute, said that he felt that his service on the American continent was not yet finished. (Eliza F. Dann was prevented by indisposition from attending the Meeting for Sufferings.)

Brown Reunion

The Brown family reunion occurred September 15-16, when the seven sons and two daughters of Mrs. Lucinda C. Brown, of 1702 North New Jersey Street, Indianapolis, Indiana, met with her for the first time in ten years. The remarkable thing about this family is that the parents were earnest Christians and the children are active Christian workers. The two daughters are Mrs. Rose Longest, east of the City, and Miss Della Brown, City, who is engaged in Bible extension work. Of the seven sons, six are ministers and one an elder. Charles C. Brown, Carlinville, Illinois, is a minister of the Holiness Christian Church and editor of his church paper, The Voice From Canaan. Jacob C. Brown, Southport, where the reunion was held, is an elder in the Presbyterian Church in the City. The other five sons are ministers in the Friends' Church and are located as follows: Clark Brown, pastor, Cumming, Iowa, editor Monitor, Hubbard, Iowa; E. Howard Brown, pastor, Earlham, Iowa; Walter W. Brown, pastor, Paoli, Indiana; L. O. Brown, Sunday-school missionary and chalk talker, Franklin, Pennsylvania, and John S. Brown, Sunday-school missionary, Greensburg, Pennsylvania.

Important Joint-Conference

The Ministerial Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting has accepted an invitation from the Western Yearly Meeting Ministerial Association, to meet with them in a joint conference to consider subjects of mutual interest to both bodies.

It has been arranged to hold the conference at the First Friends' Church in Indianapolis, beginning with an afternoon session on Tuesday, November 18, and continuing until the close of an afternoon session on Thursday, the 20.

All ministers in both Yearly Meetings are urgently asked to attend. A program is being arranged that is comprehensive, and that will include topics of vital interest to the church and to the two Yearly Meetings in particular. It is believed that there are great possibilities in this joint gathering, and that new and larger visions of life and service will be revealed by the associations of these two days. Other notices will follow later.

Penn College Notes

Penn College has begun her fortieth year under auspicious circumstances. Many material improvements make the facilities in all lines the best they have ever been. There is a unity among the Friends in Iowa in their support and endorsement of their educational institution. The enrollment at the end of the first week was three hundred and fifty. Work in all lines is starting off in a splendid way and everything indicates that the coming year will be a banner one.

Three members of the faculty are away on leave of absence, one at Harvard and two in Europe. Their places are temporarily filled with excellent substitutes. Christian activities are starting off vigorously. A stirring campaign for membership in the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. has brought almost every student in touch with these organizations.

A Correction

In our issue of September 4, on page 581, in the article on Charles and May Repogle, the statement was made that the Friends' Missionary Society in Alaska owns the largest herd of reindeer in the world. We are informed that this is far from correct, and that the herd only numbers one hundred and twenty-five. It is stated that a number of natives own more than does the Mission. Our former statement was copied from a Seattle, Washington, paper as sent to us.

Teddie's Victory

Teddy was such a little fellow that when he wanted to see the basket of fine, ripe pears which mama had left on the table, he had to bring his little stool and climb upon it to reach high enough.

O, my! how nice they did look! And what a delicious smell! They must taste very good; how could he help just taking one?

Surely it would not be missed, the basket was so full. And nobody was by to see if he did it, so what was to hinder?

For a moment Teddy almost put his hand upon the nicest one in the lot. But I am glad to say the little hand was drawn away, and the bright-eyed little man said, firmly, "No, I won't. Mama told me not to touch them, and I won't do it. I promised her I wouldn't. No, Mister Pear, you must stay right there in the basket, and I'll run away for fear I might do it if I looked too long."

Down hopped Teddy, and off he went. Mama was pleased to find him busy with his red horse-line when she came back and the fruit undisturbed.

Brave Teddy! He ran away from temptation, but gained what we call a great victory over his appetite.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

OCTOBER 12.

SUBJECT—Jealousy and Envy Punished.

LESSON—Numbers 12. Commit verses 10, 11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly. 1 Cor. 13: 4, 5.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

OCTOBER 12.

TOPIC—Favorite Verses. V. In the Epistles. 1 Cor. 13: 1-13. (Honorary Members' meeting.)

No words will be recalled with greater refreshing than the words of the lesson text emphasizing the beauty and power of love.

Again many will be blessed in remembering that second chapter of Second Timothy, setting forth the rewards that await the faithful.

Others will recall that honor roll of faithful saints and heroes, spread upon the pages of the letter to the Hebrews, and many a soul will be renewed in consecration and faith as he reads again that wonderful record.

Still others will turn instinctively to that wonderful equipment of the militant Christian in the Sixth of Ephesians, while many will renew their hope as they read from Phillipians, "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me."

"O Love Wilt Not Let Me Go"

O love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life shall endless be.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A Lesson in Denominational Procedure

We have often wondered what would happen if a number of Friends communities would suddenly conclude that they could get along with ministerial service supplied by other denominations. Some would invite a good Methodist preacher to attend the service; others a Presbyterian; still others a Lutheran, and so on down the list. Without doubt there would be some excellent preaching that might be highly edifying. But it is no discredit to our sister denominations or to the character of their ministry to predict that the Friends congregation following such a practice would soon find itself disintegrating as a body of Friends, losing interest in the principles for which the denomination stands, and ultimately drifting from its established moorings as a company of believers.

There is something discordant about the suggestion that stamps it as an impractical procedure. Yet that is exactly the policy followed by a large number of Friends in relation to their denominational periodical. They are willing to take all kinds of other religious publications, denominational and otherwise, and, when solicited to take THE AMERICAN FRIEND, now owned and controlled by the church directly, they ignore its claims upon them, and imagine that they can maintain a position of live interest as part of the working organism of the church by reading other literature exclusively.

Again, we have wondered sometimes what would happen, if after the Church has arranged for its various activities, pastoral service, missionaries in the field, secretarial work, evangelistic work, etc., the members, when appealed to for their share of support, would largely determine to spend their money in other directions, and would announce that they could not afford to maintain the activities already agreed upon.

Yet again, this is the policy pursued by a large portion of our membership in relation to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. They are spending their money, many of them, in other directions, with no thought of their obligations to the established periodical of the church. The time has come when all our membership ought to regard their obligation to take THE AMERICAN FRIEND as being equally binding with their obligation to support their pastor, the foreign missionary department, or any other department of church endeavor. To quote the words of the Commission at the Five Years Meeting: "The question of a weekly church paper and other literature, which will adequately voice the life, mechanism and operations of Friends in America, should henceforth be regarded as a policy of administration, to be met and acted upon with the same serious consideration as is accorded every other department of church activity."

The almost universal testimony is that THE AMER-

ICAN FRIEND is worthy to be taken and read for its own sake, but thousands of families will have to be induced to take the paper as a matter of denominational duty and loyalty, before they can appreciate its worth to them and to the church as a whole. This will have to become a matter of education, wherein ministers and other interested Friends, by constant appeal, press the claims of the paper upon the membership generally.

With the offer now being made, of THE AMERICAN FRIEND from now until January 1, 1915, for $1.50, the price of a year's subscription, a vast amount of missionary and educational work ought to be done in every Friends community, to get new subscriptions. Now is the time of all times to push the interests of the periodical.

The Special Numbers

We have found it necessary to postpone our special Bible School number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND until October 23d, at which time it will appear. We are anxious to have brief items of news about the work which Friends Bible Schools are doing. Many will have important rally days, at which time important plans will be set in motion for the coming year. Brief accounts of these, together with anything else of peculiar value, and which would be an inspiration to other Schools will be in order. Copy should reach this office not later than October 16th or 17th.

This postponement makes another necessary, and the Young People's number will be issued November 6th. As in the case of the Bible School number, we invite items of news about the work of young people, which should reach this office by October 30th or 31st.

CHURCH NEWS

There are in the United States and Canada together 135,000 Protestant ministers of the Gospel. Quite an army! It requires annually 6,500 new candidates to make good the loss by death, disablement and retirement.

The State Federation of Churches of California is arranging a series of meetings and conferences relative to church federation and the common interests of the churches, to cover the important cities of the Northwest and Pacific Coast, beginning at Spokane the first week in October.

At its meeting recently in Toledo, Ohio, the Evangelical Lutheran Church adopted a resolution to raise $2,000,000 for the Ministers' Pension and Missionary Work in honor of the celebration in 1917 of the 400th anniversary of the Reformation. A Jubilee Committee of the Council has been appointed to co-operate with other Lutheran bodies in this country to engage in making a total fund of $10,000,000.

Conserving Our Membership

One cannot read the annual statistics of our various Yearly Meetings without being forced to the conclusion that our system of gathering statistics is largely a failure, or that Friends are sadly lacking in their ability to conserve the interests of the membership. Probably there is a vital weakness in both directions, which should no longer be ignored.

The evangelistic harvest year after year is generally satisfactory, but apparently there is almost a universal leakage that as yet, has found no adequate explanation. In the aggregate some thousands of converts are added to our church rolls annually with a fair degree of regularity, but the totals of membership refuse to grow in corresponding proportion. The church must awaken to the fact that we are not holding what we get. The chances are that the total membership this year will indicate a loss.

The problem is by no means met by the assertion that church efficiency is not measured by growth in numbers. That is a viewpoint which may ease the conscience of lax administration, but in the final analysis it is far from satisfying. It may be admitted that a large membership roll does not necessarily mean a high degree of spiritual life and power. But that is not the problem under consideration. It is just as true that a constantly increasing membership is not necessarily inconsistent with satisfactory spiritual experiences.

The problem under consideration goes far deeper, and concerns the ability or willingness of the Church to devise ways and means by which a large proportion of its new converts may be assimilated into the life and service of the working organism, and thus become permanent factors in its growth and development. Apparently the church has assumed that its responsibility has ended with getting men and women converted. Of course, this is not its announced policy, but its conduct has led in this direction. It is time to recognize that, as with the natural birth, the spiritual birth is only the beginning of life and activity, and that the same care is needed during the early years of the spiritual life as is necessary for the new born infant.

How many of our meetings have taken the trouble to nourish their converts with painstaking care during the early months and even years, of their religious experience? After spending weeks in prayerful preparation for an evangelistic campaign, and after pleading earnestly and successfully for men and women to forsake their sins, in how many meetings is it the custom to assume responsibility for their spiritual oversight and nourishment by special teaching adequate to their necessities, until such time as they can stand alone among their fellows and accept the responsibilities of grown-up men and women in the Lord? It is our observation that too often the Church has only prepared itself to administer the strong meat of the gospel, and has not concerned itself sufficiently to care for those newly born into the Kingdom, with the result that within a few weeks, after the first glow of religious enthusiasm has spent itself somewhat, the convert finds it difficult to maintain his interest, the Church loses its grip upon him, and failure is written over the life almost before it has begun.

O, that the Church would come to recognize the vital importance of Paul's philosophy in his letter to the Corinthians, "I fed you with milk, not with meat; for ye were not yet able to bear it." Through its evangelistic and church extension and home and foreign mission departments, the Church has been laying emphasis upon the necessity of being converted. Perhaps the time has come when it needs to create a new department, charged with the special responsibility of administering spiritual nourishment and extending religious training to its new membership until they are firmly established in Christian experience and Christian service.

Both for its own sake and for the sake of those it is losing, the Church must seriously face the problem of its losses. It will be found probably that the causes are varied, but whatever may be their character, they should be hunted out with rigid persistency, and no pains should be spared in finding and applying the needed remedy. Taking into account the nature of our denominational activities, we might easily be growing at the rate of five per cent annually. Eight Yearly Meetings report 5,520 conversions and renewals for the year covered by the report, while the others would undoubtedly increase the number to 7,000. It is not so much our purpose to indicate what the matter is, as to impress and emphasize the duty of the church to give serious and prayerful consideration to the problem.

Doing the Will of God

Extracts from a sermon preached at Indiana Yearly Meeting by Jefferson W. Ford.

The sweetest and safest place on earth is in the will of God.

There are two wills that are operating upon our lives continually, or two personalities. The one is Satan, the other God. We must choose to which of these we will yield ourselves. Yielding to Satan brings sin, sorrow, woe and destruction. But Satan can only bring these things into our lives as we yield to him. For our wills control our lives, so that Satan cannot force us to evil without the co-operation of our wills.

On the other hand, yielding to God means salvation, blessing, heaven. God is ready, and longs to pour into our lives all the riches of His grace; but, and I say it reverently, God cannot do this for us unless we yield fully to Him.

Jesus definitely chose to yield His will to God, to fulfill His will rather than His own, and taught us to pray "Thy will be done." Jesus is our Savior who gave Himself an offering and a sacrifice for our sins. He is also our pattern, for "He left us an example that we should follow in His steps." If we find something of what it meant to Him to say, "Thy will be done," we shall also learn what it should mean for us to pray this prayer that He taught us.

Jesus said, "I came not to do mine own will but the will of Him that sent me." It was the purpose of His life to fulfill the Father's will, and He said, "My Father is greater than I." He lived up to this purpose, for the Apostle said of Him, "Even Christ pleased not Himself." Most of us choose the Father's will when it does not interfere with our own will and desires, but not so with Christ.

In all His teaching He taught not His own words, but the Father's. And in all His works he witnessed, "The Father doeth the works." He lived in such fellowship with the Father that He was able to know continually what the will of the Father for Him was. We also may know the joy of this fellowship if we will.

To do the Father's will was a glad service for Jesus. The Psalmist said, "I delight to do thy will, oh my God." There is no richer joy than to know that we are in His will.

There is a very close resemblance between the emotion of joy and sorrow, and to Jesus the will of God meant suffering as well as joy. But in the suffering there was a joy that was so much deeper and richer, that He could delight to suffer because it was the Father's will. Paul, in telling us the desire of his heart, said it was that he might "Know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His suffering." There is a measure of the sufferings of Christ left for us. Not that we can die for the sin of another and redeem a soul, but that we may get down under the burden of another's sin and help lift him up to Christ that he may be saved.

When a child is born into the world it is the mother who suffers. The Church is the bride of Christ, and if we would see souls born into His kingdom we must enter into the travail of soul which is the fellowship of His sufferings. One reason there are so few being saved these days is because there is so little travail of soul on the part of the Church. We are too much inclined to leave it to the minister and the evangelist to bear this part of the work. The reason the great heathen world is still without the saving knowledge of Jesus is because the Church, His bride, has not been willing to get down under the burden, and enter into fellowship with Him in the suffering for souls that it must cost us before they can know Him. It was during Christ's sufferings in the Garden that He said "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." May we thus yield our wills to Him.

Again, the Father's will for Jesus meant service. It was in Samaria after His talk with the woman by the well side, that He said to His disciples, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish His work." To do Father's will was His meat, His sustenance, His strength. To do His will and to win a soul satisfied Jesus more than His natural food. The words, "Thy will be done," are directly connected with the other words, "Thy kingdom come." The coming of the Kingdom has been the hope of the saints in all the ages. But it depends upon our yielding our will fully to Him for His service, before He can bring it to pass.

God is moving mightily these days in opening the doors of the world to the gospel that the time of His coming and the establishment of His Kingdom may come. Oh, that the Church were in a position to enter these open doors! Our relation to the Kingdom and its coming is illustrated by the experience of Isaiah, described in the sixth chapter of his prophecy. He had a vision of God, and his whole soul thrilled with the majesty and glory and power of the vision. Then he had a glimpse of himself as he appeared in God's sight. He felt the woe of uncleanness, the awfulness of the failure of his service in the sight of God. But then the messenger of God brought to him a thorough cleansing. When he was clean he was shown a vision of the field of service the Lord had for him, and he heard the call, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" and then he said, "Here am I, send me!" He had conviction, confession, cleansing, then the commission. This is the order of God's dealing with us. May we with Isaiah be willing to yield fully to Him and say, "Thy will be done."

There are souls in the world who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and leaving it behind them when they go. Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. They give light without meaning to shine. Their bright hearts have a great work to do for God.—Frederick W. Faber.

Rural Life Teachings of the Bible

ADDRESS BY PROFESSOR LIPPINCOTT AT MANHATTAN, KANSAS

(CONCLUDED)

Isaiah (62: 4, 5), the poet prophet, appealing to the sentiment of the rural people, tries at once to arouse them to action and to faithfulness by comparing their relation to their farm land to that of husband and wife, when he says, "Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate, but thou shalt be called Hephzebah (my delight is in her) and thy land Beulah (married), for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee, and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." The picture of the married farm has great homiletic possibilities in it and I bespeak some sermons on the married farm.

The effort to keep the title of the land in the hands of the farming people is strongly brought out in the laws concerning the year of jubilee, the redemption of hereditary land, and the conveyance of real property. It was legally impossible to sell farm land. The only law concerning the conveyance of real property to be found (Lev. 25: 15, 16) shows very clearly that what was sold was the crops and not the land. What was termed selling was in reality only leasing. It was a temporary arrangement. Here is the law: "According to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy land from thy neighbor and according to the number of crops until the next jubilee shall he sell it to thee. If the number of the years be great, thou shalt increase its price, but if the number of the years be small thou shalt reduce its price, for it is the number of crops that he selleth to thee."

The year of the jubilee, which was the fiftieth, or the one following the seventh Sabbatical year, was one when there was a great home-coming. People were not only invited but were required by law to return to their own farming community, and at this time all land was released to its original owner. Thus in Leviticus (25: 13, 28, 31) we find that "In the year of the jubilee ye shall return each to his possessions. At the jubilee a poor man's land shall be released and he shall return to his possession. Houses in villages which have no wall around them shall be reckoned as belonging to the fields of the country; the right of redemption shall be released in the year of the jubilee." The "right of redemption" refers to another law (Lev. 25: 24-27) which runs, "In all the land of our possession ye shall allow the land to be redeemed. If thy fellow countryman become poor and sell some of his possessions, his kinsmen who is nearest to him shall come and redeem that which his brother hath sold.

"If a man have no one to redeem it, and he become rich and find sufficient to redeem it, then let him count the years since its sale and refund the value of the remainder (until the year of jubilee) to the man to whom he sold it; thus he may return to his possession."

The story of Naboth's refusal to sell King Ahab his vineyard (I Kings 21: 1-16) is but the story of a law-abiding citizen. Ahab was king over a rural people and made the fatal mistake of trying to ape the city kings of Phoenicia, from among whom his wife Jezebel had come, and acquire large land holdings. It was because of his seizure of Naboth's vineyard, rather than because of his murder of Naboth, that Elijah was able to bring about the revolution of Jehu. The horror seems to lie in the king's proposal to treat a patrimonial estate as an item of sale and exchange.

An interesting side light on this whole question of land ownership is found in the following incident: When Jehu was in the midst of his bloody work, he saw a man whose name was Jehonadab, the son of Rechab, coming to meet him. Jehu saluted this man, shook hands with him and took him up into the chariot, saying, "Come with me, and see my zeal for Jehovah (I Kings 10: 15-17). This incident seems to be an isolated occurrence, with no essential relation to the events of the hour. The narrative gives no explicit reason for its inclusion in the Book of Kings; and many readers of the Bible have been puzzled by the story about Jehonadab, the son of Rechab. Other parts of the Old Testament, however, make it possible for us to see this incident in its true perspective. Jehonadab (or Jonadab) was the founder of a primitive sect known as the Rechabites, named after his father. The sect was instituted about this time as a protest against the ideas and usages of settled, oriental civilization (Jer. 35: 1-19). The most characteristic thing about these people was their avoidance of private property in land. They would do nothing which implied ownership in the soil. They planted no seed, because the sowing of seed would make it necessary to possess fields; and they drank no wine, because the raising of grapes would make it necessary to own vineyards. They seemed to have reasoned that the private holding of land was at the root of all evil. By this token, if you have no land, the kings and nobles can take no land away from you. So the Rechabites lived in tents and followed a semi-nomadic life in the open country, away from contact with city life.

The life of these primitive tent-dwellers was a protest against the settled civilization of the ancient world; and many who did not follow their way of life shared their ideals. "I will yet again make thee to dwell in tents," wrote one of the prophets (Hos. 12: 9). All these interesting considerations make it plain why Jehu, the would-be-king, was anxious to have the leader of the Rechabites know about his "zeal" for Jehovah; and when Jehonadab struck hands with Jehu, and entered the chariot, his action signified the support of the Rechabites for the usurper.

Thus we see that even then there were those who would hark back to the good old days that were gone.

And there were wily politicians ready to shake hands with them with the hope of gaining their support.

The material is so plentiful in comparison with the time at our disposal that I cannot do more than touch upon other rural life problems that are dealt with in the Bible and which confront us now. Immigration and the laws dealing with aliens are just now claiming a large share of our attention. The question was of such importance in Old Testament times that laws are found regulating it in four of the five codes. Thus we find in Exodus (22: 21), "Thou shalt not wrong or oppress a resident alien, for ye were resident aliens in the land of Egypt." And again in Numbers (15: 15, 16). "There shall be but one statute for the assembly, both for you and for the alien that resideth among you. There shall be one law and one regulation for you, and for the alien who resideth among you." It is interesting to find that the question of an heiress marrying a foreigner is also dealt with. In the thirty-sixth chapter of Numbers, in a passage that is too long to read, a statute gives direction that daughters may inherit the patrimonial estate only on condition that they marry within the tribe. If they marry a duke or a count in another tribe, the inheritance will be withdrawn. No inheritance might pass from one tribe to another.

In the ninth chapter of the first book of the Bible, we find this prohibition (Gen. 9: 4): "But flesh with the life thereof which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." And again in Leviticus (19: 26), "Ye shall not eat anything with the blood." These statutes in common with all others were given a religious significance because life and religion were one. There can be no doubt, however, that hygiene was the fundamental basis for such regulations. Proper bleeding in the killing and packing of certain kinds of meat is still one of the matters which today is not closely enough watched and regulated. Prevention of disease was probably at the basis of such regulations as (Deut. 14: 21) "Ye shall not eat anything that dieth a natural death." Today we have an elaborate system of government inspection to protect us from this very thing. And so throughout the long list of unclean things. While in some cases ceremonial uncleanness is carried to an extreme which is difficult to understand from so great a distance, nevertheless, the prevention of the spread of disease was the underlying principle. The great white plague of that day was leprosy. Today it is tuberculosis.

There are a host of farmers' laws that are full of suggestive interest because of their relation to the life of that day and their similarity to some of our modern statutes. I read but a few taken almost at random: (Ex. 21: 33) "If a man open a cistern, or if a man dig a cistern but doth not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall into it, the owner of the cistern shall make it good; he shall give money to the owners and the carcass shall be his." (Ex. 22: 5) "If a man burn over a field or vineyard and let the fire spread so that it devoureth a neighbor's field, out of the best of his own field, and the best of his vineyard, shall he make restitution. If fire break out and catch in thorns so that the shocks of grain, or the standing grain, or the fields are consumed, he that kindled the fire must make restitution." This sounds very much like some of our laws governing railroads relative to fires in grain fields. (Ex. 22: 14) "If a man borrow an animal from his neighbor, and it be hurt or die while its owner is not with it, the man must make restitution. If its owner be with it, the man need not make it good; being a hired animal, it came for its hire." (Lev. 24: 18) "He that smiteth a beast so that it dieth shall make it good, life for life."

I began by calling your attention to the very large number of Bible men who were prominent for one reason or another, who were country bred. You noticed, no doubt, that not one of them was held to be eminent because of his farming ability alone. He was great because he was a pioneer, or a prophet, or a king. And today, I wonder how many of the 65 per cent of our eminent men, who were country bred, are eminent because of their work in agriculture. Why? A Hebrew writer by the name of Dirach, who lived over a century before Christ and whose writings are to be found among the apocryphal books of the Bible, said:

"The wisdom of the scribe cometh by opportunity of leisure; and he that hath little business shall become wise. How shall he become wise that holdeth the plow; that glorieth in the shaft of the goad; that driveth oxen, and is occupied in their labors, and whose discourse is of the stock of bulls? He will set his heart upon turning his furrows; and his wakefulness is to give his heifers their fodder. All these put their trust in their hands; and each becometh wise in his own work. Without these shall not a city be inhabited; and men shall not sojourn nor walk up and down. They shall not be sought for in the council of the people; and in the assembly they shall not mount on high. They shall not sit on the seat of the judge; and they shall not understand the covenant of judgment. Neither shall they declare instruction and judgment; and where parables are, they shall not be found. But they will maintain the fabric of the world; and in the handiwork of their craft is their prayer."

This is a startling statement of our modern state of affairs. The need of rural life is leadership. And rural life, now as then, is producing great numbers of great leaders. But big business and the professions are beckoning them away. The pressing rural problem is to so bind the rural people together economically and socially that they may offer big jobs to big men and the prizes to be gained in rural work may be comparable in dignity and difficulty with the presidency of a great bank, the general managership of a business corporation or eminence in the profession.

The Giver of all good gifts is very generous and He is very rich; and His soul will be grieved if He sees only the poorer and cheaper benefits accepted.—William R. Richards.

Western Yearly Meeting

Western Yearly Meeting convened at Plainfield, Indiana, September 16, 1913.

The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight held two sessions on Third-day. E. J. Carter, clerk, made appropriate remarks introducing visiting ministers. The reports showed, in connection with some deficiencies, much good accomplished, the soundness and fitness of the ministry and a living concern for the advancement of the Truth. Discussion suggested that the capacity for true worship seems to be on the decline—a tendency to depend upon the means of grace in preaching, praying, singing, etc., instead of grace itself. True worship is apart from and underlies all vocal expression of worship. At the evening session E. James Carter and Elizabeth Murphy were re-appointed clerks and Robert Pelt delivered an address on "Bible Messages to Church Officials." He affirmed that the Bible Message is one of authority and teaches that nothing can take the place of spiritual religion, which has its fundamental experiences in the birth of the Spirit and the baptism with the Spirit. The Spirit also sets the believer apart as a chosen vessel, "holding fast the Word of truth" and "rightly dividing the Word of truth."

Under rather adverse circumstances the Yearly Meeting convened at 10 o'clock on Fourth-day morning in its fifty-sixth annual assembly. The Meeting-house, partly destroyed by fire, is in process of rebuilding, hence it was necessary to meet in a tent provided for the occasion. After a devotional period of earnest waiting before God, during which there was vocal expression in song and prayers expressing humiliation, praise and petition for blessing and guidance, the opening minute was read by George H. Moore, presiding clerk. The representatives were called and the meeting proceeded in confidence of Divine approval, to the business in charge. At this and following sessions credentials were read for the following visitors to the Yearly Meeting, viz.: Rufus P. King and Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith, North Carolina Yearly Meeting; Charles E. Tebbetts, Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions; George N. Hartley, of the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs; Daisy D. Barr, Murray S. Kenworthy, Elbert Russell, Richard Hawthorth, Robert A. Pelt and Leora Bogue from Indiana Yearly Meeting; E. Howard Brown, Jefferson Ford and wife, Helen Farr Ford, and Clark Brown from Iowa Yearly Meeting; John C. Griffin, William L. George and wife, Lucinda S. George, Arthur Chilson and Jesse C. Hobson and wife, Mary E. Hobson, from Kansas Yearly Meeting; Amos Walton from California Yearly Meeting; Abijah E. Wooten, Edgar A. Wollam and Leola King from Ohio Yearly Meeting; Esther G. Frame from Wilmington Yearly Meeting.

These came quickened by the Spirit, with living messages from the word of Truth, which were delivered in the demonstration of the Spirit and power. Many phases of Bible doctrine were touched upon by the various speakers—the greatness of God and His condescending love and forbearance in seeking fellowship with men; the great doctrine of reconciliation with Him through Jesus Christ His son, who is Prince and Savior; the Holy Spirit in His work of conviction for sin, baptizing and sanctifying the believer and giving him power over all enemies and to render acceptable service. Practical applications of these great doctrines were fittingly and forcibly made. We were exhorted to greater faithfulness and loving but persistent effort to compel men to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. This phase of the gospel was further emphasized in the consideration of the reports on the state of the church. While these reports showed a fair working condition of the congregations, yet they indicated many deficiencies that ought to be remedied. The reports showed without exception the ministry to be sound and adapted to the needs of the congregations.

Question: How shall ministers reconcile the soundness and adaptability of their messages to the meager results in harvests garnered? There was a manifest conviction on the part of pastors and evangelists that they ought to do better the coming year. This conviction which had been growing throughout the sessions of the Yearly Meeting was brought to a climax in the Sabbath evening meeting when E. M. Woodard, evangelistic superintendent, in an earnest message exhorted the church to fuller consecration and greater devotion and faithfulness to her Lord.

Several missionaries were in attendance. Those from Mexico especially had seen troublous times, but they came with shining faces and bore marks of their self-sacrifice and devotion to their Master. The work in Mexico has been left largely in the hands of native workers who are developing good ability as leaders. The reports on missions were good, showing increased activity and contributions, yet the latter when figured out per capita seems very low, and some of the Quarterly Meetings have fallen far short of their duty. The talks by the missionaries created great enthusiasm. Especially was this the case with the two Mexican girls who had come to this country with Sarah Lindley. They have been teachers in Mexico but desire further education in the United States. When this fact was known the congregation quickly contributed $127.00 to aid them.

C. E. Tebbetts in a short address inspired to greater activity in carrying out the Savior's great commission to His followers. In connection with the report of the Executive Committee on Indian Affairs, George N. Hartley gave an inspiring address full of historical information and knowledge of present conditions, which encouraged the Meeting to continue its interest in that field of mission work.

The Friends Boarding Home for Girls or "Bertha Ballard Home" is an institution under the control of the Yearly Meeting which is rendering an increasing service in providing at moderate cost a home for girls of good character who come into the city for business employment. Three hundred and thirty girls have been sheltered the past year. Others who could not be accommodated with rooms have found lodging in the vicinity and taken their meals in the Home. Receipts have been about $19,000.00. Willard O. Trueblood, in an address on the subject, emphasized the fact that this is not a rescue home, but a home that renders rescue work unnecessary. Anna Hiatt, the efficient Superintendent, called attention to a few of the many testimonials of appreciation by those who had been recipients of its hospitality and culture. $1,660.00 contributed for the purpose has been applied on the indebtedness.

The Committee on Literature and Peace made the annual report showing about the usual activities in this department. This was followed by a stirring address on "Peace" by E. Howard Brown of Iowa, in which he gave as reasons for universal peace: 1. The cost of war. 2. World polity. 3. Socialism. 4. Jesus Christ condemned war. 5. The Bible teaches peace notwithstanding Bible wars. 6. Nations depending on the sword for defence and maintenance have perished by the sword. The advance of peace sentiment was shown by numerous historical facts. A resolution was ordered sent to the heads of our National Government approving their policy in dealing with Mexico where revolution and strife now prevail.

In connection with the report on "Temperance and Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic," Edith Smith Davis, National and World's Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction of the W. C. T. U., gave one of the strong addresses of the week. Her plea was for temperance instruction for the rising generation that it may not be ignorantly led into the formation of drinking habits resulting in misery and crime. She strongly enforced her plea by information gathered from broad reading and travel, and close observation.

In connection with the report on Social Purity, Arthur Hammond of Carmel, Indiana, cited statistics showing that the condition of 71 per cent of 11,600 fallen women examined was due to parental neglect. The extreme styles in modern dress was considered a leading cause of the downfall of both men and women. The report called attention to the great need of a vigorous public sentiment against the social evils of the day.

The educational interests of the Yearly Meeting as shown in the reports on Bible Schools and Education, are in good condition. Earlham College was shown to be efficient and aggressive along safe lines and furnishing the equipment for many young people for efficient service in both state and church. Willard O. Trueblood made a strong plea for trained Christian teachers not only for Bible schools but for secular schools also.

The Memorial Hour was a solemn occasion. Memorials were read for David Tatum, Everett E. Morgan, Martha J. Binford and Charlotte Hiatt, and verbal mention was made of some thirty others who have passed beyond during last year. As the lives and deeds of these were referred to by many speakers we felt that the church on earth and the church in heaven had drawn near together and our hearts were comforted. In the closing hours of the Yearly Meeting there was an earnest conviction that the time was ripe for increased travail of soul upon the local congregations for the birth of children into the Kingdom, and earnest petition for the Lord's return to us in spiritual power and quickening life.

John Bright

It is possible that we do not appreciate how much John Bright's life has meant to Quakerism or what Quakerism meant to him. We have obtained fresh insight from the Autobiography of Allen Jay, but there has recently appeared a book which will probably be more helpful than any means at our command in understanding the life of that great statesman. One can not separate his religion from his life, and this fact is clearly emphasized by the gifted author of the volume to which reference is made. I speak of Trevelyan's "Life of John Bright."*

From The Independent of August 28, 1913, in which there appeared a long and commendatory review, the following is taken:

"It is a great merit in Mr. Trevelyan's book that he enters so comprehendingly into the life, the beliefs and traditions of the Society of Friends, in which John Bright was born, and to which he was faithful throughout his life. Nowhere in English biography are the peculiar virtues and characteristics of the Friends more sympathetically recognized, and this understanding is necessary for a full rendering of John Bright's character, in its strength and its limitations. Bright's sturdy honesty of thought and action, his disregard of persons, his consistent belief in democracy, and his power to stand alone against popular passion must all be counted as more or less due to his thorough grounding in the principles of the Society of Friends" (and to be honest in our quotation we must include what follows, which is,) "to which may also be attributed the rigidity of his views and his inability ever to get his opponent's point of view."

It seems worthy of note, also, that at the opening exercises of Columbia University, a few days ago, President Butler, in his address of welcome, departed a little from the customary course in order to call the attention of that large gathering of students to this book, by giving testimony to personal pleasure in reading it and by recommending it as a well-written history of one of the noblest of men.

Minute 37, Ninth Month 20, 1912. The following recommendations made by the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Committee were read, approved and directed forwarded to the Five Years Meeting:

RECOMMENDATION FROM EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE IN REGARD TO A MORE EFFICIENT MINISTRY.

After careful and prayerful consideration of the subject referred to this committee last year, we are united in reporting that Indiana Yearly Meeting realizes that one of the greatest needs of the time is the adequate preparation of her ministers and special church workers.

To meet this urgent need, we ask:

1. That the Five Years Meeting appoint a committee consisting of two persons from the Evangelistic Board of each Yearly Meeting, to plan a uniform course of study.

2. That this committee be empowered to establish said course, making it effective and operative at such time and place or places, as in its judgment shall seem best.

3. That if at all feasible, a central school be established for the operation of the course, and that uniform beginners' or preparatory courses be arranged for other schools desirous of offering limited courses of study.

4. That plans be devised for securing funds and providing other means of assisting needy persons in pursuing the work as planned.

5. That a correspondence course be prepared for all who desire to prepare themselves by private study, and a secretary selected to conduct the same.

Respectfully submitted,

EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE,

ROBERT L. KELLY, Clerk.

Western Yearly Meeting

Held Ninth Month 11th to 16th, 1912. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor reports a resolution approved by them, which came from the Young Friends' Assembly held at Winona Lake, Indiana, asking the Five Years Meeting to establish a department on Young People's Activities, with a Secretary in charge: the department to be supported by the young people themselves.

The report of the Christian Endeavor Society is approved by the meeting.

GEORGE H. MOORE, Clerk.

The meeting is united in requesting the Five Years Meeting to make the Richmond Declaration of Faith and George Fox's Letter to the Barbadoes a part of the Uniform Discipline.

GEORGE H. MOORE, Clerk.

The following Resolution was adopted and the delegates to the Five Years Meeting instructed to act in accord therewith.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas, The Friends' Church has, from its rise, been among the first and foremost to lead the promotion of Moral and Civic reform, and

Whereas, The National Inter-Church Temperance Federation has been organized,

Therefore Resolved, That Western Yearly Meeting (through its delegates to the Five Years Meeting) request that body to organize a Temperance and Prohibition Department, preparatory to joining said Federation.

GEORGE H. MOORE, Clerk.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The following extract from the Minutes of Iowa Yearly Meeting, was directed to be forwarded to the Five Years Meeting to be held in 1912.

Minute No. 40 of 1910. The report of Committee on request from Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was presented as below, and was approved by the meeting.

REPORT.

We submit the following recommendation to the Yearly Meeting and through it to the Five Years Meeting.

RECOMMENDATION.

Believing that the work of the Bible School and the Christian Endeavor Society is of great value to the present and future welfare of the church as affording direct avenues of usefulness and the developing of gifts among our young people, we are united in requesting that the next Five Years Meeting take under consideration the desirability of recognizing both of these important departments of work in the Uniform Discipline, with organized Boards to represent them in the Five Years Meeting, in order that the interests of both may be fostered and developed in all of our Yearly Meetings.

S. M. HADLEY, Clerk.

To the Five Years Meeting of Friends:

Iowa Yearly Meeting referred to its Permanent Board the subject of the recording of ministers. The Board carefully considered the subject and united in recommending that the Yearly Meeting request the Five Years Meeting to consider the desirability of leaving the final act of recording with the Yearly Meeting of which the person is a member.

The Yearly Meeting adopted this report and instructed the delegates to present this matter to the Five Years Meeting.

On behalf of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

W. JASPER HADLEY, Chairman of Delegation.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

To the Five Years Meeting of Friends:

The following attached copies of Minutes are taken from the records of the proceeding of Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends, and the same are directed to be forwarded to the Five Years Meeting of Friends to be held October, 1912. The action of the Yearly Meeting is set forth in the copy of the Minutes, as will appear.

Minute No. 11 (1909). In the matter of the proposed change of the Uniform Discipline, as submitted by the Five Years Meeting, reports were received from fourteen Quarterly Meetings, twelve of which were opposed to the change proposed. The meeting is united in recording its judgment against the proposed change, and the Clerk is directed to inform the clerk of the Five Years Meeting of this decision.

Minute No. 33 (1911). The recommendation "That the Five Years Meeting take steps, if practicable, to provide suitable lesson helps for the use of our Bible Schools," was united with and is directed to be forwarded to the Five Years Meeting for its consideration.

Minute No. 57 (1912). The following communication was received from the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight. The recommendation contained therein is approved by this meeting.

Our attention was directed to last year's printed Minute No. 51, touching the place held by the Richmond Declaration of Faith and George Fox's letter to the Governor of the Barbadoes in our doctrinal statements in the constitution and discipline.

William L. Pearson, Nathan Brown and James Pitts were appointed to present the matter to the Yearly Meeting, and to propose for the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight that Kansas Yearly Meeting request the Five Years Meeting to make it a matter of record, that several Yearly Meetings adopted the constitution and discipline with the understanding that the Richmond Declaration of Faith and George Fox's above named letter should be incorporated as a part of our official doctrinal statement.

And second, that those several Yearly Meetings entered into the Five Years Meeting on the express condition that they should be so regarded by the Five Years Meeting and the American Yearly Meetings.

Minute No. 66 (1912). The Yearly Meeting is united in approving the method of amendment of the Constitution and Discipline by the affirmative action of three-fourths of the Yearly Meetings in the Five Years Meeting, as referred to the Yearly Meetings by Minute No. 52 of the Five Years Meeting in 1907.

EDMUND STANLEY, Presiding Clerk.

HENRY H. TOWNSEND, Recording Clerk.

The following Minute No. 33, of Minutes of Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends, 1912, was accepted and approved by the meeting.

Minute—Report of the Committee on Recommendations from Walnut Creek and Mount Ayr Quarterly Meetings is as follows:

The Committee recommends that the Yearly Meeting instruct its delegation to the Five Years Meeting to use its influence, voice and vote that the Five Years Meeting correct its Minutes so as to show that the Richmond Declaration of Faith and George Fox's letter to the Governor of the Barbadoes were incorporated into the constitution and discipline when the same was adopted by the several Yearly Meetings.

The report of the Committee is accepted and approved by this meeting.

EDMUND STANLEY, Presiding Clerk.

HENRY H. TOWNSEND, Recording Clerk.

A proposition was received from Hesper Quarterly Meeting, asking this meeting to forward to the Five Years Meeting, a request that it establish an agency to care for aged ministers in their declining years.

Inasmuch as ministers frequently remove from one meeting to another, and the life work of some of them is national rather than local in its scope, this meeting believes an agency to care for them should likewise be national rather than local, and is united in directing that the proposition be forwarded to the Five Years Meeting.

Signed on behalf of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

EDMUND STANLEY, Clerk.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

Minute 62, in the Proceedings of 1911. The proposition from the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight in reference to the appointment of Elders was approved, and is as follows:

It being made to appear that there is a lack of uniformity in the Monthly Meetings, as to the manner of the appointment of Elders, some being appointed in conformity with the printed paragraph No. 1, page 58, of our Discipline, and others making their appointments in accordance with the provisions of the Uniform Discipline adopted by the Five Years Meeting, we refer the matter to the Yearly Meeting with the recommendation, that it direct such appointments be made in the future as provided in our Discipline as now printed, until the meeting of our next Five Years Meeting; and that this Yearly Meeting request the Five Years Meeting to define the Discipline on that point.

California Yearly Meeting

The following resolutions were adopted by California Yearly Meeting, Annual Assembly, 1912:

23. Resolved, That we petition the Five Years Meeting to consider at its next session the establishing of a Bureau of Men's Work, looking to the promotion of the same lines of work throughout all Yearly Meetings.

The object is to bring the men of the church more closely together; to have them study and discuss the burning questions of the day which concern all men everywhere; to have them fully realize this responsibility to their fellowmen; to bring them to understand and assume due responsibility for the proper education, training and protection of our boys. In short, to follow up and promote to the fullest extent, the work outlined by the "Laymen's Missionary Movement" and "The Men and Religion Forward Movement."

46. Resolved, That it is the sense of California Yearly Meeting that Friends at large do accept the Richmond Declaration of Faith and George Fox's letter to the Governor of Barbadoes as our ground of belief, but because this is a disputed question, we therefore, instruct our delegates to the Five Years Meeting to request that meeting to take official action, declaring the said Declaration of Faith and George Fox's letter to be as the Articles of Faith of the Five Years Meeting of Friends, and therefore, a part of the Uniform Disciplines.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

Minute 52. The subject of Home Missions or Church Extension Work, having for its object the establishing of religious work in needy and outlying districts, having come before us at this time, a very deep concern was felt that Friends ought to have an endowment fund to be loaned to needy fields at a low rate of interest, and this interest to be used for carrying on such work. We therefore, request the Five Years Meeting to take the necessary steps to create such a fund.

[Signed] GEORGE D. WEEKS, Clerk.

Minute 54.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CENTRAL PUBLISHING HOUSE FOR FRIENDS.

We recommend that this Yearly Meeting forward to the Five Years Meeting a Minute urging the establishing of a Central Publishing House for Friends under the control and direction of the Five Years Meeting.

The report is adopted.

[Signed] GEORGE D. WEEKS, Clerk.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

To the Five Years Meeting of Friends to be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, Tenth Month 15, 1912:

Inasmuch as there is no regulation in the discipline as to how ministers from other denominations may be received as ministers in our own denomination, we respectfully ask that you consider the matter, and make some regulation in regard to it.

Taken from the Minutes of Oregon Yearly Meeting held at Newberg, Oregon, Sixth month 15 to 20, 1911.

JULIUS C. HODSON,

N. BLANCHE FORD,

Clerks.

It seems that the smaller churches are more diligent than the larger ones. This is demonstrated by a writer in the Christian Observer, of the Southern Presbyterian Church. It says, that taking the Church as a whole, there was one conversion for every 18.32 members. In the churches of over 500 members, there was one for every 22.32 members. In the churches where the membership was 250, the conversions were one to every 20.8 members. Whilst in the churches of less than 250 members there was one conversion to every 17 members.

The men of the Methodist Church will meet in national convention in the latter part of October in Indianapolis. It was intended to limit the number of delegates to 3,000 men. The enrollment has already gone over that mark. The management, therefore, announces with regrets that there will be no seats in Tomlinson Hall, the largest in the city where the convention will be held, for the general public. None but the delegates will be admitted. The aim of the convention is to bring into line the laymen of Methodism and arouse the whole denomination.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Since the Methodist Episcopal Church established its school to train preachers in the Philippines, six years ago, more than one hundred students have enrolled and fifty-five of them have become pastors.

King George of England bestowed six Kaiser-i-Hind medals upon six Indian missionaries on his recent birthday, one of them going to Rev. J. E. Cummings of the American Baptist mission of Burma.

No phase of missionary education surpasses in importance that of imparting missionary information and the missionary spirit to the church of the future as at present largely enrolled in the Sunday Schools.—Methodist Protestant.

A high Chinese official, recently converted, is now supporting twenty evangelists at an expense of $7,000 annually for the conversion of his countrymen. Another Chinese Christian supports a hospital where 50,000 patients are treated each year.

The ninety-two members of two Chinese churches in Shansi have been volunteering shorter or longer terms of evangelistic touring. Their aggregate periods of free service amount to fifteen months. In Hunan the members of another church have systematically visited 1,448 villages, out of the 2,211 in their district, and hope to evangelize the balance this year.

Last year the Salvation Army sent out one hundred officers from England for service in the foreign field. General Bramwell Booth, the new leader of the army, says that another one hundred are being recruited from Northern Europe for service to India, Korea, Japan, Africa and the East Indies. During the coming five years eight hundred more are to follow.

A worker in the Malay Peninsula tells an interesting story of a poor old Chinaman, an inmate of the decrepit ward of the pauper hospital at Kuala Lumpur. By industry in making baskets he had saved twenty dollars, and half of this sum he gave as a free-will offering to God, the remaining portion being placed in trust with one of the older Christians against the day of burial. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the Kingdom?"—The Missionary Review of the World.

A wonderful example of the pouring out of the Holy Spirit is now being witnessed in Dweshula, South Africa. Rev. W. M. Onslow Carleton of the South Africa Mission, Zulu Branch, has written of a "continuous revival" there, and a fuller account will soon appear in the Missionary Herald. For two years and more a native evangelist who, like the Apostle to the Gentiles, has a physical disability which may well be called a "thorn in the flesh," has preached with such power that not a week passes without conversions. And the converts are from the wild men, the untouched heathen Zulus.—Congregationalist.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Canada Yearly Meeting

From the October Canadian Friend:

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting is to be held on October 25 and 26, in the new meeting house, Fern Street, Victoria.

At the Friends' Meeting near Hartney, on August 17, a special song service was much enjoyed. About fifty were present, mostly young men. H. A. Sutton spoke on the Cities of Refuge, and the discourse was frequently interspersed with solos and quartets in which Mr. Forbes, of the Construction Camp Mission, took a leading part.

W. K. Baker, his wife, and sons, Hinman and Orman, of London, England, accompanied by Edith K. Bowermon, of Toronto, visited at Swarthmore and the College, Newmarket, on the 10th ultimo, and went in the evening with John R. and Margaret D. Webb to attend the special meeting for the discussion of methods in meetings for worship, at the Friends' Meeting House, Toronto.

Westlake Quarterly Meeting was held at Moscow September 6-7. The ministry of Alfred Young, of Wellington, was much appreciated. A missionary meeting was held on Saturday evening.

About one hundred persons gathered in a special meeting at Toronto, on September 6, to consider methods in a true meeting for worship. Supper was served at 6:30, and several were present from out of the city. A period of earnest devotion was followed by a consideration of such questions as How shall we most nearly attain the ideal in a true meeting for worship? Could alteration be profitably made from our present method? Shall we have singing and use the organ? Shall we have periods of silence, etc. It was most interesting to note how the meeting labored mentally with this great question, then one by one a number were able to give expression to the thoughts taking form in their minds. Some of those taking part were Elias Rogers, Clarence E. Pickett, Conrad Hay, Joseph Willetts, John Severs, Moses Yourex, Joseph Rogers, George Rossiter, Ada Secord, Cuthbert Wigham and Margaret D. Webb. The earnestness of spirit and unanimity of decision after a strenuous hour, not in heated argument, but in careful thought and speech, was most pleasing. We should have singing and use the organ. There should be perfect liberty in the Spirit for any service felt to be appropriate and required of the Lord from any one present, subject of course, to the best judgment of the meeting, as sensed by those chosen to sit at the head of the meeting. There will naturally be some periods of silence, not necessarily long, in the early part, and also near the close of the meeting for opportunity to those who have a short message. But great care was urged upon all to have a jealous regard for good harmony in form and thought, as well as in spirit, and not to call for a hymn or introduce matter irrelevant to the thought before the meeting. Emphasis was also placed upon most careful preparation of that to be offered in a meeting for worship and to be ready, in the fullest sense, for any service we may render for the edification of all. The injunction of Paul, "Let all things be done decently and in order," expresses very well the findings of this meeting. W. K. Baker, of London Yearly Meeting, conveyed greetings from Friends in England, and expressed pleasure at being present, and hearty approval of the decisions arrived at. The occasion was felt to be one of real profit.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

After attending Indiana Yearly Meeting, Austice M. Harvey has returned to Traverse City, Michigan, to enter upon his second year as pastor at that place.

Raymond S. Holding, who recently returned from mission work at Matehuala, Mexico, has been engaged for pastoral work at Spiceland, Indiana.

C. Everett Davis has just closed a very successful pastorate of two and a half years at Dunreith, Indiana. A live C. E. Society and many accessions to the church are some of the fruits of his labors.

Fred Tormohlen will serve the meeting at Van Wert, Ohio, as pastor the coming year.

Charles Swander has entered upon his duties as pastor at Farmland, Indiana, succeeding Milo S. Hinckle, who has moved to Lynn, Indiana, to serve that meeting as pastor.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held September 12-13. On Seventh-day morning Truman C. Kenworthy brought the message, which was inspiring and helpful. Rufus King gave some earnest words of exhortation. At the noon hour a bountiful basket dinner was served in the Endeavor room. At one o'clock the meeting again convened, and the business of the Quarterly Meeting was transacted. On Sabbath morning the pastor, George C. Levering, preached his farewell sermon. After two years' work in this meeting, he now goes to Selma, Ohio. The best wishes of Spiceland friends go with him and his family to their new field of labor.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

September 28 was observed as Missionary Sunday in the Friends' Church at Des Moines, Iowa. At 10:30 there was a missionary sermon by the pastor, Richard R. Newby. Christian Endeavor met at 6:30, with a missionary topic, Stonehill Keats, leader. A missionary rally was held at 7:30, addressed by J. H. Fellingham, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Des Moines. Friends are pledging $500.00 for Missions this year.

The Men's Brotherhood was organized at Des Moines on the evening of September 29, in the parlors of the church. It has for its object the betterment of the social, spiritual, and intellectual conditions of the church and associations. Much good is expected from this organization.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Shawnee Quarterly Meeting was held at the Shawnee Mission, near Shawnee, Oklahoma, September 12-14. Calvin Choat, of Lawrence, Kansas, was in attendance, and brought cheer and encouragement in the various messages he delivered. Missionaries were present from the Otoes, Iowas, Kickapoos, Big Jim and Shawnee missions. These missions, with the Osage, are all located within the limits of this Quarterly Meeting. The attendance was smaller than usual, on account of the heavy rain which just preceded the meeting. Though the attendance was small, the Father's presence was manifested in each session. The business for the Yearly Meeting was dispatched in good order and with much unity.

The Friends' Church at Kansas City, Missouri, observed Rally Day, September 28. There was an unusually large attendance at the morning and evening meetings. Ting-fu Tsiang, a brilliant young Chinese Christian, was present at the morning meeting, and testified to the power of Jesus Christ in his own life, and among his people. Mr. Tsiang is sent to this country by the Chinese government to be educated, and is attending Park College. Sabbath evening five men of the church gave short addresses on different lines of religious work. Monday evening, the 29th, the church had the unexpected pleasure of an inspiring address by Bishop Kephart, of the United Brethren Church, on the Social Influence of Jesus. A son of Bishop Kephart is a worker in the Friends' Church here.

The meeting at Kansas City is conducting a series of Monday evening meetings on the general theme of "The Influence of Jesus Christ in My Life." On September 29, the theme was "The Influence of Jesus in My Social Life;" October 6, "In My Business Relations;" October 13, "In My Home;" October 20, "In My Intellectual Life;" October 27, "In My Sorrows and Disappointments," and November 3, "In My Pleasures."

O. B. Ong, of Pasadena, California, held a two weeks' revival meeting at Walnut Grove Meeting in Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting. These services were honored by the Lord's presence and power, the Holy Spirit setting His seal to the ministry. Sixty or more sought and found God either in saving or sanctifying power. This was a glorious victory for God's cause. At the close of the meeting an offering was taken for Brother Ong amounting to $180.00, besides raising $159.00 of the pastor's salary. We are praising God for sending His servant this way.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

The meeting at Boulder, Colorado, is in a promising condition. A splendid spirit of unity and push prevails, and there are bright prospects for the future.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Ralph Woodward from West Branch, New York, has taken up pastoral work of South Salem Meeting, Oregon.

Western Yearly Meeting

Bloomington Academy began its sixty-eighth year, September 23, with increased enrollment and good prospects for a very profitable year. The faculty consists of H. Paul Kelsey, principal, and instructor in History and Mathematics; Maude M. Woody, English and Latin; Hazel Wilson, Chemistry and Domestic Science; Kenneth Morrison, Physics and Manual Training; Enos Harvey, Bible, and J. I. Reed, Agriculture.

The Temperance committee in co-operation with the pastor, Enos Harvey, arranged that September 28th should be Temperance Day in Bloomington, Indiana. In the Sabbath-school there were appropriate exercises and pledge-signing, in which both old and young participated. In the meeting for worship I. S. Wade, a well-known temperance lecturer of Lafayette, Indiana, gave a stirring message, and in the evening service also he made an impressive appeal.

At Winthrop Center, Maine

W. Carleton Wood, Ph.D., who has been pastor of the meeting at Winthrop Center, Maine, for two years, has been granted a leave of absence of three months by the meeting, in order that he may devote his whole time to the completion of a work for publication. His place of study will be at Hartford Theological Seminary Library, Hartford, Connecticut.

In his absence, Mrs. Wood, who is a graduate of Hartford Theological Seminary, is looking after the interests of the meeting. Mrs. Daniel H. Cook, of Strathmore, California, who is her mother, is spending the summer and fall with her.

Dr. Wood was born in western New York, and graduated from Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa. After attending Princeton Theological Seminary one year he was called to a professorship at Penn College, where he remained for two years. He then went to Hartford Theological Seminary, where he was graduated in 1909. After his graduation he took one year of post-graduate work at Hartford and another in Jerusalem, Palestine, as Fellow of the American Archaeological Association. Returning to America he was called to the pastorate of the meeting at Winthrop Center, Maine, where he has labored for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom. His faithful work, together with that of Mrs. Wood, is bearing fruit. Ten new members have been received into the meeting this fall. He has the best wishes of all for the success of his new work at Hartford.

Haworth Reunion

William P. and Abbie C. Haworth had planned to retire from the Indian mission work this autumn, but on further consideration, and with a promised vacation of a few weeks for rest, they consented to remain another year. They went to Colorado for their vacation, where they were joined by all their other children in a family reunion at the home of their oldest son, Homer, near the beautiful town of Boulder. A commodious tent had been secured and pitched in the yard under the spreading boughs of the trees and near the splendid spring, that sends forth its supply of mountain water the year round, to cheer the heart of both man and beast.

The location and climate was all that could be desired, and a few excursions into the mountains did much to sharpen appetites and rest tired nerves.

Charles C. and Orpha Haworth, who have been engaged in mission work on the Island of Cuba for ten years, arrived in the states, with their family, for their much needed quinquennial rest in the month of June. After a few days' rest in and around Boston, they attended a few of the closing sessions of New England Yearly Meeting.

While enroute to their home at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, they visited a number of their relatives in Indiana and Illinois. After resting a few weeks in Iowa, they passed on to Boulder, Colorado, to enjoy the family reunion referred to above. The two daughters and their children were in attendance at the family meeting, Mrs. Flora Haworth Wood, of Deer Trail, Colorado, and Mrs. Alice Griffiths, of Miami, Oklahoma.

The family thus completed, except the two children of the youngest son, John, who passed on to the other shore near one year ago, consisted of father, mother, two sons, two daughters, and twelve grandchildren.

On account of better school privileges, and with a hope to recuperate the worn system of his wife, Charles Haworth will leave his family in Boulder for the coming year, and return to his work on the Island alone. He hopes to sail from New York on the 25th of October.

Thirty missionaries, speaking twenty-four languages, have been employed for the past year by the Chicago Tract Society to work among the foreign population in that city.

REVIVED

Old-Time Health, Eating Grape-Nuts

"I had been sick for 10 years with dyspepsia and a lot of complications," wrote an Ark. woman.

"An operation was advised, change of climate was suggested, but no one seemed to know just what was the matter. I was in bed three days in the week and got so thin I weighed only 89 lbs. No food seemed to agree with me.

"I told my husband I was going to try some kind of predigested food to see if I could keep from this feeling of continued hunger.

"Grape-Nuts and cream was the food I got and nothing has seemed to satisfy me like it. I never feel hungry, but have a natural appetite. Have had no nervous spells since I began this food, and have taken no medicine.

"I have gained so much strength that I now do all my housework and feel well and strong. My weight has increased 8 lbs. in 8 weeks and I shall always eat Grape-Nuts as it is far pleasanter than taking medicines." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Leanah Hobson in England

We copy the following from The London Friend of September 19:

"Joseph H. Taylor sends the following information respecting the service of Leanah Hobson, of Indiana, in the North of England. Though August is generally regarded as "a close time" for work of all kinds, and the holiday month of the year, the following record will show that Orlando and Leanah Hobson were fully employed during the month. Their activities in the North began by a meeting at Middlesbrough on July 30th, followed by Ayton General Meeting on the 31st, and Stockton on August 1st; thence to Close House, with large gatherings over the week-end, and a few days on Tyne-side, with meetings at Newcastle, North and South Shields, and Sunderland. The Monthly Meeting at Darlington was attended on the 14th, and a large open-air meeting held in Osmotherly on the 15th, the week-end being spent at Darlington. From the 18th to the 22d, Leanah Hobson helped the workers connected with the Race Course Mission on the race course and in the streets at Stockton, where wonderful results followed the preaching and singing of the Gospel. After a few days among the small meetings in Wensleydale, an eight days' mission was conducted in the Village Hall, Great Ayton, lasting until September 5th. The various Nonconformist churches joined heartily in this effort. L. Hobson addressed eighty members of the men's Adult School on Sunday morning, ninety at the women's section in the afternoon, and a united gathering of more than three hundred at night; the attendances throughout the week were very good, varying from one hundred and twenty to two hundred and twenty each evening. Two helpful Bible readings were given on two afternoons. L. Hobson's visit to Ayton has been greatly appreciated, a very common expression being, "What a pity she could only be with us for a week." Many of the North country places named above are trying to secure a second visit."

We have the following from Leanah Hobson direct under recent date:

"We have just had the privilege of attending Harriet Greene's Quarterly Meeting at Saffronwalden. From here we go to Coalchester. A letter from Arthur and Eliza Dann asks us to visit them soon, which we hope to do. We are enjoying the work very much. As we are not getting back to America in time for pastoral work, we hope to be back by December 15th, in time for evangelistic work. Any wishing help in such work, please drop me a line at Donnington, Harlesden, London, N. W., England."

Earlham College Notes

Earlham College opened on September 29th with practically a full attendance in all departments.

Dr. David W. Dennis gave a lecture on October 2 in the college auditorium on the Panama Canal. Dr. Dennis, with Mrs. Dennis, spent the summer in the Canal Zone, and took many pictures, slides from which illustrated his lecture.

Coach Reagan is giving the foot ball team strenuous practice, with good prospects of getting some good records during the fall season.

"Political Parties in Oregon" is the title of a new book by Dr. Walter C. Woodward; Professor of History in Earlham. The work deals with the political history of Oregon from 1843 to 1868. Much of the work on the book was done in working for a doctor's degree in California University. Dr. Woodward is a native of Oregon.

Luisa Guijarro and Josefa Sanchez, two Mexican girls, who are graduates of the Friends' Mission School at Matehuala, Mexico, and who for the past year have been teachers in that institution, are in Earlham this year, studying to become more efficient teachers later on in their native country. They were brought to Earlham by Sarah Lindley, of the Mexican Mission, and in company with her attended both Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings. Friends in the two Yearly Meetings, after hearing them speak, made it possible for them to take up the work in the college.

Mordecai Morris White

Just after we went to press last week, word was received in Richmond of the death of Mordecai Morris White, of Cincinnati, Ohio. He was a life long member of Friends, prominent in church and Earlham College circles, and was a leader in the financial world. He was eighty-three years old, and had been in failing health for some months. The funeral services were conducted by Albert L. Copeland. Timothy Nicholson, Benjamin Johnson and President Robert L. Kelly, of the Earlham College Board, attended the funeral services. We hope to have a more extended account of his life in the near future.

Return to Japan

Gurney and Elizabeth Binford left Richmond, Indiana, October 3, for the Pacific Coast. They will spend a month visiting Friends and the meetings in the Northwest, Vancouver and Victoria. They will then go to California for a short visit, and intend sailing for Japan from San Francisco, November 19.

New England Yearly Meeting Notice

Friends in New England Yearly Meeting can obtain extra printed copies of the London General Epistle for free circulation by applying to George C. Herbert, 145 Munroe Street, Lynn, Massachusetts. This document is considered a strong presentation of the truth, and the Committee has had a large number printed for distribution. They will be sent in small quantities post paid.

OUR PARTNERSHIP WITH GOD

'Tis sweet to feel that we may be
In partnership, dear Lord, with thee;
'Tis sweet to feel that all we do
To make our lives sincere and true
Is known to thee, and that we share
As partners all thy love and care.
Thou knowest, Lord, our times of pain,
When rest and peace seem hard to gain,
And help is needed lest at last
Despair take hold and bind us fast.
O, help us to remember then
Our partnership with thee; and, when Perplexities arise, may we
Send fearlessly our call to thee,
Who sharest with us night and day
Whate'er befalls us on life's way.
And, journeying toward the better land,
We only need to grasp thy hand
And trust our partnership with thee
To win us heaven's eternity.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The Liquor Traffic Not Respectable

Ohio is having a tussle with the problem of trying to make the saloon respectable by an elaborate system of Commissions, that are supposed to review all applications with critical inspection. The experiment will probably fail, because the liquor traffic is evil and only evil. Such efforts are merely postponing the death of the whole liquor system which is already past due.

Mrs. Pankhurst Coming

Mrs. Pankhurst, the militant suffragist of England is now on her way to America. For some weeks she has been in France taking the "rest cure." Whether her coming to America will help the cause of equal suffrage is questionable. Certainly it will be deplorable if the terrorizing methods which have characterized the suffrage movement in England are transferred to America. The cause here is marching on to steady victory, and should have no interruption by the introduction of violent methods.

Railroad Directors Blamed

For the first time in railroad history, the directors of a great company have been blamed officially for a disastrous wreck. In the report of the United States Railroad Commission, which has been making extensive investigations of the railroad wreck at Wallingford, Connecticut, on the New Haven road, censure is directed toward the management and they are held officially responsible for the inefficient system that has been in vogue. The Commission is now proposing to ask Congress for authority to regulate the speed and operation of trains with a view to insuring greater safety to the traveling public.

The Panama Exhibition

The resolutions of the Christian Churches in America, petitioning the mayor of San Francisco and the managers of the Panama Exhibition to rid the city and exposition of commercialized vice in 1915, appears to be bearing fruit. A manifesto from the mayor gives promise of better things, and gives assurance that efforts will be made to insure a clean city. Whatever may be the result, the power of the church to command the attention of the authorities to the situation has been demonstrated. And what might the Church not do with many an evil situation, if it would only get together and direct its energies simultaneously in a given direction!

Home Rule in Ireland

It is surprising to many on this side the Atlantic that the Irish are seriously divided over Home Rule for their native land. It is argued by many that Ireland is better governed, especially in regard to its moral welfare, than she would likely be for many years to come under a system of self-government. Contrary to the general understanding, the residents seem already divided into two hostile camps. With rioting in Dublin upon a large scale, there are those who fear the incitement to civil war, if agitation which is regarded as political is pressed much farther. Many have regarded Home Rule for Ireland as a great moral issue, and it is interesting to find that many moral reformers at least regard it otherwise.

Mormonism Aggressive

Just now the public agitation over the evils of Mormonism appears to be quiescent, but the Mormons themselves have by no means ceased their aggressiveness. Perhaps more than any other organization, the Mormon Church has grown militant in its missionary endeavors. Unlike the Christian Churches, its missionary activities do not extend to heathenism, but everywhere throughout Christendom their agents are pursuing proselyting methods that would do credit to the most aggressive methods of the commercial world. Mormonism with its polygamous relationships is by no means stamped out, and the effort should not cease to put the ban of the Federal Constitution upon polygamy whether it be in Utah or in any other state.

Safety at Sea

An officer of an Atlantic liner, writing in the Atlantic Monthly on "The Unlearned Lesson of the Titanic," declares that transoceanic travel is as dangerous today as it was before that great maritime disaster a little more than a year ago. The lessons of insuring better safety and of promoting engineering improvements have not yet been learned. Another writer cites the recent fire in the hold of the gigantic Imperator as evidence of the insecurity of the great vessels that now travel the highways of the seas. A leading newspaper editor declares that the time has come when we must demand less luxury and greater safety, and that appears to be the lesson for all transportation to learn, and what the transportation companies will not do themselves must be supplied by legislation.

The Church and Workingmen

No doubt the Church fails at a good many points to do all that it might do or should do, but a habit of faulting the Church has grown up in certain quarters that is by no means justified. Certain Socialists, of the rabid, street-corner type, have grown accustomed to denouncing religious teachers as being unable to sympathize with the viewpoint of the toilers as against the employers, and as a result many workingmen have been led into the grievous error of regarding the Church as their enemy. It is our conviction as well as observation that the Church deserves better treatment at the hands of the workingmen. With rare exceptions, a gospel for all men is preached, and more than ever before the Christian ministry has a genuine sympathy for the burdens which labor bears. Were it not for the labor agitator and the misrepresentations of the type of Socialists described above, the Church would have a better chance to express its sympathy for the toilers in terms of concrete fellowship.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF QUAKERISM IN AMERICA

The United Missionary Campaign

The details of the United Missionary Campaign have been set forth in various issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND with sufficient clearness to make their repetition unnecessary. The importance of the campaign cannot be emphasized too strongly. As indicated by the name, it is a union of effort on the part of the various denominations to increase the general interest in missions, both home and foreign, and at the same time to increase materially the contributions thereto.

Already the distant conferences which are to be held in the various states have begun, and will continue throughout the autumn, until practically every community has been brought within the reach of their influence. These are to be followed by local conferences, to be addressed by the delegates who have attended the district gatherings, with a view to promoting additional interest in the various local congregations.

The movement is to culminate next March in a canvass of its membership by every local church with a view to committing every member young and old to the plan of giving some definite sum regularly to the work of the church.

This ought to be a matter of general concern to Friends throughout America. It is to our discredit that our giving is far below the standard of per capita giving in the other denominations. This, we believe, is due more to our lax financial systems as a denomination than to a lack of liberality. Until recently, and in most Yearly Meetings yet, our financial system has been upon an assessment basis, every meeting and every family being taxed a certain per cent to make up the whole.

In common experience, however, the bulk of humanity is far more liberal in voluntary giving to causes in which genuine interest has been aroused, than in the payment of taxes. The latter are invariably kept down to the barest necessities, while under a system of voluntary giving, in which the interests of every member is sought, the giver generally gives the largest sum he can afford.

How many Friends are giving to the church what they really can afford to give, and how many are giving anything at all? A system such as is proposed by the United Missionary Campaign would soon work a revolution in our denominational finances. Where the burden now falls upon a few, the giving would be more widely distributed and where the giving is now oftentimes spasmodic, it would become systematic and well organized. Within a short while the income for all the work of the church would soon be doubled, and the basis laid for more aggressive and successful activities in all our departmental work.

Perhaps no better system has been devised than the every member canvass, and the duplex envelope for the regular weekly payment of the amount agreed upon. A few Friends congregations, comparatively speaking, are using this system and with rare exceptions we are told the results are most satisfactory.

The United Missionary Campaign ought to result in a new and widely developed interest in the cause of saving the world from sin, both in the home and the foreign field, and we have no doubt that this will occur, but if the campaign does nothing more for Friends than to create new interest in our method of collecting funds for the use of the church in its departmental work, it will have been worth the effort. This campaign should have a peculiar value to Friends, and it is to be hoped that every local congregation will see that it is represented at the district conferences now beginning.

If you want to build up the Church and the Bible school go out after the people, and make a place for them when they come. People must be made to know they are hungry before they will come to dinner, and when they come they must be given a place at the table, or the chances are they will not come again.

The salvation which Christ brought to earth is for the human derelict, quite as much as for those who have been more fortunate in life, and the Church ought to be out on the highways hunting him out and pointing him to the Lamb of God who is seeking to fill the whole earth with His presence.

Our relationship to our fellows is determined by our relationship to God. He who loves Jehovah truly, will be concerned about the welfare of all His creation. It is not a hard thing to love one's neighbor when one loves God with all the soul.

The Position of the Young Friend in the Church

BY DAVID D. PRIESTMAN

As we consider this subject I want to be sure that we understand one another as to the meaning of our title. What is a Young Friend? If we turn to the New Testament, we find records of a growing Church, but without special reference to young or old. In later history of the Seventeenth Century, there is no reference to Young Quakers, and in some cases it is difficult to discover whether those we read of were young or old.

But in spite of these two facts, we are met with a great agitation in our Church which has sprung from England, called the Young Friends' Movement, and I repeat the question, What is a Young Friend? George Hamilton Archibald, of children's Sunday-school fame, strongly objects to children being called "little people," for as he says, "They are not little people, but men and women in the making." In the same way a "Young Friend," though for the time we speak of him specially, is not some distinct kind of person, but just a "Young Friend" in the making.

If you treat a boy as a little "man" he remains such, and it is only as we begin to treat him as an integral part of, first, the family, and through that the Nation, giving him responsibilities which he is able to carry, no matter how small they may be in the first instance, that he will grow to take his right place. In the same way, it is only as we appreciate the Young Friends as "Friends in the making" and give them such duties as they are able to perform, that they will grow to be reliable church members.

Now let us go back a few years and see the reason for the rise and rapid growth of the Young Friends' Movement in England. About sixty years ago some Young Friends having had an education at a Quakers' boarding school, returned home desiring to start a children's Sunday-school. Such an important step came up for the serious consideration of the elders of the meeting, and these worthy leaders decided that the desire of the younger members of the meeting must be repressed, as it was evidently "creature activity," and human beings must not interfere with the free operation of the Spirit in their midst.

What was the result? All the young people interested have, without exception I believe, become cold members of the Society, and one, whom I know personally, is a hard, unsympathetic, poor, rich man. He loves the Society as much as he can love anything outside of business, and bemoans the fact that all his children have left Friends.

Again, it is hardly a generation ago since Friends in England were disowning young men and women who "married out" that is, married those of another denomination, with the result that large districts have become entirely depopulated, so far as Quakers are concerned. Out of this sad state the Society in England has slowly emerged, and owing to the ruthless "chopping off," there were comparatively few middle aged Friends and the younger ones rather naturally kept silence in the presence of so many Friends with more weight and experience.

To combat the lethargic state of the Society about fifteen years ago, conferences and Sunday-schools, etc., were arranged with the object of deeper study in the whys and wherefores of our existence as a Society, and to talk over subjects which have been so well described as "the things that matter." This gave the young men and women the opportunity of meeting one another inside their own Society, and the natural result was a number of engagements, so that some of the more staid Friends somewhat unkindly dubbed these conferences as "matrimonial agencies." However, feelings were changing, and with the more liberal views of the twentieth century, these croakings were smiled at, and all was quiet.

Following these gatherings, and largely as a result of them, the younger members have been drawn together in the organization which we now know as the "Young Friends' Movement." As I have already hinted, the main object was to get the Young Friends to take a more intelligent and spiritual interest in the government and work of the Church. At once the difficulty arose as to how to get them into harness, and it is right here where the most care and attention is needed. Whilst this has, to a certain extent, been overcome, it is very hard to say exactly what have been the best methods.

A small boy was once very anxious to go to a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and when asked by a companion for his reason, replied, "I gave these people a penny and I want to hear what they are going to spend it on." We need money badly for our work, but I think probably the most important part of giving is the interest caused in the mind of the giver. Some of the most energetic meetings are those where they have a systematic arrangement of giving, not only from the heads of families, but also those younger members who can perhaps only afford a few cents each month.

There are numerous offices that young people can undertake, but these can only be arranged by individual meetings. Probably all know of the motto, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," but sometimes we are inclined to lay too much emphasis on it and forget, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing badly—at first." Even when mistakes are made, and young people are not the only ones guilty in this respect, which is most important, the work which has perhaps received a slight check or the training of those who, through the error, have learned a valuable lesson?

A story is told of Abraham Lincoln which illustrates that, what sometimes seems like failure to the one most concerned, is not really so at all. He was traveling one day with some companions in the train up to the city where there was to be a great demonstration, and on his way he turned over in his mind some of the important matters of the country and put down some notes relative thereto for the speech which would be expected from him as president. As he went over it he felt it to be very poor, but it was his best and he could but hope it would be good. The time came for him to speak after several had already spoken and received thunders of applause. His feeling of humility was very keen as he addressed the crowd and when he was allowed to take his seat in dumb silence he was deeply hurt. He had done his best and the people had not cared enough even to applaud.

Later in the evening he was asked by a boy not knowing that he was president, to come and see his sick brother. Being always ready to help where he could he went, and found the brother in bed eagerly reading the newspaper just out, giving the account of the day's proceedings. The part which interested him most was the report of Abraham Lincoln's speech, and he thrust it eagerly into the visitor's hands. Yes, they were his own words and they looked to him very poor, but the paper went on: "These noble words spoken from the heart of our worthy president, were received by the people in dumb silence. They seemed to feel it was too sacred to even applaud and silence was the most perfect tribute they could pay." Slowly it dawned on him that the silence which he had taken as meaning indifference had meant very much the reverse, and what he had felt to be failure had been no failure at all.

Naturally a young person feels very diffident about opening his lips in a public meeting for the first time, and he will usually find it easier to speak before those of his own, rather than of maturer age. Thus when the Young Friends had their first meeting at London Yearly Meeting, it was behind closed doors and no one was allowed inside who had passed the age of thirty-five.

The following year the Young Friends' Meeting was held in the large meeting house, the floor being reserved for those under thirty-five, whilst elder Friends were allowed to sit in the gallery and look down, but were not allowed to speak. It was afterwards suggested that perhaps at some future Yearly Meeting elder Friends would be allowed in the body of the hall, which foreshadowed that possibly the special Young Friends' Movement had a passing work, and having helped those of younger years to take more responsible parts in meetings for both worship and business, it would have largely fulfilled its mission.

From reports I have seen of the Five Years Meeting last year, I understand expression was given to the thought that whilst the pastoral system had been found necessary in the past, and had done great things in helping to build up the Church, some Friends in America were increasingly conscious of the fact that if carried on beyond a certain point it tended rather to weakness. So I think as years go on it may be a disadvantage to retain a separate organization for Young Friends, even though at the present time it is a strength in that it brings out members who would otherwise be backward in coming forward.

Friends generally are not very careful as to whom they appoint for various offices which, I think, is one of our weaknesses, and this especially applies as it concerns Young Friends. So well do I remember at one meeting in England when appointing representatives to the home Monthly Meetings, how name after name of older Friends would be proposed who were far more at liberty to get away to other meetings, and Young Friends whose sole opportunity of being representatives was when Monthly Meeting was held, were passed by.

I now want to speak on a subject which perhaps needs more care than almost any other, that of correcting faults. Why is it that leaders are so slow in pointing out the mistakes and errors that beginners naturally fall into? Some years ago at a Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting a middle-aged lady Friend made a stirring appeal to the elders of the Church to be more faithful in encouraging and admonishing those who were beginning some work for the Society, and more especially as it concerned vocal ministry. As a day school teacher she spoke of the careful way in which they were criticised and advised concerning the best methods of teaching, but so seldom does anyone give counsel as to speaking in meeting.

It has been my privilege to speak frequently in meetings for worship, mission meetings and open air services, and yet the only time I had any admonition of any kind was following a meeting which had not gone very well, and I went to a Friend and definitely asked what had been wrong. Someone may argue that in pointing out errors one is in danger of damping the ardor of beginners and making them timid, but if it is carefully done this should not be the effect. Surely anyone who is worth training is willing and almost glad to receive correction, although it is quite true that, "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous." A few days ago when talking with a Friend in Vancouver about the almost careless way in which parents bring up their children, he remarked, "Our method seems to be to let children alone, so that if they turn out well, it is in spite of circumstances, rather than because of them."

Possibly this plan may help to make sturdy men and women, but at what cost? How many young men and women are on the streets today in the depths of sin only because no one told them of the dangers ahead or corrected them for the mistakes which we are all so prone to. The Psalmist of old says, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord," and the writer to the Hebrews says, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth," and again, "If ye be without chastisement, then are ye bastards and not sons." Today in business you can frequently see this thought upon the office walls, "Don't kick when we correct you; if we don't think you are worth correcting, we shall fire you."

Still our Society goes on heedlessly, not even taking as much pains as an ordinary business in the training of its young members. Friends are very kind in giving encouragement, but we need more than that. A diet of sweet things only would not make a very healthy person. It is not necessary to say much as to the importance of this work being done carefully and well, for in spite of all I have said, it is better not done at all than to be done badly.

In closing, I would just repeat what I said at the beginning, a "Young Friend" is a Friend in the making, and the sooner we realize this and lay ourselves out not only to evangelize the world, but train those inside the Church, so much the sooner shall we be raising up a strong, vigorous body and helping forward the time for which we often pray, "Thy kingdom come; on earth as it is in Heaven."

The Ram Allah Mission

BULLETIN No. 7.

RAM ALLAH, August 26, 1913.

Dear Friends of the Ram Allah Mission:

So much has happened in the last two months since we wrote to you that we wonder in what you will be most interested. Of necessity that which has to be uppermost in our thoughts most of the time is the new building. The two lower stories are now complete and already in its elevated location it can be seen from afar. Thus far the work has gone on without one serious interruption or costly mistake. It has required careful and constant supervision and the exercise of a great amount of patience. Much credit is due to the energy and efficiency of our architect and the faithfulness of our head workman. Above all, we realize that with Nehemiah of old we can say, "The hand of my God which was good upon me." We realized this especially two weeks ago when one of our workmen was hurt. From the beginning of the work we have especially prayed that no serious accident might occur, for in this country most of the work is done by brute strength, without labor-saving contrivances, and risks in the way of accidents are at a maximum. One of our Moslem carriers had a narrow escape from death when a girder slipped and struck his head a glancing blow, inflicting a scalp wound. For his deliverance we felt devoutly thankful.

An account of the laying of the corner stone on July 4th has been sent to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Suffice it to say, that in the presence of about four hundred people, with the stars and stripes floating above us, our American Consul laid the stone after a prayer, a hymn and short speeches in English, Turkish and Arabic. Since school closed Khalil Totah has superintended the construction which has been a big relief to me. To have a native with American push and training is a big asset and has relieved the superintendent of much routine work.

The boarding schools closed on July 18th with simple exercises at the meeting house. With happy faces the boys and girls turned homeward after the songs and recitations that were serious and amusing. The next day the teachers and workers went away to rest and recreate. Helen Crosman left on July 27th for America and Alice Jones started for the Lebanons August 12th, leaving us quite alone. The Day Schools closed on July 31st and the village children have largely gone to the vineyards, outside the town, to spend the summer and enjoy the grapes and figs that are rapidly reaching their prime. All of our schools will reopen on October 1st.

This week we were fortunate in securing the services of a strong Christian Scotch woman who was looking for something useful to do in this land, to which she had come as a pilgrim. She will serve as matron of the boys' school and meantime, before school opens, she is helping us for her board.

The problem before us is to secure a good cook for the boys and two teachers in our Day Schools. We pray that we may be directed providentially in our selections.

Our Mission servant felt, after his vacation, that too much was demanded of his strength. He resigned after over three years of honest service and we have a young man in his place who is busy from sunrise to sunset doing the many necessary repairs on the G. T. H. building. All the woodwork on the outside of the school was in dire need of paint and much of the interior woodwork is being done in the lower story. A former servant, who served the mission for fifteen years, has just returned from America and is doing the whitewashing in an efficient and satisfactory way.

One of our cisterns was exhausted before school closed, consequently must be investigated to find the cause of such early failure. The other cistern still furnishes us with very good water, and the cisterns on the boys' grounds are more than half full now after the heavy demand the building operations have made upon them. The lack of water in Jerusalem is very serious and exorbitant prices are being asked, putting the poor people into sore straits.

The Educational Conference of workers in all Syria, August 1-3, was an event that brought great inspiration and pleasure to the Jerusalem teachers. It meets here every three years, the other two sessions being held in Beyrout. Many educationalists from the north came down and most of the sessions were given over to discussions of questions in which we are all vitally interested. Among the principal speakers were five Friends, and Marshall Fox of the Brumana Friends' Mission, was elected chairman of the Conference for the next two years. Great unity and friendliness was maintained throughout the meetings.

The purchasing and preparation of supplies for the coming year occupy part of our attention and, with frequent callers who drop in for a cup of tea, there is no time for loneliness. After the Conference we were delighted to have a short visit from three of the Brumana workers and one other English Friend. Two others from the same Mission will spend next Sunday with us. Such contact of workers of the two Missions is very helpful.

Sincerely your friends,

A. EDWARD AND MARION KELSEY.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

It was a matter of common remark that the ninety-third session of Indiana Yearly Meeting, which convened in regular session at Richmond, on September 23, was the best one held in recent years. The attendance was quite up to the average, and the number remaining for the closing session on Monday, was gratifying. Some sessions were marked with more than usual interest. Especially was this true of the foreign mission, temperance, Earlham College, Bible school and Christian Endeavor sessions.

A marked spirit of unity prevailed, and several advanced steps were taken that revealed a determination to measure up to the full requirements of the Lord's work.

At the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, there were several questions of unusual importance under consideration. There was considerable discussion of the non-resident problem, and a communication to the Yearly Meeting was approved, outlining a better system of keeping in close touch with this portion of our membership. A proposition in harmony with the recommendations of the Five Years Meeting to secure greater efficiency in the work of the Church, by selecting a General Secretary of the Yearly Meeting who would serve the interests of the various Boards, was considered at some length, and was finally referred to the Yearly Meeting by a majority vote. After discussion the proposition was approved, and a Committee consisting of one member from each of the principal Boards was directed to be selected with power to appoint the Secretary when the proper person is found.

A proposition for simultaneous evangelistic services was also considered, and was approved and referred to the Evangelistic Committee for action. Later it was decided to ask each meeting in the Yearly Meeting to hold special services the week of January 18.

A large number of visiting Friends were present from other Yearly Meetings as follows: Rufus P. King, and Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith, North Carolina Yearly Meeting; William G. Hubbard, Ida M. Allen, Effie Minehart and Leola King, Ohio Yearly Meeting; H. Orville Jones and wife, Charlotte E. Vickers, John Kendall and Rebecca W. Flagler, Western Yearly Meeting; Arthur Chilson (missionary from Africa), Kansas Yearly Meeting; Esther G. Frame, Wilmington Yearly Meeting; Jefferson W. Ford (returned missionary from Jamaica), Iowa Yearly Meeting; John and Pearl Walters and Harry McKinley, New York Yearly Meeting; Bertha E. Cox (missionary from India), Oregon Yearly Meeting, and Amos Walton, California Yearly Meeting.

Besides these and without minutes, were Eliza Armstrong Cox, editor of Friends' Missionary Advocate, Raymond S. Holding and wife, and Sarah Lindley (all three recently returned from the Mexican mission field), besides several from Western Yearly Meeting who were present part of the time, including Gertrude Reinier, Charles R. Axton, William J. Cleaver and E. J. Carter, Gurney and Elizabeth Binford (missionaries from Japan) were also in attendance.

The subject of Foreign Missions took deep hold on the meeting, owing in part to the presence of the missionaries from the foreign field named above. The presence of two native Mexican girls who have been helping in the school at Matehuala, and who have entered Earlham College for this year, added greatly to the interest of the meeting. The missionary report was presented by Belle C. Bailey, the Secretary of the Board, and showed encouragement. On Sabbath afternoon the services in the auditorium were given over to the missionaries, each one speaking briefly of the work in the respective fields.

The Evangelistic report was an encouraging one, and a liberal subscription for the work the coming year was taken in the face of the meeting. During the past year, by using the card filing system, a vast amount of detailed information about ministerial work has been collected and is now on file. It was shown that of pastors receiving a salary, forty-three receive an average of $648.00; twenty-five an average of $241.00, while sixteen receive no salary at all.

The reading of the London General Epistle was listened to with unusual interest, and the reading of the London and Dublin special epistles was followed by a most interesting report of Lillian E. Hayes concerning her visit last spring and summer to England, Scotland and Ireland. She reported that Friends there are showing great interest in the work of American Friends.

The Temperance report was decidedly optimistic in tone. Eighteen users of intoxicants were reported, and two hundred and fourteen users of tobacco. A resolution favoring the founding of a chair of philanthropy, temperance and social ethics in Earlham College was adopted. The temperance address by Daniel E. Poling, of Ohio, was one of the features of the Yearly Meeting, his strong and eloquent appeal for unity of action receiving unanimous approval.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs was most interesting, as was the address given on the subject by George N. Hartley. Six of the larger Indian schools have an attendance of from 500 to 800 students, or a total of about 4,000. The subject of Peace received more than the usual share of attention. The report, which was optimistic, was followed by addresses from Charles E. Hiatt and Allen D. Hole, the latter being Chairman of the Peace Association of Friends in America. Resolutions were adopted approving the position of President Wilson, Secretary Bryan and Governor Ralston on the peace question.

The report of White's Industrial Institute at Wabash, Indiana, was most satisfactory. The receipts during the year were $35,746.21 and a cash balance on hand of $1,823.77 was reported. Following the report of the Book and Tract Committee, which showed considerable activity, Elbert Russell gave an address, in which he emphasized the need of ministers and workers being conversant with the history of the Church.

The Home Mission Committee presented a satisfactory report, showing much relief extended to flood sufferers last spring. The sum of $1,738.16 was spent during the year and clothing of the value of $2,400.00 had been distributed. Over 700 cottage prayer meetings were held and 246 Bibles distributed. Over 130,000 pages of literature were distributed. The Southland College report showed that 400 students are now under the tutelage of ten instructors. The Yearly Meeting continued its usual support of the institution.

The Earlham College report was presented in the main by President Kelly, who was followed by Professor Laurence Hadley of the college faculty, Vincent D. Nicholson, the new field secretary of the college, and Timothy Nicholson of the College Board. The financial report showed a balance in favor of the college for the year of about $1,400.00. Spiceland Academy reported an enrollment of 67, and Fairmount Academy 199. A new academy building is being erected at Spiceland.

The Bible School report showed an increase in enrollment of 2,472. An address by J. H. Welsheimer on methods of increasing the attendance in the Bible Schools followed the report. There was a large attendance at the Christian Endeavor meeting on Saturday evening. Harry Reeve, the Yearly Meeting President of C. E. work presented the report, and a profitable address was given by W. O. Trueblood of Indianapolis.

The statistics were incomplete and showed an apparent loss in membership of 777. The secretary reported, however, that if proper corrections were made, there was a probable increase of 56. Memorials for Isom P. Wooten and E. Everett Morgan were read, and called forth sympathetic words of appreciation of the work of these departed Friends. Joseph A. Goddard and Leander J. Woodard were reappointed on the Earlham Board of Trustees.

The Meeting endorsed the United Missionary Campaign movement, and adopted a petition to the Mayor of San Francisco and the Managers of the Panama Exposition, protesting against the commercialization of vice at the Exposition. The interests of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented, and several members spoke earnestly in its behalf. The sum of $200.00 was appropriated for the guarantee fund of the paper.

Westfield Quarterly Meeting was discontinued and the two Monthly Meetings were made a part of Whitewater Quarter. The reports on the state of the Church were for the most part satisfactory, though some deficiencies were noted. It was a matter of regret that more time could not have been given for the consideration of this important subject. A branch of the Home Missionary Union was formed with Mary Doan Hole as President.

The Clerks of the previous year were reappointed: Robert L. Kelly, Presiding Clerk; Winifred H. Milligan, Recording Clerk; Edwin P. Trueblood and Edith J. Hunt, Reading Clerks, and Milo S. Hinkle, Announcing Clerk.

The Meeting closed Monday forenoon, after much routine business had been transacted, with many expressions of thankfulness from many members.

A Testimonial Worthily Bestowed

The Boston Advertiser, under date of September 26, pays a high editorial tribute to Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, well known in both America and Europe as one of the leading peace advocates of the world. It is a pleasure to say that Dr. Trueblood appears to be recovering, although slowly, and is beginning to give a little attention to his work. The testimonial of The Advertiser is so well merited that it is worthy to be read by all American Friends.

"The serious illness of Dr. Trueblood has been an occasion of great anxiety to the whole American peace public, but nowhere more than to his multitude of friends in Boston. We have not yet quite got into the habit of thinking that Dr. Trueblood is not still a Boston citizen; and if the attack from which he is suffering proves of a nature to compel a long vacation from the arduous labors which are so largely responsible for the break in his health, there are many who will hope that he will think of Boston or his old Newton neighborhood as a better place than Washington for the necessary rest.

"It is more than twenty years ago that Dr. Trueblood came to Boston to assume the duties of secretary of the American Peace Society. It was in 1892, seven years before the meeting of the first Hague Conference; and a glance backward over the twenty years is an impressive reminder of the amazing advance which the peace cause has made in that time in this country and in the world. Never was a greater revolution; and the revolution has transformed the whole machinery of the peace propaganda.

"When Dr. Trueblood came to Boston in 1892, the American Peace Society was almost the only important agency of the cause in America. It was not until three years after 1892 that the first Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration was held. There were next to no branches of the American Peace Society in the different states, where now there are a score. The World Peace Foundation, the Carnegie Endowment, the School Peace League, the Society of International Law, the Society for the Judicious Settlement of International Disputes, the Intercollegiate Peace Association—all these things were undreamed of and far in the future. International Peace Congresses had been instituted a few years before, and the first one to meet in America was that held at Chicago in 1893, the year after Dr. Trueblood came to Boston, and this was largely organized by him.

"It can probably safely be said, then, that when he came here to take up his secretarial duties, and for years afterward, he was the only man in America whose exclusive and regular business it was to promote the peace cause. Many will remember the little room which he long occupied in Somerset Street, and what a considerable expansion it was considered when the Society's headquarters were removed to 31 Beacon Street, where they still remain—in the room, it is interesting to remember, in which President Eliot was born.

"Dr. Trueblood brought to the administration of the American Peace Society in 1892 great strength of character, distinct intellectual power, untiring devotion to the cause, thorough familiarity with its history and problems, and broad general scholarship. Born in Indiana in 1847—he is still only in the sixties—he had been president successively of two Western colleges connected with the Society of Friends, and after his presidency of the latter had resided for two years in France, engaged in international studies. In its earlier days the American Peace Society had done noteworthy work and had great names; but it was at a rather low ebb when Dr. Trueblood came to Boston, and he infused stronger life into it, represented it in the European Congresses with dignity and ability in days when he was almost the only American representative, and especially edited its journal, the Advocate of Peace, with an ability which at once gave it a new and important place among the agencies of the movement.

"Admittedly Dr. Trueblood's writing in this journal during these long years has covered every aspect of the growing movement with rare intelligence, breadth, and courage; and his whole work has been informed by the soundest philosophy of the peace movement; which, when we remember some of the superficialities of many peace advocates and the half-heartedness of others, is, in view of the central position of influence which Dr. Trueblood has occupied, saying very much. He has no vagaries of thought to answer for; and he has been quick to recognize the great new forces which have so rapidly been making the little peace organization of 1892 the great factor in world politics of 1913.

"These are things which the American peace party remembers with such profound gratitude when its veteran servant becomes worn in the service. All will wish comfortable days for him in the enforced cessation of his labors for a time, and will wish for him rapid recovery; and nowhere is there more general sympathy, more concern, and a warmer wish for his future usefulness and welfare, than here in the city of Worcester and Channing and Sumner, where his best work has been done."

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Concerning the Panama Tolls Question

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

The following paragraphs have been suggested by the record of an informal discussion of the Panama Tolls question given at the last Mohonk Peace Conference, the proceedings of which have just been published.

The History

There is much material for thought in the history of the Panama Canal question, particularly in the attitude of mutual partnership in the proposed waterway which the United States and Great Britain have assumed during all the years. The neutrality of the land and the absolute equality between ourselves and Great Britain are the two points which have been continually emphasized in all negotiations up to the time of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, about the meaning of which so much difference of opinion exists. To become really acquainted with the present problem one must spend considerable time on this earlier history of the Panama Canal project.

Domestic Policy

The question seems to be whether or not we have the right to discriminate in favor of American ships and against British ships. The Ex-President of the United States and Congress have assumed that certain American vessels may be allowed to pass free while British ships are charged tolls.

It is considered by those who favor exemption of certain vessels that the matter is exclusively one of domestic policy, that our owning the canal and the land through which it passes makes it out of the province of another country to inquire whether or not we charge tolls to our coastwise vessels. Some are quick to reply that this is a great world passageway and that therefore we cannot exclude other nations from equal use of it with ourselves; that, indeed, international law and the dictates of conscience agree in this particular that even if it had been a matter of domestic policy, still it became one of international concern at that moment when Great Britain and the United States became parties to a treaty concerning it.

Acquiring of Territory

Again, the acquiring of territory through which the proposed canal was dug is said by some so to change conditions that we are warranted in abrogation. The reply to this is made by quoting from the treaty, as follows: "It is agreed that no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relation of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty."

As Yet No Injury

Secretary Knox advances the belief that no injury having yet been inflicted, no case for arbitration has yet arisen. This point being entirely technical does not bring with it particular interest to us as laymen who see that the conditions are at least ready for the infliction of injury, if, indeed, the prospective trade is not already suffering from prospective tolls or no tolls.

Vital Interests

Perhaps the most frequent reason given for our present attitude is that "vital interests" are involved and that we are therefore within the provisions of the treaty. Students of American history can set forth the tremendous size of certain questions which have been arbitrated between Great Britain and ourselves and show us how small in comparison is the question whether we have the right to grant this favor—this subsidy to our coastwise vessels. The clear thinker does not dare say, "Too vital for arbitration." It has been said of the attitude of Great Britain and the United States at the time of the Geneva Arbitration, it was "the noblest spectacle of modern times, in which two great and powerful nations, gaining in wisdom and self-control and losing nothing in patriotism or self-respect, taught the world that the magnitude of a controversy need not be a bar to its peaceful solution."

Are We Sincere in Our Advocacy of the General Policy of Arbitration?

The most astonishing phase of all this is the fact that we who have posed as influential in bringing about arbitration among nations are about to refuse them the same justice we have demanded.

Sound Business Policy

It is recognized by many of our scholars that whatever the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty may ultimately be held to mean, the policy of exempting the owners of coastwise ships from canal tolls should be decided upon its merits. Dr. Emory R. Johnson, well known as a student of the Panama Canal, says in an address at the last Mohonk Conference that if we arbitrate and win we shall have established our right to pursue a policy which is at least of doubtful wisdom.

The canal will have cost the people of the United States at least $375,000,000. As he says, the interest and principal of this investment must be paid either from funds secured by general taxes or from revenues derived from canal tolls. He contends that political prudence as well as sound methods of financing make it advisable to require those who derive immediate benefit from the Panama Canal to pay a reasonable toll for use of the waterway. Taxes must inevitably increase, Dr. Johnson declares, and if the burden of carrying the Panama Canal is to be thrown upon the federal treasury and the taxpayers instead of upon the producers, traders, and shipowners who make profitable use of the canal, the reasons must be clear and convincing.

In an exhaustive statement of the probable financial record of the canal this specialist continues: There is "a possible aggregate revenue of $17,000,000 per annum in 1925, obtainable from canal tolls, if all ships are required to pay the dues. The exemption of the coastwise shipping will reduce the revenue in 1925 to about $15,000,000 a year, or to less than the estimated annual outlay for operation, Zone sanitation, and government, the Panama annuity and the interest on the amount invested in the canal. The revenues would yield no surplus for betterments and nothing for the amortization of the $375,000,000 or more which the people of the United States will have paid for the canal."

Senator Root said in the Senate last January that the coastwise shipping is "the most highly and absolutely protected special industry in the United States." It will have to be proved by the coastwise steamship companies if they need still further assistance, while we have it stated by such authorities as Dr. Johnson that rates double those established might be imposed without preventing the canal from being used by coastwise carriers.

Quaker Girl Saw Sultan

In 1657, when Sultan Mahomet the Fourth had removed his court to Adrianople, a Quaker servant girl appeared one day before the royal encampment demanding speech with the Grand Turk about the things of her religion.

The account of her journey reads like a page from the "Arabian Nights," and is worthy a place in history beside that of the young Saracen who found her way to her beloved across the breadth of Europe with the two words "Gilbert" and "London" for her passport. But it is doubtful whether this seventeenth century pilgrim possessed so much as two words of any foreign tongue. The mysticism which was so pronounced an element of her religion made naught of material obstacles. She was sustained by some such vision as that which confronted the Quaker preacher in Newgate jail—a vision of "several men, of most nations upon the earth, whose (outward) language I understand not, but the seed of God in them I saw and understood clearly, . . . breathing and crying to the Lord." Again, however dreadful was the report of Turkish cruelty which was current in England, it was not likely to exceed the cruelty which Mary had endured at the hands of her own countrymen. Although not yet thirty-five years of age, she had had long and varied acquaintance with the insides of English prisons. While still a young girl in service at Selby, her determined interruptions of the service in the "Steeple-house" had earned her three periods of imprisonment in York Castle, and she was the first of the Friends to endure the punishment of public flogging, the result of her denunciation of the Cambridge scholars. In 1656 she had attempted to carry the Gospel into New England, but was not even allowed the privilege of landing in Boston. By order of the Deputy Governor she and her companions were stripped and searched for signs of witchcraft, and after lying in prison for five weeks, half-starved and unable to communicate with their friends, they were shipped back whence they came. Mary may well have preferred the tender mercies of the Turk to those of her own kindred.

She was not without precedent for her journey, although up to this date no Quaker missionary had succeeded in reaching the capital of Turkey, being invariably intercepted along the route and sent home by an English Consul or Ambassador. The mission which set out from England in 1657 "to convert the Grand Signior" consisted of three men, all of them Irish, and three women, of whom Mary Fisher was one, and, according to contemporary accounts, the only one who reached the goal of their journey. They started with the help of the newly-formed General Quaker Fund for the Service of Truth Abroad, which contains items for this year under the head of "Turkey," to the amount of £177 5s 7d. At Zante, which they reached by way of Leghorn, the first separation occurred, and Mary Fisher, still accompanied by her two women friends and by one of the men, pushed on to Smyrna. The remaining two men, Perrot and Luffe, after traveling to and fro in Italy and interviewing the Doge of Venice, were betrayed in Rome into the hands of the Inquisition. The fate of the unfortunate Luffe was for some time in doubt—he was reported at the end of the year to have died in prison as the result of his refusal to take food, the hunger-strike being one of the many early practices of the religious world which have been revived of later years in the political. The truth, however, leaked out at last, that he had been hanged as the reward of his too plain speaking before the Pope Alexander VII.

Perrot's captivity lasted two or three years longer—first in the prison and latterly in a madhouse. When at last his release came his shattered mind had revolted from the doctrines for which he had suffered so cruelly, and he became the leader of the first serious schism which took place among the Quakers. The cruelty of William Penn's summing-up of this history is only equaled by its quaintness—"John Perrot, who if he had been as faithful as his companion might with him have been hanged at Rome—to his own Comfort, the Truth's honor, and the Church's peace."

Meanwhile Mary Fisher had learnt, on arriving in Smyrna, that the Sultan was to be found at Adrianople, and thither she resolved to pursue her journey. But the English Consul, having tried in vain to dissuade her from an enterprise which seemed to him both mad and dangerous, put her on board a ship bound for Venice. When she learned the destination to which she was being carried, Mary persuaded the ship-master to set her down upon the nearest coast. From this point there is no further word of any companion, and it seems certain that it was alone and on foot that she performed the land journey of 500 or 600 miles along the sea coast of the Morea, Greece and Macedonia, and so across the mountains of Thrace to the broad plain where Adrianople lies, watered by the River Maritsa. Here the Sultan was encamped with his army and the whole of his vast retinue of courtiers and attendants. It was only after many attempts that Mary found a friend bold enough to speak for her to the Grand Vizier and tell him that "a woman was come who had something to declare from the Great God to the Sultan." Ahmed Pasha belonged to an Albanian family who for two generations supplied a Grand Vizier to Turkey, and by the magnificent gift of organization and their genius for government might even now give the lie to the popular estimate of Albanian capacity. He procured Mary Fisher an audience with his master, and the following morning she was ushered into his presence, where three dragomans stood ready to act as interpreters between them. The Sultan Mohammed IV, at this time a young man of 17, received her with all the honors accorded to an ambassador. As she stood "weightily pondering" how best to deliver her message, he spoke to her with encouraging words, bidding her not fear, for all present had good hearts and could hear it. They listened gravely while she was speaking and then the Sultan acknowledging that what she had spoken was the Truth, desired her to stay in his country, as they could not but respect one who had traveled from so distant a land to bring them a message from the Lord God. When she insisted on returning to her friends, he urged her at least to accept an escort, as he "would not for anything that she should come to the least hurt in his dominions." But it was Mary's wish to go to Constantinople, as she had come, without a guard, "whither," says the old history, "she came without the least hurt or scoff."

A curious sidelight is thrown on the last stage of this journey by a letter from Sir Thomas Bendish, the English Ambassador at Constantinople, to be found in the Thurlow State Papers. It is dated 24th July, 1658.

"Nor are all our troubles from without us," he complains; "some are, as I may say, from among us, and from within us, occasioned by a generation of people crept in unawares, called Quakers, three whereof not long since arrived here from Zante by way of the Morea, whom I suffered with tenderness. . . . until by reason of their disturbances of our Divine exercises and several notorious contempts of me and my authority, I friendly warned them to return, which the two women did quietly, but John Buckley refusing, I was constrained to ship him hence upon the Lewis."

In this manner Mary Fisher returned to England, her mission accomplished, to be honored ever after amongst her fellow Quakers as "she that spake to the Grand Turk."—Mabel R. Brailsford, in Manchester Guardian.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

October 5 will go down in the history of Portland, Indiana, Friends, on account of the interest and enthusiasm shown in all the services, this being the first service in the new pastoral year with Tennyson Lewis from Van Wert, Ohio, as pastor. The meeting and Bible school are the largest in the quarter and have been making rapid progress in attendance and interest the past three months, and today the school is in a most flourishing condition, with a wide awake corps of teachers and officers. Rally Day was observed on this date, and the church building was most fittingly decorated for the occasion by class No. 6. After a short study of the lesson by the school, a very fitting program was given. The principal address was given by Judge John F. LaFollett, who pictured most beautifully the life of the child Christ, from His infancy to His death on the cross, showing that it was from the lower walks of life that we derive our strongest and most helpful Christian characters, drawing illustrations from Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, and other statesmen and writers. He was followed by Dr. John W. Hall with a reading of his own composition, which was highly appreciated. Following this, musical selections were given, the primary department performing their part well. The pastor gave some very fitting remarks along the line of Bible school work for the coming year. Services were largely attended, and much interest was manifested in all services of the day.

On Wednesday evening, October 8, there assembled at the Friends' Church at Portland, Indiana, the members of the church, with a goodly number of those who are interested in Christian work, for the reception of the new pastor, Tennyson Lewis, and family. A program had been previously arranged, consisting of short addresses and musical numbers, all of which was carried out in a very pleasing manner. Mayor C. A. Paddock, who is a Friend, spoke on behalf of the city. He also spoke of the church and its leaders, and what it means to a people, a city and a nation. He gave to Rev. Lewis and family a most hearty welcome to the city. Each department of the church was represented, many speaking with encouraging words, both to the coming pastor and to the church. Mrs. Lewis gave a most hearty response on behalf of the family and what it means to settle in a new community, to form a new set of acquaintances and friends. She was followed by their daughter, Mary, who spoke in a pleasing way. Evelyn was introduced, and the pastor gave the closing address of the evening. The people were happy and full of enthusiasm, as was manifested from time to time by the many happy cheers of the evening. The piano solo by Miss Iva Fields was especially appreciated. Refreshments were served and the social hour was especially helpful and greatly enjoyed by all. The church is expecting a most prosperous year.

Charles Tebbetts and wife attended Chester Meeting on First-day, the 5th instant. Charles Tebbetts gave a most inspiring address to an attentive and appreciative audience, on the line of the manifest world-wide readiness for the knowledge of and acceptance of our Christ and His salvation. We are sure there will be much good fruit from the seed sown through the address.

Richard Simms attended Williamsburg Meeting on First-day, the 5th instant, in his capacity of New Garden Quarterly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent. John Reddick, who has been serving Williamsburg Meeting as pastor the past year, has felt called to go to Arba Meeting as pastor, and is making the change at this time. Seven new members are to be received into the meeting at Williamsburg at next Monthly Meeting.

Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith have returned to Michigan, and will take up pastoral work at Long Lake in Traverse City Quarterly Meeting. The Quarterly Meeting, as well as the local meeting, appreciate their coming, and pray their work may be greatly blessed in this place. Their post office address will be Traverse City, Michigan, R. F. D. No. 2.

The centennial of Union Monthly Meeting will be held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, November 1-2. A special invitation is given to all who wish to attend, to come prepared to stay for each service. Homes will be open to receive all who come from a distance.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

On Sabbath, September 28th, we had the acceptable company and services, both morning and evening, of William R. Harris, a minister from La Harpe, Kansas, who gave us at each meeting a stirring and interesting discourse. Also on Monday evening, he gave an able address on the "Social Evils of the Day and White Slave Traffic," to a well filled house of anxious listeners. The subject was handled with skill and ability, and to the satisfaction of those who heard him.

Western Yearly Meeting

Rally Day exercises were held in the Bible school at Bloomingdale, Indiana, October 5, with encouraging results. The members of the school met at the home of the pastor, Enos Harvey, and marched through the business part of the town to the church carrying Sunday-school banners. Dr. M. F. Woodard is superintendent and is bringing new life into the school by his enthusiasm. New classes are being organized. In the meeting for worship, the pastor presented the importance of Bible study in development of Christian character, taking as his theme, "The Word of God is living."

News From China

In view of the fact that many are not able to get direct news from our dear fellow missionaries in China, we will give a concise review of the letters which have just reached us.

It is evident that the recapture of Nanking by the government troops was attended with horrors even greater than those which accompanied its capture by the Revolutionists in December of 1911.

Miss Holme and Miss Stanley, Dr. Isao and Pastor Gao have been at Nanking throughout this whole dreadful experience. About the middle of August the city was surrounded by northern troops, and a struggle began for the possession of Purple Mountain.

Four times it was captured only to be retaken, but finally on September 1, the government troops under General Dang Hsuin entered the city. Immediately upon their entrance they began reckless firing and looting everywhere. Quoting from Miss Holme's letter she says, "Oh, they have certainly spoiled Nanking. They have carried off bedding, clothing and all that was of any use. What they did not want, they threw on the ground in the yards, smashing and breaking stores, and almost everybody has suffered."

Mr. Williams arrived from Keiling on the day following, just in time to be of the greatest comfort and assistance to our ladies who had been shut within the city. Mr. Williams writing on the third says, "One of us stay in the gate house all the time. I slept here last night and had charge of the watchman. I was up around the compound several times in the night."

"The soldiers looted all day yesterday. When they stopped for the night the policemen and tu-fei (brigands) took up the work and kept it going till morning." "We have taken in lots of people today, mostly women and children. Many will have to sleep outside on the ground tonight. It is not cold and the ground is nearly as dry as a floor, so they will not suffer much that way. But the poor things are so scared." "I believe God will give us protection. There is no help but in God." "The people are stricken with fear and hunger, and all go about looking so poor and dejected." "We are peaceful inside. All are orderly and quiet. The hospital, school building, gate house, wood shed and servants' quarters are full, besides from thirty-five to fifty out in the open yard." "None of the people foreign or Chinese, had much sleep last night. The looting was accompanied by such yelling as to rob almost anyone of sleep."

I will also give Mr. Williams' account of his entrance into Nanking in his own words. I would only stop to explain that Hsai Kwan is a prosperous foreignized settlement outside Nanking which has grown up with wonderful rapidity during the past ten years. Mr. Williams landed there and was seeking entrance when the American Consul, Mr. Gilbert, rode up on horse back and told him that the city gate was open. He says: "So I hunted coolies for baggage. With difficulty I found two men who would consent to carry as far as the city gate. Through the ruins of Hsia Kwan still smoldering, over hot streets and bricks, threading our way through twisted telegraph and telephone wires we went to the gate. Only a short distance inside the gate we found one ricksha. We put our things in and walked by it. Shells, soldiers' clothing and some things worse to see were in evidence. We soon met groups of soldiers carrying loot out of the city. This we saw the entire way to our mission (a distance of about five miles).

Margaret Holme, writing on the eighth, says that conditions have so much improved that Mr. Williams has gone over to Kuho, to pay our helpers. The trains and boats are again running and on the sixth, Esther Butler returned from Chi gong shan, where she has been during the hot season. We are sorry to learn that she has not been as well as usual.

From another source we hear that there has been fighting between two factions of the Northern troops, owing to an effort to suppress the looting.

These have been trying days for our Christians, but we are thankful to hear that they are having abundant opportunity to prove the keeping power of Christ and are faithful in their testimony.

Annual Meeting of Boards

During the week of October 19, the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, the Publication Board and the Executive Committees of some of the other Boards will meet in annual session at Richmond, Indiana.

The Executive Committee of the Foreign Mission Board will meet on Monday evening, the 20th, and continue at least until Wednesday, the 22d. The Publication Board will meet the afternoon of the 22d. The Central Committee of the Executive Committee will meet that evening. On the 23rd a conference of the various Boards with the Executive Committee is planned, while on the 24th the Executive Committee will be in session continuing until the following day, if necessary.

It is probable that some other Committees will also meet during the week. Among other matters, the Executive Committee is expected to take up the selection of the General Secretary.

Home Mission Campaign

This season of the year is now being widely used by nearly all denominations for a strong educational campaign in the interest of home mission work. That subject is beginning to claim the serious attention of Friends, but not yet as widely as it should. The campaign centers at Thanksgiving time. As Friends have no organized Home Mission office, the Foreign Mission office will handle the literature this year.

A fine sixteen page announcement is now ready, and will be sent on application enclosing two cents for postage.

It is on the plan of the Livingstone Campaign of last Spring. The main theme is, "What can be done for the foreigners in our midst." The outline includes work for all departments of the Church. The material includes the following: Books—"Immigrant Forces," (58 cents, 42 cents); "The New America," (57 cents, 35 cents); "America, God's Melting Pot," (30 cents).

First figures above, cloth, postpaid; second, paper, postpaid.

Pamphlets, 5 cents each—"The Poles in America," "The Italians in America," "The Bohemians in America," "The Germans in America," "The Hungarians in America," "The Orientals in America," "The Task of the Church in the City."

Suggestions for special meetings, two cents each—To Pastors for Sermons; Outlines for Prayer Meetings; Programs for Young Peoples' Meetings; Suggestions for Sunday-schools; Leaflet, "I am the Immigrant."

An Order of Worship for Thanksgiving Day, 50 cents a hundred.

Thanksgiving Cantata, 28 pages, 25 cents each; $2.50 per dozen.

Immigrant Facts, 8 pages, 3 cents each; 20 cents per dozen.

A Bad Night for America, 4 pages, 2 cents each; 15 cents per dozen.

The Church Missionary Committee, 5 cents.

For Junior Boys and Girls—"Old Country Hero Stories," 30 cents, postpaid; "Just Plain Peter," 25 cents, postpaid.

Picture Stories for small children, complete set of five pictures, 12x15 inches each, with teacher's book, and five stories for the pictures, 35 cents, postpaid.

The above can be ordered through Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana. Orders should be sent in very soon, as the season is fully at hand.

A GOOD DRINK Which Brings Daily Enjoyment

A lady doctor writes:

"Though busy hourly with my own affairs, I will not deny myself the pleasure of taking a few minutes to tell of my enjoyment daily obtained from my morning cup of Postum. It is a food beverage, not an irritant like coffee.

"I began to use Postum 8 years ago, not because I wanted to, but because coffee, which I dearly loved, made my nights long, weary periods to be dreaded and unfitting me for business during the day.

"On advice of a friend, I first tried Postum, making it carefully as suggested on the package. As I had always used 'cream and no sugar,' I mixed my Postum so. It looked good, was clear and fragrant, and it was a pleasure to see the cream color it as my Kentucky friend wanted her coffee to look—'like a new saddle.'

"Then I tasted it critically, for I had tried many 'substitutes' for coffee. I was pleased, yes, satisfied with my Postum in taste and effect, and am yet, being a constant user of it all these years. I continually assure my friends and acquaintances that they will like it in place of coffee, and receive benefit from its use. I have gained weight, can sleep, and am not nervous."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

OCTOBER 26.

SUBJECT—The Sin of Moses and Aaron.

LESSON—Num. 20: 1-13. Read Num. 17-20. Commit verses 11, 12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my rock and my Redeemer.—Ps. 19: 14.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

OCTOBER 26.

TOPIC—Missionary Essentials, Home and Abroad. IV. Going. Mat. 22: 1-10.

Missionary work means migration. As a rule those who need the Gospel must be hunted out where they live. It will not be sufficient to set up a shrine and expect all people to come up and worship.

Paul could not reach the Gentile world by staying at Jerusalem. The Apostles were to be witnesses, not merely at Jerusalem, but "unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Christ's command was to "Go." The slums of the city will not come to the Church. The Church must go to them. Bad politics will not come to the Church to be cleansed. The Church must go where it can cleanse politics. Whether at home or abroad, the call to missions is a call to go, even though it be to the ends of the earth to find men and women who need the Gospel.

Abington Tea Meeting

Little Abington meeting house, near Ogontz, was the scene of an afternoon tea meeting on Seventh-day, the 20th instant, in which about seventy Friends participated. The meeting house was built in 1836. The trees then planted in its ample yard have grown to noble size, and lend that air of quiet peacefulness so dear to Friendly hearts. Two decades ago the wooden partition in the building was removed and the benches faced lengthwise of the room. The room was very comfortably filled by the Friends assembled. The lowering weather prevented an outdoor meeting, as planned, but indoors, cordiality and religious fellowship were unabated.

The meeting was held under the care of the Quarterly Meetings' Committee, several of whom are incorporated with Abington Monthly Meeting to aid it, in its reduced condition, in administering the Discipline. Though the membership of the Monthly Meeting (composed of Horsham and Abington Meetings) is only thirteen, about two score Friends from other meetings live within its limits, and some of them are among the most faithful attenders.

Tea was served during the ingathering from 3:00 to 4:15, at which time our London Friend, Max I. Reich, formerly of Germany, was introduced. The subject of his earnest address was "The Spiritual and the Natural." He began by reading Paul's analysis of his own feelings when he came among the Corinthians, "not with excellency of speech or of wisdom," but knowing nothing "save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." (1 Cor. ii.) He then contrasted the terms, body, soul and spirit, and the conditions implied by each, stating that one might be religious or soulful without being spiritual, the latter condition being dependent upon full surrender to the Cross of Jesus, in addition to the living of a merely religious life. The reality of the Incarnation as an experience resulting in the new birth of the individual in Christ is an essential step in the path of true spirituality. Self-denial in matters of conscience—abstaining from extravagance, the theatre or dancing, are evidences on the side of morality, of the acceptance of the Cross, and constitute part of the true spiritual life, but its full significance consists of more than this; it calls for the presence of Jesus in our lives in daily walk and constant communion.

A brief summary of this kind never adequately reports the true burden or the real life of a spiritual exercise. Under our Friends' concern, the meeting was closely united in a living fellowship which was increased by a period of silence before closing. At the warning of the approaching dusk we scattered to our homes, thankful that once again so many of us had heard the Savior preached in the little drab house by the road.—The Friend.

Teaching the Commandments Diligently

NOW this is the commandment, the statutes, and the ordinances, which Jehovah your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it; 2 that thou mightest fear Jehovah thy God, to keep all his statutes and his commandments, which I command thee, thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life; and that thy days may be prolonged. 3 Hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily, as Jehovah, the God of thy fathers hath promised unto thee, in a land flowing with milk and honey. 4 Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah; 5 and thou shalt love Jehovah thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. 6 And these words which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart; 7 and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 8 And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. 9 And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thy house and upon thy gates.

One of the Best Helps

The Western Christian Advocate, which is one of the best of the Advocate family of Methodist papers, makes an appeal to its readers, which so aptly fits the case of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, that we take the liberty of adopting it as our own, substituting the name of our own paper for the Advocate, as follows:

"Do you know, Brother Pastor (or worker) that one of the best helps you can have in your work is THE AMERICAN FRIEND? Do your Officials know that one of the best methods to help in the assimilation of a family into the Church is the Church paper? Do all concerned in the success of your Church know, that wherever the Church paper is taken there is seldom any trouble about support for the annual budget? The Church paper somehow binds a family to the interests of the Kingdom of God. Now, as the Fall work is being planned, think of the place THE AMERICAN FRIEND ought to have in the homes or our membership. Take your record and find out how many families you have and the number of THE AMERICAN FRIENDS taken. Is there a family without a paper? If so, mark that family, make a list, present the matter before the Officials, and appeal to them to see that every family has a year's subscription. Every family ought to have this paper." $1.50 till January 1, 1915, to new subscribers.

Special Young People's Number

As previously announced, the issue of November 6th of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be a Special Young People's number. We are glad to announce that President Francis E. Clark and Secretary William Shaw of the International Christian Endeavor movement, have, at our request, prepared special messages for our young people, which we have on hands, and which will appear in that number.

Willard O. Trueblood, chairman of the Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting, Lillian E. Hayes of the Winona Young Friends movement, and other leaders in our own denominational work will also be heard from. In addition we are hoping to have a special message from the Superintendent of Young People's work in each Yearly Meeting.

It will be a valuable number. We solicit news about the work of our young people, which must reach this office by October 30th or 31st.

Our Bible School Number

We trust that this number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will prove an inspiration to many Bible Schools. The plans being carried out in the various Yearly Meetings will suggest improvements in the work elsewhere. We are disappointed in not receiving two articles which we had counted strongly upon, and two Yearly Meeting Superintendents failed to respond to our appeal for a message. We are sorry that more of our Bible Schools did not respond to the general invitation to send us news of their work, but on the whole we believe that much good will result. We hope that the fruition will justify the effort.

A Bible School Veteran

In connection with the report of the forty-sixth County Bible School Convention, held at Carthage, Missouri, the first week in October, the Carthage Press has the following statement of the work of Parker Moon, a Friends minister belonging to Kansas Yearly Meeting, and well known to Friends generally:

"In October, 1868, Parker Moon and E. P. Searle, then a resident of Carthage, issued a call for the various Sunday Schools of Jasper County to meet and since that time Mr. Moon has missed but two of the annual gatherings. One of those times he was sick and unable to leave his bed; the other time he was absent from the county.

"The record is one of which he feels very proud. Today he is just as much in evidence as he was back there "in the sixties." Over 50 years of his life have been devoted to Sunday School work. Years may have retarded the swiftness of his step, but have not lessened his enthusiasm. The flame kindled many years ago in this direction has never been quenched and, after half a century of service, Parker Moon is still in the ranks and his advice and counsel in Sunday School matters is not passed over lightly. His long experience and training make him invaluable to the organization which he headed for eight years and now is serving as a vice-president. During the entire life of the organization he has almost constantly held official position. He has attended nine state conventions as a delegate, has been a delegate to four international conventions, and was a delegate to the first world's Sunday School convention which met at St. Louis in 1893.

Keeping Track of Members

In the Men's Friendly Bible Class at the Light Street (Baltimore) Friends Meeting-house, we had trouble with the record of attendance, having about one hundred and twenty-five members, entirely too many for roll call. We now have a large board, black, neatly framed and lettered, with rows of hooks upon which tags are hung, each tag having its proper number and the name of a member on both sides.

As each member enters he takes his tag off the hook and drops it in a basket, the assistant secretary being at hand to see that no one forgets.

Of course, the secretary can easily and quickly mark the absentees on his record book at the end of the session; and as the members pass out, they look at the tags to see who is absent and needs to be looked after.—John R. Cary, Baltimore, Md., in S. S. Times.

A Few Slight Errors

We regret that a few slight errors crept into the issue of last week; nothing serious, but annoying. The editor was away attending Kansas Yearly Meeting, a fact which probably accounts for the delinquency.

A Correction

In the obituary notices last week the name of Catharine Swan should have been Anne Catharine Swan.

Our Bible Schools and the Church

IN OUR boyhood days the Bible School was defined as the nursery of the church. The characterization was not altogether inapt, except that it narrowed the scope of the operations of the Bible School over much, and stamped it wholly as a children's institution, from which the average boy and girl counted upon graduating in the early "teens."

In later years our vision has broadened, and we are coming to recognize that the Bible School is one of the strong arms of power, which the church may use with telling effect in its work of evangelization. Whether the interest be centered in missions, in evangelization, in social service, in education, in the young people or in the mechanism and polity of the church itself, the Bible School may be made to contribute tremendously to the success of all.

Primarily the Bible School is a school for Bible study, but in practical experience Bible study is an ill-defined term. To some it means ancient history, geography, biography, to others it means critical analysis, and to many the statement of abstract but fundamental doctrinal truth. Bible study may mean all of these and more, but unless this study reveals the Book as a message of life and love from the Father, it has fallen short of its highest purpose.

The potentiality of the Bible School, therefore, will not be fully realized until it touches the life of all the membership, the old as well as the young. There can be no graduation from the study of the Scriptures. Christian experience must feed continually upon the revelation of God, and Christian character will be established by the constant assimilation of truth as found in the Word. The Adult class is just as vital to the mechanism of the church as is the Cradle Roll or the Primary Grade.

But the Bible School is more than a place for study. It is a place for inspiration, for training, for receiving instruction in the manifold work which engages the attention of the church. Few have yet realized, perhaps, the potentiality of the organized Men's Bible Classes. If properly affiliated, they may become the means of the moral redemption of almost any city or community. While the majority of Schools are laying emphasis upon the Primary and Intermediate Grades, they will lose tremendously if they fail to appreciate the value of the Adult Classes as a part of the working machinery of the Church.

The weakness of the Bible School movement has been the looseness of its management and organization. How few there are who have read the lesson, much less studied it! Too often teachers consent to go before the classes wholly unprepared to teach, and make the lesson a farce by reading printed questions, answers to which are recited from prepared lesson helps. The importance of the Bible School can never be emphasized properly by such laxity. The church itself should devise a system of credits for work actually done, that will bind the pupils more closely to the varied activities of the church. Standards of conduct should be fixed that will emphasize the dignity and importance of the occasion wherein God is speaking to both young and old through the revelation of His Word.

There is great opportunity for a revival of interest in Bible School work among Friends. The earnest efforts of our Bible School Boards to raise our Schools to a higher plane of efficiency, should find a hearty response from all our membership. The training of heart and soul is vital to all our endeavors as a denomination. Not for its own sake, but for the sake of the more efficient operations of the Church, the Bible School work in all our Friends communities should take on new life and new determination. The whole membership in the Bible School, and every School a Front Line School ought to be the watchwords of our activities for the coming year.

Symposium of Messages and Suggestions on the Bible School

Message From John Wanamaker

PHILADELPHIA, September 29, 1913.

Mr. S. E. Nicholson,

Editor and Manager The American Friend,
Richmond, Indiana.

DEAR FRIEND—Thanking you for your letter of the 16th, requesting a message from me to the Friends of America upon Bible School work in America, I take pleasure in standing up among you by this letter and testifying that I know of no other work that begins to compare in results with that attained by the Bible School in its influence upon the lives of our Country's greatest asset—its young men and young women.

This statement is not made hastily or with a superficial knowledge of the facts, but from a lifetime's experience, embracing an active participation in local, state and National Bible School work.

The modern School, with its Graded Lessons and Adult Bible Classes, is as far advanced over the old-fashioned methods as is the present educational system over the hit or miss methods of fifty years ago.

Now-a-days a scholar's name is placed on the Cradle Roll almost as soon as he or she enters the world, and it not infrequently happens that the scholar continues in the work for the balance of a lifetime.

The influence exerted by the Bible School upon its nearly 14,000,000 enrolled members, is like a sheet anchor in their lives, steadying them in times of temptation, doubt and distress, and keeping them interested in the study of the Word of God, preparing them for this life and the life which is to come.

Even worldly parents realize the blessed power of the Sunday School upon their children and insist that they shall be entered upon its roll and attend its sessions.

If the influence of the Sunday School were removed or lessened, it would be impossible to estimate the lowering of the standards of our whole national life and the evil effects that would follow in its wake.

Prove all things. Hold fast to that which is good.

Very truly yours,

JOHN WANAMAKER.

The Bible School and Missions

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

The Bible School is the strategic point in World Evangelization. If this is to be accomplished in the near future, it will require a Church far better trained and more effective than that of today. The Bible School should be the training ground of the future Church, and that training can not begin too soon, nor too early in life. The classes of little people present the place of highest opportunity. The world vision must be cultivated, and trained service the objective.

How shall this be accomplished? 1st. Training in interest by missionary stories and literature adapted to their age. Everyland is a good example for Juniors.

2d. Children's missionary entertainments. The Missionary Speaker (30 cents) gives exercises and recitations sufficient for several years. 3d. Train in missionary praying. 4th. Train in regular giving. Every School should take a missionary offering at least once a month. 5th. Put the missionary atmosphere in the Bible School, by mottoes, by pictures of missionaries, by picture stories, by missionary books suitable for children; by a great variety of other methods such as can be found in Mr. Trull's "Missionary Methods in the Sunday School" (58 cents postpaid). 6th. Don't become monotonous by always doing the same thing, but cultivate variety in children's exercises.

The Supreme Object of the Bible School

At Indiana Yearly Meeting the Bible School Committee had on display the motto, "Organization is the hope of the Sunday School." In recent years the church is organizing more and more and laying greater stress on plans and methods. One Bible School in Indiana Yearly Meeting recently reported the following officers for the coming year:

Supervisor and Superintendent of Teaching (always the pastor), Superintendent, Assistant Superintendent, Secretary, Treasurer, Literature Superintendent, Musical Director, Chorister, Organist, Librarian, Ushers, Primary Superintendent, Junior Superintendent, Secondary Superintendents of boys and girls' sections, Adult Superintendent, and Home Class, Cradle Roll, Missionary and Temperance Superintendents.

Some one asks, "Is there any need of such complete organization?" In a small school there probably is no need of all the above officers and superintendents, but the principle involved in the plan is essential to the best work. The above school increased its average attendance almost twenty-five per cent the past year, and greatly increased its enrollment and efficiency, nearly all of which are attributable to its efficient organization. In fact, in order to build up a large School, it is generally conceded that close organization must be kept up and energetically worked.

But there is another feature of Bible School work which is of greater significance and more lasting value than large numbers. The Bible as the Word of God, if properly taught, will lead men to Christ. "My word shall not return unto me void." All teachers selected should, as far as possible, be Christians and each teacher should constantly have in mind the salvation of each member of his class.

Some one has said, "The rescue mission is the life-saving station and crew; but the ship must be on the rocks, or the man in the water, before this agency can render help. The Sunday School is a lighthouse; it warns the ship before it gets onto the rocks." In our revivals we are practicing "rescue" work to a large extent, but if the Sunday School will do its part well, fewer people will be found on the rocks.

The revival season is now upon us and the Bible School may render very great assistance in saving people if she will. The teachers know who in their classes are unsaved. When the revival is planned, pastor, teachers and evangelist should work in hearty co-operation. These should seek to win every unsaved person in the school to Christ. The year's teaching has been pointing to Christ. Now if any are still unsaved, special effort should be made to reach a final decision for Christ.

Statisticians tell us that eighty-five per cent of all persons brought into the church last year were brought in through the influence of the Bible School. Then how necessary that all its organization should center around the teacher with the enlarging thought, each pupil, the whole school, the entire church, and the outside world for Christ. This can be done. It should be done. But it will succeed only through united prayer and a faith that rests on the promise of God.

The supreme object then of the Bible School is soul saving and each school should be a lighthouse guiding the children past the rocks of sin to the haven of rest in Christ. It should also be a wrecking crew to rescue all who have fallen upon the rocks.

RICHARD HAWORTH,

President Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, Fairmount, Indiana.

Some Bible School Suggestions

Perhaps no religious organization of modern times has made such rapid strides as has the Sabbath School. Not a few of us can go back in memory to the time when such schools were not very popular and were by no means universal. Indeed, in some localities they were scarcely thought of, and curiously, our first schools consisted of one class with one teacher.

Married people were thought to be too old, and little children too young to attend. But soon expansion began. Classes were formed, and teachers multiplied. Sabbath School conventions were not yet known. Discussions some times took place as how the work might be made more efficient, and this in turn led to conventions, County, State and National.

What instrumentality has done more than the Sabbath School to pass the word of life to all people? Witness the world's convention recently held in Zurich, Switzerland. Delegates were present from all the world, and Japan had the courage to ask the world convention to hold its next session in Tokio, and the convention wisely accepted the invitation.

The ethical and religious value of the Sabbath School depends largely on the superintendent and teachers. Some things a superintendent may do and some he should not. He should know as much about the lesson as any of his teachers; he should give as much time as possible to his teachers and classes; and, having the right to assume that teachers and scholars have read and studied the lesson, it is doubtful if he should take the time to read the lesson in concert or responsively.

As a rule, he should not call on a visitor or stranger to lead in the devotional exercises. This he should do himself, always closing with a verse of song and a benediction. But negatively:—he should not talk too much.

Brother, sister, are you a teacher? Then you like to teach. I pity the man or woman who assumes to teach and yet does not like to teach. Can a preacher preach who does not like to preach? Can you teach if you do not like to teach? The teacher should see the lesson every day in the week; he should be thoroughly filled with it before he goes before his class.

Holding Bible School Pupils for the Morning Meeting

There has been much said and written during the past few years in regard to the growing tendency of the children and many older people to leave at the close of the Bible School. The feeling has been strong that some plan should be discovered by which these pupils could be induced to remain for the morning meeting for worship.

In several cities among different denominations and in a few city meetings in our own denomination a new plan has been tried. The Bible School and the morning meeting have been merged into one service, thus very materially shortening the two. Where the plan has been tried, about ninety percent. of the school remains for the church service. The closing exercises for the school are the opening exercises for the meeting and no intermission is given. The pastor prepares a sermon, short and pointed, and especially adapted to children and young people, but also suitable for older ones as well. The teachers in the smaller classes stay with the children, if need be, and help to keep them quiet, unless they go and sit with their parents. When the school comes together, the classes take the places which they are expected to maintain during the remainder of the meeting. The plan has met with general satisfaction where it has been given a fair trial.

If Friends want the children to remain for the morning service, some plan will need to be tried that will appeal to them and create in them a desire for what will be presented. Some have objected to combining the two services because it cramps, in point of time, the hour for worship. It may do so, but probably the presence of the children and young people is worth as much to the church as an untrammelled hour for worship.

In some places the period for worship precedes that for Bible study. The two usually last about one and three-quarter hours.

No man is entitled to any reward for what he does. No man enters the kingdom of God in the hope of receiving reward. It is always of God's unearned mercy that we have any reward at all for right doing, and not that we are paid for coming to Christ.—R. J. Campbell.

Bible School Messages from the Yearly Meetings

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

We acknowledge with appreciation both the quality and the quantity of effort put forth by our schools to attain to the "Standard of Efficiency." Our points of weakness are many, but facing these with renewed courage we "press toward the mark," which will be achieved only by ceaseless work and abundant sacrifice of time and self-interest.

Our strongest points are perhaps 5, 6, 7 and 9 of the Standard. The Graded Lesson Series is now in use in twelve schools out of a possible fifteen. Most of the schools are identified with County and State work, and contribute to their support. Some are supported by their Monthly Meetings and the entire contribution goes to missions. In most of the schools the subjects of peace, temperance, home and foreign missions are presented at stated times.

The Executive Committee met October 15th and will recommend this year the following policy:

1. Aim for a ten per cent increase in membership.
2. Concentrate upon the development of the religious life of the members, with a view to their definite decision for Christ.
3. Where practicable each Superintendent shall delegate (preferable from among the younger members of the school) one person to represent each department of Sabbath School interest, viz.: Peace, Temperance, Home and Foreign Missions, who shall co-operate with the Chairman of these respective Committees, and plan for the presentation of these subjects at the times designated.

A. VIOLA HORISBERG, Chairman.

Baltimore, Maryland.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The Bible Schools of Canada Yearly Meeting are all very small as compared with some of the schools of other Yearly Meetings. The total enrollment is about one-half of the total membership of Canada Yearly Meeting. One reason for this is, that quite a few Friends have moved out of the reach of a Friends Bible School, but still keep their membership in the home meeting. At the same time I feel that there is a great need, in some places, of the older Friends sharing more of the responsibility of our Bible Schools.

None of our schools use the Graded Lessons, but instead use the Uniform Lessons throughout. Of course, the Graded Lessons are used in other denominational schools in Canada to some extent, but have not been tried in our Bible Schools with the exception of two or three cases.

I cannot say that our members are increasing, but I am confident that there is a great deal of earnest, faithful work being done in our Bible Schools for the promotion of Christ's Kingdom upon earth.

ALICE E. PENNINGTON, Superintendent.

Newmarket, Ontario.

California Yearly Meeting

Our schools are alive and increasing in members and activity. There are many organized classes, a number of primary schools are organized and our watchword is to go forward. We are anxiously awaiting the publication of Sabbath School supplies by the Friends. The enrollment of our smallest school for the past year was 25, and of our largest 842.

Whittier, California.

J. T. HADLEY.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The statistical report given at the recent sessions of the Yearly Meeting showed a gain in Bible School enrollment of 2,472. In the Elementary Division there was a gain of 2,562, but in the Secondary Division there was a loss of 107, while in the Adult Department there was a gain of 17. The reports showed that thirty-six Bible Schools have seventy-six organized classes having International Certificates, and 178 scholars taking a Teachers' Training course.

In the 122 Schools reporting, seventy-six give systematic missionary instruction, five give some instruction but not systematic, while forty-one give no missionary instruction. One hundred and six Schools give systematic instruction in temperance, five give some instruction but not systematic, while twelve give no temperance instruction.

Twelve Schools have reached the required standard of excellence which entitles them to be in the list of Front Line Schools. We may have a steady gain in our Bible Schools, if we will only interest the children. The child is still "in the midst." The introduction of the Graded Lessons the coming year, where not already to use, will lift our Schools to a higher plane of efficiency.

We feel the need of better prepared teachers. Some one has said that these things are essential to the teaching of boys and girls, viz., "knowledge, common-sense and perseverance." That we may know and be our best, it is necessary to master one of the great books on "Teacher Training" each year.

To stop the falling off in the Secondary Division, class organization has been found to be an important factor. At this age young people are in love with their particular group, often belonging to some organization, and it is our duty to make their Bible School work something worth while. Class organization in the Adult Classes is the best means of reaching and holding the members, and large Adult Classes appeal to the boys and girls. Every School should do something to create a missionary atmosphere, and prepare the way for systematic missionary instruction.

AUSTICE M. HARVEY, Secretary.

Traverse City, Michigan.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Iowa Yearly Meeting has always given attention to her Bible School interests. She has ever had among her members those who have believed Bible School work should be done in the most efficient way, and who have labored to that end. But with all this and more, there has come a realization that in far too general a manner the so-called "Bible School" has not been sufficiently a school; and to be more efficient it should be a "Church Bible School," with the best possible organization, classification and equipment adapted to old and young alike. With this apprehension, the following "standard of efficiency" was adopted at the recent Yearly Meeting:

Each school should have a cradle roll, home department, organized Bible classes in secondary and adult divisions, teacher training, graded organization and instruction, missionary instruction and offering, temperance instruction, definite decision for Christ urged, offering for denominational Bible School work and workers' conferences regularly held. In addition, the following standards are being offered to the Quarterly Meetings:

- 1st. Quarterly Meeting Superintendent appointed.
- 2d. Every school visited by Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.
- 3d. Annual Conference or Institute held. One representative from each school present.
- 4th. Every school reported to Quarterly Meeting Superintendent by June 30th.
- 5th. Every school having contributed to Yearly Meeting Bible School work by June 30th.
- 6th. Fifty per cent of schools having cradle roll.
- 7th. Fifty per cent having home department.
- 8th. Fifty per cent having organized classes.
- 9th. Twenty per cent having Graded Lessons.
- 10th. Twenty per cent having teacher training class.

Any Quarterly Meeting reaching any six points shall be designated a Banner Quarterly Meeting. Any Quarterly Meeting reaching the ten points shall be designated a Front Rank Quarterly Meeting. The Yearly Meeting has made possible a secretary under the appointment of the Bible School Board to spend a part of the coming year in the field.

Des Moines, Iowa.

R. R. NEWBY.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

The Bible School work of Nebraska Yearly Meeting is not up to the standard. We are endeavoring as best we can to line up according to the State work, and the plans set forth by the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting. We adopted a recommendation at our Yearly Meeting that our Schools purchase their supplies through the Five Years Meeting Board. We also set aside the second Sabbath in September for taking a special collection to assist in the publication of a Friends Adult Quarterly. These recommendations were sent to all our Quarterly Meeting Superintendents. We are unable to state how well the Schools are responding.

We feel very keenly the importance of the Bible School realizing that the future church depends upon the children. We lack funds with which to push the work, and are praying more and more that the burden of the Bible School work shall rest upon all our members. The lack of our own lesson helps is often pressed upon us, and we will welcome the day when we may have our own publications.

The Graded Lessons are not used extensively. Most of the Schools using such helps find them satisfactory, especially in the Elementary Division. The majority of our Schools observe the first Sabbath of each month for missions, and our last reports showed an increase in contributions for missionary work. Parker Moon, of Missouri, who has been actively engaged in Bible School work for over half a century, attended our last Yearly Meeting, and brought to us an inspiring message concerning the importance of the Sabbath School work in the church.

MINA WORKMAN.

Central City, Nebraska.

New England Yearly Meeting

As Wilbur K. Thomas, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Bible School Work, had not returned from his trip to England in time to prepare a statement for our special Bible School number, at the suggestion of interested Friends, we reproduce a part of his report to the last Yearly Meeting, as follows:

"The Bible School work has made decided progress during the past year. Many things cheer us, but as yet there is no great cause for congratulation. Much is being done, but there is still much to do. As a few Schools are making decided progress, others are standing still or going backward. A few of the encouraging features of the work of the year are: better organization in some Schools; organized class work in a few Schools; special Teacher Training classes; larger enrollment in the total average of the Yearly Meeting, and a manifest desire on the part of a large number of the Schools to know about better things.

"A few of the discouraging things are: lack of devotion on a large part of the membership, the average attendance compared with the total membership being just about two to one; lack of intelligent understanding of the work of a Bible School, and the haphazard way in which many of the Schools are conducted.

"The work is encouraging, but not as much as it should be. It is effective but in many respects woefully lacking. That New England Yearly Meeting, with a membership of 4,000, having a Bible School enrollment of 3,000, two-thirds of whom are not Friends, should report a gradual falling off in membership, indicates an unhealthy condition.

"Your Bible School spent on an average last year about fifty-seven cents per member for religious instruction, Bibles, helps, papers and things to arouse and hold the interest of the enrolled. About fifteen are reported as being so impressed with the teaching they have received, that they decided to become disciples of Jesus Christ. Only about fifteen of our Schools are using the new Graded Lessons in one or more grades.

"Your Committee feels the conditions keenly, and are trying as best they can to better the conditions. By correspondence, Bible School conferences and special visits to local Schools, where way could be opened, advanced work has been presented. In preparation for the coming year, we are organizing our work for more effective service. We are very fortunate in securing the services of Tom A. Sykes as a Field Worker. We have also divided the work into departments, and certain people are to have special charge of certain parts of the work.

WILBUR K. THOMAS, Superintendent.
Boston, Massachusetts.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

There is a growing interest in Bible School work in North Carolina Yearly Meeting. This interest is not manifesting itself at present in any increase of the number of schools, or in attendance, but rather in an effort to improve the quality of the work done in the schools. A year ago only two schools used the Graded Lessons; now five have adopted them and others are considering a forward step along this line.

The work of the Yearly Meeting's Committee is concentrated on the improvement of the teaching force. Conferences for the teachers were held in the various quarters last year and a school of six days for all the teachers in the Yearly Meeting was held in August. We hope to distribute helpful literature to the teachers during the coming year.

The Bible School is the only organization that has for its purpose the instruction of the whole membership of the church. It should, therefore, be looked upon as a means at hand for teaching what the people need to know in order to be efficient Christians and to do distinctively religious work. A knowledge of the Bible is necessary, of course, but in addition to this, one should know something of the missionary literature, social service, and the history and doctrines of his own church. Courses in these subjects should be introduced and the school should be made an efficient organization for teaching all these subjects.

RAYMOND BINFORD.

Guilford College, North Carolina.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

The enrollment of the Bible School army of Ohio Yearly Meeting is a little over 5,000, which is an increase over the former year. There has been an increase in general interest, and also along the line of giving. Some good work has been accomplished the past year through organized classes. One class raised $1,800.00 for the purpose of building an addition to the meeting house. Another repainted, repapered and carpeted the meeting house.

In connection with the Cleveland Bible Institute, a class of twenty-eight graduated in a Teachers' Training course. However, as a Yearly Meeting we are short in Teacher Training classes. The International Lessons are used almost universally, as we prefer to teach the Word of God, rather than a history of religions or the biographies of great men, good as they may be. None of us should get too old or wise to attend the Bible School to study The Book of all books.

During the coming year, by means of Quarterly Meeting conferences, in which local workers together with some prominent speakers will give addresses, we hope to arouse our people to the great importance of

Bible School work. Some one has said that the Bible School is "the most flexible, adaptable, and far-reaching institution ever designed for the conversion of the world."

Statistics tell us that eighty per cent of the membership of the church comes through the Bible School. If these statements be true, then we ought to push the Bible School work with great earnestness. We shall never succeed, however, unless we put blood and brains into the work, and have a real purpose in view, the purpose of the salvation of souls.

CLINTON O. REYNOLDS,
Yearly Meeting Superintendent.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

In the Bible School work in Oregon Yearly Meeting many of the Schools have organized classes, and this has proved to be beneficial to the work. Promotion and Decision days are observed in some of the Schools. The temperance lessons are strongly emphasized.

In one School the Monthly Meeting's Foreign Mission Committee conducts either the opening or the closing exercises once a month. The Graded Lessons where used are strongly approved by some, while others disapprove. Hence a conference has been called to meet during the November Quarterly Meeting at Newberg, at which time this subject will be thoroughly discussed.

There is a demand for Friends publications, and the Friends of Oregon Yearly Meeting are looking with eager expectancy to the Five Years Meeting Bible School Board to meet this demand. Our Schools generally affiliate with the county and state work and contribute to their support.

In the words of Hixson, we believe that "In the problem of the world's evangelization, the Sunday School, of all forms of church organization, is supreme in its possibilities for service. Its field is the world, and it deals with the most impressionable age in life. Because of its youth, its wealth of lives and its resources in gifts and prayers, it stands unmatched in the religious world."

We find only a little more than three-fourths of our membership in our Bible Schools. Hence our motto for this year is, "Every member of the church in the Bible School." This we hope to accomplish by individual effort of the officers and pupils. A suitable blank card is furnished any one who will undertake to work for new members. It is left with each School to arrange such rewards for efficient service as are deemed proper.

The membership card referred to above contains the following:

NEW MEMBERSHIP CANVASS

Name of School.....

Name or Number of Class.....

Name of Worker.....

New members brought in as result of above named worker: (Space for ten new names)

.....Teacher.

EVANGELINE MARTIN,
Newberg, Oregon. Yearly Meeting Superintendent.

Western Yearly Meeting

To me the name "Western" has always had a charm, and still more of a charm has it since it is the name of our Yearly Meeting.

The Bible School work in this Yearly Meeting is progressing along the lines that are followed by all up-to-date Bible schools. With the adoption of the "Standard of Efficiency," as recommended by the Five Years Meeting, comes added fields of labor, added responsibility and added results in our work.

It is the intention of this department of Western Yearly Meeting to urge the carrying out of all these standards in each school, the stronger schools giving aid to the weaker.

The schools of our Yearly Meeting are in the hands of capable, honest, enthusiastic Christian workers, and I predict, with God's favor resting upon us, a bright future for the Bible schools of Western Yearly Meeting.

J. ORD FORTNER, Superintendent

Russiaville, Indiana. Bible School and Education.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

Until about four years ago the Bible School work was in the care of a standing committee appointed especially for that purpose. At that time a few enthusiastic workers conceived the idea of organizing a Bible School Union.

The Yearly Meeting gave its consent and encouraged the organization. A president, vice-president, general secretary, recording secretary, and treasurer were elected and the work begun.

The duties were such as usually devolve upon these respective offices, modified as the needs of the work demanded. We then organized each Quarterly Meeting with a similar set of officers as a Quarterly Meeting Union, to be responsible for the progress of the work within their limits, to gather statistics and other necessary information to be forwarded to the Yearly Meeting Union. An annual congress or mid-year rally with suitable program is held each year, where the needs of the work are considered and worked out.

The executive committee prepared and offered certain standards to be attained by the Bible Schools of the Yearly Meeting, and arranged that at the annual conference and at Yearly Meeting flag pennants, maps or other suitable prizes as may be agreed upon should be awarded to those reaching the higher standards. Since the organization of our Union our attendance, interest and general helpfulness of our schools have been manifestly increased, and the Bible School work is being more and more recognized as an important factor of Church work.

Everybody who has lived at all knows that love is the very heart of life, the pivot upon which the whole machinery turns; without which no human existence can be complete, and with which, however broken and worn, in part, it can still go on working somehow, and working to a comparatively useful and cheerful end.—Great Thoughts.

BIBLE SCHOOL NEWS

There are more than 77,000,000 in the United States who do not attend any Sunday School.

There are 717,230 enrolled in the Congregational Sunday Schools of the United States.

There are more than 10,000,000 children and youth between the ages of five and eighteen receiving no religious education.

A two-year-old Sunday School at Pleasant Valley, Montana, established by a missionary in front of a little cabin to which the settlers had been invited, was organized as a church recently. Rev. A. B. Minameyer, pastor at large, perfected the organization. The church has twelve charter members.

Bethany Presbyterian Church, San Francisco, has combined the Sunday School and Sunday morning preaching service. It is said that the new plan holds the young people for the preaching service. He who discovers some plan to get the people to Church without the multiplication of services, has rendered real service to the Church.

The week of campaign in the interest of Sunday School efficiency at Portland, Oregon, was started in a very successful way. September 21 nearly every one of the twenty Presbyterian Sunday Schools was visited by a field worker, and in a brief address, publicity was given to the meetings in the various churches during the week. In addition, each school was made to feel that it belonged to a larger body that was aiming to do things it was asked to do.

In connection with the regular work of the College of West Africa at Monrovia, Bible Study classes have been formed which include all students from the fourth grade up through the advanced classes. This is to be a basis for the Bible Training Institute stipulated under the Stokes will. The pupils are making good progress under the excellent training of the Rev. J. F. B. Coleman, a regular teacher in the college, and a graduate of Gammon Theological Seminary.

The county Sunday School Association at Philadelphia, Pa., held its convention, which was attended with unusual interest, on October 2 and 3. It was presided over by its president, William H. Scott, and an account of the world's convention at Zurich was given by Dr. Alexander Henry, secretary of the Board of Publication. Rev. W. B. Wallace, of Brooklyn, spoke on "The Sunday School and the Downtown Population." Much attention was given to the teaching of social purity and sex hygiene in the Sunday School class room. Nearly 100,000 Sunday School members paraded the city on Saturday with bands and were addressed by prominent officials.

The Presbyterian Church was the pioneer of the movement to conduct great missionary enterprises in neglected parts of America through a Sunday School Board. It began in 1887 with fourteen Sabbath School Missionaries. It now has 121. It has organized 20,654 schools, from which there have developed 1,500 churches. Besides this, tens of thousands of homes scattered over the plains or in mountain fastnesses have been visited, and the comforting message of the Gospel delivered. The Sunday School missionary is the only pastor many such families know, and a multitude has been led into the Kingdom, back-sliders have been reclaimed, and the family altar rekindled, and homes transformed.—Zion's Watchman.

Vacation Bible Schools

The Daily Vacation Bible School Association has completed its seventh summer. During the summer 50,522 boys and girls, of all races, were provided six weeks of daily manual, moral and musical training, with recreation, at a cost of one dollar for each child enrolled.

The 215 schools, in all the large cities, while entirely unsectarian, were Christian in spirit and teaching. The manual hour each morning showed how far the children were ready to respond to Bible ideals. They willingly gave a share of their best work to children's hospitals and for the national bazaar. They sent 35,000 pennies to the national treasurer for extension in 1914. Pittsburg schools head the list with 8,000 pennies.

This unselfish spirit in the schools would have been impossible if wage-earning had been the dominant note of the 1,003 teachers and helpers. They gave the children a summer of loving service for mere expenses, and at least 300 of the number served without any salary.

The co-operation of churches was essential in every city. That of the colleges was equally necessary. Sixty supporting scholarships were provided by fourteen college societies or faculties, thereby creating twenty schools. Holyoke, Swarthmore, Vassar, and Wellesley each maintained three schools.—C. E. World.

The Organized Class as an Evangelistic Agency

Writing under the above caption in the Adult Student, Clayton O. Tuttle points out that there are so many counter-attractions and interests, that attendance upon services of the church is limited largely to the membership, and discusses the advantages of the organized class in overcoming this condition. The need of men for a Savior is just as great as it ever was. There is today the same deep heart-hunger for the message of salvation, and the power of Christ to regenerate human nature and transform human society was never more largely manifested. The organized Bible class furnishes an opportunity for evangelism that is not fully appreciated. Many persons who would not consider church-membership can be induced to join a Bible class through the influence of some friend. It is not long before he who would not have taken kindly to any suggestion as to his relation to Jesus Christ is not only ready but waiting to be approached on this subject. In the organized class every member should be a recruiting agent.

The work of the organized class is natural, real, gradual, persistent, effective. In the organized class there is found a simple manner of approach, a splendid means of preparing the way through Bible study, and earnest and active Christians in the class have an opportunity to get acquainted with the unconverted, and lead them to Christ.

Another advantage that the organized class has is that it holds the newly-made convert, and helps him in his Christian life. Perhaps the greatest weakness of our evangelistic methods has been the way in which we have abandoned the new disciple as he has entered the church. The Bible class fills a want here. It shields, encourages, nourishes and inspires the young Christian. He finds in the organized class an opportunity to work, and he grows by striving. The organized class becomes a means of grace. The organized class shows remarkable ability for growth.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

President Wilson's message sent to the World's Sunday-school Convention at Zurich packed great truths into a few sentences. It is worthy of careful thought. He said:

"No study is more important to a child than the study of the Bible and the truths it teaches, and there is no more effective agency for such study than the Sabbath school. It certainly is one of the greatest factors in our lives in the building up of character and the development of moral fiber, for its influence begins as soon as the child is able to talk, and continues throughout life. The Sabbath-school lesson of today is the code of morals of tomorrow. Too much attention can not be paid to the work which the Sabbath school is doing."

The Religious Herald says that Southern Baptists have over a million more church members than Sabbath School scholars; and of 23,982 churches, there are 8,333 that report no Sabbath Schools.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Attended by appropriate ceremonies, ground was broken Tuesday afternoon, October 7, for the new parsonage for the Friends' church at East Thirteenth and Lyon streets, Des Moines. Addresses were made by R. R. Newby, the pastor, and H. R. Keates, superintendent of Iowa Yearly Meeting. Other officers of the church and Sunday-school assisted with the program. The parsonage will cost $3,000.00, and is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Elliott. Work on the building will begin at once.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

School at Stella Academy has opened with an enrollment of forty-three. All but five are doing Academy work.

Bertha Stubbs has just closed a very successful pastorate of a year at Glen Elder, Kansas. A. J. Beals, of Ringwood, Oklahoma, will take the work for next year.

A series of meetings began September 14th at Stanwood, in Springdale Quarter, in charge of Susie A. and Samuel A. Shrauner. They continued three weeks, and the blessing of the Lord rested upon the meetings from the very beginning. The messages were given with the power and unction of the Holy Spirit. Twenty-three bowed at an altar of prayer and were saved. Most of these had never known Christ before, but three or four were prodigal sons, and came back to the Father's house. Nine will come into the church. We truly thank God for His blessings to us. A Christian Endeavor Society will be organized at once. We want these young people to stand true and believe the best means to this end will be to get them to work for the Master. Mr. and Mrs. Shrauner have been engaged as pastors at Tonganoxie for the ensuing year.

New England Yearly Meeting

Henniker Meeting, in Salem Quarter, has been greatly blessed the past summer by the coming of Levinus K. Painter, a graduate of Earlham College, and member of Spiceland Monthly Meeting, Indiana, who has felt especially called to the work in the rural communities. His stay of twelve weeks in Henniker has endeared him to the hearts of all. Many families manifested an interest in him and his Gospel messages, the members of which have not been in the habit of attending any place of worship. The meetings were well attended during the entire summer, and many from the cities who were spending their vacation among the New Hampshire hills, found the little Friends' meeting a congenial place to join in worship. These and others who live near, among whom were Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists, helped much in a very material way, in the support of the worker. Levinus Painter's ministry has been sound and effective. The work still goes on under the care of Alice C. Winslow, who has been with us for a year past, and we feel that we owe much to the constant interest and assistance of our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, through whose labors, under the guidance of the Great Head of the church, these helps have come to us.

New York Yearly Meeting

Farrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at Monkton Ridge, Vermont, October 11-12. Among the visitors present was S. N. Stevens, of Ulster County, New York, who was healed of a very painful malady many years ago by prayer, but who is now vigorous at the age of seventy-eight, and able to deliver a lengthy sermon to edification. Lindley M. Stevens and wife, of Poughkeepsie, were also present. The ministry of these Friends was thoroughly spiritual, for which we praise God and take courage.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

At a roll call session of Piney Woods Monthly Meeting held October 4th at Up River, 114 responded. After a blessed season of worship convening at 11:00 o'clock, the business of the Monthly Meeting was transacted in beautiful harmony as usual. We have a splendid Bible School here averaging over 100, also a four teacher graded school. This is one of the best rural communities we know of, and the 135 school children properly trained will mean much for Eastern Quarterly Meeting.

The High Point Friends have just issued along with their new directory of members, a letter to the membership, emphasizing the duty and privilege of private prayer, family worship and church attendance. Beginning with October 19, simultaneous meetings will be held in nearly every church in the city. George N. Hartley is expected to assist Friends at this series of meetings, and it is greatly hoped that this united effort may be of much benefit to the community.

Mt. Airy Friends' Church called James R. Jones to hold services on October 12, when he delivered three strong sermons. He spoke earnestly and with special warmth and power. It will be remembered that he is one of the old soldiers of the Cross. He has been of valuable help to North Carolina especially, preaching the Gospel and laying much stress on repentance. He has given the greater part of his life to this work, and is now as earnest in his Christian service as ever. He is one of the strong ministers of North Carolina Yearly Meeting.

The new Friends' meeting house at Symons Creek in lower Pasquotank County, North Carolina, is nearing completion and was opened for services September 14. A large company was present which deeply appreciated the Gospel messages by Elizabeth White and others. In the afternoon an overflow meeting was held in the adjoining grove to accommodate many who found it impossible to get into the house. An old man was present who attended the last meeting held here by Friends years ago. The attendance was estimated at about six hundred, coming from a radius of from ten to twenty-five miles. It is very gratifying to note the general interest manifested in the reconstruction of Friends' work here, where over two centuries ago our Society organized one of the first religious ventures connected with the early history of this country. The old minutes of Symons Creek Monthly Meeting show an unbroken record of meetings from 1698 (when the Monthly Meeting was held alternately at the homes of Henry White and Stephen Scott, and later at Henry Kealons,' being finally transferred in 1708 to the meeting houses at Symons Creek and Newbegun Creek) to 1856, when the meeting was discontinued and the members were attached to Piney Woods Monthly Meeting. In these passing years the timber on the old lot had grown to be sufficient for the building of a new house. The cutting, hauling and sawing was mostly donated. The best pine tree (about three feet in diameter) had grown on the grave of E. Elliott (stone marked 1818), near the grave of Mordecai Morris, grandsire of the late M. M. White, of Cincinnati, Ohio. We hope soon to further improve the premises, as some donations are to be thus applied. The Bible School was organized October 5th with an attendance of sixty-one, and on October 12th one hundred and twelve were present at Sabbath-school, followed by three services, morning, afternoon and night. The house was too small to accommodate the audience at the afternoon service. The dedicatory exercises will be held as soon as convenient after we get the new seats installed. We hope to cancel the remaining indebtedness on that occasion. Any who feel disposed to assist in this may send contributions to Rufus White, Treasurer, Belvidere, North Carolina. Many have already responded generously. Any one desiring to visit these parts will be gladly welcomed, and will be met by John A. White at Elizabeth City, if notified. R. F. D. No. 1.

Western Yearly Meeting

David and Huldah A. Wright, members of the Friends' Church at New London, Indiana, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on October 8th at their home in New London. They received several valuable presents, besides a purse of $42.50 in gold, with an addition of $8.00 in silver. The dining room was very appropriately adorned with wedding bells and golden draperies. At high noon the bride and groom walked into the yard among about eighty of their friends and relatives, and there repeated the ceremony as they did fifty years ago. It was a happy occasion for all who were present.

On the evening of October 6th at Kokomo, Indiana, a reception was given to David Commons and wife, the former being the new pastor of the Courtland Avenue Meeting. The reception was held at the parsonage, about sixty of the members calling in a body. The occasion was arranged as a surprise by Mrs. Frank Jones and Sarah Smith. The company spent an enjoyable evening and assured the pastor and his wife of their united support in every possible way. A social time was followed by the serving of refreshments.

Miss Katherine Bement Davis, head of the New York State Reformatory for Women and a delegate to the American Prison Congress in session at Indianapolis last week, spoke in the morning service at First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, on October 12th, telling in a very interesting way of the work being done along various lines of prison reform.

Elwood Lewis has accepted the pastorate at Ridge Farm, Illinois, and will move there shortly from his home at Georgetown, Illinois.

The Philippine government has set aside a fund of $750,000.00 to be loaned to sugar planters to assist them in the making and marketing of the crop this year.

BIBLE SCHOOL NEWS

California Yearly Meeting

The Friends' Sabbath-school was organized at Denair three years ago last May with about forty members. We now have an enrollment of one hundred and twenty-two and an average attendance of ninety-eight. The primary, junior and intermediate classes are using graded lessons. A teacher training class of over twenty members meets once a week. Eighty-five percent. of the local church membership are regular in Sabbath-school attendance. The school is maintaining a high standard in Bible study, and we feel that we can show greater progress in the future.

The Pasadena Bible School has a membership of about two hundred and thirty, distributed over several departments as follows: Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate and Adult. There is, besides, a Home Department Class of twenty-five members, and a Cradle Roll of twenty-five. Five classes are organized. Once a month there is a missionary talk or exercise, and during the past quarter the missionary collections have amounted to $30.00. The average weekly collection is about $4.50. September 28 was observed as Rally Day when two classes had one hundred percent. of the membership present. A review of the quarter's lessons was given in an interesting manner by a group of boys and girls representing the twelve tribes of Israel, each one outlining the events of one lesson.

The Friends' Sunday-school at Whittier on September 28, set a record and perhaps a world record, when it was announced at its annual Rally Day that the membership of the school included a maximum age limit of more than one hundred and three years. The oldest member of the school is Lydia Heald Sharpless, more than one hundred and three years old, and the youngest member of the Cradle class was little Miss Williams, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Williams, who will hereafter celebrate September 27 as her birthday. For years the Friends' Sunday-school of Whittier has held the record as the largest in the world of the Friends' denomination. The annual Rally Day is always a large and enthusiastic affair and the exercises this morning drew an attendance that made it impossible for all departments to be seated in the auditorium at once.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Concord Bible School in New Garden Quarter is quite alive under the superintendency of Howard Pickett. The members are almost all of them in the habit of remaining to the church services immediately following. These Friends believe that their children will be better church attenders in the future if they never form the habit of leaving before the service now.

Although Chester Bible School has lost some of its faithful officers and teachers recently by removal, and also because its young people have gone elsewhere as teachers in public schools, yet the attendance is about the same as before, because of new scholars which have come in. Miss Edith Hampton as associate superintendent and teacher of the young people's class, is a great help to the school at this time.

The Bible School at Chester, Indiana, though small, is well organized and doing splendid work. The past summer their three younger classes studied the life of Joseph as a continuous story. Each class took up the points of his life that most appealed to them. The teachers made books of writing paper for the pupils, and they wrote the story in twelve chapters, illustrating with their own drawings or cuts from papers. Rewards were given for the best work done. They have all departments actively working in their school.

At Fairmount, Indiana, the Friends have the largest Bible School in the town. Their average attendance the first three quarters of 1913 was 319, the third quarter being 350. For the same three quarters of 1912 the average was 256, which shows an increase in the average of 63. This growth is traceable to three sources, viz., 1. Efficient teachers. 2. General management. 3. Commodious new quarters sufficient to accommodate twenty-five large classes.

Little Ridge School more than doubled its attendance in one month in a contest for visitors, many of whom enrolled as regular pupils, thus greatly enlarging the school. The school is thoroughly

The Bible Schools of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting on September 13th held graduating exercises in Teacher Training at Fairmount, Indiana. These were under the direction of the superintendent, Sadie B. Harvey. E. Howard Brown, of Earlham, Iowa, gave a splendid address to the graduates, five of whom received the state diploma for the First Standard Course, and nine others who had completed a reading course for which they were entitled to a certificate of efficiency. Over sixty had taken most of the work. The Yearly Meeting superintendent of Teacher Training, Ancil E. Ratliff, was present, and made a short talk and presented the diplomas. The occasion was a red letter day for teacher training in the Quarterly Meeting. Five classes in different meetings were reported as taking the work. Several other individuals in the Quarterly Meeting had previously received diplomas and were recognized that evening.

Report of Friends' Sunday-school of Winchester, Indiana, for the first six months of 1913:

Total number of attendance, 7,161, making an average attendance of 275 November 26. The second quarter was the largest attendance, the same being 3,991, with an average attendance of 307. The largest monthly attendance was the month of June, with an attendance of 1,438; the smallest monthly attendance was February, with an attendance of 768. The largest weekly attendance was May 10, with an attendance of 376. The smallest weekly attendance was March 23, with an attendance of 143. There was a balance in the treasury January 1, 1913, of $8.68. The amount contributed by the school for the first six months of 1913 was $176.11, making a total received by the treasurer of $184.79. The amount disbursed by the treasurer was $150.19, leaving a balance of $34.60 in the treasury. The largest contribution was the second quarter which was $96.84. The first quarter was $79.29. The largest monthly offering was May, which was $34.39. The smallest monthly offering was February, which was $23.70. The largest weekly offering was May 11, which was $10.24; the smallest weekly offering was March 23, $4.46. The school seems to be in a healthy, prosperous condition, doing good work, and has been highly favored by distinguished speakers of state and national reputation. The school has been well represented in the various township, county and state conventions.

October 12th was Rally Day at the Fairmount, Indiana, Friends' Bible School. A special program was rendered. The attendance was over 450. On the Sabbath previous, diamond shaped tags were pinned on each pupil. On each tag was printed "Rally Day, Friends' Bible School, October 12th, I'll be there." Two extra tags were given each pupil with the request to bring two more pupils on Rally Day. Eighty-one promotion certificates were given out and twenty-five had recently been transferred from the Home Department to the regular school. One class reported an increase of sixty in its enrollment the past year.

The Friends' Bible School at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, will observe Rally Day on Sabbath, November 19. A list of individuals living in our community, who do not attend Bible School, has been made, their names written on slips of paper and the slips distributed among the members of the school, except those in the Junior department and younger. The member receiving the slip agrees to write a letter to the individual whose name appears thereon, two weeks, and a post card one week, before Rally Day, inviting him to attend. The territory in which the school is located has been divided into six districts, and a team of two workers appointed to personally invite all those who have formerly been written to, to attend. These invitations will all be extended on the same day. To prepare these teams of canvassers for their work, a very impressive consecration service, conducted by one of our most spiritual members, will be held at the close of school on the Sabbath preceding Rally Day. We confidently expect a large number of those invited to attend and will endeavor to so interest them that they may become members of our school.

The First Friends' Sunday-school of Marion, Indiana, has just closed a very successful year's work, under the superintendency of W. S. Darter. The school has an enrollment of over 350, and the average attendance is very good. A splendid orchestra adds to the interest, and the singing under the leadership of W. O. Carroll, is conducted with spirit and enthusiasm. There are eighteen classes, including six which are regularly organized, also many primaries using the graded work, superintended by Mrs. Ora Harris. Mrs. Elias Bundy is in charge of the Cradle Roll, with forty-six babies enrolled. Diplomas are awarded and promotions made regularly from one department to another. The Home Department is faithfully served by Mrs. Carrie Moon, with a membership of sixty. Asa Wimpy is chairman of the Sunday-school Committee appointed by the Monthly Meeting, and this committee has general oversight of the work. Special missionary exercises are on the program the first Sunday of each month, and most of that day's collection is sent to the foreign field. A birthday offering is taken each Sunday and that is also given to foreign missions. The entire sum thus given by the school last year was $107.95. The school has two banners which are awarded each Sunday, one to the class having the largest percent. of its enrollment present, and the other to the class giving the largest collection per capita of those present. On October 5, the Superintendent gave a prize to the class which had won the attendance banner the largest number of times the past quarter, and this prize was taken by the young men's class, which has an enrollment of about twenty, and is taught by W. A. Mills. The prize for the class having won the collection banner most often was taken by a class of boys, known as the "Sons of William Penn," taught by Lee Malott and McClellan Heavilin. The prospects for the coming year's work are very bright.

Stomach, Nerves and Thinker Restored by Grape-Nuts Food.

The number of persons whose ailments were such that no other food could be retained at all, is large, and reports are on the increase.

"For 12 years I suffered from dyspepsia, finding no food that did not distress me," writes a Wis. lady. "I was reduced from 145 to 90 lbs., gradually growing weaker until I could leave my bed only a short while at a time, and became unable to speak aloud.

"Three years ago I was attracted by an article on Grape-Nuts and decided to try it.

"My stomach was so weak I could not take cream, but I used Grape-Nuts with milk and lime water. It helped me from the first, building up my system in a manner most astonishing to the friends who had thought my recovery impossible.

"Soon I was able to take Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast and lunch at night, with an egg and Grape-Nuts for dinner.

"I am now able to eat fruit, meat and nearly all vegetables for dinner, but fondly continue Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper.

"At the time of beginning Grape-Nuts I could scarcely speak a sentence without changing words around or 'talking crooked' in some way, but I have become so strengthened that I no longer have that trouble." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The list of officers is changed but little, and the list of teachers is also much the same as last year, with some additions, and the same excellent quality of faithful devoted service will be expected of them as in the past. On the evening of September 22, the Superintendent met at the church in conference with all the officers, teachers, and Sabbath-school Committee. Plans for the year's work were discussed, and entered into with enthusiasm. Refreshments were served, and all departed encouraged by the outlook for the future.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Friends' Sabbath-school of Des Moines, Iowa, was reorganized October 1st. Oliver Comfort is still Superintendent, and almost all the other officers and teachers remain the same. Since it was moved into the new church it has been steadily growing in attendance. Some of the rooms are being handsomely furnished. Rally Day is to be observed October 19th. The graded lessons are used. The four more advanced classes are named for George Fox, Elizabeth Fry, John G. Whittier and Rebecca Nailor. Special exercises are conducted frequently in the school. Temperance days are taken note of and many good lessons are taught in connection with the Bible Lessons.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

The High Point Bible School, instead of having a regular Rally Day, made a special effort to have all the children present at the morning meeting on October 5th when the pastor, Lewis W. McFarland, preached a special sermon to the children. Seats were reserved for the youngest classes, and the house was crowded. A number of those on the Cradle Roll manifested their presence. The annual roll call of members of the meeting by the clerk of the Monthly Meeting, William T. Parker, followed, when more than one hundred and twenty-five responded to their names. This close union of Bible School and meeting, we believe is valuable.

Western Yearly Meeting

After serving the Bible School at Paoli, Indiana, as Superintendent for ten years, J. J. Copeland declined to accept another term. As a token of esteem and appreciation, he was presented with a beautiful silver loving cup engraved, "Presented by Friends' Bible School to J. J. Copeland, Superintendent, 1903-1913." Under the leadership of Mr. Copeland the school has been brought up to a high standard. We now have nine good classes, besides Cradle Roll and Home Department. Mrs. Eva

The Chicago Bible School is unusually favored at this time in its number of competent teachers. Many of these are college people and earnest advocates of graded lessons in all the classes. Ruthanna M. Simms as Superintendent, has been endeavoring to bring the school up to the front line requirements in all directions, even though the attendance may not be so large as at some of their neighboring churches.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

October 12th was Rally Day at the Wilmington Friends' Bible School. The attendance was 501, which was far in excess of any previous attendance. Not over thirty or forty of those in attendance were visitors, and many of these enrolled as members. Two-thirds of those attending were adults. Thirty-five children, who had recently passed their fourth birthday, were promoted from the Cradle Roll into the Primary Department, and received their diplomas.

Mission Work in Jamaica

The following extracts from a letter written by Alice I. Kennedy, are furnished us by Sada F. Stanley, who is at home on furlough:

"I am delighted that Miss White is so soon to return. I will be able to go back to Albany or Port Maria. Misses Eva Allen and Mornan are taking the Annotto Bay Hospital work and Osborne C. E. work. I will still give my two Sundays a month at Annotto Bay.

"The dedicatory services of the Trinity Chapel school near Port Maria were held Sunday last, September 28th, and were a real success, I believe. All the speakers who were announced on the cards of invitation disappointed me, but I had committed everything so thoroughly into the hands of the Lord that I felt anything that came must be right. Mr. Plant had fever and was unable to come. Mr. Hopkins had to sail to New York on Saturday, and Rev. McLaughlin started home from Montego Bay Saturday, hoping to come on Sunday, but the train was derailed near Chapelton, and he did not reach home in time to come.

"Mr. Kangaloo came though, and Mr. Kurtzhalz, Mr. and Mrs. Brown, the two Misses Allen, Deen and his mother-in-law, from Burlington, and three Indians from Fellowship (forty-five miles away). Kissoons, Jaichand, and Monalal, together with one Indian man from Orange Hill, were there. A cart load of Indians came over from Wentworth; Llanrumney Indians turned out in large numbers, and some came from Trinity and other nearby estates.

"We stopped at Llanrumney on the way over and Manchaund was married and ten babies were named. One baby was carried to the church to be named, making eleven for the day. One person was received into the church, and three gave their names as candidates for membership. The Indians all felt very happy over the day, and that is what makes me feel that it was really a successful day.

"Mrs. Darmer came up from Seaside. The offerings have come up to about $75.00. All of the East Indian churches gave to help us. Burlington gave $5.00; Fellowship, $3.50; Annotto Bay, $12.50; while Port Maria church voted $10.00. Kissoon said Port Maria was the youngest church. He rather spoke of it as Annotto Bay's child, and said what he thought they ought to do, and they all fell in with his suggestion. God is good and I cannot cease to praise Him."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

NOVEMBER 2.

LESSON—Num. 22: 2-6; 24: 10-19.

Read Num. 21-24. Commit verses 12, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—A double minded man, unstable in all his ways. James 1: 8.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

NOVEMBER 2.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. XI. His Heavenly Helper. Heb. 13: 5-15. (Consecration Meeting.)

What a comfort it is to realize that while we are beset upon every hand with temptations, we can know the presence of Jesus Christ in our lives as a shield against all sin and tribulation!

Christ performed His work while on earth by preaching His truth, and offering Himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. He then went back to be with the Father, but only that by the power of the Holy Spirit, He might be revealed in greater beauty and power to the world.

Experiences akin to the Transfiguration may come to any life wholly consecrated to God. It is well to treasure these as epochs in our lives, as milestones marking the progress of our Christian journey.

Every Christian should depend much upon the Holy Spirit as a guide as well as a Comforter and a Revealer of Jesus Christ. It is by communion with the Father that the greatest help comes with which to face heroically the duties, trials and struggles of life.

A Memorial to Richard Stockton

A tablet in memory of Richard Stockton, signer of the Declaration of Independence, has been placed in the cemetery adjoining the Friends' meeting-house at Stony Brook, near Princeton, New Jersey, by the New Jersey Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. On the afternoon of October 4, Richard Stockton III, a great-great-grandson of the signer, unveiled the simple bronze marker. A brief address was made by John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University.

A few facts about this old meeting-house may be of interest to all Friends. The lot on which it stands was purchased in 1709 from Benjamin Clark, for the nominal price of five pounds. In 1726 the first meeting-house was built, but in 1760 the present structure was erected on the old foundation. A wall was placed around the cemetery in 1859, costing over a thousand dollars. Recently the stones have been reset in concrete. The meeting was laid down in 1878, but the house and yard are kept in excellent condition, and Friends stopping in Princeton will find them well worth a visit.

The Power of a Living Christianity

THE very church itself, accepting Christianity, is a society still honeycombed with the gangrene of the selfishness Jesus came to cure. Honest Christendom knows in its soul that its putrefying sores are the sores of its unfaithfulness—not of its Lord's life. These hated spots fester where it had rejected its Lord's blood. Christendom knows Christ never had a real chance yet in His own church—say nothing of the rest of the world. The power of the living Master does work with thousands—does make them new creatures—heroic missionaries, self-forgetful comrades of the poor, unresting mothers, steadfast fathers, dependable sons, tender daughters, sacrificial ministers of salvation and consecrated almoners of many another godly grace for men. Even the veriest cynic knows some real Christians. Fill the world with such real Christians, and injustice and oppression would flee forever—laws and devices of men being needless to hasten their exit. A craven church might doubt God and say so many real Christians could never be. But a church worthy of Jesus will vow that at least the power of His Spirit to make men right-living brothers of men in this world shall not be discounted until, for one generation at least, He has been given free way to prove it. And now is the time not to doubt Him—But to go in for living Christianity to the limit—And see if it doesn't demonstrate itself equal to all necessities, social as well as spiritual.

A Clubbing Offer

Friends and the United Missionary Campaign

The attention of Friends generally throughout the American Yearly Meetings is hereby called to the approaching Interdenominational United Missionary Campaign. The conferences for the promotion of this most important movement will be held in all parts of the United States between now and the middle of next February, under the management of leaders in home and foreign mission work of the principal denominations. Other churches than ours are now actively at work in preparation for it. As a single illustration mention may be made of the gathering of Methodist men which is to convene in Indianapolis this week where some three thousand men are expected to be in attendance at their own expense.

The hour is at hand when American Friends should awaken to the vision which is breaking in upon other churches of the unprecedented opportunities and tasks which are confronting the Christian world today. This matter was brought forcibly before the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting at its annual session in Richmond, Indiana, last week, and they strongly urge the importance of Friends in all communities throughout the country being well represented in the conferences nearest to them.

By order of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting.

ALLEN D. HOLE, Chairman.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS, General Secretary.

Meeting of the Boards

Last week was an unusually busy week for Friends, the occasion being the annual meeting of some of the Boards and the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting at Richmond, Indiana. The Foreign Mission Board and its Committees were in session from Monday afternoon until Thursday noon. On Wednesday and Thursday the Evangelistic Board was in session. On Wednesday afternoon, the Publication Board and the Board on the Welfare of the Negro met. On Wednesday evening, Richmond Friends gave a reception to members of the various Boards.

The Central Committee of the Executive Committee met on Wednesday evening and Thursday forenoon, while in the afternoon a general conference of the members of all Boards present was held, at which time each Board reported on the present condition of its work.

The Executive Committee met in the evening, closing its sessions on Friday evening. While a large number of important matters were considered, the principal subject was the selection of a General Secretary. After extended and prayerful consideration, the Committee selected Dr. Joseph John Mills, of Pasadena, California, to this position for the coming year. Under a special arrangement he will inaugurate and establish the work during the year from his home at Pasadena, while Prof. Allen D. Hole, of Richmond, Indiana, chairman of the Executive Committee, will for this period have charge especially of correspondence relating to the work of the Boards. It needs to be said that Dr. Mills accepted the trust involved in this position, only after he felt it was a clear call to duty. Further details of the Secretaryship and other matters considered by the Boards will appear later.

Joseph James Neave

Many Friends in America who remember the visits of Joseph J. Neave to this country in 1864-65 and later in 1900, will regret to learn of his death this autumn at his home in Sydney, New South Wales. An Englishman by birth, he has traveled extensively, preaching the gospel wherever he went, but for many years he has resided in Australia. The London Friend speaks of him as follows:

"He followed with the eye of a seer events passing in the world around him, and saw therein the working of spiritual forces for good or evil, but ever with the conviction of the final triumph of good. To him these unseen forces were intensely real, and he wrote of them as the old Hebrew prophets would have done, or the Jewish enthusiasts of later days. He saw visions and dreamed dreams which, in a matter of fact age, he related with the naive simplicity of an old time mystic. * * * With a somewhat rigid adherence to the form of faith in which he had been matured, he could not follow all the workings of new and strange forms of thought. But he had that which is above formula, dogma, or creed, a deep baptism of the Holy Spirit, that peace of which our Lord spake as given not as the world giveth, a faith which overcometh the world and ever giveth the victory."

World's Purity Sunday

Apropos of the meeting of the seventh International Purity Congress at Minneapolis, Minnesota, November 7-12, Sunday, November 9th, has been designated as "Purity Sunday." Every minister who preaches on that day is asked to speak on the question of social and personal morality and for the annihilation of commercialized vice. By sending a stamp for reply, full information can be secured from the "World's Purity Federation," La Crosse, Wisconsin.

Walking With God

THE solace of sympathetic companionship is like a healing balm to a weary heart or an abiding joy that comes to a troubled soul. Humanity craves fellowship, not alone in suffering or yet in joy, but in the higher things that make for growth and the establishment of positive character. The association of kindred spirits, the fellow feeling that grips the affections of those who toil together for a common cause, the blending of lives into a communal brotherhood of friendly and loyal adherents to a common faith, these are the elements that transform the wrecks of human character into loving and companionable beings and make oases out of lives that have been laid waste by the barrenness of sin.

Viewing thus the sympathetic side of human life and understanding its imperative demands for companionship, it is not difficult to find the point of human contact with the Divine. Communion with God is the most sacred and no less the most blessed experience that may come to a human soul. It betokens fellowship no less than discipleship and guarantees a fruition of joy and love and faith and consecration and glad service and an abundant reaping with which no other experience of human life can compare. Thrice happy is he who has learned how to approach God, not as the loyal subject of a King upon the throne, but as the companionable child of a sympathetic and beneficent Father.

Religion is not a myth. Our companionship with God can be a genuine experience. The communion of Spirit with spirit is a verity which no one can dispute who has found the inner circle of association with Jehovah. Above philosophy or dogma, outside the realm of scientific pronouncement, unexplainable by the analogies of natural phenomena, appealing only to the consciousness of the inner and higher life, fellowship with Christ and the Father by the power of the Holy Spirit is the acme of religious development, the realism of an abiding faith, and should be the goal of all religious endeavor.

One of the most significant utterances of the present day is the recent address of Sir Oliver Lodge as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. In what may be termed a protest against the scientific dogmatism that would seek to deny all religion that is not discovered within the realm of its investigations, he says: "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity, and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it; the actions of Deity make no appeal to any special sense—only a universal appeal; and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity."

Critical research, now perhaps more than ever before, recognizes not only the reasonableness of a religion that meets the heart needs of humanity, but the vital reality of a religious experience that accords with the testimony of those who walk with God. Religion is a matter of faith, but faith is the forerunner of knowledge. "Acquaint now thyself with Him and be at peace; thereby good shall come unto thee," is a bit of religious philosophy whose truth has been verified by all the saints of earth.

Enoch and Noah were men of faith and obedience, and they "walked with God." Not alone for personal delight and sympathy, not alone for the joys of Divine companionship, not for selfish profit, but for the equipment it brings for beneficent service, should men seek to walk with the Lord. It is an experience that will satisfy the cravings for companionship as nothing else can do. Whether in the home or on the farm, in the office or at the forge, in the busy work-a-day life or in the meeting for worship, the call is ever present to walk in fellowship with God. Whatever the burdens of life may be, and they are multiplex, the companionship of Jehovah will lighten the load and bring rest to every sin-sick soul. The walk with the Lord is a highway that touches the richest experiences of human life and leads direct to the Paradise of God.

Some Impressions of English Young Friends

BY LILLIAN E. HAYES

My visit to the Mother Country was not with any patronizing desire to convert the English Friends to any form of worship or to arouse them to accept American ideas, but with a deep concern to share their experience and to try to understand more fully the place we must take in the world.

There was a hearty welcome awaiting us at Liverpool. Ideas that Young Friends in England are old before their time, or are so very quiet and sober, vanished, for this was a gala week, and as they themselves expressed it, "We had a ripping time." But after play hours, and tea, we found sweet fellowship in a quiet talk around the fireside.

A four-mile walk in the country was the best way to get acquainted and I still have visions of muddy shoes (which the maid quickly cleaned), huge bunches of yellow, prickly, sweet-scented gorse, and a big appetite. Always in our discussions we had the English and American view and learned that we have much to gain from a study and comparison of each other's methods. It is easy to find an answer to the question, from whence does their power come? English Friends are slow in moving out, but they are certain of having been divinely led and directed before going.

The old meeting houses, many of them hidden from view, with their ivied walls, seem to throb with the story of the early days of Quakerism. It was not a difficult matter to sit on the straight-backed benches, in the cool, silent, undecorated room for an hour or more, listening to the sounds outside, to be sure, sometimes to the voices of children playing in the streets, or bird songs, or perhaps the chimes of a village church near by; but there was an Inner Voice which bore sweet cadence to Him whose heart strings were in tune, bringing messages of love, joy and peace. I was oft reminded of the words of one Friend, "God's clocks keep perfect time. Wait for thy life to be measured out to thee. Wait!"

The pastoral question was much discussed, and always we were brought to face a great need; ours no doubt, to "tarry till endued with power from on high," theirs perhaps to "go work today in my vineyard."

A journey in the quaint carriages on the railway, takes us to London, where we meet the same earnestness and are asked the same questions. A few days preceding London Yearly Meeting, seventeen Young Friends went to Jordan's Farm for the week end. The journey was taken in the train to Gerrards Cross, then a two and half mile walk down lanes, through fields of daisies and buttercups, past farmyards, over stiles to the Old Farm where tea was served. The girls of the party roomed in the Hostel, and the boys in the "Barn Dormitory." This was the Annual Business Meeting of the Young Friends, who work under the direction and with the financial help of the Home Mission and Extension Committee.

All business sessions began with a period of devotion. Among the things discussed were: "How the Meetings for Worship can be made a time of refilling," "The Field Secretary," who was asked to continue his work; and "Intervisitation between English, Australian and American Young Friends." Some criticisms of older Friends were discussed also. The Meetings for Worship were thought by some to be too large. In such case it was suggested that they be divided; the Meetings for Worship are the center, hence they should be emphasized.

Adult Schools were also criticised, and the question was discussed, "What ought the attitude of the Young Friends be to the Adult School?" It was suggested that they should emphasize the Adult School and see that Young Friends have a place of service. The criticism that Young Friends are not "keen" on attending the business meetings was accepted, which American Young Friends must accept also.

English Tramps are quite different from American ones. They need to be fed, but do not beg. An English Tramp is a walk or cycle to outlying meetings that have been abandoned. The Young Friends who join the Tramp send out previous invitations to people of the neighborhood to meet this party of Young Friends in a meeting for worship either in some Meeting House or some Friend's Drawing Room. It was suggested in the Tramp discussion that they combine hay-making with these meetings. Young Friends were encouraged to visit weaker meetings, mostly new ones, and to strengthen them. A sub-committee was appointed to visit Quarterly Meetings in extension work.

On Sunday morning we made our way through the beech wood and cherry orchards to the quiet little Meeting House of Jordans. The plain dress and speech of our forefathers had been discarded, but the message remained unchanged. We met in silence and tried to hear the voice of God speak to our hearts. As we entered the little gate, we felt the spot was holy ground, for the entire neighborhood is inseparably connected with the heroic times of religious persecution. As I sat there in the stillness of that Sabbath morning, wonderful peace and joy filled my heart; and again came the words, "They that wait upon the Lord, shall renew their strength." This was indeed a time of refreshing, a splendid preparation for London Yearly Meeting which followed.

The Young Friends Meeting on Saturday evening of London Yearly Meeting, was a meeting for Worship. No one was asked to speak. Old Friends were asked to stay away. The messages were brought by Young People. They were short but full of power.

Young Friends in Ireland are, to use the English expression, "very keen" and a "jolly sort." They held a very successful and helpful Conference last year, and have a committee appointed to advance the work amongst Young Friends the coming year. A committee was appointed to aid this committee in preparing addresses for the Young Friends Deputation.

There seemed to be a lack of interest in Missions, and a committee was appointed to create interest by organizing Mission Study Circles. They have asked some English Young Friends to go to Ireland to press the claims of Foreign Missions in a Foreign Mission campaign.

Some one asked, "What is an Irish Friend?" The answer was given in true Irish fashion, "Friends who are Irish as far as possible." We are hoping that some of our Irish Friends will join the English Deputation to visit America next year, and look forward to greeting them on the shores of Winona Lake.

To us in America there comes the call to loyal service, under the Divine leadership. Such a service for others is a sure path of blessing for ourselves, but it will mean sacrifice. Our power of giving may be small, yet we too, just as much as our friends across the sea are stewards of what we possess. And let us never forget that after we have waited till we have received the fresh anointing, endued with power from above, there must come action; and it is our duty to give liberally, as we are able, of our strength, of our time, ourselves, anything, everything that comes between us and our Lord, to the work of the Kingdom.

Let us rejoice in such a sacrifice, for, in the words of the president of the Irish Young Friends Association, "We have One with us who is certain of victory under whose guidance we cannot fail, or only with that victorious failure which was His at Calvary."

Dunreith, Indiana.

Simultaneous Evangelistic Effort

BY DAISY DOUGLAS BARR

I am deeply impressed that the action taken by Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings to hold simultaneous meetings for evangelism and church instruction cannot help but prove a great blessing to Quakerism in this state. The fact that so large a number are interested in the same thing at the same time should be a stimulus. We remember the wonderful record given us in the Acts of the Apostles setting forth the power of being at one accord.

With our democratic ideas and methods, it is very easy to lose touch with the larger number, forgetting that we are a part of a great whole and should work for the betterment of all and not for ourselves or our own small community only. To have every Friends' meeting house in either of these yearly meetings open at one time cannot help but give each of us an interest in every other meeting.

The prayer of faith that should ascend the Hill of the Lord in a time like this would surely make our own prayers seem less feeble. Having been in evangelistic work a great deal myself, I have often been fearful lest we might drift too far toward the spectacular. Success of a meeting does not always depend upon numbers or great outward demonstrations.

In my early ministry, I used to hear a great deal said about "Convinced Friends." Would it not be well in these special meetings to make our point of emphasis the doctrines and beliefs of Friends? I find people in every community that do not know how we differ from other denominations. They seem to think that since we have lost the plain garb we have lost our message. I find among professional and thinking people a great desire for a simple religion, and when told of our message, are surprised to know that they have lived in the limits of a Friends' meeting without the knowledge of these things. With our present methods the opportunity for developing the gifts of our young people often becomes a serious problem.

In these simultaneous movements, will it not be possible to find out the ability of these young Friends, and use them in these services? I often hear Friends say, what shall we do for evangelists? Now we have persons in every meeting that have large executive ability. Why not put the responsibility upon the shoulders of the local people and develop their latent powers?

I hope every meeting in the two yearly meetings will lay this movement to heart. Look over your own field and see if there is not a large number of persons without church affiliations, who if they were carefully taught the doctrines of Friends, which have been so dear to many of our hearts, would cast in their lots with us, thus strengthening our forces, and receiving what many of us believe to be the best interpretation of Christ and His Church.

The more we put into these efforts the greater blessing and benefit will come to us, and I trust that in this effort we shall be awakened to the needs of the vast number both in our denomination and within our field of operation.

Being Holy in Spirit

BY EDWARD WING

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

These words of our Lord when taken with the two preceding illustrations, stand out as one of the most perfect examples of art in teaching that can be found in the literature of the world, and impress upon us a truth that is as much needed today as when they were first uttered. Let us for a moment take a look at these pictures. A man in his need goes to a friend at midnight and asks for the loan of three loaves of bread. It is inconvenient. Motives of pure selfishness prompt him to refuse, but the friend is persistent. He wearies him with his demands until the same motive of selfishness prompts him at last to yield, without the slightest thought of another's need.

Here Jesus who had just been teaching his disciples how to pray and who would now lead them out in faith in God's benevolent purpose toward them beyond where human illustration is possible, begins with this picture representing the lowest possible motive for human action—selfishness. Then suddenly the picture changes, and he turns the thoughts of his disciples to the highest impulse that the world previous to his coming had ever known—a father's love and devotion for his child. By a single step he had touched the limits of human motives. Then by the impulse which their imaginations had gathered in its quick flight from the lowest to the highest motive, he projects their faith out into the unknown to the farthest possible limit with the question, "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

A short time ago it was my privilege to ride along side of the canal that is being dug to connect Cape Cod Bay and Buzzards Bay, and as I came in sight of one of the iron bridges that spans the canal, the main section of the bridge stood almost perpendicular in mid air to allow the passing of a small steamer. Then after it had passed, the bridge was slowly lowered into place until the outer end rested on the solid foundation on the other side. The raising and lowering of this huge iron structure was made possible, my informant told me, by an immense weight on the landward side which so nearly counterbalanced the other end that a small engine was able to do the work, and I said to myself, this is what Jesus did as he taught his disciples to pray. He lifted their faith heavenward by an immense weight far out on the landward side, and then from the lofty pier of human fatherhood, swung it out over the chasm of the unknown until it rested upon the solid rock of the infinite Fatherhood of God.

Notice again the enlarging picture of human need. He begins with the need of one who would treat a friend with ordinary courtesy. Then the picture changes and the need becomes more intense. A child looks up into his father's face with a cry for bread, and then he comes to that greatest of all needs, the Holy Spirit. Let us leave off the capitals for a moment and write holy spirit, for though the words may mean vastly more to some of us as we find them, they ought never to mean less. Think what it would mean to us as individuals if the spirit behind every action was a holy spirit. Think what it would mean in society, in the business world, in the social world. What would it be but the coming of the kingdom of God? It is just what Jesus had been teaching his disciples to pray for, but now he especially urges and inspires their faith to pray for it as a personal experience.

It is the crying need of every individual and of every age. It is the soul cry of the world as it reaches out with hunger toward God. Not a stone, but bread, not creeds that separate, but love that binds in a common brotherhood, a holy spirit. There are many world cries that are so much more clamorous than the cry of the soul, that we often allow it to be drowned amid the babel of other voices. But let us keep this thought before us always, that it is our Father's infinitely loving purpose to meet our supremest need and to make us like himself—holy in spirit.

The New Organization of Home Missions in the Friends Church

One never wants his church to be behind in any good activity that will help better humanity, either here or abroad. Our church has been foremost in a number of undertakings that were for the good of all. One of its policies is and has always been, to keep peace with all the world. Its stand against slavery of all kinds is well known. Its people were first in starting schools and churches in the different localities.

And yet just as we were behind in sending out missionaries to foreign lands and organizing that special field, so are we behind in the home field of missions. It is true that mission work has been and is being done by some of our people here at home,—such as work done in the South among the colored race, and that among the poor white people in the mountains of Virginia and elsewhere. Men of our church have been prominent in prison reform; we have our superintendents of home missions in the different quarterly meetings, who help keep our own churches active and alive to the needs of the different localities.

But the home mission field which has been organized for years by members of other denominations, has lain dormant in our church. The time has come for our churches to be awake and to stand together in the work for Christ. We must needs forget our denominationalism and be one army for the good of our Lord. But just as the different squads had their own captains in the army, so must our church have its Home Missionary Society that we may stand shoulder to shoulder with those of this organization in the other churches of America.

This has been on the hearts of some of our members for years, but not until our last Five Years Meeting did it have its incipency. The women of that meeting met and after a general discussion, officers were elected to begin our work in this field. It has had a slow beginning, but we hope a firm footing will be established now, so that we may go forward in this work. Miss Helen Taylor, of Cincinnati, who was elected president, has been unable so far to begin this work, so now it is begun with Mrs. Daisy Barr, of Muncie, Indiana, who was elected vice-president, as acting president. Mrs. Charlotte E. Vickers, 312 North Elmwood Avenue, Oak Park, Illinois, was elected treasurer.

The constitution and by-laws are being printed, and will soon be ready for distribution. Presidents for several of the different Yearly Meeting societies have been chosen and are organizing their respective fields.

The book on Home Missions that was used by the other Societies for last year on Mormonism, and the one for this year, "The New America," on Immigration, can be purchased of Fleming H. Revell, of Chicago, Illinois; cloth bound for 57 cents and paper for 35 cents. Charles Tebbetts, of Richmond, has these books also, for those in his vicinity, at 50 cents and 30 cents, respectively, when postage is not required.

The Friends' Foreign Missionary Society of Richmond is planning to have reviews of this Home Missionary book on "The New America" given intermittently with their own study for the year, so that we may all know more of our immigrant problem and that we, as church people, may begin to influence these, our brothers, who are coming into our land, instead of the saloon element and hired politicians who have been ensnaring them on their first arrival here among us.

There is plenty of work for us all to do along this line, and we can give a part of our sincere Christian activity here in our homeland and still give our money largely to foreign missions. In fact, by getting interested and into the work more sincerely here at home, it will only increase our giving and praying for the work of missions in other lands.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

The forty-second session of Kansas Yearly Meeting met according to adjournment, at Wichita, Kansas, October 7-14. The attendance was not quite so large as it has been in some previous years, this being due probably to the long continued drouth of the preceding summer, yet there was a good representation from nearly every part of the Yearly Meeting. A good spirit of harmony prevailed, and an evident desire to know the mind of the Master, and willingness to follow His leadership.

Ministers and workers present from other Yearly Meetings were: John and Esther McMillan, of Wilmington; Rufus P. King, North Carolina; Zeno Doan, Iowa; James A. Parr, Western; William G. Hubbard, Ohio; Amos Walton, California; and S. Edgar Nicholson, Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Arthur and Edna Chilson, of the East African Mission, members of this Yearly Meeting, were also present.

The opening sessions on Ministry and Oversight were held Tuesday, the 7th. In addition to a timely interest in the general spiritual welfare of the church, two special subjects claimed the attention of these meetings. One of these subjects was concerning our meetings for worship. There was a general concern that we do not allow our meetings to become fettered with fixed programs of service, so that there shall not be opportunity for contributions to the thought of the meeting which have not been prearranged. On this concern there was unanimity of sentiment. Yet there was a conviction that there is need of care lest those who do not actually have a message take up time in our meetings for worship without profit to the congregation at large. The other subject was brought to the meeting from the Pastors' Alliance, and from one of the quarterly meetings. It was an appeal to the meeting to take some steps looking toward the better educational preparation of those of our members who manifest a gift in the ministry. Concerning the details of this question there was some difference of opinion. But there was unity in the conviction that if those who are coming on in the ministry could have increased educational opportunities, it would be to the advantage of the church, and for the glory of the Lord.

The regular sessions of the Yearly Meeting began on Wednesday morning, with a devotional period, the reading of reports from the quarterly meetings, the introduction of visitors, and instructions for the representatives. At the afternoon session the representatives proposed the name of Edmund Stanley, for Presiding Clerk, which was unanimously accepted by the meeting. This year completes a quarter of a century of continuous service in that capacity, for him. He was also an assistant clerk for six years previous to his term as presiding clerk. In his opening address President Stanley placed a high standard before the Yearly Meeting.

"Every year should mark a distinct advance in the progress of our work. A year ago there was a definite stand taken on the question of the declaration of our faith and doctrine. Today we may point to a definite statement of the fundamental principles of our church. The Five Years Meeting a year ago placed before us four great lines of church work. These are first, Evangelism; second, Pastoral Care; third, Missionary Efforts; and fourth, Education of our Young People. All four of these interests are one. They embrace the fundamentals of the Christian life and activity. The primary work of the church is evangelism. The disciple of Jesus Christ is bound to take his fellow-man with him to the Savior. Along with this must be placed the pastoral care of those who are brought into the Kingdom. Equally binding upon us is the responsibility to carry the Gospel to the people in other lands. Christian education is a more vital question today than ever before. Social immorality is burning its way into many of the great institutions of learning. Even in high schools the encroachments of the social evil are being made manifest. Those who are charged with the control of these schools are seeking to find the cause of this, and if possible, stop its advances. But many of these investigators are looking in the wrong place for its source. Outside the religious life there is no sufficient stimulus for morality to make it enduring. Jesus Christ is the only influence—the only person—that is able to lift lives up to planes of purity and righteousness and keep them there. The church of Jesus Christ must attend to this greatest of all elements in the education of our young people and children."

The other clerks were Martha M. Woodard, Henry Townsend, Lillian Hadley, and Vida Riggs Pribbenow.

The meeting Wednesday evening was devoted to the subject of temperance. The report of the committee, of which Lyman Cosand was chairman, showed a splendid organization, and that most effective work has been accomplished during the past year. Howard T. Kershner has been the field worker. Through the efforts of the committee many temperance programs have been arranged by Sunday-schools. S. Edgar Nicholson encouraged the workers by saying that in his opinion there is more genuine prohibition sentiment in Kansas than in any other state of the Union.

Probably the subject which provoked more discussion than any other during the Yearly Meeting, was the proposition to make the approval of the Yearly Meeting, or of an examining board appointed by the Yearly Meeting, necessary for the final action in the recording of ministers. The whole subject was referred to a committee which is to report next year.

L. Clarkson Hinshaw was reappointed General Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral work for the coming year. His report showed that he had travelled 8,122 miles during the past year, visited 62 churches, and preached 210 times, in the course of his duties as superintendent. His report was very penetrating in its analysis of the needs of the hour in evangelistic and pastoral work. "It need not be denied that evangelism is under fire today as never before in recent years. The great mass of the church and unchurched have grown sick at heart of a certain type of sensational evangelistic preaching, superficial methods, involving meaningless "tests," resulting in indefinite expressions from the audience and inflated reports of results; with but little evidence of the regenerating power of the Cross. This criticism censures church officials and reflects upon pastors, and is demanding at their hands an evangelism that reveals Christ, regenerates the life, transforms the character, and leaves the converts at the church altar to enjoy her fellowship and strengthen her brotherhood."

* * * * *

"Our pastoral system has come to stay. Its beneficent results guarantee its perpetuity. The consecrated intelligence and spiritual vision of the Church, co-operating with the Holy Spirit, will eliminate its defects and cure its short-comings. Pastors should not monopolize the time for worship, but, faithfully feeding the congregation with the Word of God, seek to develop the various gifts and utilize them in the great task of shepherding the flock of Christ."

Good results were shown in the report of the work among the Indians. New opportunities have opened with them during the past year. While the report was being given there were four Indian women from the mission stations on the platform. One of these, Mary Bourbannais, was superintendent of the first Sunday-school in Oklahoma, organized about 1875.

The Bible School reports gave 6,434 persons enrolled in the Sunday-schools of the Yearly Meeting. There were 2,524 reported in adult Bible classes, and 379 on the Cradle Rolls.

The total membership of the Yearly Meeting, according to the statistical report, is 11,858, a net gain of 24 during the past year. There have been 375 received on confession of faith. There were 182 births, and 105 deaths. There are 125 congregations, with 130 ministers in active work.

The high water mark of the Yearly Meeting appeared to be the session on Foreign Missions Friday evening. Probably there never had been just such a meeting in the history of the Yearly Meeting. A program had been arranged by the mission board, but the meeting took its own course. Arthur and Edna Chilson told of the work in the African field. J. Perry Hadley, with his little son, was present. He related the circumstances in connection with the sudden death of his wife, Martha Travey Hadley, at the Alaska mission, February 28, 1912. The stores, mines, and even the saloons of the town were closed the day of her funeral. The little son he dedicated to the service of foreign missions.

A most inspiring part of the meeting was the part taken by the Student Volunteer Band of Friends' University. Nineteen young volunteers for the foreign fields, ten young men and nine young women, came to the platform and sang, "O Zion haste, Thy mission high fulfilling." Each one told of the influences that had brought the decision for their life work.

The educational report showed good work being done in the six academies. Friends' University reported a substantial increase in the college enrollment, and a decrease in the preparatory school. S. Edgar Nicholson gave the address on "Religious Education."

An enthusiastic Christian Endeavor meeting was held Saturday evening, addressed by Edna Hill Chilson. Nearly a thousand dollars was pledged for the work next year.

There was a large attendance at the meetings on Sabbath, S. Edgar Nicholson having charge in the morning, Zeno Doan in the afternoon, and Arthur and Edna Chilson in the evening. Overflow meetings were held to accommodate those who could not get into the main auditorium.

The meeting closed Monday noon, to meet in Lawrence at the appointed time next year.

CHURCH NEWS

Dr. W. T. Stackhouse, general secretary of the Baptist Laymen's Missionary Movement, has just finished a campaign among the Baptist churches of Cleveland, with this result upon the missionary and benevolent contributions: New subscribers, 1,474; total amount in 1912, $33,807; total amount in 1913, $45,891; increase, $18,084. It works well.

Dr. H. K. Carroll says that the Methodist population of the United States, including Hawaii and Alaska, if computed on the same basis as the Roman Catholic statistics are, would give a total of 20,595,774. This would include the United Brethren and the Evangelical Association. The Catholic figures for the same area are 15, 207, 776.

The Presbyterians have twenty-eight hospitals in China and the Methodists twenty-three.

Concerning the Panama Tolls Question

(CONCLUDED)

The following paragraphs have been suggested by the record of an informal discussion of the Panama Tolls question given at the last Mohonk Peace Conference, the proceedings of which have just been published.

The Other Side

It is not surprising to discover that most of the speakers at the Mohonk peace conference opposed the present attitude of the United States toward the Panama tolls question. Among the speakers in this informal discussion there were some, however, who favored our stand. They insisted that as it would be unpatriotic for a citizen of our country to favor violation of a treaty so it would be equally unpatriotic for him to accept the interpretation of an interested nation without painstaking investigation, particularly as this acceptance would mean the surrender of invaluable rights affecting the safety of his country.

Due Consideration Given Bill

During the discussion Hon. Joseph R. Knowland gave a history of the deliberations of Congress upon the question of coastwise tolls, endeavoring to off-set the accusation that the question of our treaty obligations was not given proper consideration. He showed that no question has been before Congress in years in which greater interest has been shown and upon which there has been more exhaustive debate.

Great Britain's Objections

The Panama Canal Act of August, 1912, which provides for "the opening, maintenance, protection and operation" of this American waterway is objected to by Great Britain. Among other reasons, (1) because certain language contained in section five, in fixing tolls, provides that the rate may be less for "vessels of the United States and its citizens than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal;" (2) because there are exemptions of vessels belonging to the Republic of Panama and munitions of war in such vessels; (3) because there is exemption of American vessels engaged in the coastwise trade; (4) because power is provided for the remittance of tolls as is done by certain foreign nations using the Suez Canal; (5) Again, Section II of the act which seeks to prevent railroad control of this waterway is questioned by Sir Edward Grey because of the fear that its provisions may apply to the Canadian trans-continental railroads which have voluntarily placed themselves under the provisions of the interstate commerce act of the United States.

To sum up the British objections, "we are denied the right to pass free of toll our own battleships and other Government vessels; ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, in which traffic the ships of England cannot now engage must pay a toll in passing through this American waterway; we are virtually asked to violate our treaty obligations with the Republic of Panama; there is a practical denial of, or at least an attempt to limit, our right to follow at Panama the practice of foreign nations in remitting tolls to merchant ships through the Suez Canal, thus placing this country at a disadvantage, and finally, we are threatened with a protest if Canadian steamships owned by Canadian railroads, which railroads have voluntarily come under the interstate commerce act and thus subjected themselves to the same restrictions and regulations as American railroads, are to be amenable to the same laws. Was there ever a more striking example of inconsistency? Equality of treatment demanded for British shipowners in sharing benefits, but a protest against equal treatment when the act imposes restrictions applying to American shipowners!"

It is true that many citizens of the United States believe that the protest refers alone to our coastwise ships and that it is well, therefore, to call attention to the British objections as more far-reaching and consequential.

The Railroad Question

Joseph R. Knowland advanced the belief that Canadian railroad officials caused the presentation of the objections by England. The visit of certain Canadian government officials to England for the purpose of considering section eleven, the railroad section, brought about the protest. It is asserted that American transcontinental railroad interests were and are in active sympathy. Indeed this speaker is constrained "to direct attention to the fact that there are representatives of powerful interests favoring repeal who are crying 'live up to our treaty obligations,' but who are far less interested in this phase of the question than they are in the more important consideration of preventing the canal from becoming too great a competitor of the trans-continental railroads."

Internal Evidence

Article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which it is claimed we violate, reads as follows:

"That the canal shall be free and open to vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable."

In regard to the above clause Joseph R. Knowland has said that to his mind the use of the words "vessels of war" is conclusive evidence that the word "vessels" refers exclusively to foreign nations because the United States would not foreclose its right to pass free of toll through its own waterway warships as well as light-house tenders, revenue cutters, transports and other craft. He contends that the section just quoted only binds us as owners of the canal to treat all nations fairly, preventing discrimination in favor of one foreign nation as against another.

A Humiliating Situation

It is claimed by those who favor the present attitude of the United States that foreign ships will derive the chief benefit from the canal because we have practically no American ships in the foreign trade. They cite the fact that ninety-one per cent of our foreign commerce is carried in foreign ships and that unless we show favor to our ships in the coastwise trade we shall benefit little. Mr. Knowland further claims that it would be humiliating for this nation to be prevented forever from according a single advantage to an American ship, when it has spent $400,000,000 in the building of the canal through what he calls "practically American territory." Other nations might remit tolls to their ships, he continues, as they are doing at Suez and preparing to do at Panama, "but our hands would be virtually tied."

According to some very high authorities, "we would surrender rights that might imperil our very existence as a nation. Repeal under present circumstances, when our government, through the Department of State, has taken a position and negotiations are under way, would be most inopportune. It would be an unwarranted, uncalled-for, and abject surrender of American rights, far-reaching in its effect, and disastrous to American interests."

It Must Be Settled Right

The perusal of such serious, informal discussions as that held at Lake Mohonk certainly adds to our anxiety that this question—this peace question—be thoroughly understood and settled. Three early explorers and navigators who returned to Spain in 1528 to present to Emperor Charles V a plan for opening a waterway through the Isthmus of Panama, Mr. Clay who saw the advantages of the canal through the isthmus and discussed its possibility in 1826, the merchants of New York and Philadelphia who in 1839 were able to bring about in the House of Representatives a consideration of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and those who later were able to put their dreams in the form of more definite plans, have left to us the duty of making their plans a reality. Certainly we must not allow the present vital question in connection with the canal to be settled until it is settled right. There is without doubt a call to all peace-loving citizens to inform themselves concerning the Panama tolls question, particularly to consider such views as these here mentioned since these are opposed to the view taken by most peace advocates and call for frequent denial.

A Young People's and Children's Department

Beginning with this issue we offer to our readers material prepared especially for young people and children. The plan which we propose to follow is to present in concrete form the topics outlined in the "Course in Good-will" which was prepared under the direction of the Massachusetts Peace Society, and published in the Third Annual Report of the American School Peace League, and also in Bulletin No. 12, 1912, issued by the United Bureau of Education. By this means we hope so to present the fundamental principles upon which international good feeling is founded, that the next generation of our citizens will be prepared as the present generation is not prepared to promote the cause of peace. We feel sure that "Little Athens' Message" will prove interesting to all readers.

Peace Sunday in December

Attention is called to the fact that the third Sunday in December (December 21) is the day regularly set apart as Peace Sunday. It is requested that in so far as it may be possible, efforts be made in all our meetings on that day to emphasize some phase of the subject of peace in a definite, attractive and intelligent way. Pastors and Sunday School superintendents who may wish literature on the subject are invited to correspond with the undersigned.

Little Athens' Message

Copyright, 1913, by the Peace Association of Friends in America.

BY ANNA D. STEPHENS

Little Athens lived in a small American city. You may wonder how Miss Grace managed to get him into this school in the best neighborhood of Junction City. I am sure you have wondered if Little Athens really, truly, were a child born in the Greek city of that name far over the earth. You will have to guess at the strange story of how he and his father, alone now, came to make their home in this pleasant place. However, you know a town of not many thousand people is large enough to support one business of blocking hats. Since they lived in the neat coachman's house on the rear of Miss Grace's premises, the father considered themselves "comfortably fixed" with this fairly definite bread-and-butter arrangement of life.

Miss Grace had helped Little Athens in speaking English. She had found him so well prepared in arithmetic, geography and history that he was equal to those of the upper grammar grades. With constant "coaching" (as he called it, quite American-like), he needed little extra care from the teacher upon entering school. In history he was happiest, for to him this subject was a fascinating story of the people who lived in neighborhoods, one to another, all around the earth. When his turn came to recite in Greek mythology or history, no matter how, he always led from the assigned topic back to the time when his people were learned and cultured in so many lines. The short, faulty sentences of his other classes were no barrier now. His English flowed easily as he told of this great hero or that, of the time when their conquests were mighty in the earth.

Here was a chance to help Little Athens overcome timidity about his broken English! The teacher assigned as his work for the next lesson to tell the class something of Greece. "Of the Old Greece, Miss Ward?" "Of the Greece you care most for. Tell us the best thing you know of your country." Little Athens fairly beamed!

After school each day he was busy caring for the lawn and running errands for Miss Grace and her mother. Then, for one happy hour before bedtime, with their little prints and few books, the father and son took wonderful trips through poetry, pictures, and stories, back to old Athens. Tonight the father began in the pure Greek they always used together, "Son, I have wished as you grew older to tell you a message from your country. I have waited until you can appreciate it." They talked together long. After he had gone to bed Little Athens repeated to himself the message which had come to him from his country.

The next day Miss Ward called for his assignment in history. The boy arose before his class, "Boys and girls, I thought yesterday of how happy I would be today, for I could tell you of some great warrior or grand conquest in the old land of my birth. Whenever I do, I think I help us forget I am a Greek immigrant and that you are all trying to help me. I think you may admire in the greatness of my country of the past some of the power of war which you like so much in your American heroes. I think I can help us forget I am 'Little Athens' and came over steerage, and help us to think I am just another boy whose country was once grand and powerful too. But Miss Ward asked for the best I knew from Greece, so I give you this message of which I am growing more proud every hour.

"In Athens long ago boys were taught when they became my age, a pledge. They said it each day, believed in and tried to live by the vow. Fathers taught their sons, who, growing up, gave it in turn to their own boys. Each helped make the pledge true until Athens became 'Athens, the Beautiful.'

'Pledge of the Athenian Youths.'

We will never bring disgrace to this our city, by any act of dishonesty or cowardice, nor ever desert our comrades; we will fight for the ideals and sacred things of the city, both alone and with many; we will revere and obey the city laws, and do our best to incite a like respect and reverence in others; we will strive unceasingly to quicken the public's sense of civic duty; that thus in all these ways, we may transmit this city, greater, better, and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.'

"I am away from Greece. My country of father's books and stories does not live today. But I wish to do the best my land has taught her sons. You are my friends, this my state and here is my own city. So every day like a Greek youth true to his own Athens, I will say this pledge for Junction City." With head high he began—"I will never bring disgrace to this our city by any act of dishonesty or cowardice,"—slowly and clearly he continued, closing—"And I, Little Athens, may help 'to transmit this city, greater, better, more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.' Miss Ward, this is the best I have learned from Greece."

The children sat silent a minute. Miss Ward was not thinking of their charge's English. One of the boys began—"Oh, Miss Ward, may he teach it to us?" A girl continued, "And it's for girls too, isn't it?" With Little Athens' dictation it was written on the board. Now, the pupils of this school had an organization with duly elected officers. They were installed that week, and the president's address, much to the surprise of the Greek lad, told of the Athenian pledge. A motion was carried that it be taken for their motto.

After school two of the biggest boys caught Little Athens, put him on the shoulders of a crowd, and they carried him down the street. "Nine Rahs for Little Athens" rent the air.

Surely the little Greek heathen was at home in their—yes, in his city.

Disarming Fate

"I notice Mrs. Simmons is having a new porch put onto her house," said Deacon Wood, polishing his glasses.

"Yes," said his wife, "she always wanted one clear across the front of the house, but Silas never would build one, so the first thing she did with some of the insurance money was to have one."

The deacon looked at his paper thoughtfully for a moment, then remarked: "The Widder Davis is setting out a good many flowers, isn't she? She keeps getting seed catlogues at the post office."

"Yes," replied his wife, "her heart's been set on a posy-garden a good many years, but I should think 'twould make Jed Davis turn over in his grave—he always thought flowers was such a foolish waste of time and money."

For a time the deacon was silent; then he said: "Wasn't that a new rubber-tired buggy I saw Prunella White in yesterday?"

"Yes," said his wife with animation, "and I'm glad she's got it at last. She rode round for years in an old farm-wagon, though Leander could well afford a decent buggy for her and the girls; but if he'd a' lived they'd never have got one."

For a time the deacon remained sunk in thought; then he asked: "If you had a considerable sum of money to do just what you wanted with, Mandy, what would you get?"

"I'd have me a hardwood floor in that kitchen," his wife said firmly. "I never scrub that old floor but what I run my fingers full of slivers."

"Mandy," said her husband with fervor, "you'll see the carpenters at work on that new floor in the mornin'." And the deacon resumed his paper with a sigh of relief.—Onward.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The first of a series of continuous services for the coming month, in which the Bible school and meeting for worship were combined, was held on Sabbath morning, the 19th, at East Main Street meeting in Richmond. The attendance was 215 in the Bible school, and the experiment of combining the services was generally approved. A roll call of the membership followed, the members responding either in name or by a text or reading. Special music was arranged.

The West Richmond Bible School is on the increase, the attendance on the morning of the 19th being 261. A Men's Bible Class was newly formed that morning, and it is expected that this will become one of the features of the school.

At the Bible School Association meeting held in Boston township, near Richmond, Indiana, last week, a banner given for the presence at the convention of a number equal to the largest percent. of the average attendance of the school for the past six months, was awarded to the Orange Friends' school, which sent twenty-three persons, exactly one hundred percent. of its average attendance.

Parvin Bond, who has been serving a circuit near Van Wert, Ohio, has entered upon his duties as pastor at Dublin, Indiana, succeeding Dalton H. Lewis, who recently moved to New Castle.

New Garden Monthly Meeting was held at Fountain City, Indiana, October 18th. A minute was granted George N. Hartley for gospel service within the limits of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. His address for some time will be High Point, North Carolina, care of Lewis W. McFarland. The meeting also granted a removal certificate to Fred E. Smith and family to Greensboro, North Carolina, where Fred Smith is now serving as pastor.

The Friends of New Castle gave a delightful reception to the new pastor, Dalton H. Lewis and his wife, at the parsonage on the evening of October 20th. Over one hundred guests enjoyed the warmth of the hospitality, which was extended under the care of the ladies of the meeting. An address of welcome was ably given by W. O. Barnard, to which the pastor responded with good feeling. Violin music was furnished by Miss Hazel Smith, with Mrs. Charles Mogle at the piano. Piano solos were given by Donald Rogers, and to Miss Pauline Saint's piano accompaniment Dalton Lewis sang "Perfect Day." Mrs. Horace Burr gave some excellent readings. Refreshments were served in the dining room, where each was presented with a very clever souvenir. The Friends of New Castle feel that their new pastor and his wife are very talented young people, and will prove their value to the meeting in every possible way.

Miss Mary White, for eighteen years a missionary in Jamaica sent out by the Friends' Church, gave a very interesting account of her work in that field at New Castle, the morning of October 19th. Miss White, who has been for a year in America, taking a much needed rest, is now on her return to the work, which she is exceedingly anxious to resume.—New Castle Star.

Prof. Elbert Russell of Earlham College, is giving this winter a series of Monday evening addresses at the Y. M. C. A. in Richmond, Indiana, to the Bible school teachers of the city, on the following Sabbath's International Bible School lessons. Great interest is being taken in the series, and the addresses are well patronized.

Union Monthly Meeting at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, will observe its centennial anniversary with appropriate exercises on November 1-2. Following a meeting for worship in the forenoon at 10:30, and a business session at 11:15, dinner will be served. In the afternoon addresses will be given by Enos Pemberton, Jonathan Jay, Ann McCain, Homer Pearson and Bertha Miles, with a solo by Harley Thomas and music by the Ladies' Quartette, followed by general reminiscences. In the evening there will be music by the Ladies' Trio, and an address by S. E. Nicholson. On Sabbath morning following the Bible School, the sermon will be preached by President Robert L. Kelly, with a solo by Edith Pearson. In the afternoon President Kelly will give an address, and in the evening an address will be given by Elwood Hinshaw, with music by the Ladies' Trio.

On Sabbath, October 19th, Charles E. Tebbetts and wife, and Professor Edwin Morrison and wife, of Richmond, visited the Fountain City meeting. Charles Tebbetts gave a very inspiring address on Foreign Missions. At two o'clock, a special mission meeting was held, and various phases of mission work considered. We believe that as a result there will be new interest in foreign missions.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Minnesota Summer School of Missions opened the fall extension work with an institute at Owatonna, Minnesota, October 8th and 9th. It was well attended, some coming from other towns. Mrs. J. O. Buswell, of Minneapolis, conducted studies in Hebrews. "The King's Business" and "New America" were led by Mrs. L. P. Blair and Mrs. A. Matchett, of the Twin Cities. "The Program" was developed by Mrs. Horace Hill, of Minneapolis, and was a revelation in variety of methods, and made discussion interesting. Miss Marian Sutton, a missionary from Singapore, gave two stirring addresses. Another Institute is planned for Lake City in November.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

The Sabbath-school and church services of Haviland Meeting are well attended. The pastor, Charles Lescault, is faithful in proclaiming the gospel truths. Our home ministers have been active in visiting various outposts in a radius of five to twenty miles. Stacy Bevan and Elma Albertson are now engaged in holding a series of meetings south of Plains, Kansas. At the close of these meetings they are planning to hold another north of Plains.

Haviland Academy has an enrollment of sixty-one this autumn, and excellent work is being accomplished, under the supervision of Professor Stanley Riggs and Miss Horine.

Though Friends' Bible School of League City, Texas, was organized some three years ago with but a handful of faithful followers of our blessed Savior, we have now an average attendance of sixty-five, seven classes of wide awake scholars, and a number of consistent, consecrated teachers. We have evidence that our school is building a substantial structure in the town and community.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

George E. Kent, who has recently gone to Mt. Gilead, Ohio, from Salem, to serve the former meeting as pastor, was given a unique reception recently by the congregation. It was in the nature of a "Chicken Shower," at which time fifty or sixty chickens were brought to the parsonage. In all probability, the members took into account the entire fitness of the procedure, and the occasion was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

George Wise, a minister formerly residing in Baltimore, Maryland, has been called to the pastorate of the Salem, Ohio, Friends' Meeting. He is reported to be getting the work there into fine shape.

Charles E. Haworth remains as pastor at Alliance, Ohio, for another year. John Pennington will remain as pastor at Damascus, but is now on a visit to the meeting at Portsmouth, Virginia, after which he will attend Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

Loren Heacock, a graduate of the University of Michigan, is preaching at the Second Friends' Church in Cleveland, and teaches at the Cleveland Bible Institute.

Isaac Stratton will serve as pastor at East Goshen Meeting; Steuben Cox at Berlinville; Merrill M. Coffin at Adrian, Michigan; J. L. Kinsey at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, and William Kirby at Columbus.

Lewis and Mary Barrett Pim have accepted a call to serve the meeting at Tecumseh, Michigan, as pastors. Their services are being much appreciated.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

The work in the three Friends' churches in the city of Portland, Oregon, seems to be prospering. After nine years of faithful work in building the Lents Friends' Church, Mira and Edward Smith have resigned, and John and Nettie Riley, lately of Boise, Idaho, have taken charge. Beginning as a little mission this work has grown into a strong and spiritual church. The Piedmont church, just built and organized during the past year, is growing nicely, having just received eighteen new members into fellowship lately, some of whom will be especially strong additions to the work. Tyler J. Coburn, the pastor, is doing splendid work. The Sunnyside, or mother church, being the most centrally located, and most closely surrounded by big, fashionable churches, has as difficult a field perhaps, as any in the group. This church is under the faithful leadership of Homer L. Cox and wife, who have been here for almost a year. Their faithful lives and the high standard of their pulpit work has won them a place in the confidence and respect of their people and the city. The attendance is growing, and at present is taxing the capacity of their building, and a new one is fast becoming a necessity. While this church has had no great revival wave, there seems to be a constant revival spirit on the people, and it is no uncommon occurrence to have some one forward for prayer in the regular services. They have a strong band of young people who do regular mission work, and some serve as supply for the out posts as there is a demand. The church has lately purchased an Edison mimeograph to facilitate the work of the pastor in getting out announcements and circular letters, and in keeping in touch with the absent members. Homer Cox and wife will remain with us during the coming year.

Western Yearly Meeting

Miles Martin is very seriously ill at his home at Silverwood, Fountain County, Indiana. He is prostrate with creeping paralysis and other diseases, but remains cheerful, but has times of severe suffering. Some years ago he and his wife, Diantha C. Martin, were active in pastoral and evangelistic work, and were well known to many Friends in Western Yearly Meeting, and also in some parts of Kansas and Southern Illinois.

The Danville meeting house has recently been re-decorated and a new carpet covers the floor. The work in every department is prosperous, including a good strong Christian Endeavor Society. "Rally Day" was held on October 7th. On October 19th, "Quaker Day" was observed, Charles L. and Hannah Pratt Jessup being present in the old-time Quaker garb. Charles wore the homespun wedding coat of his grandfather and the broad brimmed white hat of his great grandfather. The morning sermon on the doctrines and beliefs of Friends was most ably and instructively given by Hannah Pratt Jessup. A solo was sung by little Doris Howell. In the evening a program was given consisting of a paper on "The Force of Quakerism," by Lillian H. Bond; one on "Quaker Literature," by Pearl Hadley; a vocal solo by Lelia Ratliff; readings from Whittier, by Beulah Conn; a violin solo, by Merrill Shaw, and closing with a talk on "Quaker Characteristics," by the pastor, Willis H. Bond. The music for the day was under the direction of Daisy Dean Howell. Both meetings were largely attended, not only by Friends, but by their friends, all expressing pleasure and profit by the day's service.

A Correction

On page 639 of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, the statement should have been made that Thomas Collins married Mary Carter, instead of Mary Stanley.

The newspapers announce that the Administration at Washington is committed to the three battleship program.

Friends University

It was announced by President Edmund Stanley at Kansas Yearly Meeting that an unnamed friend of Friends' University at Wichita had given permission to announce the gift of 960 acres of Kansas land to the endowment fund of the college. Additional contributions by the same donor in the form of check, notes and mortgages, together with the land, increased the endowment by about $30,000.00, bringing it up to about $215,000.00.

The University keeps itself free from debt, and is approved by the State Board of Education. Graduates have the same standing as the graduates of the State Normal and State University, and are granted a life teacher's certificate. The attendance this fall is quite up to the standard. The equipment of the University, including the museum, is growing satisfactorily.

William Wood

William Wood, minister of the Society of Friends at Lawrence, Massachusetts, died September 5, 1913, after a suffering illness of nearly two months. He was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1858, but came in early manhood to this country with his wife immediately after their marriage. They were associated with other English people in the organization of the Friends' Meeting in Lawrence, Massachusetts, in 1884. This was first held in their home and later in the rooms at the Y. M. C. A., until in 1896 the membership had increased sufficiently to warrant the building of the fine meeting house on Avon Street, where the Society now worships.

In all the ministrations of this place, William Wood has been an interested, devoted and successful factor. He supported with untiring zeal the labors of Stephen Swett, Hezekiah Binns, and others of the early laborers here. Later the responsibilities of the meeting devolved largely upon him, and for many years his gospel ministry has been given in freshness and spiritual power.

He has during all this period been employed in an important position in the "Pacific Mill," one of the largest woolen manufactures in this country. His Christian character and life have pervaded extensively both in business and religious circles in the city of Lawrence, and his loss is widely mourned. He leaves a widow and two sons. The funeral services September 8th, in the meeting house at Lawrence, were largely attended, both by business associates and personal friends. The services were marked by simplicity and hopefulness.

Tribute to the Memory of William Henry Butler

On the evening of First-day, the 5th of the present month, the monthly meeting of the Home Missionary Society of Providence meeting was held at the meeting house in that city, in the state of Rhode Island; and was for the most part, a meeting not of sorrow, but of appreciation and thankfulness for the life and work of William Henry Butler, until recently president of the society.

The attendance upon any First-day morning of Providence meeting is large when it reaches fifty, and the evening meetings are regarded as well attended when twenty members are able to get out. On this occasion thirty people were present, and at least thirteen of these gave expression to the feelings of the meeting.

Ian McLaren speaks of one of his characters as being "a shepherd to trade, and very faithful in all his work, but his life business was theology." Adapting this thought to some of the expressions uttered at this memorial meeting, it might not be far out of the way to say that William Henry Butler was a textile manufacturer to trade, but that his life work was that of one who went about doing good. Among those who spoke were men who had known him and worked with him in other fields of New England Yearly Meeting, both at his side in the mill and in the various religious activities with which he was identified. The feeling of those taking part was well epitomized by selections of scripture, quoted or read by two of the speakers; the one being the "Love never faileth" chapter found in Corinthians, and the other being the great Christian model or pattern passage in both Matthew and Mark, wherein Christ says of Himself that He "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

William Henry Butler was born in Bradford, Yorkshire, England, in 1854. He joined the Society of Friends in 1886. His gift in the ministry was acknowledged by Boston Monthly meeting, where he was recorded about 1892. He came to Providence from Lawrence, Massachusetts, in 1904, where he soon became active in organizing the Home Missionary Society of the meeting. The Home Missionary Society was started as a result of a meeting held November 5, 1905, with our friend acting as chairman of the meeting, and he became first vice-president of the organization. Shortly after the death of the president of the society, he became its president in November, 1907, and continued in that capacity until the date of his death, July 8, 1913.

William Henry Butler was also chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee of Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting at the time of his death.

Alfred Johnson

While visiting at the home of his daughter, Mary T. Overman, at Marion, Indiana, Alfred Johnson passed to his rest on October 8, 1913. He was born in Clinton County, Ohio, in 1825, and had nearly completed his eighty-eighth year. His has been a long, active and fruitful life. As a child he acknowledged Jesus as his Savior, as a young man he gave his services to mission work among the Indians, and in middle life did valiant service in prison reform. Then followed nearly forty years as an evangelist and minister, in which he was blessed with the joy of beholding the salvation of the Lord accepted by scores, and many spiritual revivals.

His work is still fresh in the memory of many, both among Friends and others. His wonderful activity of mind and resources of well-stored memory were preserved to the very last. At the time of his death he was a member of East Main Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana. Recently his home has been with his son, Isaac T. Johnson, at Urbana, Ohio. He was known to Friends all over America.

Quaker Colony at Hartford

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has received the following message from the Quaker colony of fifteen now attending Hartford Theological Seminary at Hartford, Connecticut:

"Heartiest greetings and good wishes from the 'Quaker Club' of Hartford Theological Seminary, Golda R. Carrell, Secretary, 34 Hopkins Street, Hartford, Connecticut."

Appended to the greetings is the entire list of Friends now in that institution, as follows: E. L. Peckham, Rebecca Farquhar, Esther A. Balderston, Anna P. Birdsall, Fred C. Lebert, Mrs. Mary K. Peckham, Thomas E. Jones, Alexander C. Purdy, Reuben J. Payne, Esther T. Glenney, Ray P. Glenney, Levinus K. Painter, W. Carleton Wood and O. W. Carrell.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND deeply appreciates this kind remembrance and commends the loyalty of these younger Friends who float the Quaker name as a token of their interest in their denomination.

United Missionary Campaign, November Conferences

The following conferences come soon: Batavia, New York, November 5-6; Lockport, New York, November 6-7; Marion, Indiana, November 16-17; Kokomo, Indiana, November 18-19; Norfolk, Virginia, November 25-26; Manchester and Rochester, New Hampshire, some time between November 15th and December 15th. There are more than one hundred conferences arranged for Massachusetts, but dates are not known to me. Every Friends' meeting will have a conference in easy reach. All Friends' meetings in the district of above centers should have delegations of their best workers (especially men) present at all four sessions. The importance of this cannot be over-emphasized.

As Others See Us

George J. Anderson, Western Editor of The Congregationalist, has the following in a recent issue of that paper. Following his last sentence, we would like to remind him that Friends have "woman suffrage" in all the work of the Church. This is what he says:

"As I have suggested several times in this column, our friends the Quakers, are undergoing substantially the same modifications as a body which are facing the Congregationalists. They have begun to fear too much independency and isolation and to seek closer bonds of fellowship and co-operation. Also, they have been seeking a General Secretary! This office was created by the Five Years Meeting last October in Indianapolis. They thought they had secured just the man in Mr. Roscoe Coffin, assistant state secretary of the Minnesota Y. M. C. A., but after careful pondering, he has been obliged to disappoint the Friends by his declination. There will have to be another insertion under 'Male Help Wanted.'"

SANITARY HEATING

SYSTEM

There are no clinkers; no raked-over coals. The ashes are fine and pack like meal. Slowly during the day and night ridges of real ash form throughout the entire length of the ash pan. Intermittent flashes or sparks of dying embers may be seen any time, as the ashes drop through the grates. This demonstrates economy in and uniform consumption of fuel, and a regular and positive flow of heat.

"Here Am I, Send Me."

FOR young people, especially, the answer to this prayer that God would send forth laborers into his vineyard must sometimes be by our own word to God, "Here am I, send me." Often the best answer to our prayer comes by our own action. God often answers prayer through him who prays. Not every one is called to go into the ministry, into the Sunday school as a teacher, to foreign lands as Christ's witness or to some difficult field of city work or to care for some distant field at home; but no young man or woman being a Christian has a right to say positively and without consideration that God may not have such a claim on life. Many a man and woman who has done great work for Christ some day in praying for others has awakened to the knowledge that the call was for himself. Such a conclusion that our duty may be to go and not merely to find others who will go may be the turning point of happiness and service for a whole life. The best investment we can make of our whole life is in God's service.

Making Use of Opportunity

We are satisfied that Friends in a vast number of communities are not making proper use of the opportunity afforded to increase the subscription list of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. There ought to be large returns from the special offer of the paper to new subscribers from now until January, 1915, for $1.50, the price of a year's subscription.

Prejudices that may have existed have now largely been overcome, and the problem now is one of getting the membership to feel the vital need of supporting the church periodical. Every local meeting should be made to feel that the success of the paper will bring help and new vitality to every local community where the paper is read. Will not our Friends who are interested, especially pastors and ministers, make a determined effort to get new names under this liberal offer, during the next two weeks?

Missionary Education Movement

The Missionary Education Movement of New York has published the text of a demonstration reproducing the examination of immigrants at Ellis Island and other immigrant stations in the United States. It is the dialogue of an immigration inspector with eighteen different immigrants, with other interesting information. This Movement has also prepared for rental, outfits of decorative and educational material on immigration, which can be displayed in a room where the above demonstration is given. It is a demonstration which will be widely used in the Home Missionary Campaign. The outfit can be obtained by addressing the Missionary Education Movement, or from any of the home mission boards.

Day of Prayer for Moslems

November 9th is the day of the great Moslem Feast of Sacrifice, observed as part of the rites in the pilgrimage to Mecca. It has been asked that this day this year be made a special day of prayer by all Christians for our brothers and sisters of Islam, that God may turn their hearts at this crisis in Moslem history to the Lamb of God. Special intercession is asked in behalf of the Albanians, who have been given autonomy by the Powers of Europe. Not only the Mohammedan world, but all missionaries who are at work in these countries should be remembered in prayer.

Great Temperance Gathering

On November 14 a national temperance conference of vast importance will be held at Columbus, Ohio, the call to which has been signed by about 200 leading men of the nation, representing every phase of temperance work. The purpose is to inaugurate an educational campaign that will have back of it the united temperance forces. Preceding the conference, November 10-13, the National Anti-Saloon League Convention will be held.

Indianapolis Conference of Methodist Men

REPORTED BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

The Methodist Church is making a great effort to enlist its entire membership behind the whole task of the church. In order to do this it has summoned over three thousand of its leading men to face the task and the need of greater efficiency to meet it. The conference opened at Indianapolis on Tuesday morning, October 28th. Tomlinson Hall, holding about 3,500, was full of men at the first session. It may be helpful to Friends to see the field of work of the Church as it appeals to another denomination.

Robert Speer, of New York, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Mission, presented "The Central Task of the Church Today." He supposed a historian of the future looking upon this period and inquiring what was its greatest event. It would not be our inventions or achievements in science or business, but the rediscovery of the missionary obligations of the church. He outlined in a powerful way its influence in the great world awakening, in lifting and transforming men and nations. He then sketched the problems of the present, both at home and abroad, that must find a leadership in the Church of Christ if the world is to be saved from dire catastrophe in the fields of government, business, or social life. The message that Christian nations carry to the non-Christian world in its governmental and business dealings with them must be made to agree with the evangelistic message.

Bishop McDowell objected to his subject, "Methodism's Mission and Message," saying Methodism had no message that was not Christianity's message. He emphasized three points: First, The message is a message of redemption from sin through a divine Savior; Second, The world is lost and helpless to save itself; Third, The mission of the church is to carry the message to lost men of every nation and race, and a message of salvation for the whole man. Bishop Nuelson gave a resume of Methodism's achievements.

On Tuesday afternoon the different church Boards reported their work. Dr. W. I. Haven, of the American Bible Society, said last year 14,000,000 copies of the Scriptures were sent out from the Bible Societies of the English-speaking world, in many languages and dialects. Methodist Sunday Schools increased in membership 1,150,000 in the last six years; and in mission offerings there was an increase of $180,000,000 through the Sabbath Schools. They called for a doubling of Sunday School attendance in the next six years. Rev. Clarence True Wilson in an eloquent address lifted the conference to great enthusiasm over the victories for temperance in the immediate past, and over the present uniting of all forces to amend our national constitution, so as to stop forever the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages.

Dr. Nicholson, of the educational board, emphasized the duty of a united church to restore religious instruction in the public schools. He advocated a scientific study of the present situation in our state universities in order to see that man's higher interests

Conserving Young People's Interests

Goethe once said that if you want to know the destiny of any nation at any time, you must find out what its young men under twenty-five years of age are thinking about. To him who understands the philosophy of human events, the present is prophetic of the future. The law of cause and effect is no less potential in the realm of the moral and spiritual than of the material.

He who would cast the horoscope of the American Church and read its status in the next generation must go to the Bible Schools and the Young People's Societies of the present and read therein the record as it is being made. The youth of today will be the pillars of the church tomorrow. Their tendency of thought, the degree of their faith, the broadness of their spiritual vision, the character of their walk with God are elements that will be stamped indelibly upon the church of Christ a generation hence.

The problems of youth are always vital and fundamental, for they concern the future no less than the living present. Youth's relationship to the visible church is not always easily defined. It is not merely the difficulty of adjusting the activities of youth and old age, but the still greater puzzle of harmonizing present necessities with the greater work of tomorrow, the almost impossible task of reconciling the varied epochs of history that are evolutionary and progressive.

The activities of our young people have become marked features of modern church history. Experiment has succeeded experiment in the attempt to correlate all church elements into a sympathetic working organism, until today we have the great Christian Endeavor movement, interdenominational in its scope, the Epworth League of the M. E. Church, the Young People's Union of the Baptist Church and similar denominational movements in certain other bodies.

These may be regarded as expressing the latest judgment of the present day church in the sphere of religious activities among the young people. Whether ideal or not, they together with the Christian school must be credited with the major share of the awakening that has come to our youth within the past twenty-five years. The evidences of interest on the part of the youth of our own denomination which bloomed out at the Five Years Meeting came to many as a delightful surprise, as have the varied forms of activities which have come to a larger fruition since that time, yet are these probably not the direct heritage of twenty-five years of active training in the Christian Endeavor movement and the smaller number of Fellowship Groups, which have been maintained in certain of our Yearly Meetings?

No great problem can be worked out in a day. The evolution of our Quaker youth is undoubtedly toward a larger service in our own denominational endeavors. The solution of the problem has been slow because the church has been so little inclined to undertake constructive work in its behalf. Too frequently youth has had to ask for what it has received, when the older membership should have made the advances for co-operative effort. Even now the Church is apparently waiting for the young people to go forward alone, when, as we believe, the responsibility for organizing the work lies in the first instance directly with the Church itself.

Our concern is that the church shall apply itself constructively to the task of training and assimilating the religious energies of our youth along lines that will not only guarantee the success of Christian work in the next generation, but which by the proper adjustment of religious burdens now, will insure a larger fruition at the present time as the church applies itself to the great tasks which it has been called to perform.

Twelve of our American Yearly Meetings have definitely organized Christian Endeavor departments, which embody by far the major part of young people's activities in these several bodies. The tendency too often has been to make the organization itself the principal objective, rather than the efficient servant of the church. If Christian Endeavor in our various Yearly Meetings will set out to apply itself to denominational matters, and concern itself with the problems that affect Quakerism in America, its potentiality as an element in the Church will be vastly enlarged, and it can do this without sacrificing anything that is vital to the C. E. movement.

The Church has no greater problem before it than that of conserving the interests of its young people and getting from them the highest possible measure of service, for in it is wrapped up the destiny of the church both now and hereafter.

There are too many "dead weights" and too few "live wires" in our Christian mechanism.

Messages from National Christian Endeavor Officers

Message of Cheer From President Clark

Founder of Christian Endeavor

My dear Friends of the Friends' Christian Endeavor Societies:

I feel that you are all my friends in a special sense of the word, and I am glad to comply with the request of your editor to send you a message through THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

I have always felt that the Christian Endeavor Society owed much to your denomination because of the emphasis which you have put upon the spiritual life and the thought of quiet communion with God, listening for the inner voice and seeking the inner light, a spirit which I hope will be cultivated by Endeavorers in every church throughout the world.

May I call your attention to some new plans which we have for the coming year, which I trust will be of great assistance to the Endeavorers of your own churches and in others. These relate to the Increase and Efficiency Campaign which has been carried on very successfully during the past four years. Thousands of new societies have been added to the ranks of Christian Endeavor, and hundreds of thousands of new members. But we are not satisfied, for we desire that every one of these members shall not only belong and become efficient in the service of God, but shall become increasingly efficient as the years go by, and have a constantly enlarged blessing from on high. To this end we believe that definite effort for larger service, and a deeper and higher service still should be our constant aim, and we hope that Christian Endeavor Week in 1914, the first week in February, which will complete thirty-three years of the Christian Endeavor movement, will be marked by great advance,—advance not only in numbers with an ingathering from the Sunday Schools and from the communities, of those who need the training through active or associate membership, but also marked by increased loyalty to our own churches as indicated in the mid-week prayer meeting, and greater fellowship with others, which may be promoted by a local union meeting during that week, wherever it is possible to hold one.

We trust also that in that week the world-wide work of Christian Endeavor, which has now spread in every land, and which is doing so much to help the missionaries of all denominations, will be remembered generously by Endeavorers who will thus cultivate in their own hearts the spirit of missions and feel, as never before, the wideness of their fellowship with their Endeavor friends in all the world.

May this week also be a week of great decisions,—decisions not only to begin the Christian life, but to take up new activities and privileges like taking up the systematic giving of a proportionate part of one's income, and possibly, in many cases, a definite decision for a life of distinctively Christian service in the ministry, in missionary lands or in definite work for the young people. One cannot measure how much such a week might mean if it is taken up by Endeavorers throughout the country. With the enthusiasm of youth how many high decisions may be made, how much may be accomplished in the spread of the Kingdom in our own and other lands!

May I commend these plans, which you can secure more in detail from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, to all who read these words. The week will not be a glorification of Christian Endeavor, but a week of definite and distinctive advance along spiritual lines. It will be the culmination of months of service which, of course, must lead up to such a week in order to make it effective. We will see where we stand and how much more we have to gain. The Efficiency Chart will help us to know our failings as well as our successes, and from next Christian Endeavor Day we may go on to larger and better things in the year to come.

I am glad to tell you that the Lord is blessing our work in all lands. News comes to us constantly from every quarter of the globe of larger numbers and greater activities and of increasing spirituality among our members. Only recently I received from a little coral island in the South Seas a letter in which the missionary tells me that of the 214 people on the island 150 are members of the Christian Endeavor Society. I wonder if there is any community in America that can show such a record as this.

With kindest regards to everyone, and wishing for all of you a year of unexampled progress in the Master's service, I am,

Faithfully yours,

Boston, Massachusetts.

FRANCIS E. CLARK.

Christian Endeavor Training Church Workers

BY WILLIAM SHAW

General Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

[For The American Friend.]

Thirty years ago Christian Endeavor laid its hand upon me, and claimed me for a life of service for others. It was the first organization that appealed to me with a definite program of work. Church membership before that had meant simply the willingness to listen. In Christian Endeavor it meant training for service.

We are living in an age of organization. The number of clubs and societies that appeal to the young people in our churches is legion. The trouble with most of them is that they are so ephemeral in character. Some of them are annuals, while others are biennials. Like some plants, the first year they develop leaves and roots, and the second year flowers and fruit. Then they die. That is the end of the plant, but not so of the boy and girl when the organization dies. They live on, better or worse, according to the influence of the society.

If while their interest in this short-lived organization is keen, it has been used as a point of contact to enlist them in a more permanent form of Christian service, the result will be most satisfactory; but if not their condition will be worse than if they had never been members of the temporary society. Many of these societies for boys and girls are giving them a "tabasco taste" that will make anything else the church has to offer them seem tame and insipid.

There are two features of Christian Endeavor that ought to commend it to all pastors and church-workers.

First—It is a perennial, bearing its flowers and fruit every year. The first society is now thirty-two years old. It has renewed its membership six times or more during this period, and today is doing its work as faithfully and successfully as ever.

Second—The training given is along the lines of normal church-work, and is continuous until the members are graduated into the wider work of the church.

This is well illustrated by the record of one society of Christian Endeavor which recently celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, and is a type of many others. The historical report showed that a total of three hundred and sixty-eight members had been enrolled, of whom one hundred and eighty-five were males and one hundred and eighty-three females. Five ministers and a number of missionaries, Young Men's Christian Association secretaries, and other professional Christian workers had come from the active membership. Five of the present board of eight deacons, every officer but one in the Sunday School, and eighty per cent of the teachers were present or past active members of the society.

Here was an organization that never numbered in its membership more than ten per cent of the membership of the church or Sunday School, and yet it supplied from eighty to ninety-nine per cent of the church-workers. "There's a reason" for this, and it would be well if pastors would recognize it.

The reason is that Christian Endeavor was designed to turn out just that kind of product. It is religious from center to circumference, and is not ashamed of it. The prayer meeting is its heart. It believes in personal salvation as a prerequisite to successful social service.

Having started the young people right, it then trains them in a definite way through its committees and other activities to become worshiping, witnessing, working Christians. The results from this kind of training can be seen in any church where Christian Endeavor has had five years of intelligent, sympathetic leadership.

Boston, Massachusetts.

Message to Young Friends

BY WILLARD O. TRUEBLOOD

Chairman of Board on Young Friends' Activities.

The season of Summer assemblies, conferences and inspiring conventions has passed, and now we are settled down to the common tasks that have so many tiresome details. To many of the young Friends these Summer gatherings have become a part of their full rounded year, and rightly so, for they are places and seasons where we may get fire to keep our altars aglow all the rest of the year.

But the common days are now testing us. It was a far cry from the Mount of Transfiguration to the Valley of need and irksome toil, but Jesus led his disciples down. Mountain tops are good places to go for inspiration and outlook, but the dwelling places of our fellow men are among the valleys, and there is the place for us. Did you receive an inspiration at any of the assemblies? Liberate it in your own community and let your associates feel its thrill. If you saw a vision at some of these gatherings, try to reduce that vision to the realm of the actual in your own neighborhood.

Perhaps you heard some new suggestion as to methods of work. If so, try it out where you are now living. It may be the very thing needed to set new forces working in your Young People's Society. Or, perhaps, some one may read this who has been confined closely to his duty and has not attended any of the many inspirational gatherings of the past few months. If so, do not forget that great calls have come to those who were at their daily task. Elisha was called from the plow to a great prophet's office. To David the shepherd lad came a call to head a Kingdom. Shepherds, caring for their sheep, were among the very first to look into the face of our infant Saviour. Great visions and inspiration are not confined to large groups and thronged convention halls. The inspiration and vision that come to you, that grow out of your daily toil, are just as important as any and should be felt by the Young People's group where you are.

The one message that I would bring to all our young people is one of service. Find your place in the community life about you and begin to lift. In the very act of doing, though it may be a simple duty, there will come inspiration and courage for larger things. Do not wait and long for larger opportunities. The measure of your usefulness in a wider circle is found in the way you are meeting present responsibilities. It is to be hoped that this winter season may find many of our young people making a special study of our Church history. Many have already done so in the past and are today our enthusiastic workers. We are certain that many more will become enthusiastic as they become acquainted with large tasks to which the Society of Friends has dedicated itself.

To acquaint himself with the present activities of the Church at large, every young Friend should become a careful reader of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. It is now our official organ that links all our diversified activities together. Through its pages we shall be able to know our wide field and our workers, and the better see and understand how our individual work is a part of an undivided whole. What anyone of us alone can do is little, but what all of us, working together may accomplish no man can estimate.

"What I can do is little, but what I can do I ought to do, and what I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will do."

Winona Young Friends Conference

BY LILLIAN E. HAYES

The Young Friends Movement in America includes Whittier Fellowship Guest House Conference, Pocono Pines Conference, Haverford Summer School, The Somerton Pennsylvania Tramp of 1913, Winona Lake Conference and the Young People's Board of the Five Years Meeting, and all are activities in which Friends young people have a part.

"Does the Young Friends Movement move?" some one has asked. It looks like it moves, doesn't it? Our young people are eager to know and to do. There is no young Friends secretary as yet. We are all hoping there may be one before so very long. Each of the above Conferences has a Secretary, Chairman, Superintendent or Leader.

As Secretary of the Winona Conference, I am glad for every opportunity to speak in its behalf. It is the aim of this Conference to gather together representatives of the different meetings, and through study classes, inspirational addresses, and conferences, to deepen the spiritual life, to get better acquainted with our Church, and to equip each delegate thoroughly for leadership. The plan of the Conference conserves every interest of the delegate. While the forenoons are full of work, the afternoons are entirely free from work and are restful and recreational. The evenings are taken up with the discussion of inspirational subjects.

There are some new features planned for next year. There will be a class on teacher training, a normal class on missions, and a time each evening when the Conference leaders will conduct discussions of certain phases of young people's work, of interest to the entire delegate body, and present opportunities for service which are open to young people. It is no longer a question as to whether you can afford it, but rather can you afford to miss it. Every active young person needs the horizon of the Winona Conference. Its training, its inspiration, its fellowship, is of inestimable value. It is an ideal place to freshen life's visions, to brighten higher motives, and to deepen spiritual aspirations.

The 1914 Conference will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 22-28. Are you interested? There is much more to be told. Write the Secretary for the rest. We would like to have delegates enroll early. We cannot promise accommodation in the "Lodge" to those who do not. Already rooms are being engaged, which is an early start sure enough, but a splendid plan. Are there others?

The Young Friends in Ireland can become members of the Young Friends Association by paying one shilling and six pence, about thirty-five cents, for their Young Friends Magazine. We are offering The Winona Conference News, a bright, breezy bulletin, at a bargain—fifteen cents, issued quarterly. The first number comes out this month. Send the Secretary your subscription now so you will get the Winona Conference number.

Would you like to make a contribution to the Winona Conference Fund? The Treasurer, W. C. Kemp, Wichita, Kansas, will gladly receive it. Perhaps you cannot come to the Conference yourself next year but would like to be responsible for one delegate. There are already several who have promised to do this.

A Committee of Young Friends in Indiana Yearly Meeting are planning to visit country meetings and Friends in lonely places, to encourage and help build up meetings where needed, especially the meetings without a pastor, and encourage the young people. They plan to hold devotional meetings and conferences, using a specially prepared list of questions for the latter.

There are wonderful possibilities before us; let us lift our eyes and look on the fields, not only look, but with untiring, unselfish effort, labor therein.

Dunreith, Indiana.

were not ignored. Denominational colleges must be the great source of strong Christian leaders. He made a strong appeal for our colleges to lead our Protestant churches to a union of our religious forces.

The Freedmen's Aid Society made a plea for more work for the black man. There are now 4,000,000 church members among 10,000,000 colored population. On behalf of Home Missions Dr. Ward Platt made a plea for work among our foreign population as a most effective agency of world evangelization. The country church must get a world vision if it is still to be the source from which we are to draw our strong workers. Over 80 per cent of our best workers of the present day came from the country church, but the country church now faces great peril unless new vigor is put into it.

Dr. Boswell advocated the need of work in large cities where he said the Methodist Church had failed to get a strong hold. The foreign element of our city population must be reached and rescue work must reach down and lift up the fallen. Bishop Oldham, of the Foreign Mission Board, spoke eloquently of the 150,000,000 people of non-Christian lands for whom the Methodist Church is responsible. The Great Commission should be sufficient motive for this work, but to that should be added the motive of gratitude for what the missions of the past have done for us. Eighty per cent of the Hindus of India worship snakes. The home church needs a wider horizon. "Only a world-conquering church can succeed at home." "To have the Christ passion we must have the Christ vision." The Methodist Church is failing to meet its opportunity.

At the session of Tuesday evening Bishop Anderson spoke upon "American Cities and the City of God." The City should be a business partnership and the servant of the people. The Church should lead in all life of the city and nation. "The hope of the City of God is in the Son of God." Bishop Hughes took the theme, "New America for New Americans." He spoke of the three gates to the New American citizenship. The first is immigration. The immigrant is a brother of our Lord. Hundreds of them die of homesickness. He spoke of the sympathy of Jesus for the lonely and homeless. Castle Garden should be made an entrance to the city of God. The second gate is the gate of birth. Every little child should be a call to a larger faith. He dwelt upon the attitude of Jesus toward childhood, who had no question about the place of children in His kingdom. The more than 2,000,000 little children at work in our mills, factories and mines should stir the church for their deliverance. The third gate is the gate of character. Regenerated men is the need of today. He told of Professor James' book on varieties of religious experience and how it emphasized the place of the new birth in character building. He quoted Edwin Arnold's words to Harvard students: "In 1776 and 1812 you conquered your fathers, in 1866 you conquered your brothers; your next victory must be over yourselves. The only yellow peril today is the white peril."

Bishop Stuntz spoke of "The open world as a challenge to Methodist Men." In India the children of outcasts now occupy leading positions in government and the Church. Of the 40,000,000 outcasts, there are millions eager to enter the Church, but must be kept out until they can be properly instructed. An evangelistic avalanche is ahead of us. If the Church does not lead now, there is danger that fanaticism may bring peril to the situation. In the Philippines there have been more converts in the last thirteen years than in India in forty-three years. In South America all government opposition to Protestant work is at an end. The last country to open was on the fourth of the present month. He made a powerful appeal for well equipped training schools for native workers in each of their fields. Great things can not be done on a nickel basis. If we depend on evangelistic work alone, in a generation we will be a spent force.

Wednesday morning the first speaker showed by a large chart how Methodism was failing to meet its responsibility for the work in the home churches. Mr. Earl Taylor, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, showed the difficulty of moving so large and complex a system as Methodism has become with so many separate Boards and separate appeals. He advocated a federation of Boards and a united appeal.

Dr. Trimble spoke on the remedy for present troubles being found in an annual every-member canvass, preceded by a strong educational campaign in every congregation. A full month should be given every year to educating the membership to its church responsibility. Only one-third of Methodists are now giving in any systematic way. As soon as a child is old enough to chew gum it is old enough to begin to help support the church. A business system is needed such as is to be presented in the United Missionary campaign. Giving should become habitual. A habit cannot be formed by doing a thing once a year. He strongly presented the plan of weekly giving as the only working plan. The every-member canvass means much more to the church than getting funds. It gets people acquainted with the Church members. It is a fine thing for business men to call on the members in a church capacity and not leave it all to the pastors.

Several men followed in five minute speeches telling how great success had been obtained by these methods. Contributions had been increased beyond any expectation; church debts had been paid; spiritual uplift had followed and great revivals; it relieves the strain on pastors to raise money; it develops leadership; it finances the home church; it reheartens discouraged churches; it interests the children; it revitalizes dormant men. If rightly done, it emphasizes the prayer life and quickens the conscience. It greatly increases the number of regular givers.

Churches are adopting the standard, "As much for others as for ourselves." A downtown church in Baltimore was enabled to live and prosper when it looked as if it must die. All branches of church work catch new life. Country churches find the source of power. It works in all kinds of churches, under all kinds of conditions. Membership increases when men see the church means business.

October 29. (TO BE CONCLUDED)

To the Student of the Life of Christ

The Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting is anxious to promote Bible study and to do what it can to place effective helps within the reach of students.

There has been brought to our notice a chart of the Life of Christ by E. O. Ellis, which is one of the clearest and most accurate of any in circulation today relative to the chronology and general work of Christ.

We recommend that, as far as possible, every Bible School and individual teacher purchase one of these charts. The Executive Committee of the Board gives it unanimous endorsement.

RICHARD HAWORTH,
President of the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, Fairmount, Indiana.

If four out of five Sabbath-school children slip from the hands of the Church, this means, in the overwhelming variety of instances, that they slip away from Christianity. We have urged with all the force we could use the absolute and crying need that the children should be brought up to worship in the house of God. At fourteen the insurgent years begin. But before that time of life it is comparatively easy to influence children. At a much earlier age they should be gathered into the sanctuary and taught to join in the common exercises of worship. If this is done, we shall keep them, or at least a very large number of them.—British Weekly.

The Twentieth Century Jubilee Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America will be held in Columbus, Ohio, November 10-13. It is expected that 20,000 delegates will attend. The program will include the names of many of the greatest temperance orators and workers of the country.

Yearly Meeting Reports on Young People's Work

We present herewith statements concerning the status and work of our young people in the various Yearly Meetings. It will be observed that these are all reports of Christian Endeavor work. All the Yearly Meetings in the Five Years Meeting have the Christian Endeavor movement as the organized work of the Yearly Meeting, except Baltimore and Canada. In addition, Ohio has the same arrangement, while Philadelphia does not. We are sorry that all the Yearly Meetings did not respond to the request to be represented in these statements, which are given below.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The C. E. Union of Indiana Yearly Meeting is in a prosperous condition. Several of our Vice-Presidents failed to get their reports in, in time to be printed in the minutes of this year, which will make an apparent falling off in results, but such is not the case. We have a substantial gain, both in members and enthusiasm.

One of the new features we introduced this past year was our plan of raising missionary money, which was entered into heartily by the Vice-Presidents and from indications and results obtained is approved by our membership generally. Our plan of making our Vice-Presidents responsible for the field work in their respective Quarters and also making them members of the Executive Committee is a very satisfactory arrangement.

We have appointed a Young People's Extension Committee, whose duty it shall be, to visit every meeting in the Yearly Meeting, as far as practical, and to organize, if possible, Friends Study clubs or other organizations among the young people, for the purpose of assisting the Field Secretary of our Five Years Meeting Board of Young Friends' Activities, when such a Secretary shall be appointed.

I believe conditions are just right to take an advanced step in all departments of our work this year, and thus make this the best year in our history.

HARRY REEVES, President.

Richmond, Indiana.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

During the year, our total membership was 1,227. Of this number, 933 were active, 171 associate, and 123 honorary. Oskaloosa reported the largest membership, 76; Le Grand and Lynnville had 63 and 58 respectively.

One of the most important activities of our Union is our mission work in Jamaica. During the past year, our contributions to this work amounted to $1,200.00, given by 25 Senior societies, one Intermediate, and 7 Junior societies. Pleasant Plain's contribution of $126.45 was the largest. West Branch and Le Grand followed closely with $116.40 and $107.56.

In addition to this amount the individual societies raised $541.54 for local expenses. Smyrna spent $85.00; Minneapolis $70.50, and Le Grand $39.55 for this line of work. Then, too, a movement begun by Oskaloosa C. E., netted something over $100.00, paid by our young people towards the seats in the new Meeting House.

Our budget of $1,350.00 for the coming year includes $1,200.00 for the Jamaica work, $50.00 for the Winona Assembly, and leaves the remainder for use according to the direction of the Executive Committee. Besides this amount, the various societies at Yearly Meeting time pledged $100.00 toward the indebtedness on the new Yearly Meeting House.

Our interest in the Winona Assembly is shown by the fact that seventeen of our young people attended that gathering last summer. It is our aim to send a representative from each Senior society next year.

The work done by the three retiring officers was most satisfactory. Miss Belva Branson, our former president, worked diligently under the disadvantage of having no local paper as a means of communication with the various societies. Much of the success of last year's work is due to her persistent efforts. During the present year she will serve as matron at White's Institute near Salem. Miss Laura Hoag's work as Junior Superintendent was also satisfactory. Interest among the children was shown by the fact that Bloomington Junior Society gave $50.00 for missions. Miss Katie Miller, who had charge of the missionary work, is this year engaged in home missionary work at Southland, Arkansas.

The present Executive Committee has chosen as its motto "Efficient Service." We are holding up a standard of five cents a week per member for each society, four cents to be paid to the C. E. Union and one cent to be kept for local expenses. Two or three societies have already made their pledges high enough to reach this standard. In order to arouse interest in the C. E. work, Miss Knudson was appointed by the Executive Committee to visit the various societies.

At our business meeting this year, greetings were read from the Winona Assembly and our secretary was instructed to send a reply. We also decided to send letters to the C. E. Union of each Yearly Meeting. We feel that this will help to bring us into closer unity and will keep us in closer touch with each other.

We realize that God has richly blessed us during the past year, and we pray that He will lead us into still greater fields of usefulness.

CLYDE COFFIN, Secretary.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

We have in Kansas Yearly Meeting fifty-nine societies, with a membership of two thousand and sixty-eight. Auxiliary to our Yearly Meeting Union, we have Quarterly Meeting Unions, which meet every quarter and take charge of one of the sessions of the regular Quarterly Meeting and render a program or have a C. E. rally.

We have a Field Secretary who visits the individual societies once a year, delivering lectures on C. E. work. Our system of quarterly reports made by the Quarterly Meeting superintendents has proved to be very beneficial in keeping in touch with our Quarterly Meeting Unions.

We are making our greatest effort along missionary lines, not only in giving money, but missionary instruction. At our last Yearly Meeting twenty young people stood and publicly confessed a call and offered themselves for the mission field. We have pledged the support of two missionaries for next year.

New England Yearly Meeting

If the Christian Endeavor Society was organized for any denomination more than another, it certainly was for the Friends, as it is about the only Young People's organization that we have, and the fellowship it has with other Christian Endeavor societies helps materially in bringing that much needed life into our meetings. The Christian Endeavor is the agency which should and does bring into our fold people who have no other church home.

The Christian Endeavor fills in the gap of time when some feel they are too old to go to Sunday School and too young to be members of the meeting; it gives us a start in real Church work—teaches us the business of the Church and helps us take the places assigned to us as officers and on committees of the Church.

What the Christian Endeavor Societies of New England Yearly Meeting need is a paid worker or organizer, who could spend from one to three weeks with each society, either working for the Christian Endeavor alone or in connection with the Sunday School field worker, and we are considering the possibility of this at this time.

Every member in the meeting should be in sympathy with the Christian Endeavor Society, and every little enthusiasm should be encouraged, for in the Christian Endeavor Society lies, in a great part, the future of our Church.

At our Yearly Meeting it was suggested that we have a special arm band for attending Christian Endeavor rallies and conventions, and it is desired that the arm band be made up of Quaker gray with the word in white letters on the same, one of our members stating that the "F-r-i" preceding the "e" with the "C" round it stood for "Find Rest in Christ" and the "N-d-s" stood for "New Desires for Service."

We wish that all Friends Societies would adopt the above and make it a National Arm Band for Friends.

New York Yearly Meeting

The Christian Endeavor Union of New York Yearly Meeting has been at work for more than twenty-five years. For about eighteen years the Union has supported Margaret Holmes in China, and still cherishes this as its own particular piece of missionary work. Besides this many of our members contribute to the support of Dr Devol and besides do much home missionary work.

With widely scattered societies and the usual ups and downs incident to such work, we are going on for Christ and the Church, endeavoring to train our young people to engage actively in His cause. We visit the sick and relieve the poor, assist in Bible Schools and hold services in jails.

Our Junior Societies are few but active and reports show intense interest on the part of the children. We plan this year to have the younger members taught about our missionary, that they may feel the same personal interest the older ones have, and thus may be inspired to carry on the work as the older folks retire from C. E. activities. GEO. B. EVANS, Chairman.

Yorktown Heights, New York.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

In reply to a request from the management of THE AMERICAN FRIEND for a brief outline of our plans for our young people the coming year, we wish to say that we feel one of the most needed things among us is a spirit of "oneness." Not that there is any indication of division, but in our efforts for our own society or particular meeting, we are so apt to forget that we are a part of a greater Society. Instead of our interests being confined to ourselves alone, we ought to include all our societies in our thought and prayers.

To foster this spirit and cause us to feel that we are all of one large family with a common interest,—the advancement of Christ's Kingdom,—we are asking of our Quarterly Meeting C. E. Presidents and the different Societies in each Quarter, that there be a closer association among them, and that the Quarterly Meeting President make it a point to visit each society under his care every few months at least, and draw them all closer together in that way, and also help them to plan for special Young People's Meetings to bring the different Societies together.

Another feature of our work will be the Christian Endeavor News and Notes of our Yearly Meeting Societies which will be given each month in our church paper, The Evangelical Friend. One or two pages of each issue will be devoted to short items of interesting things that have occurred in our Societies. (Notes on the C. E. Lessons will also be given.) We feel that as our young people read of what others are doing, it will kindle a fraternal spirit in them and inspire them to greater efforts. Above all, they must be made to feel that the future of our beloved Friends Church depends on them. CHAS. E. HAWORTH, President.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Conditions in this Northwest country make the co-operation of the various societies very difficult, separated as we are hundreds of miles apart and occupying a territory which comprises three states. Then again we are so few in number, that a gathering of Endeavorers alone would at least lack the inspiration of numbers. Consequently we only meet in conjunction with other interests of the church, which is usually at the regular Yearly Meeting time. The Saturday evening hour on the program has been granted us and this is the time when we have our annual rally.

There has been manifest a desire to do something definite for the church, and after prayer and counsel the decision was made to ask each society to assume a definite portion of the regular missionary budget of the church of which it was a part. This policy has proved to be a great blessing. One society, with 40 members pledged $200 and a great impetus came to them because of the consciousness that they had a part in the great work of the church.

Portland C. E.'s have been doing splendid work in the city, in the way of assisting in the work of the city Union, and in the city missions. Each Monday and Tuesday evening finds one of the Friends' societies in charge of the Peniel Mission work and by their songs and earnest testimonies and exhortations, seeking to "Rescue the perishing."

On the whole we have a fine body of deeply spiritual young people who know what it means to "Worship the Lord in the beauty of Holiness" and who find a real delight in the service of the Master.

CHESTER A. HADLEY, Superintendent.

Western Yearly Meeting

A definite, aggressive campaign for new interest in young people's work is being instituted in Western Yearly Meeting this year. "Fifty Young People's Societies in Western Yearly Meeting and $500 for Missions," is our motto for the year and we are expecting to work hard to reach these marks, because we feel that the young men and women, the boys and girls can be reached best for the Church by her young people's societies.

The fact that so many are feeling a deep concern for the young people's help in the Church, and that many of the younger members are pledging their best efforts in the work, promises good things for the future. Most of the young people's organizations in the Yearly Meeting are C. E. Societies and we believe that this is best. However, the superintendents are anxious to be of every possible service to all young people's societies, whether C. E. or not.

We wish here to make an urgent appeal to all of you who are interested in the future leadership of the Church, that you will put forth your best efforts,—heroic efforts, if need be,—to have strong, live Junior, Intermediate and Young People's Societies in your own local meetings.

FRED W. EMERSON, Superintendent.
Earlham, Indiana.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

The Young Friends of Wilmington Yearly Meeting are certainly catching the enthusiasm for a bigger Quakerism. They are enlisting for service under the older members most harmoniously. They are bringing to the task more culture, happier lives and clearer vision than any former generation of Quakers among us has ever known.

In 1912 a Yearly Meeting committee was appointed. This committee found an unworked field ahead, full of possibilities. But the committee sadly lacked plans and methods for efficient work, and their efforts were largely experimental. Several week-end meetings were held upon topics of history, doctrine, the present-day message and the need of the young, consecrated lives. The members of the committee were urged to give voluntary service in ministering at various meetings for worship. A course in Quakerism was begun in Wilmington College. Several committeemen attended Winona and brought back enthusiasm and encouragement. Between the Yearly Meeting sessions of 1913, prayer bands were instituted to which a hundred young lives responded.

For the coming year a set of programs are being outlined, which can be used by young people in connection with reading circles, C. E. meetings or public gatherings. We realize that our great purpose will neither be accomplished by organizations nor by educational methods, though these may help. Our aim can only be reached when we, through bands of consecrated men and women, set whole communities on fire with the love of the service of our King.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting has set herself to the task of winning 1,000 souls into the Kingdom in the year 1913-14. The young Friends have dedicated themselves to active service in this campaign. We feel that only in such dedication as this can we ever hope to see a great revival of Quakerism that will swing back the world to a true perspective of God.

CLAYTON TERRELL,

Chairman of Committee.

Mrs. William Butler, probably the oldest missionary in the world, passed away on September 12, at Newton Centre, Mass. She was ninety-three years of age. In 1856 she and her husband, Rev. William Butler, sailed for India to establish a mission for the Methodist Episcopal Church. This mission is now the second largest in that country. Dr. and Mrs. Butler were in India at the time of the Sepoy rebellion, and were chased from place to place until the fall of Lucknow brought peace. In 1873 Dr. and Mrs. Butler were sent to Mexico, where they established the first mission of their denomination in that country.—C. E. World.

The native women in the Transvaal have a prayer union with 800 members. At the Annual Conference one delegate walked a difficult road for four days to attend the prayer meetings. After her return to the Queen's kraal, the Queen gathered some of her women together, and held a prayer meeting. This prayer movement, which arose five years ago, is under the supervision of the Methodist missionaries. The native women are said to have wonderful power in prayer.—Central Christian Advocate.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

Berkeley—A Jennie Ridgway, of Amboy, Indiana, is still at Berkeley, where she has spent the past few months.

Pasadena—The men of the Pasadena meeting have organized a Brotherhood, with more than forty charter members.

Denair—Five classes of the Denair Bible School are now using the Graded lessons. A teachers' training class has also been organized.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Fairmount—Perry Bantz, who graduated from the Biblical Department of Fairmount Academy last June, has moved his family to Van Wert, Ohio, where he will have charge, as pastor, of three small meetings. Oscar Trader left Fairmount last week for Rockford, Ohio, where he will serve the meeting at that place as pastor during the year. His wife and daughter will join him soon. Upland Friends have asked Hiram Harvey to become their pastor, and it is expected that he will accept the call. Marie Cassel, a highly esteemed young minister of Fairmount Meeting, has taken charge of three meetings in Wells county. She will be joined by Blanch Harshbarger, an estimable young woman of this place. They intend doing light housekeeping. Leora Bogue expected to leave Fairmount October 29th, to assist as singing evangelist in a series of meetings at Poughkeepsie, New York.

On October 29th the auditorium at Fairmount was completely filled to hear Sada F. Stanley who is now home on furlough from her mission field in Jamaica. The Fairmount News speaks of her as follows: "Miss Sadie Stanley, a former Marion girl, who has been serving as a missionary in Jamaica, gave an address which dealt in some measure with her work on that island. The story told in a simple, modest and womanly manner, was well received by the audience. Miss Stanley's father, Frank Stanley, of Marion, was also present, and spoke a few words. Mr. Stanley is wearing one of his arms in a sling as a result of an accident which occurred when he was cranking his automobile."

Milton—Sabbath, October 26th, was Missionary day at Milton, Indiana. In the morning, Sarah Lindley of the Mexican mission at Matehuala, and who is spending some time at Richmond, was the speaker. In the evening, Raymond

S. Holding addressed the congregation, and the two Mexican girls, now attending Earlham College, sang in their native tongue. The services of all were much appreciated. Mary Mills, the pastor, arranged the day's program.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Des Moines—Dr. J. Boggs Dodds addressed the evening meeting of the Friends' Church in Des Moines, Iowa, October 26th, in a most interesting way, on "The Advance of Christianity throughout the World." Dr. Dodds is the Field Secretary of the National Reform Association, and is arranging for a state convention of this association to be held in Des Moines, November 13-14. The call for this convention has been made by the governor and other state officials with the prominent men of churches and other organizations. The Interchurch Council of Des Moines is also taking an important part in arranging for the convention. Friends of Iowa can well afford to attend this gathering. The following subjects are to have place on the program, with men of state and national note to treat them both in address and conference: A Sober Nation, Social Purity, Marriage and Divorce, Sabbath Observance, The Bible in Public Schools, Arbitration, The Highest Citizenship. The convention will be held in the Plymouth Congregational Church, beginning Thursday night and continuing over Friday night.

Oskaloosa—The Oskaloosa Sunday-school Institute is again organized for work under the direction of the Ministerial Association of the city. Its purpose is to provide training for all who are interested in religious education. A diploma of graduation will be issued to students who complete three years of work in the institute, subject to certain conditions. We note the names of Dr. David W. Dennis, of Richmond, Indiana, President David M. Edwards, Professor Clarence M. Case, and Professor W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College, among the list of instructors. The institute is held every Monday at the Y. M. C. A. building. Practical courses of study have been arranged.

New York Yearly Meeting

Unadilla—Butternuts Quarterly Meeting was held at Unadilla, Otsego County, New York, October 18 and 19. There were no ministers present outside of our own Quarterly Meeting.

J. William Peckham, a veteran minister, and Alder Larzelere, pastor at Upperville, were present, and had acceptable part in the services. Saturday night a Bible School Conference was held. Ruth A. Craig, a student at the Oneonta State Normal, gave a helpful address on "The Successful Bible School." Mrs. Cynthia Carlin, of West Branch Meeting, also read an interesting and instructive paper. In the Sunday afternoon service Ruth E. Craig gave a profitable Scriptural address.

Union Springs—During the last four months the prison authorities of New York have allowed the prisoners of Auburn Prison to work on the roads in that county. Two of the seven camps thus created have been near the Friends' meetings at Union Springs and Poplar Ridge, and Friends have been much interested in holding meetings with the prisoners. The men have much appreciated this expression of interest in their welfare.

Western Yearly Meeting

Bloomington—Enos Harvey at Bloomington, is giving a series of sermons on the Epistle to the Hebrews, at the Sabbath evening meetings. His congregation is receiving new light on this book, through the pastor's helpful discourses. Some not able to attend the services are following the study of the book at home.

Azalia—Sand Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Azalia, Indiana, October 18-19. Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, and Edward M. Woodard, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, were present, and their services were much appreciated. Vincent Nicholson was present and presented the financial needs of Earlham College.

United Missionary Campaign, November Conferences

The following conferences come soon: Batavia, New York, November 5-6; Lockport, New York, November 6-7; Marion, Indiana, November 16-17; Kokomo, Indiana, November 18-19; Norfolk, Virginia, November 25-26; Manchester and Rochester, New Hampshire, some time between November 15th and December 15th.

It is most important that every Friends' congregation within reach of these conferences, or any others that are to be held, shall be well represented at the gatherings.

News About the Young People

California Yearly Meeting

Los Angeles—On the day after Thanksgiving, a Friends' "Increase and Efficiency Conference" is to be held at Los Angeles. The local Union will serve as host, and a splendid time is expected.

Yarba Linda—The Yarba Linda C. E. has an Athletic Committee which appears to be a new venture in C. E. work.

East Whittier—The East Whittier Intermediate C. E. Society has grown to twenty-eight members. The children have entered upon a memory contest of verses.

Pasadena—The First Friends' Church in Pasadena, California, has three good Christian Endeavor Societies, named the Y. P. S. C. E., The Douglas Y. P. S. C. E., and the Junior C. E. They have devoted officers, industrious committees, and an earnest membership. One of the members is president of the City Union; others fill important offices in the Yearly Meeting Union and in the City Union. All our Endeavorers have been greatly stimulated by sending one of their number, Elizabeth Stratton, as a missionary to Alaska. Others are volunteers to the mission field. Some of their watchwords are: "Serve the Lord with gladness," "We are Laborers together with God," "Learning something and sharing it with others; Doing something and reporting it." As helpers in the church, the Bible school, evangelistic meetings, and as an aid to the pastor, our Endeavorers are invaluable.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Carthage—For many years Carthage Meeting, Carthage, Indiana, has had a strong C. E. Society. At present it is in a flourishing condition, though depleted in numbers by its members going away for the winter to engage in school work. This term's motto is, "This one thing I do."

Fairmount—The Christian Endeavor prayer meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, was joined with the regular church prayer meeting for the summer. The monthly meeting has been planning its business, and has arranged several special programs in the interest of the young people.

Farmland—The young people's Society at this place seems to be taking on new life and interest. It was recently reorganized, and all committees seem to be working splendidly and are encouraged by a hopeful outlook for this year's work. Arla Jones is now president, and is in love with the work. Twenty-eight were in attendance October 26th to participate in the missionary meeting.

Fountain City—The number of Christian Endeavor Societies in New Garden Quarterly Meeting has been doubled during the past year, having now four societies. There are also nearly twice as many members as there were one year ago. Surely more than two hundred people who are endeavoring to be Christ-like will mean much for the Church of the future. At the last Quarterly Meeting there was a basket dinner and conference in the afternoon. A part of the program was by the Endeavorers; in this way making the union of younger and older people closer.

Greenfield—Three high school girls, of Greenfield Meeting, volunteered their services to organize and conduct a Junior Endeavor. The work is being carried on in a most interesting and helpful manner. Chalk talks and blackboard illustrations are given, and the girls work with an ardent desire to stimulate the Juniors to service. There was an interesting meeting when a kindred topic to the sermon of the morning had been given. The Juniors were asked to tell something they remembered from the sermon and they responded well.

Knightstown—This meeting has a band of loyal young people. They have an organized class in the Bible School called the "Quaker Class," and they are doing splendid work. We are organizing our Christian Endeavor, and will also have a Junior C. E. We are hoping to keep in the spirit and activities of our day.

Ludlow Falls, Ohio—There are two Christian Endeavor societies in West Branch Quarterly Meeting, one at West Milton and one at Ludlow Falls. They are earnestly considering the advisability of extending an invitation to the Yearly Meeting Union to hold the annual convention here next year.

Lynn—The Lynn Friends' Church is taking some rapid strides toward advancing the kingdom of our Lord. The interest in the Bible school is indeed very great. In one of the young people's classes the enrollment numbers nearly eighty. The attendance at the Young People's Society is continually increasing. Their activities are of the proper sort. The young people of the Church have caught the beautiful spirit of helping their neighbor. The Church has been very fortunate in securing Milo S. Hinckle for their pastor the ensuing year.

Marion—The C. E. Society of the First Friends' Church of Marion, Indiana, is in good working order, with a loyal band of thirty-five members, mostly young people between the ages of sixteen and twenty-six. The Society is a great help to the Sabbath school, furnishing its superintendent, assistant superintendent, secretary and assistant secretary, pianist, and many of its teachers. The Society supplies flowers for the Sunday services of the church, afterward sending the flowers to the sick. Quite a number of the members are tithers, and all the finances, including missionary money, are raised by pledges; about $85.00 being raised the past year, $47.00 of which was sent to the foreign field. Two of the young people, Beatrice Wiltsie and Cornelia Collins, were sent as delegates to the meeting of the Young Friends at Winona Lake this summer, and brought back much enthusiasm and information to the Society.

New Castle—Harry E. Reeves, president of the Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union, was here on October 19. He was at the Endeavor meeting and conducted a round table service.

Pennville—Pennville Meeting has no young people's society, but we are trying to interest our young people in the church service. That we are succeeding is shown by the fact that over one-half the Sabbath morning congregation are under twenty years of age. None leave after the Bible school.

Spiceland—Our Young People's Society, while not possessing all the life and vigor that should characterize it, boasts of a few faithful members of that type that make a society always a blessing. At some of the last meetings measures and plans relative to a reorganization have been talked over, and we believe that at an early date our society will be placed upon a more solid basis.

South Marion—South Marion C. E. dead? Sleeping? Oh, no! Just busy working. Our enrollment is not large, but steadily growing. We are just taking up the Efficiency Campaign, with our ideals set on a society whose every member is a working, praying Christian.

Van Wert, Ohio—The Young People's Society at Van Wert, Ohio, is entering upon the new year's work with new plans and an aggressive spirit for the greatest year's work in the history of the Society. The entire membership has promised its loyal support to their new pastor, F. H. Tormohlen, in a great evangelistic campaign which began November 2. Many of the young people took a very active part in cottage prayer meetings, which were held the week previous to the beginning of the revival.

Winchester—Our Society is in a flourishing condition, with twenty members enrolled. Meetings are held Sabbath evenings and are well attended. Business meetings are made more interesting by being held at the homes of the members, and part of the time spent in games and amusements, provided by the Social Committee. We find it helpful to have our topics printed in booklet form, giving names of leaders and much information that will be of service to our members.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Earlham—Our Christian Endeavor Society has taken in about fifteen of the younger people of our congregation recently as active members. Our president, Wallace Jackson, has been laid up with a broken ankle for three months, but is again able to attend. Our meetings are increasing in interest.

Muscatine—Muscatine Monthly Meeting held at Bloomington (name of township) is a small country charge four miles from Muscatine. Harvey Jones, a Penn graduate, is our pastor. There are about six local families, two of which live three and four miles from the church. Our young people's work consists of a senior and junior C. E. Society with a total membership of thirty-five, one-half of whom are not members of the Friends' Church. Eighty dollars was raised last year for missions by these societies. We are undertaking the same this year. We find the mite-box a help in raising money. It may be said incidentally, that Charles E. Tebbetts was a member of this meeting in his childhood.

Oskaloosa—The young people of Oskaloosa Friends' meeting are well started on what promises to be a successful year. The work is divided into two sections, the Young People's C. E., composed of those of high school and academy age, and the Senior C. E. for the older young people. The membership of each society is about forty-five. The meetings are well attended and a good interest is manifest. The pleasant accommodations in the new meeting house add much to the young people's zeal in the work of the Endeavor and of the Church.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Barclay—The work of the young people at Barclay, Kansas, centers around an organized Sunday School Class with thirty-eight members, which holds a business and social meeting fortnightly, and the Christian Endeavor Society with twenty active and fourteen associate members. These during the summer equipped the churchyard with a playground for the use of the Juniors on Saturday afternoons and for the use of the community one night each month.

Emporia—The Emporia C. E. is making special effort to make this a record year, both in attendance and spirit, as well as in the amount of money raised for missions. Seven C. E.'s are giving $1.00 per month while three are giving fifty cents per month for that purpose. Others give only more or less systematically. All feel it a privilege to help a little.

Wichita—In the University Friends' Church, Wichita, Kansas, no department is better worked than that of the Christian Endeavor. Our three societies now enroll one hundred and sixty members. The Junior and Intermediate each have efficient superintendents and the care of a committee from the young people's society. Our pastor, Lewis E. Stout, believes in young people's work, and gives each society his personal attention.

"The pastor of University Friends' Church, Wichita, Kansas, Lewis E. Stout, has in his congregation a number of young people who are expecting to enter some form of special Christian work. For the purpose of training these he frequently has one of them take charge of the opening exercises of the Sabbath evening gospel meeting. A few verses of Scripture are read; prayer is usually offered, and sometimes a few minutes' talk is given."—E. H. Stranahan in C. E. World.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Damascus—The C. E. Society of Friends' Church at Damascus, consisting of about thirty-five members, is just introducing the Efficiency Campaign, hoping thereby to increase the interest and do better work. The first Sabbath in October was Rally Day, and our Yearly Meeting President, Charles Haworth, was with us and gave a good address, as did also Edgar Woolam.

Salem—The Friends' Christian Endeavor Society of Salem, Ohio, entered the Efficiency Campaign in August of last year, and with vigorous and continued work on the part of all members the one hundred mark was reached on June 22. This Society was the fifth Christian Endeavor Society in the United States to reach the goal.

Tecumseh, Michigan—The Friends' Church of Tecumseh, Michigan, has a Y. P. S. C. E. of about thirty members. Its Sunday night meetings are well attended and helpful. Nearly all of its members are enrolled in a class for the study of Friends' history and doctrine, conducted by the pastor Mary Barrett Pim.

Western Yearly Meeting

Bloomington—Friends' C. E. at Bloomington, Indiana, is working to improve their Society. An Efficiency Chart has been purchased. Five new members have been added. The prayer meetings are better and there is improved attendance at church services.

Carmel—The C. E. at Carmel, Indiana, reorganized recently, with Miss Sarah Follett as president, and the time of holding the meeting has been changed from Wednesday night to Sabbath evening. Under the new management the society is showing signs of new life.

Georgetown, Illinois—At the last two meetings of the Vermilion Grove C. E., the room has been beautifully decorated with autumn leaves, and the attendance has been about forty. At one meeting recently the young men furnished special music. The interest is splendid. A mission study class has lately been formed.

First Church, Indianapolis—The Quaker Round Table, a new organization among the young people of the First Friends' Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, bids fair to become quite an interesting feature, as a study of church history is being planned. These meetings will be held monthly at the homes of the members, and the social side will be emphasized as well. Another important study is that of the different religions of the world, which the Delitha B. Harvey (Young People's Missionary Society) has just begun, to continue throughout the year, to be terminated by an address by the pastor, W. O. Trueblood, on the comparative values of each.

Indianapolis, Second Church—Our young people are the activity of our church and Sabbath school. The members of the C. E. take great interest in all our devotional meetings. The two Roumanian boys, who came into our church through the Sabbath school, are doing good work in our meeting.

Kokomo, Union Street—The Union Street Christian Endeavor Society has taken up the work for the winter, the meeting having adjourned for the months of July and August. The members are showing much interest, and are making plans for definite work to be accomplished this year.

Marshall—Lindley M. Reagan is serving the meetings at Marshall, Indiana, and Friends' Chapel in Illinois, as pastor. There is a membership of about twenty in each of the two C. E. Societies, with about half that number of active members. There is a Junior Society of about eight at Friends' Chapel. At the latter place the Endeavorers have two mission study classes, one studying China, the other the rural church problem.

New London—The C. E. Society of New London, Indiana, has manifested its loyalty to the church in a way that is encouraging to the pastor, William J. Cleaver. In the absence of the regular choir on Sabbath evening they willingly form a chorus for the evening service. On October 21st they held a social at the home of the president, Wallace Stout. Through their efforts the parsonage has recently been wired for electric lights. They held a country market at Kokomo, Indiana, October 25th. People willingly contributed for this purpose, and the results were gratifying to the Society and the Church.

Paoli—The young people of Paoli Meeting have purchased a new organ containing the famous Philharmonic Reeds. The money was secured by free will offerings. The instrument was installed last Sabbath.

Plainfield—The young people's meeting at Plainfield, Indiana, is interesting and profitable, not only in cultivating a worshipful spirit, but in developing a fellowship with the true culture of a higher life. The Academy teachers are active in the work.

Westfield—The spiritual life of our Endeavorers is healthful and our meetings are interesting and helpful. No part of our membership is more loyal to the church than our Endeavorers. Out of twenty-six active members twenty are using the duplex envelopes.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

New Burlington—The C. E. Society of the New Burlington Friends' Church has a membership of fifty, and an average attendance of more than that number. They help with the pastor's salary, and with other finances of the church. The membership is active, and all are ready to speak in the prayer meetings. By way of variety plans recommended in the C. E. World are often introduced and are found helpful both in keeping younger members interested and in preventing monopolies of any particular subject.

Spring Valley—The Christian Endeavor work is in a prosperous condition at Spring Valley, Ohio. The meetings take the place of the Sabbath evening preaching service, and the pastor gives a fifteen minutes' talk on the lesson. We find this is the most successful way here.

Whittier College

The college year has opened with many encouraging aspects. The new teachers are taking their various places in a very pleasing manner. It seems there never has been a better start for a college year. We feel that the college is to be congratulated in being able to keep up the numbers while the preparatory work was being eliminated. This is much better than the management dared to hope.

The library has been making some valuable additions, and is fast becoming a splendid working collection of books and encyclopedias. The college has recently enjoyed a visit from Miss Margaret Matthews, at home on furlough from Japan, where she has spent several years. Her address before the faculty and student body was very interesting and instructive, and her work with the young ladies during her stay was a continual inspiration. A reception was tendered her at the home of Mary Coffin by the Y. W. C. A.

The work in the Biblical department is on a better basis than ever before. All the classes are well attended and the Teacher Training class is bound to be a valuable addition to the courses of study. The Christian associations are making their usual campaigns for Bible Study and Mission Study. The meetings have been well attended. The Y. W. C. A. recently entertained the senior and junior girls of the high school, on the campus, in a very pleasant and enjoyable manner to all in attendance.—The Pacific Friend.

Evangelistic and Church Extension Board

The Executive Committee of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting met in Richmond, Indiana, October 22, and held three regular sessions and one informal meeting, in the interest of their department.

The work the past year has been limited on account of the small sum of money at our disposal. We have continued the work begun by the former Board, and are helping three meetings, Fremont in Nebraska, Knoxville in Tennessee, and Winston-Salem in North Carolina. The Fremont meeting has large opportunities for Friends, but there is great need for larger buildings and better equipment for the work.

Harry R. Keates, our Chairman, made a trip to the Pacific coast last June in the interest of the work. He attended Nebraska, Oregon and California Yearly Meetings and meetings in Washington. As we listened to his report of this visit, we felt that much good will result from it.

When we looked forward we were of one accord that the primary work of the Board must be Home Missions, and we earnestly desire that Friends will catch the spirit and get into line with the great Home Mission movement that is gripping the churches of America, and do our part to build up the Kingdom of Christ.

The social given to the delegates by Richmond Friends on Fourth-day, 7:00-8:00 p. m., was a most enjoyable occasion. We also attended the conference of delegates on Fifth-day at 2:00 p. m. The earnest spirit and forward look into the future that took hold upon this meeting made us feel the responsibility of living in the Friends' Church.

ESTHER COOK, Secretary.

"Who can tell me the Golden Text?" asked the Sunday-school teacher.

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

Experience of a Southern Man

"Please allow me to thank the originator of Postum, which in my case, speaks for itself," writes a Fla. man.

"I formerly drank so much coffee that my nervous system was almost a wreck." (Tea is just as injurious because it contains caffeine, the drug found in coffee.) "My physician told me to quit drinking it but I had to have something, so I tried Postum.

"To my great surprise I saw quite a change in my nerves in about 10 days. That was a year ago and now my nerves are steady and I don't have those bilious sick headaches which I regularly had while drinking coffee.

"Postum seems to have body-building properties and leaves the head clear. And I do not have the bad taste in my mouth when I get up mornings. When Postum is boiled good and strong, it is far better in taste than coffee. My advice to coffee drinkers is to try Postum and be convinced."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 16.

Topic—Temperance Facts and Figures. I Kings, 20: 1-21.

Nearly all the railroads refuse to employ drinking men.

An increasing number of business and manufacturing firms take the same position.

The medical world with practical unanimity classes alcohol as a poison and an increasing number of physicians discourage its use even as a medicine.

The vast majority of retail merchants living in dry towns now testify that business is better off with the abolition of the saloon.

A little more than half of our population now live in dry territory.

Leading temperance workers of every class and belief are endeavoring to find a common platform of action more than in past years.

With practical unanimity, the courts have affirmed the constitutionality of prohibition laws, on the ground that the liquor traffic is harmful to public morals, the public health and the public welfare.

All temperance organizations are now practically agreed in working for national prohibition.

Add to your store of facts by getting the Prohibition Year Book (National Prohibition Association, Chicago) and the Anti-Saloon League Year Book (Anti-Saloon League, Westerville, Ohio, or the office of the League in your state).

What One Girl Did

A little girl attended a meeting and heard about the Savior, and gave herself to Him.

When she returned home, she went to an old man who was a Christian, and said to him:

"Can't we have a prayer-meeting?"

"We!" said he; "I don't know of another Christian in the district."

"Well," she said, "you are a Christian, and I am a Christian; can't we have a prayer-meeting?"

They did have a prayer-meeting. The next day two or three more came. God answered their prayers, and between twenty and thirty found the Savior.

Pacific College

The work of Pacific College is now thoroughly organized and under way, with the strongest faculty and the finest student body in recent years. The spirit of the school is splendid, and everything points to a very successful year. The Christian associations have their work for the year outlined, and an active season in Bible study, mission study, deputation work, etc., is before the Christian young people of the college.

The attendance from beyond the immediate vicinity of the college has seen a marked increase this year. The capacity of the dormitory is taxed already. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allen are superintendent and matron this year. Three new teachers are on the faculty, Lloyd H. Mendenhall, of Penn College and Haverford, in the science department; Harold D. Marshall, of Penn, in mathematics, and Miss Mary Kenworthy in Greek.

The biblical department has been strengthened this year, and President Pennington is doing full teaching work, mostly in this department.

"The only way to prevent what's past," said Mrs. Muldoon, "is to put a stop to it before it happens."—Texas Siftings.

The meetings in Hamilton County, Ind., can reach either Kokomo, or Lafayette. Later announcements will be made of other conferences.

STATEMENT OF POLICY

1st. The more thorough education of the membership of each meeting concerning the entire mission task both at home and abroad.

2d. To carry through an organized and complete personal canvass for meeting this task, in each meeting, with the purpose of enlisting the entire membership and regular supporters.

Among Friends this mission work would properly include Home and Foreign Missions, including under former, Evangelistic and Church Extension, all work for Freedmen and Indians, and all forms of social service.

This work is equally the task of all denominations, and most of it can be carried on most efficiently where there is a large degree of co-operation. Denominations are learning much by meeting together and comparing methods, and uniting in service as far as possible.

The plans as outlined are as follows:

1st. The Interdenominational Conference with four sessions. (Dates as above.) The suggested program is:

First Day—One session, two addresses.

Points of emphasis: 1. The urgent and unsolved problems of Missions both at home and abroad. 2. The Church's undeveloped resources of Service, Prayer and Treasure. 3. The advantages of working together co-operatively, as Denominations, in this campaign. 4. The United Campaign itself; its method and immediate objective; the Canvass in March. 5. The presentation of the proposed Conference Policy for adoption at closing session.

Second Day—Morning Session: 1. The Missionary Committee. 2. Best Methods of Missionary Education in the Local Church. 3. The Educational Program of the Home and Foreign Mission Boards for 1913-1914. 4. Individual work for individuals.

Luncheon Meeting: To organize extension work throughout the District.

Afternoon Session: 1. The simultaneous canvass in March. 2. Prayer and personal Bible Study as means to Missionary efficiency.

Supper: Denominational meetings will be arranged where practicable.

Evening Session: 1. Christian Stewardship as related to Missions. 2. A summary of the current educational plans of the Mission Boards and of the methods and results of the every member canvass, to be followed by the adoption of the policy. 3. Our personal relation to Christ and His Kingdom.

2d. The carrying down of the results of the Conference to the individual meetings at home. In towns where there are several churches, the best work can still be done in an interdenominational way. But at the end the thorough work must be done in the individual meeting. Probably the best plan for this would be to arrange for an all-day's meeting, with lunch provided between sessions. If desired help from outside the meeting could be invited in. At these meetings the vision of the field, and the best methods of procedure, as developed at the conferences should be clearly presented. Such phases as belong peculiarly to our own work and methods should be explained. Effort should be made to make our entire membership realize the responsibility of each one to stand behind the work that is carried on through our Yearly Meetings and Five Years Meeting, and through the various Boards. The gospel of stewardship, both of life and treasure, should be clearly presented, and the conscience quickened to prayerfully measuring up to the Bible ideal. Aside from the all-day's meeting, the public ministry and the devotional services may well be devoted for a time to the presentation of the same conception of the responsibilities and privileges of the Christian life, and to prayer and consecration to the practical measuring up to our every-day opportunities. Our religion needs thus to be made a practical every-day living and serving.

3d. The ultimate objective of the Campaign for the immediate future is the lining up of every member, man, woman and child, behind the entire task for which the Church stands. For this the simultaneous canvass in March is planned. The methods that have been blessed of God in largest results will be outlined in the Conferences, and should be carefully worked out in each meeting. This canvass will be for a regular systematic financial support of all phases of our work. But it may well also include a canvass for faithful and regular fulfilling of responsibility in family devotion, and attendance upon the meetings for worship and business. Marked awakenings in spiritual life have followed these canvasses where made thoroughly and prayerfully. We should aim to conserve the highest possible results by thorough preparation, and faithful observance of all details that have proved most effective by experience.

It is expected that further helps will be issued by the various Boards, as the campaign develops, through THE AMERICAN FRIEND, or by means of leaflets for general circulation. It will be well to preserve this statement for reference.

The Evangelistic Spirit

Dr. Campbell Morgan says that there are four essentials in the New Testament evangel: "First, the lordship of Christ; second, the cross of Christ; third, the resurrection of Christ; and finally, an in-dwelling Christ by the Holy Spirit."

This utterance of Dr. Morgan may well be taken as the keynote of all evangelistic endeavor. Evangelism has been made to suffer oftentimes because the messenger stands out as the prominent figure in the revival. The evangelistic message is not worth the effort to utter it, unless it be a message that reveals Christ in His fullness as one who is able to speak directly to the needs of every soul.

The message that will win today is the message that was preached by the Apostles. Theirs was a sane gospel that met the heart needs of that age. The spirit of evangelism is in danger of losing its power by reason of man-made and mechanical efforts with which it is so frequently surrounded. There can be no substitute for a living Christ, whose presence is waiting to be revealed to the whole earth.

If men can only be made to see Jesus, and to feel that the highest hopes of humanity are in a positive way linked with His purposes, Christianity will have a new meaning for the world. The shallowness of the gospel pronouncement which is sometimes manifested is heart sickening. Religion that changes men's lives is not the product of magic, nor is it a species of divination that merely casts a spell over the objects of its consideration.

Every evangelistic effort should be the product of earnest communion with the Father, and should seek to reveal Christ in all His loveliness to lives that are waiting to know the truth. The spirit of evangelism is the spirit of helpfulness, wherein the worker sinks out of sight and leaves Christ standing with outstretched arms ready to save to the uttermost all who come unto Him through faith. It is this spirit that should characterize every evangelistic endeavor.

The success of evangelism will depend upon its purpose and its spirit. The coming simultaneous campaigns arranged for in Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings will be far reaching if the spirit of a real desire to have Jesus Christ revealed is allowed to characterize the efforts.

United Missionary Campaign

Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the far-reaching importance of the United Missionary Campaign, which is already under way. Its value as a co-operative movement of all the churches, designed to rally the whole church back of a vast missionary effort that will bring new life to religious work both at home and abroad, is beyond computation.

It is urged that Friends shall throw themselves earnestly into this campaign. Every local meeting should be largely represented at the district conference nearest at hand, announcements of which are in another column of this issue, and will be continued and enlarged upon from time to time. Following these, every local meeting should plan a denominational gathering to hear reports from their delegates, in order that the entire membership shall be made to feel the inspiration of this mighty movement.

Every congregation should then acquaint itself with the plans under which all the denominations are operating, and should organize for the active every-member canvass next March, which is the culmination of the present campaign. This is a movement in which every Friends' Meeting in America should participate.

A Denominational Crusade

Bishop Berry, of the Methodist Church, utters these weighty words in behalf of the Church papers: "In my humble judgment the next great denominational crusade should be one in behalf of our Church papers. Such a crusade is vitally related to the success of every part of our Church life. It would pay every one of our benevolent boards to set apart men and money to help in such a propaganda. The people need the information and the appeal which our papers carry to them week by week, and the result of the wide circulation of our papers would be amazingly beneficial."

This is an utterance that is worthy the most careful consideration by the Friends of America. Hundreds of Friends are already interested and have been active in pressing the claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Yet our new subscriptions received since the first of the year have come from fewer than one-fifth of our individual meetings. It is time for Quarterly and Monthly Meetings, together with all the Boards of the Church, to impress upon every family the obligation of patronizing this periodical.

A splendid beginning can be made by calling attention to our special offer of the paper to new subscribers from now until January 1, 1915, for $1.50, the price of a year's subscription.

The Spirit of English Quakerism

BY OSCAR L. MOON

It has been generally conceded, that while London Yearly Meeting has been making during the last decade the most constant and steadily increasing gain in membership of any Yearly Meeting in the world, the conditions within its limits are so different and the methods employed consequently so much at variance with our own as in a measure to render their activities insignificant to us. In the several articles on the subject printed in THE AMERICAN FRIEND the past few months, this attitude has, with few exceptions, been assumed. There is unquestionably a wide difference in the methods employed, but methods per se are not of the most fundamental importance, inasmuch as their gains in membership and influence are not explained by this means alone. The past should suffice to have proved (it is hoped) conclusively that perfunctory "going through the motions" does not spell vitality either in a silent meeting of the more ancient type, or in an evangelistic or pastoral meeting of the approved American type. Something more basic than method is needed.

The English Friends have the Adult Schools, but they are of no greater value to them as a recruiting agency than are our Sunday Schools to us, for not all their accessions come from the Adult Schools. They have their mission meetings in localities advantageous to the laboring people, but they touch no more of this class in proportion to the available numbers than we do. They come into contact with the educated and cultured, but I think we have access to just as many of these in proportion as they have. But the fact remains that whereas they are drawing from the high and the low, laborers and people of leisure, and are making a percentage of gain three times ours and more, and in many communities are able to grip the interests of different classes, we are able to draw from scarcely more than one class in the same community and but very slowly from that class.

For our explanation of the difference in the tangible results, we must examine the spirit which their methods are made to serve, for in religion the spirit is the primary differentiating quality. Several years ago American Friends began to co-operate with other religious denominations for the general Christian good, and within certain limits this movement is assuredly to be commended. But too often this worthy purpose was allowed to obscure the distinctive Quaker mission so completely as to minimize the value of membership with Friends, and leave many with no more conscious reason for affiliation with us than with any other evangelical denomination, save perhaps the non-use of the ordinances which are now counted of but minor importance even by those who practice them. But English Friends have counted the success of Quakerism as being dependent upon a clear understanding by the general membership of their mission to the present generation and as being separate, distinct, and (speaking in all humility) above that of the other evangelical bodies—an opinion shared by many who are not themselves members of the Society.

No one need be in doubt whether the Friends have reason to exist longer. Their tremendous tasks, national in extent and yet touching the minutiae of neighborhood and individual life, are a sufficient reason. They seem to realize that when the kingdom of God is set up within, it will manifest itself outwardly in every institution of man whether religious or otherwise. To make this spiritual kingdom supremely potent in all the institutions of our generation is their self-imposed task, for this alone can adequately express the spirit of the Master-Christ.

Through the Friends Social Union, Friends in England are attempting to deal in a constructive, statesman-like way with the relationships of "Christianity and business," so that there may be no compromise of right for the sake of pecuniary gain. They have guest houses and hostels that are available for weekend gatherings of committees and other groups that form a pleasant retreat for conference and social intercourse. They maintain Woodbrooke, Swarthmore and St. Mary's settlements as permanent institutions for the more extended study of present-day conditions, industrial, social and religious, and the means of serving such conditions in a Christian spirit. They have the Bedford Institute with its fourteen stations in London and similar establishments in other cities, whose aim is to brighten with Christian light the otherwise benighted life of the cities' poor. The Adult Schools, which abound in all the cities and many villages, afford a means of contact with the skilled laborers, while their active work for peace in national life gives them distinction as a worthy type of citizens. These, however, and other forms of service are but the expression of a spirit which is uniquely Christian and Friendly—the latter, because such a large proportion of the members manifestly bear its fruit.

But this spirit manifests its depth and vigor and tenderness most in the meetings for worship. Numbers count for little, where "two or three are gathered in His name." In fact, the preference seems to favor "small meetings and more of them," so that fellowship may be the more easily maintained. The meetings are simple and informal with singing in some and in others none, but in all which I attended an indescribable strength and power are manifested which one feels is of God, and is unquestionably induced by the united worship of the worshipers and the willingness of each to speak "as the Spirit gives him utterance."

There is no evident tendency to speak for the display of one's powers, but a certain humble sense of the weighty responsibility that ever accompanies the gift of the Spirit. Nor do any apparently speak for entertainment, but are faithful if perchance they may be able to bear "one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Consequently there is vocal ministry to strengthen, instruct, comfort and inspire, combining to produce a spirit so self-denying—so vicarious—that it gives itself to the alleviation of men's wrongs in some practical way as mentioned above. It is thus that their fellowship in worship becomes the basis of their fellowship in service, and their fellowship in both forms an irresistible appeal to the practical man of to-day to affiliate with them.

It is not to be understood that all who are connected with the Society in England act upon the high plane that I have indicated, for they have the problem of the indifferent member the same as we have, but so emphatic have they made this purpose that this number is reduced to a minimum. Nor are all the meetings equally active in the various forms of Christian service, but these are their confessed intents and the proven means by which they can be realized. They are practically a unit in the opinion that the "open" meeting, i. e. without prearrangement and with free participation, is the form of meeting that best feeds their spiritual life, some of its most vigorous champions being young people who in America would probably be suspected of wanting a change to something more modern. The obstacles to such a meeting as experienced in America they partly overcome by the deeply spiritual atmosphere of their gatherings and partly by a vigorous eldership, which practice seems to me superior to the plan of continuous prearranged exercises, for it effectually removes the obstacle to free worship and leaves the meeting open for those whose gift is helpful.

It may not be wise nor practical for us in America to become to any great extent the copyists of their methods, but if we can emulate their spirit we need not fear but that our service will adapt itself to the needs of our times. We should apply ourselves intelligently and consistently to the creation and dissemination of such a spirit through our entire membership, for it is upon such a foundation only that we shall meet the requirements of present-day apostleship. In the language of John Wilhelm Rowntree, the acknowledged leader of the modern movement in England: "The love of luxury and the loud-voiced gospel of Force, these hold the field. The call is for those who have known and seen a living Lord." "We stand not by the Society as it is, but by what it may be when its spiritual powers have deepened and its social conscience has quickened into life." This is the process which is making the English Friends not "hearers that forget but doers that work," and let us hope it will not cease until it has touched into new life the Quakerism of America and the world.

Baltimore, Maryland.

A Study of Church Government

BY CHARLES M. REAGAN

We are living in an age and a country that have guaranteed freedom of religious belief in the constitution, which is the fundamental law of the land, and as a result churches and faiths work side by side without friction. This has continued for a hundred years and the world has seen what strides can be made when church and state are separated, and there are no hindrances in its work at home and abroad, except within the church itself.

It is a great subject to contemplate, for before freedom for religious belief was granted by the United States, most of the ills and troubles of the church and its different branches were charged to the governments under which they existed.

Mr. James Bryce, our recent and esteemed British Ambassador has been called the real discoverer of America, now some four hundred years since the advent of Columbus, because in his "American Commonwealth," and in his speeches and copious writings, he has described most accurately, criticised most justly, and given us the best exposition extant of the working of American institutions. He has enabled Americans to see themselves "as others see us," and has shown how our institutions and political system are working, their defects and superior qualities, as well as the tendencies of our legislation and policies.

Long strides have been made in the ideas of church government, and the influences back of them are the forces that have brought about greater freedom in civil affairs; in citizenship and in the safe-guarding of our personal liberties. The Friends have minimized their organization, while the larger and more rapidly growing churches have given the subject more attention.

The failure of any living organism to grow should invite attention and a search for all contributing causes. It has been said of us that we ceased to grow when we were no longer sent to prison. If that be true, it would seem to be a reflection upon us, as much as to say that Friends are not suited in their make-up and organization to draw the world to them in large numbers; that they cannot prosper under peace and religious liberty of the highest order, and under the most inviting conditions are not able to meet world questions.

Very few churches in this age are criticised on account of their creeds, and the doctrines of Friends have been acknowledged long ago to be worthy of the highest respect, hence we must look outside for the weaknesses that hold the church back from becoming as much of a world power as other denominations have become.

Society is very complex and highly organized, and our plea is that it requires a highly organized and efficient system of doing work, at the right time, with departments directly responsible to some superior head, by which confidence will be inspired by reason of the very systematic way in which the work is done. Looseness neither inspires confidence nor brings results. We want to know how our delegates vote in important conventions. We want our delegates elected in some representative manner, not by the suggestion of one or two. We want more laymen given a chance to use the same judgment in church affairs that they use in the complex management of large business interests.

We note with interest that in the great conventions of the three great branches of the Presbyterian Church at Atlanta, Georgia, last May, there were seven hundred lay delegates and seven hundred from the official and ministerial part of the church. In other words, they had equal representation, which is our American idea of administrative affairs.

Better organization means more members, more money with which to push the work, and more work accomplished. This is the natural order of events. If the world were left alone to the influence of Friends and their methods of work, how large a proportion of the present Christian adherents would be heathen, or pagan, or outside the pale of the church?

Our Five Years Meeting has caught the spirit of progress and has created commissions for outlining work, gathering information and presenting subjects in a well-considered form. The report of the Finance Commission of Western Yearly Meeting made to the session of 1912, the committee having been directed to consider the subject of revising the financial system of the church, said: "It was apparent from the outset that if any substantial and permanent good is to accrue from our labors, the scope of our consideration should have to be broader than the revision of the financial system, because the present church organization is too slender and incomplete to support a financial system, properly revised." The Commission further said: "The church of today must be more than a home; it must be an organization. The efficient church of today is of necessity a business enterprise, with well-defined projects in hand, and must of right possess adequate control and direction in all its functions, save only the meeting for worship."

It is no doubt a fact that the great majority of the membership of the church know less about the principles of government in their particular church and how they came about, than they do about contemporary changes and progress in civil matters, which are taught in our schools and colleges and are regarded as an essential part of a liberal education. As in civil matters, a thorough knowledge of the history of our country, the steps in its rise and progress, and the laws governing our free institutions, incite greater patriotism and love for our country, so familiarity with the church, its laws, methods, doctrines and discipline will inspire greater faith, zeal and loyalty among Christian people for the church itself and will contribute to its growth and unity.

We must admit that a large part of the membership of the churches today hold their membership because of convenience of location, some special attraction for its pulpit utterances, the congeniality of the members of the particular congregation, or for other and various reasons. This is more noticeable in our large cities, where people are constantly moving in and out, and frequently place their letters with a church of a different denomination from that with which they formerly affiliated, and upon making a second change may return to their first allegiance.

Dr. H. A. Edson, in his book on "Presbyterian Indiana," has shown that while this church never had an itinerant ministry as has the Methodist Episcopal Church, and so, no circuit rider books, yet the early additions to the church in Indiana were rapid and very largely from the ranks of the sister churches. He says further, that "the transfers from the church home of the fathers was in every case a tribute to the genius of the Presbyterian Church, to its ecclesiastical polity and never on account of sympathy with its distinctive dogmas. That which was so distinctly Calvinistic in the early part of this century is so seldom heard, that the question is whether any one now believes it at all. The Church became silent on what was called its fine or five points. For more than two hundred years the theological forums had echoed with discussions not always the sweetest in temper, on the doctrine of decrees, foreknowledge and their kin, with no sign of abatement, until a few thousand accessions to the church from Methodist homes and altars, with profound convictions on their theology, with pronounced experiences which they would not compromise first silenced and soon eliminated from Presbyterian pulpits all that had been the bone of contention for centuries."

While, therefore, the lines of denominationalism are not so strongly drawn as formerly, yet it will appear from what has been said that there is constant need of keeping before the people the doctrines and principles of the church, its methods of government, making it clear what the particular church stands for, what it is doing and what it proposes to do.

The Homiletic Review

The Homiletic Review for November is, as usual, full of strong articles. One article is on "The Latest Excavations in Egypt," by Prof. C. M. Cobern, of Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. Another is on "The Mediatorial Ministry," by Rev. Elliott Field, Wissahickon, Pa., and another on "The Minister at Work," by Rev. H. C. Moore, of Raleigh, N. C. "Elisha and the Translation of Elijah" is treated by Rev. John Adams, of Scotland. Many other contributions are up to the usual standard. The Homiletic Review is published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Co., 254-260 Fourth Ave., New York City, New York.

Thanksgiving Proclamation

President Wilson has fixed Thursday, November 27th, next, as a day for national thanksgiving. The document is a strong and comprehensive one, and concludes with this statement, "The year has brought us the satisfaction of work well done, and fresh visions of our duty which will make the work of the future better still."

Indianapolis Conference of Methodist Men

Wednesday afternoon was given to reports of what had been accomplished by the new plans undertaken throughout three denominations. The first to report was Mr. C. A. Rowland for the Southern Presbyterian Church. They have 300,000 members and have assumed responsibility for 50,000,000 of the non-Christian world. Ten years ago they had 174 missionaries and raised $180,000.00. In the recent campaigns they have increased their forces to 340 missionaries and their support to $631,000.00. They make use of the special support plan for missionaries and stations. They make a special appeal to men and have received several gifts of $10,000.00 each. One man supports an entire station in Korea with 250,000 population. He supports 13 missionaries and the entire native force, and furnishes all buildings and equipment. They urge business men to be in business for God.

Mr. A. B. Corey told of the million dollar campaign by the Disciples Church. He gave an interesting account of how their faith was enlarged that made them willing to undertake it. He himself was converted to it by the pressure of providential circumstances against his own judgment. The campaign began a year ago and they now have $1,100,000. One man has now offered them $1,000,000 if they will raise the rest of $5,000,000.00 for financing both home and foreign fields. Prayer has been the most important factor in their success. Let God get at the people. He told some remarkable instances of how God has led people to see their privilege and responsibility. They now have a campaign for 1,000 men to devote themselves to world evangelization, and the dedication of children by parents for God's service. This address made a powerful impression on the conference.

Mr. J. Campbell White told of the great campaign last year of the United Presbyterians. They have 1,000 churches and 140,000 members. They added $1.12 to their average per capita giving, raising it to $6.11 per member. In doing this their average for local church work was increased $1.07 without asking for it. Pastors are recognizing their responsibility for the world field. Instruction is given in the grace of giving. We should give for our own sake, not because God needs it. This church is responsible for a field of 15,000,000 non-Christians. Mr. White said, "God will stand by the business men who stand by Him." "No man has got money enough to discharge his duty to God." The giving of time and service has been one of the by-products of this campaign. As you enlarge the missionary output you lift all departments of church work. The conference was deeply stirred by these reports from other churches.

Wednesday evening was a great meeting with three powerful addresses which it is impossible to report. The first was by Bishop McConnell, of Denver, on "The Call to Social Service." He said, "The general movement today is forward; there will be no going back. More social control is demanded. The greatest need to save the movement is deeper piety of a practical kind on the part of the church workers. Nominally we are Christians, but there is a lot of wild land in us not yet occupied by grace. When all of a man is sanctified in fact, he will be a powerful factor in solving the social problem. The great leviathans of past ages did not disappear because they were killed. They did it because the climate changed. The dragons of our social world will not be killed, but will disappear because of the change of the social climate. The unredeemed heathenism of our Christian lands is the greatest hindrance to the acceptance of the Gospel in foreign lands.

"The association of pagan lands and races with our Christian nations has been an unredeemed horror. The troubles in Mexico are largely the outgrowth of wrong perpetrated by foreigners, especially Americans. One whole state, towns and all is owned by a foreign corporation that pays no taxes. Talk of intervention to save Mexico! Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. We are the ones that need a practical every day salvation. The greatest apologetic for the truth of the Gospels will be right dealing by Christian with pagan peoples. The Gospel must touch every human problem."

The call to civic righteousness was given in a masterful address by a young man, Rev. A. W. Leonard, of Seattle. Some of the great foes of our civic life are: "Commercialism in politics" (the gang that deposed Sulzer were the deeper dyed sinners); "votes dictated by Bosses"; "unsanitary surroundings of the poor"; "children robbed of childhood"; "diseased environment, both physical and moral, under which women and children toil"; "vices of the city"; "injustice to the poor in courts." "There must be created a wholesome public opinion. The three great agencies for this are the pulpit, pew and press. The pulpit must preach with a passion to redeem society as well as individual man. Old methods that fail must yield to new ones. The preacher must be sympathetic with every throb and pulse beat of the social world. He cannot be silent concerning the evils of today. At right times he must express them. The trouble with the pew is so many churchmen are unwilling to put themselves on the firing line of modern reforms. Christian ministers and laymen must together face the evils that exist. A mighty uprising of Christian manhood and womanhood must face the evils of our cities. There must be wise planning. Woman Suffrage will be a factor in this redemption. He vividly described the struggle of the better element to redeem Seattle. This victory could not have been won without woman's vote. He pleaded for a press free from every corruptive influence. The power to do this is in the hands of Christian business men who give large advertising patronage. Every curse is condemned in the cross of our Lord.

J. Campbell White spoke on "The Call to World Conquest." The plan of Redemption was a necessity with God. Try to discover what God is doing in your time, and fling yourself into His purpose and will. God is opening all the avenues of the world to His Gospel. Every age must "preach the Gospel to every creature" of its own time. The pagan world cannot afford to wait for some future generation. The world is redeemed, but does not know it. There should be no conflict between work at home and abroad. Divine resources are pledged to the universal task. We shall succeed anywhere only as we have divine energy flowing through us and we can expect His power only as we fulfill His program.

The movement among denominations to federate and unite is a great encouragement, and is in accordance with Christ's prayer for His church in order to reach the world. The new financial system must be adopted by all. The annual collection plan is now thrown overboard by all leading denominations. The stream of immigration should be a great evangelizing agency. One-fourth as many return every year as come to our shores. They should carry our American Christianity of the purest kind back with them. The whole impact of our civilization must be Christianized.

The Moslem world is beginning to yield to the Gospel. The Mohammedan advance in Africa is a challenge to the Christian Church. Hundreds of communities in India are ripe for Gospel teaching. At the close of this meeting Mr. White led the Conference for an hour in a beautiful consecration service. It was a unique thing to see a member of a smaller communion and a layman lead a national conference of the great Methodist Church with all its Bishops and leading men of the Boards present in a consecration of itself to its great world task.

Thursday forenoon was given to a discussion of how to relate their present organization to the United program of all the world fields. The most effective address was on social service, by Mr. Ward, the head of their Bureau of Social Service. It was received with great enthusiasm. A deeply stirring message calling to consecrative giving, by Mr. Dougherty, closed the forenoon session.

Two great messages were given in the afternoon by President Welch of Ohio Wesleyan University, and by Dean L. J. McBirney of the theological department of Boston University. The former was on social service, the latter on evangelism. It was a marvelous presentation of the evangelism that is needed today. No other address has more deeply gripped the entire Conference. Bishops, evangelists, pastors and laymen listened as though fearing to lose a word, and it was followed by a service of prayer led by Fred B. Smith. It is impossible to report the address. It is to be hoped it will be printed and get into the hands of all our workers.

The Children's Country Training Home at Amherst, Ohio

BY BERNICE H. HAWKINS

In the earlier days in nearly every community one could find Friends vitally interested in the condition of the poor, and anxious to see suffering alleviated. Possibly because our meeting places are found more often in the agricultural districts and because Friends are largely rural in their manner of living, as a church we have not yet come face to face with problems of congested life.

Ohio Yearly Meeting is trying an interesting experiment along the line of social service. In April, 1893, John and Katie Springer, of Berne, Indiana, while visiting in Chicago, found two little homeless children whom they brought home with them, for the Springers were childless and large-hearted. Slowly they filled their home with other homeless boys and girls. Mr. Springer was a prosperous business man. They soon found their home too small to contain their enlarging family, so they bought a large farm near Amherst, Ohio, and brought the children to it. Mr. Springer continued his printing business and Bible School, but not being a farmer he was unable to make the farm a paying proposition, so debts began to overwhelm him. Furthermore, an adjoining farm was for sale and a Brewers' Association negotiated for the purchase, on which they intended to erect a beer-garden and summer hotel. The Springers could not bear to have temptation put in the way of their boys and girls, so they mortgaged their own farm and bought the adjoining one, so their tract now contains five hundred and forty-one and one-half acres of excellent soil, lying along the lovely Vermilion River.

Before his death in August, 1911, Mr. Springer called in J. W. Malone, Sr., whom he had known for several years, and offered to turn over to the Board of the Cleveland Bible Institute his farm and farm equipments, together with the children and the biggest asset of all, the mortgage. J. Walter Malone, Jr., a young man with excellent prospects in a business way, took up the management of the farm which was only half cultivated heretofore, and the business interests uncared for. The farm is rapidly becoming profitable, new buildings of modern type are being built, and the rules and management have been revised to meet modern methods in caring for charitable institutions and children.

A school is maintained on the farm, in which competent teachers are the instructors, having all the grades and two years of high school work. The work of the primary grades is extremely difficult, for ambition to make something of oneself and incentive to competition are altogether lacking. However, the finished product of the eighth grade and high school fully repay for the labor expended in the lower grades.

The staff of workers is practically all made up of young people who love the children devotedly and who covet their souls for the Kingdom. The motto for the institution is "Give them a chance." It is in every sense of the word a social settlement. To give these children of the slum a taste of Christian home life, to teach them lessons of honesty, integrity, and usefulness is the aim.

There are now about sixty-five children in the home ranging in age from four to eighteen. Of the workers eight are members of the Friends Church and all are earnest consecrated Christians. The experiment is altogether worth while in making men and women out of the driftwood or humanity.

Berean Bible Class

We take pleasure this week in presenting on our first page a photograph of the Berean Class of Adults of the Fairmount Friends Bible School. The class is taught by E. O. Ellis and is officered as follows:

President, James Bell; Vice President, Clarkson D. Overman; Secretary, Ethel Phrockmorton; Treasurer, Ida Moon; Assistant Treasurer, Lutie Knight; Chairman Membership Committee, Bowman Pickard; Vice Chairman Membership Committee, John E. Duncan; Chairman Social Committee, Emma Scott; Chairman Sick and Relief Committee, Lydia Hiatt; Vice Chairman Sick and Relief Committee, Lucy Macy; Teacher, Ellwood O. Ellis.

The picture was taken at the Sunday School on October 19, 1913. Number in picture 132. Number enrolled 162. Class started with eight members seven years ago. Fifty members of the class are not Friends. Ages of members vary from 29 to 79. Several in class who have not attended church or Sunday School for years, and some who never attended before in their lives. Several in the class, and shown in the picture, are well-known Friends.

The Panama Exposition

Whether or not the relationship is that of cause and effect, it is interesting to note that the memorial to the authorities of the Panama Pacific Exposition, sent by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America relative to the exploitation of the Exposition by commercialized vice and the subsequent memorials from the denominations which are constituent bodies of the Federal Council, are followed by a report from San Francisco that the civic authorities have ordered that the district known as the "Barbary Coast" should be abolished.

The General Secretaryship

We have already stated in these columns the action of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting on October 24th, relative to the General Secretaryship. The following is taken from the Minutes as showing the exact action of the Committee:

"We recommend that the work of the Chairman of the Executive Committee be expanded to include the clerical work of a central office so far as it relates to the work of the Five Years Meeting Boards; and that J. J. Mills be appointed as General Secretary for one year from January 1, 1914, to January 1, 1915, with the understanding that he retain his residence in California."

There was a feeling on the part of the Committee that as Chairman of the Committee on Efficiency at the Five Years Meeting, Dr. Mills has probably given more thought to the office of the General Secretary than any other person. It was further felt that in the absence of any other available person who could assume the duties of the office at the present time, if Dr. Mills could be induced to accept the position and inaugurate and organize the work of the office, it would be acceptable to Friends everywhere.

It needs to be said that, upon his part, Dr. Mills was most reluctant to consider the call of the Committee, and that only after feeling that it was a clear call to duty did he consent to accept the position. It is felt that under the arrangement as indicated by the action of the Committee, the work will be begun and go forward satisfactorily the coming year. In addition to other important duties, it is hoped that Dr. Mills can visit several of the Yearly Meetings next year.

Quakers Object

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, in editorial and contributed articles, protests against the using of denominational names to advertise merchandise. The Quakers seem to be the chief sufferers in this direction. We often see such titles as "Quaker Oats," "Quaker Whiskey," etc. In a sense such a use of the name is rather a compliment as indicating something good, but at the same time it is annoying and should be discountenanced and discouraged to the extent of refusing to buy any articles in which church names are thus prostituted. This would be the most effectual method of curing this evil. The paper wants to know how other churches would like to have such advertisements flaunted before them as "Baptist Beer," "Presbyterian Punch," or "Catholic Cocktails."—The Wesleyan, Truro, Nova Scotia.

There are two hundred millions of Mohammedans in the world scattered from the Philippines to Gibraltar—a great harvest field reaching through many lands. And it is spreading. This is the one religion that is itself an aggressive missionary force. Unless we more than match its earnest efforts it will win India and Africa in place of Christianity. Its zeal is seen in the annual pilgrimage of 300,000 devotees to Mecca, its birthplace.—Christian Herald.

War Is Wrong

BY ROBERT CROMWELL ROOT, A. M.

War is wrong because—

1. "Peace is the normal condition of society, and war is a reversion to barbarism."¹
2. War is an appeal to might instead of right, and sets aside reason and justice, law and order, for the "mailed fist" and bloody conflict.
3. War sets up false standards of courage, false ideals of patriotism, perverts the teachings of Christianity and destroys the bonds of human brotherhood.
4. War selects and destroys the "most fit" among men, and thus weakens the whole human race."²
5. War dooms millions to celibacy, prevents home-making and the development of home virtues, and thus lowers the normal birth-rate and robs society of "an ever-widening wedge of citizenship that might have been."
6. War's unnatural camp life encourages immorality and vice, and produces thousands upon thousands of "fallen men" tainted with foul diseases,³ who in turn blight the lives of thousands of innocent wives and children.
7. War's evils and debaucheries were the spawning bed from which sprang the abominable "white slave traffic"⁴ and its inseparable evil, the licensed liquor traffic of the United States. While war remains, a strong demand for this vile slavery will remain.
8. War robs helpless mothers of their sons, wives of their husbands, sweethearts of their lovers, and innocent children of their fathers—their rightful, God-given protectors. War also robs the school, the church, the state, and does not and cannot give any adequate compensation for any of these losses.
9. War sets up pagan rules for the Golden Rule, and substitutes narrow selfishness and ignorant jingoism for true patriotism and statesmanlike internationalism.
10. War impoverishes humanity⁵ by misusing the world's chief energies in causing waste and death and destruction, instead of rightly using those energies in preventing fires, floods, accidents and diseases, and in doing constructive work for the benefit of mankind.
11. War is needless,⁶ since the world now has in operation and in process of development adequate means for settling all disputes without resort to war; furthermore, war itself does not settle any question properly or justly.

12. War is barbarous,⁷ for it slaughters men, and inflicts cruelties and tortures on innocent women and children who did nothing to cause the war and yet suffer most from it.

13. War is wicked, for it violates every moral principle, every righteous law of man, every instinct of civilized humanity and every command of God.⁸

14. War shamelessly glories in its own wickedness that ruthlessly disregards human rights, brutalizes men, incites to inhuman cruelties, and makes man not his "brother's keeper," but his brother's wolf-like destroyer.⁹

15. War is cruel, wicked, barbarous, needless, inhuman, and devilish; for it commits every sin in the decalogue, and yet war does not in this age serve one single useful purpose that cannot be served better in a humane way. On the contrary, "War does all that the devil would do if run stark mad,"¹⁰ for, "War is hell" and hell serves neither God nor man, but ever and only the devil.

Therefore, war must be destroyed.

Peace in the Balkans

BY DAVID STARR JORDAN

What shall we say of the Peace in the Balkans, now that the "Heroic War," the "Squalid War," the "Mad War," the "Sad War" (taking the headlines of the London papers) has come to an official end?

Let us say first, that it has steadied Europe. It has shown the futility and the clumsiness of war for any worthy purpose. All these are natural stages of the same disease. All war is at times heroic, at all times squalid, mad and sad. Let us notice that Bulgaria, frank, forthright and blundering, who, wandering farthest has suffered most, is with the first to come to her senses.

The world's welfare demands that no nation should gain anything by force of arms. The allies fought for the liberation of oppressed people, not for their own aggrandizement. This is the heroic side of the war; and from that point of view the additions to the Balkan kingdoms are but given them in trust to be held for the benefit of their inhabitants, the wards of the civilized world. The allies forgot this for the time being at least, and the heroic war became a sordid scramble for lands to which none of them had any just claim whatever.

It is well that the Turk is gone. Not because he is alien in race or in religion. It is because he does not govern in the interest of the people he rules. It is because his is a military despotism. It is because he tolerates, in Europe or in Asia, no race nor religion nor language but his own. The "powers" should have curbed him long ago, and by peaceful means. His problem is with them yet, and no less pressing than before. Armenia is farther away, that is all.

The real Balkan question is, Shall the Turk's methods pass with the Turk? It matters little what are the boundary lines of the petty kingdoms or what the ambition of the princes and politicians who rule them for the time. The real question concerns the men and women of Macedonia and Thrace. Shall men count as men, or must they be belabored and abused, as they have been in the past? Shall Macedonia after twenty centuries look on freedom?

The need of the Balkans is to get together. Already we are told a postal union has been formed. A customs union ought to follow, and all forms of social unions which bring the people together should be encouraged in the Balkans and by the outside world.—World Peace Foundation.

Electing a Senator

More and more the issue of national prohibition is forging to the front in various ways. Ex-Governor J. Frank Hanly of Indiana has secured the signatures of a large number of representative temperance men of the nation to an appeal to the moral forces of the country, that they help by contributions to send Hon. Richmond P. Hobson to the United States Senate, that he may become one of the leaders in that body for the nation-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic. Contributions are asked to be forwarded to E. L. Clarkson, Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

Congregationalists for Peace

The Congregational Council in session at Kansas City recently, adopted the following resolution on the peace question:

The Congregational churches of the United States, confessing anew their allegiance to the Prince of Peace, and desirous of making the Christian church the foremost peace-maker of the world, desire to place on record their disapproval of the present rivalry of Christian nations in creating colossal armies and navies, and to declare themselves the unflinching antagonists of all who by word or deed fan the flames of racial prejudice or disseminate the seeds of international ill will.

Believing that our republic, both by situation and tradition, is peculiarly fitted to lead the nations into paths of peace, we appeal to our president and congress to call a halt in the swelling expenses for the paraphernalia of war and exhort our pastors and teachers to keep before the public mind the evils and perils of militarism, to explain and defend the cause of arbitration and to work in season and out for the wider world-wide brotherhood. We hereby commend the work of the international conference engaged in the programme for the commemorating of the first century of peace between the United States and Great Britain and recommend that in all our churches exercises be held which shall swell the significance and influence of the celebration.

From now till January 1, 1915, we will send The American Friend for $1.50 which is the price of a year's subscription. Canvass your neighborhood.

My Neighbor and I

HENRY COFFIN FELLOW

My Neighbor and I, at the close of the day,
When the sky was aflame with a golden glow
Of the sun, sinking slowly down to rest,
Walked side by side in the glorious gloaming,
Plucking primroses and cowslips
And sweet scented gale, from valley and vale,
From shadowy dale, where the pines
With their odorous myrrh fill the air
With nectar divine for the gods and goddesses.

The rippling rivulet ran rapidly
Down, with a swish, to the river beyond.
In the twilight gloam of the eventide,
We could hear through the murmuring pines,
The song of the swish and the swirl of the stream
As it, dashing and splashing, ran down,
On its wild, booming whirl to the sea.

The gossamer film of the darkness
Settled steadily down from the sky, as a veil;
And Night, in her chariot, rode riotously
Out of her cavern of gloom from under the world,
And lashed her Pegasus steeds into foam,
Like the surf of the raging sea;
And drove with fiery star dust trails of light
For reins, and star decked chariot wheels,
From the wonderful workshop of the wandering Pleiades.
As Arcturus came forth from his Stygian cave,
And Orion rode up to his place in the host of the sky;
As the whip of dread Darkness drove the last wight of Dawn
Down from his throne and over the arch of the world;
We paused, my Neighbor and I, on the banks of the rippling rivulet,
And listened as it sang the lullaby siren songs of the night.

In the chill moon-lit shadows of the pines,
My Neighbor and I sit alone, Spirit and Crysalis;
While up from the valley of jassamines
A rapturous cloud, odor laden, arose
Like a star decked shroud around us.
The voices of the night, wierd and wanton,
Came from the crags and cavernous cliffs,
And made the gloom wistfully, strangely sepulchral.

At the hour when the chimes of curfew sounded,
My Neighbor arose, like a gnome of the mist,
Clothed with a nebulous halo of fire;
And touched me, the Casket, dull dust of the valley;
Then whisked me away toward the backward Forever,
And showed me a scroll of the Infinite Record of Life;
Most wonderful workmanship, tapestry divine,
Of the blend of the thoughts and acts of the ages,
Woven in spirit threads, golden and crimson.
At the day dawn of the Future stood we,
And with mystic wand he showed me
Angel distaffs spinning, spinning spirit threads
Of golden gossamer from the Eon of Beginning,
For the never Weary Weavers of the Present;
Who were weaving, ever throwing through the tangled woof Existence
Warp, forever, ever blending Past and Present, on, unending;
Never losing stroke nor shuttle in the mystic maze of weaving;
Never breaking, never mending, never stopping in their labor;
Blending pictures of the Present with the facts of Yestereve;
Cause and action, plan and purpose, interwoven threads Divine,
Each in quick succession followed, fraught with moment intertwine
With the increment resultants from a myriad unseen sources of the Past,

In one mighty panorama for the throne room of the Future,
For Jehovah's council chamber, in the Eon of Forever, and Forever.
Beaver City, Oklahoma.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." It is almost startling to find that, in the majority of cases in which the Spirit has wrought wonderfully on a human soul, and has made that work the foundation of a great manhood or womanhood, a primary work had been done by a good mother or father, or both. We can not ignore the awful responsibility of parenthood.—Herald and Presbyter.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting

New Castle—One of the best prayer meetings in quite a while was held at New Castle, Indiana, the evening of October 29th, when the young men's class was in charge. Every member present took some part and the meeting was an inspiration to both young and old. The young men's class is organized and doing a splendid work. The one who was in charge is a young man who feels the call to the ministry, and will enter school for preparation soon.

Raymond S. Holding, for fifteen years a missionary in Mexico, gave a most interesting and practical talk along missionary lines in Friends' Church, the evening of Sunday, November 2d. It was not statistics nor an appeal for money, but a talk on conditions as they existed, and as he had seen them. He said that as horrible as the revolution had been for the last three years, it was nothing compared with the degradation, poverty, ignorance and superstition existing in that benighted land.

West Richmond—Sarah Lindley, who has been in mission work at Matehuala, Mexico, for nineteen years, led the prayer meeting at West Richmond Friends' meeting on the evening of November 6. She gave an extended and interesting account of the situation in that country and the work of Friends there.

Elbert Russell is delivering a series of weekly lectures at Economy, Indiana, this fall.

East Main Street, Richmond—A. J. Furstenberger, pastor of the Friends' Church at Wabash, will give a temperance address for all Richmond Friends at East Main Street meeting at 2:15 o'clock next Sabbath afternoon. All are invited. He will be at Whitewater meeting in the morning.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Earlham—John Stribling, who has spent three years in California, has returned to his old home at Earlham, Iowa. Arrangements are made for Frank W. Dell to assist us in a revival meeting beginning November 16th. E. Howard Brown, the pastor, recently preached a missionary sermon, and at its close took up pledges for $416.00 for the support of Sada M. Stanley in Jamaica.

Sabbath, November 2d, was Rally Day in Friends' Bible School at Earlham. Efforts had been made to secure the attendance of our entire enrollment. This was more than accomplished, and there was an attendance of one hundred and fifty-nine that day. A short program was given during the school hour. A sermon by the pastor on Bible School work followed, and we believe our work is on the increase.

Minneapolis, Minnesota—Sunday, November 2d, was a memorable day for Minneapolis Friends. It had been set apart as "All-Friends' Day," and a special invitation to attend the morning service had been extended to all in the Twin Cities who had ever been in any way connected with Friends. The result was most gratifying. The meeting house was taxed to its capacity. The pastor's address on "The Meaning of Quakerism," was most forcible and inspiring, and the entire service was marked by a strong sense of fellowship and of spiritual uplift. In the larger cities, where Friends are so widely separated, the problem of a meeting place for worship is indeed a serious one, and a rallying of our scattered forces is necessary for the most effective work. The pastor and the committee who have charge of this are to be especially commended for the effectiveness of their efforts. The profit to the meeting and to Minneapolis Friends will be permanent and far-reaching.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Kansas City—Friends at Kansas City will observe Thanksgiving day on November 27th, by an appropriate service beginning at 10:30 and lasting one hour. The full choir will sing appropriate anthems. There will be opportunity for anyone to express his thanks for the blessings of the year.

The Friends' Bible School at Kansas City has an excellent and growing young people's class of which only one member is of a Friends' family. There is a C. E. Society in the meeting organized about six months ago, but it has not yet come fully into its own.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Cleveland—Cleveland Quarterly Meeting was held at Berlinville, Erie County, October 4 and 5. A good delegation was present from the meetings of the Quarter, including several ministers who gave edifying and inspiring messages. The business meeting was held on Seventh-day afternoon. Lewis G.

Pim, who has served this meeting very ably as clerk since its organization, resigned at this time, having taken up pastoral work, together with his wife, Mary Barrett Pim, at Tecumseh, Michigan. James Buck was appointed to fill the place. On First-day afternoon a Christian Endeavor service was held. Merrill Coffin, of Adrain, Michigan, gave the leading address. Lydia Maria Stanley, of Cleveland, one of the oldest ministers within the Quarter, was present, and it was an inspiration to hear the exhortations and words of encouragement from this aged Friend, clothed in her Quaker garb and manifesting the same simplicity of life. George J. Bartlett, pastor of the Milan meeting, who has attended every Quarterly meeting held at this place, was unable to be present this time on account of his recent illness.

Western Yearly Meeting

Amo—Friends' Church at Amo, Indiana, has entered upon the new year with Orley Smith, of Ohio, as pastor. For two years the meeting has had no resident pastor, but was served very faithfully by George Hobson and Henry A. Sherrell, who were present on alternate Sabbaths. The meeting grew spiritually and numerically. After a revival effort last winter conducted by J. W. Armstrong, there were several conversions and twenty-seven accessions to the church. The present year was opened by a reception at the church for the pastor and his family, at which time a short program was given, followed by a social hour, to which not only Friends, but members of other churches in the town, were invited. The pastor and his wife are showing energy and interest in the various departments of church work, and are rapidly becoming acquainted with the membership, having visited nearly all families of the church and others in the community. We are praying for a prosperous year.

Chicago—Walter E. Dorland has accepted an appointment to represent Earlham College at the convention of Alumni workers to be held in Chicago, November 21-22. Mr. Dorland has been making a tour of the West recently in his capacity as field secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. He visited various points in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington and Oregon, and has succeeded in adding materially to the membership of the body he represents.

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting was held the 25th and 26th of October in Victoria. The attendance throughout was good. Among visiting Friends in attendance were Gurney and Elizabeth Binford (representatives of Canada Yearly Meeting in the mission field at Japan), Robert E. and Emma Pretlow, from Seattle, Dorothy Lee from the same place, and Edna Goodwin from Everett. The presence of all these dear Friends contributed not a little to the edification and helpfulness of the occasion. An afternoon session was devoted to the consideration of "How to develop strong Quakers."

Daisy E. Cotsworth outlined the development and growth of the Young Friends' Movement in England, and pointed to evidences of the stirring of the young life in many of the meetings of this continent. Lydia E. Scott-Walker followed with a thoughtful paper in which we were encouraged to have a live and active faith in the distinguishing positive views of Christian truth held by Friends. She said that these should be lived out in our lives and told to others by word and example, that Quakerism should be made more known and that its light should not be hidden under a bushel. The need of individual responsibility was emphasized by others, and it was hoped that Friends might be more open to be impressed by urgent convictions, or "concerns," which had been such a marked feature in the lives of many of the early Friends.

A committee was appointed to further study circles and work among the young members. At the business session some account was given by James Cass of the progress of the recently instituted Western Canada Peace Society, and mention was made of the recent visit to the Pacific coast of Dr. Evans Darby, the secretary of the British Peace Society. It was decided to hold a conference in the fall of next year between Puget Sound and British Columbia Friends, the one lately held at Seattle having been found so mutually helpful.

Gurney Binford and his wife are well known in other parts of North America, so space need not be filled by telling of their very interesting talks on the subject of Christianity in Japan. This was their first visit to our coast meetings, however, and now we have the privilege of their personal acquaintance and friendship. The First-day meetings were all occasions of solemnity, and uplifting messages were heard from several. We believe that more than one through these meetings has obtained a "vision," and that the gatherings have not been merely formal, but will result in some way in a setting out of a larger influence and power for good in work on the coast with its many problems and opportunities.

A Centennial Celebration

Friends at Poughkeepsie, New York, celebrated the Centennial Anniversary of the establishment of the Meeting at that place, October 31 to November 2. The program on Sixth-day evening consisted of devotional exercises conducted by the pastor, William J. Sayres, with prayer by Elmer D. Gildersleeve, Whittier hymns, historical sketch of Poughkeepsie Friends by Lindley M. Stevens, solo by Leora Bogue, of Fairmount, Indiana, and an address on Quakerism by Augustus T. Murray, of Leland Stanford University, California. Mary Moore, who had a place on the platform, wore the typical Quaker dress, gray and brown with the bonnet, and spoke briefly.

On Seventh-day afternoon Field day exercises were held on the new recreation grounds, in the rear of the meeting house, and the annual banquet of the C. E. Society was held at 7:00 p. m.

On Sabbath Augustus T. Murray preached a strong sermon, taking as a text John 8: 32, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make us free." Leora Bogue sang, "Cast thy bread upon the waters." At night William J. Sayres began a series of special meetings to continue during the week until the time of Quarterly Meeting at Clinton Corners.

The occasion was felt to be both enjoyable and profitable.

Conference at Short Creek

The Ministers' and Workers' Conference of Short Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at West Grove, October 29-30. The first session held on Thursday afternoon was a devotional service, conducted by Isaac L. Kinsey, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent. The text chosen was from I Chronicles 29: 5, "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord." Much interest was manifested, and many took part in prayer and testimony.

The Thursday evening service held at Georgetown, near West Grove, was given over to the Sabbath School work. An excellent address was given by Clinton O. Reynolds, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Bible School work. He emphasized the necessity of more thorough organization in the different departments, and more careful preparation of the lesson by both teacher and pupils. An able paper prepared by Paul Wright on the Christian Endeavor work of the Quarterly Meeting, was read by Mrs. Haldy. The music by the Georgetown Bible School was much appreciated by all.

The Friday morning session was at West Grove. Devotional exercises were led by Clinton O. Reynolds. A paper prepared by James Siward on the "Importance of the Church Prayer Meeting," was read. The Missionary work was then taken up, conducted by Emma Lupton. Elizabeth Jenkins gave an interesting talk on "Foreign Missionary Work," followed by a paper on "Home Missions" by Anna H. Reynolds. A paper, "Echoes from Yearly Meeting," was then read by Mrs. Iddings. Mrs. Haldy made a special appeal urging the organization of a "Mission Study Class."

At the noon hour a bounteous dinner was served by the ladies of the West Grove Church. The afternoon meeting opened by scripture reading and a number of sentence prayers. John Chandler gave an interesting talk on "Charge to Pastor." A very instructive paper on "The Evangelist" was read by Rev. Haldy. We feel that the Conference was a blessing to many and inspired us to increased activity in the Master's service.

Notice

Friends' Freedmen's Association is preparing to send its usual boxes of old clothes and shoes to Christiansburg Industrial Institute. A letter from Edgar Long as Principal at the School, makes special request that we send all we possibly can. Again, as last year, old Christmas and New Year's cards and remembrances will be very useful to the pupils who take them to their needy neighbors with whom they have social service. Books and magazines are always in demand. All contributions to be packed should be at Friends' Institute, 20 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, not later than Eleventh month nineteenth, 1913, plainly marked "For Christiansburg Industrial Institute."

Note of Appreciation

The following recently received is typical of letters received almost daily at our office:

"I want to tell thee that THE AMERICAN FRIEND is a real blessing in our home, and it is increasingly appreciated in its weekly visits. May the Lord continue to bless thee and the paper."

Friends Board of Foreign Missions

The annual meeting of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions convened the 21st day of October in Richmond, Indiana. Every cooperating Yearly Meeting in the work of this Board was represented excepting California and Canada. It was a most interesting occasion, characterized by a spirit of deep earnestness and consecration, and a willingness to meet hard problems in the wisdom that was continually sought from above. Africa, Mexico, and Jamaica were represented by some of their missionaries, which is always a most helpful feature. The situation in Mexico is sorrowful, causing some interruption in the work, but not a cessation of it at any of the stations.

It seems that a baptism of suffering must be endured on the part of all nations emerging from darkness to light. Our fields are all well-manned at present, but so soon as funds permit, large opportunities are opened for enlarged work. In Africa one new station to the north, in territory assigned to Friends, if they will occupy it, has been opened, and another to the north of it will be as soon as the Chilson's return, which is expected they will do next spring. In Cuba a school of high grade is a most serious necessity, and the Cuban Field Committee was granted the privilege of securing funds needed for its erection and equipment. When this is done the work there will be in a most desirable condition. The work in Jamaica has suffered somewhat on account of the sickness of several of its faithful workers, but the conditions are now improving in this respect, and its former prosperity is at hand.

A large list of missionary candidates are filed, but none will be sent out now unless an emergency occurs. The largest number of candidates are for Africa, and many of these will doubtless have to wait indefinitely. There are some for Mexico, China, India and South America. The larger the list the more carefully will they be selected, as none but the best can be offered on this altar of service.

It is most encouraging to note that in spite of the casualties of this year, which have, in some respects, been unprecedented, more money has been forwarded for missionary purposes than any heretofore.

One of the problems at the home end of the work is to find a suitable associate for Charles E. Tebbetts. The work has grown so rapidly under his splendid management that it has become indeed a great work, and is more than one man can possibly handle, however capable he may be. The right one to help is in great demand just now. There is certainly great room for Friends to feel encouraged with their foreign work, and a proper support and sympathy will show us beautiful things in the future.—Friends' Missionary Advocate.

Century of Peace

At a Quarterly Meeting, held at Devonshire House, London, on the seventh ultimo, the chief business was the consideration of work for Peace, especially a proposal from the meeting at Jordans that the Centenary of Peace between Britain and America in 1914 shall be made the occasion of special efforts for Peace on the part of Friends. It was desired especially that the Yearly Meeting should be asked to approach the British government, urging that the Century of Peace should be celebrated by the offer of treaties of unlimited arbitration with every country in the world. After a long and interesting discussion the proposal was approved and the clerk was directed to prepare a minute for the consideration of the next meeting.—The Friend.

WORKS ALL DAY

And Studies at Night on Grape-Nuts Food

Some of the world's great men have worked during the day and studied evening to fit themselves for greater things. But it requires a good constitution generally to do this.

A Ga. man was able to keep it up with ease after he had learned the sustaining power of Grape-Nuts, although he had failed in health before he changed his food supply. He says:

"Three years ago I had a severe attack of stomach trouble which left me unable to eat anything but bread and water.

"The nervous strain at my office from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. and improper foods caused my health to fail rapidly. Cereal and so-called "Foods" were tried without benefit until I saw Grape-Nuts mentioned in the paper.

"In hopeless desperation I tried this food and at once gained strength, flesh and appetite. I am now able to work all day at the office and study at night, without the nervous exhaustion that was usual before I tried Grape-Nuts.

"It leaves me strengthened, refreshed, satisfied; nerves quieted and toned up, body and brain waste restored. I would have been a living skeleton, or more likely a dead one by this time, if it had not been for Grape-Nuts."

SUNSHINE FURTHER ON

The mountain's base is wrapped in gray,
And chill and cheerless is the way,
As slow I tread the shadowed trail
That stretches upward still and pale.
But as I rise I see it glow
With what seemed mist and cloud below,
And soon I stand amid the dawn
Of warmth and sunshine—farther on.
O, soul that beats the shadowed air
About the base of summits fair,
Be brave and patient. Mists obscure
The lower way, but hold secure
The higher path. For thou must rise
On toiling wings to clearer skies,
And though the way seems dull and gray,
It lightens toward the summit day.
Thou, too, shalt stand amid the dawn
That flowers in sunshine—farther on.

Minutes of the Executive Committee

The following will indicate in part the action taken by the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, October 23-24:

UNITED MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN

6. Ellison R. Purdy, as chairman of the committee appointed according to Minute 28 of last meeting, reports as follows, which was accepted:

The Committee appointed to take under consideration the matter of co-operation with other denominations in a missionary campaign, have followed the instructions of their appointment, and propose that Friends unite in the campaign planned.

CARE OF AGED MINISTERS

7. The proposition regarding the care of aged and disabled ministers was again considered and the following motion prevailed:

(1) That a standing committee of three from the Executive Committee be constituted a committee to assist ministers in need; the committee shall be authorized to receive and distribute funds for the relief of aged and otherwise disabled ministers.

(2) That the Trustees of the Five Years Meeting be authorized to receive gifts and legacies to be held in trust, and the income used for this purpose, through said standing committee.

Ellison R. Purdy, S. Edgar Nicholson, and Harry R. Keates are appointed as members of the committee as specified above, this committee to be known as the Committee to Assist Ministers in Need.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

15. The committee appointed to consider the matter of the relation between the Bible School Board and the Publishing Association of Friends reported that they had had a conference with P. W. Raida-baugh, who had made them three propositions, none of which could be accepted. The whole question was then considered and the following motion adopted:

That the Bible School Board be empowered to enter into any arrangement that may be desirable in the publication of Friends' Bible School helps and supplies, this arrangement not to continue beyond such time as the Publication Board may be ready to take over their business; and that if such arrangement is found to be impossible the Bible School Board be authorized to proceed with the subject of Bible School publications in its own way.

NEW MEMBERS OF COMMITTEES

22. The following information came to this committee stating that Walter H. Wood had been chosen and appointed a member of the Executive Committee of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, to fill the vacancy occurring by the removal of Robert E. Pretlow from New York Yearly Meeting. Also that Ernest L. Gregory has been appointed a member of the field committee for Jamaica under the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions in the place of Zeno Doan, resigned.

Methodist Laymen's Convention

REPORTED BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

(CONCLUDED)

The Thursday night's session was addressed by two laymen of other denominations. Mr. George Innes, of the United Presbyterian Board, a business man who gives his time without salary to the business side of the interests of his church, presented a business man's responsibility in a most interesting fashion under the subject, "What would you be worth if you lost your money?" He dealt vigorous blows at the men who hold tight the money which God permits them to get in their possession, and who do not own their right to a just share in the profits of their business. The Indianapolis News reports him thus:

Mr. Innes gave the cardinal sin of covetousness—"the awful lust of covetousness"—some hard jolts and in doing it he jabbed hard the man who, professing Christianity, sits in his pew and drops a quarter into the missionary collection plate when, on any basis of figuring of profits, he is cheating God out of $499.75. Innes made it plain that, so far as he was concerned, he put such robbery in the list of the cardinal sins. Innes spoke of his own experiences, his own covetousness and his own escape from it, and he did it in a way all his own and one which was immensely interesting.

Mr. Fred B. Smith, a Congregationalist, and one of the International Secretaries of the Y. M. C. A., spoke with great earnestness. He showed the folly of much of the preaching after the type of the past that fails to reach the men of today. He said Christianity was the only religion, supernatural in its origin, that gave any remedy for human sin. Theoretical preaching on the divinity of Christ is not the need of today. The best proof of it is when He can so control the every day life of the employer and the employee, that their religion enables them to adjust all the difficult problems of right dealing with each other. "I do not know whether the Methodist Church will continue fifty years or not, but I do know the Church of Christ is going to live until its mission is accomplished in full." He referred to his recent trip around the world. "The newest buildings you see are churches and hospitals all over the non-Christian world. And you see Shinto, Confucian, Buddhist and other temples going to ruin and deserted, and cows and pigs running in them." He plead for personal work: "You can have all in the church that you can make feel that they are a part of the program; you will lose all the rest. It is life! We need life. We need more men converted—soul, mind and body. You must not dull the edge of the individual relation to God in conversion."

Friday morning was devoted to hearing the report of the committee on the policy of the church and passing upon it. During the day various phases of their own work was considered. Dr. Eckman of New York, editor of the Christian Advocate, gave a forcible address on "A United Church a Conquering Church." He plead for broader views among churchmen, divorced from the narrowness of creed and dogma.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF QUAKERISM IN AMERICA

A New Declaration of Independence

I have just returned from attending the fifteenth national convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America, in session at Columbus, Ohio. The occasion marked the 20th anniversary of the organization of this movement. Merely as the regular gathering of a temperance society it would not command editorial notice in these columns. As a history-making epoch that marks a new and greater era in temperance reform, it has placed the movement for the annihilation of the beverage liquor traffic beyond the pale of cavil and petty controversy, and must receive the widest attention.

It may not be that uniformity in organization is yet a possibility, any more than is Church unity, but a great convocation like that at Columbus, with messages of tremendous power that struck with uniform telling effect into the very heart of the rum traffic, can have only one meaning and that is that the solidarity of the movement for national prohibition is henceforth assured. As Dr. Ira C. Landrith, of Nashville, so well said, he who henceforth is found firing into any other division of this common campaign will be wounding his own cause.

Following the convention, in answer to the call of 191 leaders of every division of the temperance ranks, a great conference, representing ninety-one organizations, assembled to formulate and put into operation a nation-wide educational and sentiment-building movement that means a common and thoroughly reliable literature to be made available for every division of the temperance army, and a supplemental nation-wide crusade of anti-alcoholic Congresses, national, state, district, municipal and local, wherein the best speakers of all divisions will preach the gospel of a new independence for our American homes and our American citizenship.

The League convention itself was the most marvelous event of the kind ever witnessed in this country. For three days and a half an audience of 3,500 people—five-sixths of whom were men—crowded the great hall three times a day and more than once overflowed into a nearby church. It was a shouting, determined, almost desperate audience that echoed the defiance of every speech that hurled its anathemas at Gamsbrinus and responded with the same sympathy to every call for comradeship in arms against this curse of the American people. It was a cosmopolitan convention, representative of the best in American life, men from every party, from every church, both Catholic and Protestant, from the millionaire to the day laborer, a composite assemblage of our best citizenship, bent upon starting a crusade that can no longer be ignored or waved aside with indifference.

Governors and Ex-Governors, Congressmen and Ex-Congressmen, Assemblymen and Ex-Assemblymen, ministers, both Protestant and Catholic, representatives of the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party, officials and friends of the Anti-Saloon League, business men, all spoke the same message of deliverance from the American saloon. There was not a discordant note in all the vast assemblage. It was a convention of climaxes, whose influence will speedily be felt in the remotest borders of our great country.

No one present can ever forget that wonderful story told by Ex-Governor Patterson, of Tennessee, former liquor advocate, who has felt the sting of the monster in his own home and in his own life, and who in his despair only a few short weeks ago met Christ in the way as did Saul of Tarsus, surrendered his all to Him, found rest of soul and has become an able advocate of nation-wide prohibition. Major J. B. Merwyn, intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, brought the convention to its feet when he told of Lincoln's words to him within twenty-four hours of his death, "After reconstruction, the next great problem will be the overthrow of the liquor traffic," and when again he reiterated the reluctance with which Lincoln signed the internal revenue liquor act, stating that he was doing it in a last extremity as a war measure, and that when the war was over he would devote himself to the task of having the act repealed.

The great climax of the convention came when on the last day Ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana, who, as chairman of the sub-committee, wrote the resolutions, read the declaration pledging the League and the convention to a nation-wide campaign for Federal constitutional prohibition, and calling upon all patriotic citizens to give their support thereto. Then followed a demonstration of approval not often seen in an American audience. The last lap of a campaign which has been waged for more than a hundred years has been reached. Henceforth the flag of temperance reform will lead toward the goal of national prohibition.

A Study of Church Government

BY CHARLES M. REAGAN

(CONCLUDED)

Men would not adhere to an organization that did not set forth its principles, but how far they may be forced upon the individual mind, is a question that often confronts and puzzles the church. Paul's creed was very short: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phillipians 4: 8). This creed may need additions from time to time, but it will never need amendment. But a creed is not a church. A creed outlines the policy of the particular branch adopting it, but should never take up the vital strength and energy of its members in fruitless disputings, to which it often gives rise.

Some one has asked, shall the church spiritualize or organize? We answer, it should do both. The church should be well balanced, not dogmatic and not impractical.

The Apostles' creed declares the church to be the "communion of saints," always meaning a society of Christians or believers. Under the old Hebrew dispensation the whole nation was called holy, as separated from the heathen and idolatrous nations about it. Under the New Testament dispensation the meaning of saints is not applied to those externally consecrated to God but rather to those who are true Christians and sincere believers. The term saint does not depend upon any particular form of government, as monarchy, republic, kingdom or democracy, and may refer to no particular form of government. The bond of union is rather spiritual. The church is not a corporation or a visible society that may be dissolved, and its charter taken away, nor is it dependent upon rules and by-laws, having only delegated powers by its charter, but it has its origin rather in faith and love, in obedience to a common Lord, and its members united by the spirit of Christ.

It is important in this discussion to get a correct view of what the church is. In its beginnings, the different denominations were merely societies, and to the present time Friends have retained the term Friends Society in most of their records and writings. Paul sends greetings to Priscilla and Aquilla and the church that is in their house (Rom. 16: 3-5). Here is a society in a house. Paul sends greetings to the church at Corinth (1 Cor. 1: 1). Here is a society in a city. So we read of the church in Ephesus and in Jerusalem. In Acts 9: 31, we are told that the church throughout all Judea and Gallilee and Samaria had peace. Here is a society in the country. In Acts 7: 38 Stephen speaks of the church in the wilderness. Here is a society of Christians in the wilderness. We have the society of Christians in the nation, for in 1 Cor. 12: 28 we find that God hath set some in the church to rule, etc. Paul refers to the society in all the earth.

We think, however, that it will be readily admitted that the church is an institution; that it has had a rapid growth in numbers and influence; that changed conditions make necessary forms of government; and that in organization there is strength. Therefore, it is profitable and expedient to have a form of government in order to better carry out the ideas, doctrines and teachings for which the body as a whole stands. These rules, written or unwritten, must best suit conditions of time and place, and it is as unreasonable to think that they must remain unchanged as to believe that human life can be supported in an atmosphere of sulphurous gases, or exist on planets without water or with different forms of gravitation.

This statement does not mean that the true church is not the same in all ages, however men may differ as to rituals, discipline and doctrines. It cannot consist of an external body, made up of all sorts and conditions of men, pagans, evil doers, lawbreakers, etc., by merely passing through certain ceremonies however good they may be, but only by a change of heart and purpose and true faith in Christ can they become a part of the communion of believers. This suggests the difference between the Romish and Protestant Churches. The former requires for its membership only the outward profession, while the latter require internal virtues.

It is not my purpose to enter into the discussion of the fine theories and the logic often used in support of a definition of the church, but think it well to bear in mind the prime fact, that all bodies of men whether political, social or ecclesiastical, to do effective work must have a fixed form of government or procedure, ordering their affairs and cementing the membership together. It was said of the Pacific railway, that it was like a great weaver's shuttle, bearing the warp and woof of commerce from ocean to ocean, and binding the different sections of this young nation into a union indissoluble and greater than the bands of iron that bound together the road itself. Some such figure might apply to the church organization which binds the members, the various branches and their allied interests into one harmonious, systematic, effective method of teaching, preaching and reaching out into missionary fields, and provides for all the details that must arise.

It is an oft repeated objection to the church, applying to all churches as they are administered, that they are webbed by various provisions which take away the liberty of the individual; that the church does all his thinking for him and arranges all his religious work; says what he shall eat and drink; what he shall do every hour of the day; and relieves him of the responsibility of personal development. Beecher had a remedy for this defect in church government: "Shut all men up in cells by themselves, away from temptation and where they can do no crime, and then see how harmless they will be—and how worthless also.” The figure is a strong one and points to the fact that the church may be too rigid in its discipline and spoil many useful members, who by gentler means may be brought under its benign influence.

An able and well-known lawyer of Richmond, Indiana, some years ago, contributed to The Earlehamite a most worthy article, which was a study of the recognition of God in the United States Constitution and our state laws. We see to it that our children are well versed in our constitutions and forms of civil government. They study their history, their adaptability, and become eloquent and eulogistic both for and against them. Why should we not encourage the same patient, conscientious study of church organization its adaptation to means and ends; of church classics or easy studies of different phases of church work. It might be a door leading into greater fields of church usefulness and interest.

Let us find the causes that are preventing the growth of the Friends Church in number or in power; that compel Friends after they have braved the pioneer stages of work in mission fields to give them up to richer and stronger organizations to carry forward.

Mansions in Heaven

BY CLARENCE IRVING PINKHAM

The idea of the “Many Mansions” which generally obtains is that of individual dwelling places for Christians when they shall have arrived in Heaven. And this hope has apparently been a great comfort to many earnest believers. But what if I were to say that this idea comes from a perversion of its scriptural origin? Let us inquire into the truth of the matter. What did our Lord say; was it a mansion or a place that He was going to provide or prepare for His disciples? Let us be exact because exactness may greatly effect the meaning of the expressions, “My Father’s House” and the “Many Mansions.” In fact, we must consider the very essence of the teaching of the gospel according to John, in order to get the true meaning of these expressions.

His immediate disciples did not understand when He told them about going away, and that the world would not behold Him any more, but they, His disciples, would behold Him. Judas (not Iscariot) wanted to know what had happened that He should manifest Himself unto them, but not unto the world. There seemed to be a lurking idea that He had changed His mind about setting up His kingdom, or that something had happened that had made it impossible. Jesus had not changed His mind. It was the mind of the disciples that must be changed before they could comprehend His meaning. Then He very patiently proceeded to teach them concerning the spiritual nature of His kingdom and how the Father dwelt in Him and He in the Father and how the Holy Spirit was to dwell in them and they were all to be united in one. This teaching was also supplemented by the parable of the vine.

To return to the metaphor of the many mansions. It is well to consider the original Greek word from which we have mansion. The word is monos and is used in its plural form (morai); the rudimentary meaning is a unit. Some of the early Christians seized upon this word or a derivative from it as a name for a church building, and so we have monastery, and translators have made it mansion. In our English language, manse is now a synonym for parsonage, and a gradual change in the meaning of a word may have led us astray from the original history.

Again, house has more than one meaning, and an important meaning is that of a family, as The House of David. In business it sometimes means a group of persons doing business together, and the action of any one of the group involves all the others. In such a house there may be such a unity of purpose that we can say that each abides in the others. This higher meaning of house corresponds with the idea of the family and brotherhood contained in the expression, “Our Father.”

In my Father’s household are many units (souls, persons or individuals). “If it were not so I would have told you. I am going to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself that where I am there ye may be also.”

The main idea concerning this household seems to have been that of brotherhood, fellowship, a unity of many in one. The idea of an exclusive mansion for one individual is quite foreign to it. If the idea of exclusiveness had been correct, Jesus would have made that plain. He would have told them. Jesus early introduced the idea of a business relation with the Father. In a modern industrial plant there may be a thousand different personalities at work, but all under one directing personality. Mind appears only a medium for the manifestation of personality. Where there is a master-mind there is always something masterful back of the mind. Metaphorically speaking, one mind may focus the rays of light proceeding from another mind and, like a crystalline lens, project an exact image of the mind of the first party on the mental background of a third party.

Just how the Holy Spirit is to show to us the things of Christ we can only know experimentally, but it would appear that the Christ-mind is the master-mind, and that through the medium of the Holy Spirit the mind of man may become a partaker of the mind of Christ, and that thus one may be born into the Household of God. From scriptural authority we learn that the Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father. With Christ it seemed like the covering of a garment or a sometime visible aura. Through the mediation of Christ with the Father the field of influence of the Holy Spirit was to be extended to believers. He was to be the special medium of the indwelling of the Father and the Son in believers and here we see the Father’s House in a new light and from a new angle.

Faith and Progress *

BY WILLIAM L. PEARSON

The last Five years Meeting took a wise step in its decision to keep the historical faith of the Society of Friends. It was a step indispensable to both peace and progress. The members of Christ's body can be one body only when they are built upon the Eternal Rock of Righteousness. Only as rooted and built up in Him will Friends be able to hold the evangelical faith as opposed to rationalism on the one hand and ritualism on the other, and only thus shall we again become, as at other times, practical publishers of the truth and life in Him. The foundation of our peace is the word of Christ; the word of Christ is based upon the work of Christ; and the work of Christ rests upon the character of the living God. Without clear and clarifying views of God, no minister, teacher, nor representative person can long be an acceptable servant of Christ.

Faith is an attitude of soul and of the whole man toward God; it is also a conviction, growing out of living union with Him, of the unseen realities of His nature and His coming kingdom. Every serious Friend will, like Ezra in the midst of the revival and reconstruction of the Jewish state, set his heart to seek, and to keep, and to teach the law of Jehovah. To this end none should fail diligently to search the Scriptures, and also to study our highly instructive Declaration of Faith. In the latter, next to the fundamental truths about God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, the two sections on "The Holy Scriptures" and "Public Worship" are of paramount importance.

The Holy Scriptures are incomparably the chief external gift of God to His people, a thoroughly credible exhibition of truth, the only ground of appeal in differences of doctrine. Christ believed them, and He expects us to believe them. They should be studied daily, diligently, systematically, by every Christian teacher, and all the people as well. In a day when all kinds of doubt and disbelief are widely published by press and preacher, ministers of the Gospel should, if possible, study them critically and exegetically, always remembering that it is the Spirit who searches the deep things of God. And although the Spirit who gave forth the Scriptures is the Supreme authority, the Declaration of Faith well says, "There can be no appeal from them to any other authority whatsoever." No person, nor periodical, nor institution of learning, therefore, which denies the authority of the Holy Scriptures, or discredits them, can be an acceptable teacher in the Society of Friends in America.

Equally important is the matter of worship. Nothing else so vitally influences the Christian life as how we worship. Worship is the ready response to God of a spirit set free by the Holy Spirit. Only they are Christians who have been baptized in one Spirit into one body, every one thereby becoming qualified to call Jesus Lord. A congregation truly worships, therefore, when Jehovah takes of the Spirit resting upon the few real worshipers and puts Him upon the many. If there be a Moses, as leader, he will rejoice when all receive the Spirit and prophesy.

Kansas Friends indorse the Declaration of Faith. Let them study well the section on "Public Worship," and let them master chapters 12 to 14 of First Corinthians. Let us maintain genuine meetings for worship, in the full sense of the term. Because Christ "alone selects and qualifies those who are to present His messages or engage in other service for Him," "we cannot commit any formal arrangement to any one in our regular meetings for worship." The priesthood of believers is practiced only where the people hearken to the voice of Jehovah. When the Hebrews would not hear Him directly for themselves at Sinai, they were soon worshipping a calf. All peoples worship some way. If they will not worship Him in the Spirit, directly, an official priesthood is certain to come in. Then skepticism also sets in on the other hand, and the intellectual members begin to doubt and deny God; the most part seek to mend the makeshift by magic, of which ritualism is the fashionable form in Christian as in pagan lands, while many of the people settle back into superstition.

Church government is an absolutely essential thing in a Christian society. Neglect it as we may, and usually do, the time comes when the otherwise indifferent invoke its power. Moreover, the propaganda of the Gospel demands combination and co-operation of churches as well as unity of the faith. As a Christian body Friends have not taken this necessity very seriously. Few have studied church government at all thoroughly. Yet, within twenty-five years, we have almost constructed anew the Society of Friends in America. So far we have avoided revolution. But very radical measures are frequently proposed, are already practiced in part. It behooves thoughtful Friends diligently to study our whole system of government.

Finally, in all these things, let us recognize the real call of the Society of Friends, and let us know that we are now, as ever hitherto, needed, and that we may now, as never hitherto, vitally affect the Christian sects from the Romanists down—rather from the Pope up to George Fox. The call is not primarily to gather all into the Friendly fold. Many are and long will be too much held by taste and training; and then we conceive our mission in too small a way. But yet our mission is no less than to bring in the fullness of the Divine life and fellowship among all the people of God. Let us glory in our humble-high calling in Christ Jesus.

It is stated that of the twenty million school children in America six hundred thousand of them are tubercular; one million of these children hear little or are totally deaf; thirty per cent. of them have unhealthy throats and noses; fifty per cent. of them have bad teeth and mouths that invite infections, which are later transferred to other children.

Bulletin From Ram Allah

RAM ALLAH, PALESTINE, Oct. 15, 1913.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The grape-season is here and we are thoroughly enjoying the luscious fruit which comes from the vineyards that cover the hillsides on all sides of our village. Travelers to this country return to America to sing the praises of Jaffa oranges, but if they visited the land in the fall they would be quite as eulogistic of Ram Allah grapes. I feel very certain that there are none better in the country. Having been to Hebron twice in grape-season, it is my firm conviction that our grapes here are superior to the lineal descendants of the grapes of Eschol. In fact, I have queried if the spies had only come as far north as Ram Allah and tried these grapes if more than two of them would not have carried back a good report and been ready to meet the giants of the land. Just imagine, if you can, the taste of the largest and finest Malaga grapes you ever saw, just as they come from the vines, having lost none of their freshness in crossing the Atlantic in a case of cork. Some of the bunches weigh three pounds and a single grape will at times have a circumference of three inches.

By the middle of September Katie Gabriel and Alice Jones returned from the Lebanon Mountains, greatly refreshed by their weeks of rest. The teachers and children returned on the last day of September, and on that evening we gathered in the large assembly room of the girls' school to return thanks to our Heavenly Father for the blessings of the summer and to dedicate ourselves to the work of the year just opening before us. The joy of the occasion was tempered with a note of sadness as we recalled the fact that during the summer our good friend, Timothy Hussey, who had done so much for the mission, and who loved everyone and everything connected therewith, had gone to his eternal home. How he did delight in these gatherings of the two schools and how he would ply them with Bible questions!

After collection all went outside and two oil barrels that needed to be burned out had been filled with pine needles. These were lighted in honor of the opening of schools and the boys and girls in turn cheered for the other school. On the following Sunday evening a little memorial service was held at which fitting words were spoken of Mr. Hussey's life and work and his last message, written about two weeks before his departure, was read.

Fifty girls and thirty-nine boys have been enrolled and, as usual, large numbers have had to be refused. We may accept one more boy in a few days and thus make our number even forty. The personnel of the teaching force in the girls' school has, with one exception, remained the same. One of our former teachers from Jaffa, Ramza Fiana, has returned to take the place of Aneesie Maloof, whose mother wanted her at home. Khalil Totah, the head-master of the Friends Boys' School is the only one there of those who taught last year. Mrs. Eunice Meader, of Tamworth, N. H., a graduate of Guilford College, has come to us for permanent work in this school. This year she will teach some of the English classes and take some of the matron's duties.

A readjustment of a number of our workers has been necessitated and still two of our day schools are without teachers. To cap the climax in the boys' school, the cook stove that was given to us second-hand when we started the school twelve years ago and which has been patched up from time to time in the vain hope that it would last until we moved into the new building next year, played the "one hoss shay" act and collapsed. However, we succeeded in borrowing one from a friend in Jerusalem for this year, and then we trust that some good friend (and we are not particular about his spelling his church affiliation with a capital "F") will provide us with a good Quaker range. That is the kind of stove that furnishes such good cooking at the girls' school and we must have just as good a one at the boys'.

The new building! What an interesting proposition it is and yet like a new baby, it is a big care. Everyone who comes to Ram Allah wonders at the rapidity of the construction. Those who visit the building can scarcely believe that the first stone was laid the fourth of June. The third story is now ceiled, and when you read this bulletin the good tile roof will be in place in readiness for the winter rains. We feel humbly grateful to our Heavenly Father for the help that has been accorded us during these trying months. The building when completed will be commodious and comely and is in a most sightly location. It will stand as a land-mark for many miles around. No expensive mistake has been made, no great obstruction has been met and no serious accident to any of the many workmen has occurred. We hope to close all building operations by the middle of November, leaving the plastering, about half of the windows, the floors, all the interior wood-work and the plumbing until next year. As the funds for the building are about exhausted, there will be given to the friends of the mission an opportunity to assist in completing this splendid structure. The reason we are short of funds is, that since the money was raised five years ago the price of labor and of material has increased very much. The architect's estimate of the cost of the building was considerably more than available funds, but it seemed wise to the Board to proceed with the building on the original lines marked out, using the available funds this year in the construction of the building, believing that the friends of the mission would come to the rescue and enable us to finish it next year. In this faith we have gone forward with the work.

Americans help those who help themselves. Let me tell you what our Surian workmen have done, both Moslem and Christian. A number came to me at the beginning of the work and volunteered some free service. This gave me an idea and so one night in the middle of the summer we called all the workmen together and asked for contributions of work. About nine-tenths of the one hundred and fifty workmen made contributions of from one to six days. It netted in all one hundred and fifty-two days, in value over seventy dollars. This is evidence of the keen interest that is being manifested by the people themselves in this splendid enterprise.

We do not wish to appear to give you the opportunity of contributing to the furnishings of the house until you have had the chance to help finish the rooms. The flooring and carpentry with the plastering will require several thousand dollars before furniture will look well within it, and our treasurer of the building fund, Geo. L. Crosman, of Saco, Me., will gladly forward any sum, large or small, that you will feel moved to give to this important part of the work.

As ever, your friends,

A. EDWARD AND MARION E. KELSEY.

The Impulse to Prayer

BY FRANCIS A. WRIGHT, SR.

It was my privilege recently to listen to a sermon on James 4th, more especially on the verse, "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss that ye may spend it in your pleasures." (Am. Rev.)

The point was emphasized that our prayers are not answered when they are for selfish objects. This was illustrated by referring especially to two cases: one of a minister praying for restored health, and another of a missionary praying for his wife's restoration to health. In both instances it was stated the prayers were not answered until the appeal was made to the Lord that they were needed, for their lives would be used in His service. We can also refer to the case of Hannah, where apparently her prayer was answered because of her vow, "Then I will give him unto Jehovah all the days of his life."

Now I do not desire to belittle the lesson that God does not usually answer prayers for purely selfish objects, but is it not a fact that there must be an element of selfishness in all real prayer. "Prayer is the heart's sincere desire." We cannot pray for anything effectively unless we really want it. In the instances above given was not the force behind the prayers, the personal desire? The minister prayed for himself, and the missionary for his wife as they would not have done for strangers, and the impulse moving Hannah was her intense desire for a "man-child."

Our Savior continually taught that we must become "as little children." What is the little child's prayer, so far as there is individuality in it? When it goes beyond the words dictated or taught to it, it asks for something it wants solely for itself, usually some toy or personal pleasure. Is God displeased with these prayers, or similar ones from older persons? I think not.

The playfulness of young animals teaches us that God desires the innocent enjoyment of His creatures.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above," and I class among these, all those longings and desires after food, raiment, and health, and social and intellectual pleasures, which are not wrong in themselves, or necessarily lead to wrong doing. I think if we have intense longings for any of these, such longings are impulses from our Father, and He delights to have us ask Him to fulfill them in the spirit of little children, and He will give the answer in His own time and way.

As we grow in grace our selfishness takes a higher form. The desires of one who can say with the Psalmist, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God," are for that which will spread the Master's kingdom. But all have not attained to this as a continual abiding state, and I want to encourage those who may feel needs or have intense desires which appear to them as primarily selfish, to believe that so long as these are not for things known to them to be wrong, there is no sin in asking their Heavenly Father to fulfill such desires, if it be in conformity with His will.

Financial Statement American Friends Board of Foreign Missions

Editor The American Friend:

By direction of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions I enclose the figures which were used by the Board in deciding on the appropriations made to carry forward the work for the coming year, with the request that they be published. The financial statement shows the actual receipts and disbursements through our treasury for the year 1912-13, classified as to objects.

The budget shows a comparison between the anticipated and actual receipts and disbursements on current account for the year 1912-13, and those anticipated for 1913-14. The analysis of appropriations shows the total authorized expenditures on each field with the amounts anticipated to be received on each field. Deducting the latter gives the amount appropriated for each field. In the present chaotic condition of affairs in Mexico, it was impracticable to give exact figures for that field.

The last column shows the amounts appropriated for buildings, which are payable from the various building funds, in accordance with the wishes of the donors. An amount of $25,000.00, not shown as a direct appropriation was authorized for a high school in Cuba, when the funds are received.

The final evening session had two addresses, one by Bishop Quayle on "America, the Great Republic," emphasizing some of the great contributions America had given to the world. The other by George Sherwood Eddy, on "The Chinese Republic and Its Future." He spoke from knowledge gained by a recent tour of China with John R. Mott, in which they witnessed the wonderful awakening of interest in the Gospel on the part of the government and student body of China. "God is as surely working out the destiny of this great nation as He worked out our own." He vividly described their experiences in the great government centers where their meetings were attended by more than an average of two thousand of the leaders of the China of today and tomorrow. These same centers ten years ago were closed tight against the Gospel. Now the thousands of these leaders of China are open to Gospel truth, and hundreds of them are accepting Christ. Through them God is presenting a challenge to the Church on a scale never before seen. Will our faith stand the test?

The following paragraphs taken from the message the Convention sent down to the Church may well be taken to our own Church with serious thought: "The responsibility of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the evangelizing of non-Christian peoples is self-defined, and has been accepted as 150,000,000, which number of such peoples the Church has elected to serve. Its responsibility for the Christianization of the United States is in like proportion to the unchurched and unevangelized in our ninety millions of population. This whole service must be undertaken and forwarded in harmony with other existing Church agencies. 'Together' is the watchword of the twentieth century. Unification, co-operation, co-ordination are the recognized principles to secure economical and efficient service, not only in secular business but equally in the business of the Church." * * *

"As much for missions and benevolences as for our local budgets would afford ample revenue. This convention repeats the challenge of 'at least as much for others as for ourselves' as the lowest goal for final attainment in view of the second great commandment. This standard of giving is easily attainable if proper apprehension of the stewardship of life and money can become the impression of the entire membership of the Church, and if scriptural methods can become the regular means for the expression of their religious life." * * *

"The 'new financial plan'—nothing other than these scriptural methods—embracing continued information and education, the acceptance of the principles of stewardship and of systematic methods of proportionate giving, and the steady practice of prayer in daily life, should be actualized in every Methodist home and congregation. To secure this there must be carefully planned and cordial co-ordination and co-relation in the methods and work of the several agencies charged with missionary and benevolent responsibility. Business intelligence demands, and the best interests of our benevolent work require that there shall be no unnecessary duplication of programs or multiplication of agencies." * * *

"We must socialize our Christianity, and Christianize our social life. The evils and wrongs so sorely afflicting society must be overthrown and remedied through an aroused public opinion that will register itself in righteous laws and just administration. The Church must ally itself sympathetically and aggressively with all that commends itself to its judgment and conscience as essential to the perfection of the Christian state."

"Particularly is the demand upon Christian business men to give the same energy and intelligence to the work of the Church that they give to their own private affairs." * * *

MISCELLANEOUS

One way to do good in this world is to be good. Thus you are an epistle of Christ, known and read of all men. But the trouble is, it is much more difficult to be good than it is to rush around urging other people to be good.

According to figures presented at the Southern Presbyterian Conference on Education at Montreat, N. C., one out of every seven students in the State schools of the South belongs to the Presbyterian Church or has Presbyterian leanings.

We have only to be patient, to pray, to do His will, according to our present light and strength, and the growth of the soul will go on. The plant grows in the mist and under cloud as truly as under sunshine; so does the heavenly principle within.—W. E. Channing.

The gavel used in the World's Sunday School Convention at Zurich, Switzerland, was the gift of Sabbath School children of Burma. It was made from wood taken from the house in which Adoniram Judson lived and from the prison where he was confined for some time.

The men and women, though they may be poor, ignorant, blundering, who day by day are quietly setting aside their own pleasure for the sake of some other person take a sweetness and get in themselves a growth which makes the world a sacred place for them.—George S. Merriam.

When we are living in fellowship with Jesus, that union works in two directions, and while on the one hand we may then humbly venture to feel that our sufferings for him are sufferings with him, we may thankfully feel, too, that in all our affliction he is afflicted. If his sufferings are ours we may be sure that ours are his. And how different they all become when we are certain of his sympathy.—Alexander Maclaren.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Carthage—Carthage meeting observed Sabbath, October 26th as Prison Day. An appropriate sermon was preached by the pastor, J. Edgar Williams, giving some statistics regarding the prisons and stating that eighty-five percent. of the men were imprisoned in Michigan City prison through the direct results of intoxicating liquors. Another cause was the lack of proper training for the boys in the home and public schools. A personal letter from Maud Ballington Booth was read, in which she emphasized the care, we, as helpers, ought to have over the discharged prisoners, and the fact that we should drop the term of "ex-convicts." The pastor's message in the evening was "Prisoners outside of iron bars or freedom through Christ." There was a good attendance at both services.

Traverse City—Traverse City, Michigan, Friends' Bible School has among its pupils a young man who for over eight years has never missed attending Sabbath School. In the eight years he has been out of reach of his own school a few times, possibly three or four, but has attended some other school wherever he might be. Traverse City school is proud to have one so faithful, and on Rally Day this year the Bible School Committee, in behalf of the school, presented the young man with a suitable gift, as a token of appreciation for his loyalty and faithfulness.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Minneapolis—Our Friend, William Penn Angell, is at the home of his son, Dr. William Angell, in Minneapolis, in feeble health. He retains all his old time interest, although unable to attend meeting.

Friends' Meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa, has secured Isaac N. Rich as pastor for the ensuing year. He began his pastorate some three weeks ago, and the meeting has been steadily enlarging in attendance and gaining in spiritual life.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

LaHarpe—On November 8th several of the friends of Hugh W. Maxwell, of La Harpe, Kansas, met to celebrate his ninety-third birthday anniversary at the home of his children, Philander and Caroline M. Blackledge and Sarah Maxwell with whom he now resides. Scores of cards and letters of congratulation and loving messages from his old-time friends from various states, as well as from new acquaintances formed since coming to La Harpe, were received, proved a source of much pleasure and were greatly appreciated. We listened, with great interest as he related some incidents of his early life, after which a sumptuous dinner was served, with the dear aged father seated at the head of the table. We were thankful to our dear Heavenly Father for the privilege of sitting at the table with the oldest person in the city of La Harpe.

Haviland—Haviland Friends are active in evangelistic work at present. Stacey Even and Alma Albertson are in evangelistic work in Fowler Quarterly Meeting. Cora Isham begins a series of meetings at Fairview Friends' Church, Fairview, Missouri, November 9th. Carl Byrd begins a series of meetings at Hopewell Friends' Church November 9th. B. F. Albertson is soon to hold a series of meetings at Glendale Friends' Church. Charles Lescault expects to begin a series of evangelistic meetings at Cherokee, Oklahoma, November 10th. At Haviland Monthly Meeting, held November 2d, Nathan Brown and Cora Isham were granted minutes for evangelistic work within the limits of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Haviland Friends have a large aggressive Bible School. It is the second largest in the county, is well organized in all its departments. The Primary department is well organized and doing splendid work. Anna Brown is superintendent of this department. There are fine organized adult Bible classes, and all are doing good work. Raymond Woodard is superintendent of the Bible School and the school is prospering under his management. The Cradle Roll department has been reorganized and is being aggressively worked under the superintendent, Mrs. Overman. F. C. Brown is the teacher of a large interesting Teachers' Training class.

Haviland Friends' Y. P. S. C. E. is prospering with a membership of eighty-seven active members, a number of associate members, and quite a list of absent members. One of our members is a missionary in Central America, four are in Friends' University, two at Cleveland Bible Training School, and several are actively engaged in pastoral and evangelistic work. Some of our very best meetings occur when the pastor turns over the Sunday evening meetings to the young people. Lydia Kendall is president, and Minnie Brown is superintendent of the Junior C. E., which has a good enrollment and is doing splendid work.

Mrs. Lenna E. Lescault, a minister of Haviland Monthly Meeting, and associated with her husband, Charles Lescault, in the pastoral care of Haviland Friends' Church, has been in poor health all the past year, and is shut in most of the time. She was six weeks under the doctor's care at Rochester, Minnesota, during the summer, and underwent a serious operation, which has not proved successful, and she may have to return later for another operation.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

Belvidere, North Carolina—At a recent roll call of Piney Woods Monthly Meeting, one hundred and fourteen members responded. Fifteen members have lately been received by application and one by certificate. An interesting missionary program is rendered each third Sabbath afternoon. A new meeting house has just been completed at Symons Creek in lower Pasquotauk County, North Carolina, where once stood one of the first church buildings of this country and occupied by Friends. The dedicatory exercises occur on the fourth Sabbath of November.

Fred E. Smith, pastor at Greensboro, attended Western Quarterly Meeting at Centre Meeting on November 8th, and found an open door for service. The Friends' C. E. Society at Greensboro is launching a movement to increase the subscription list of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in their meeting.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Tecumseh, Michigan—On Tuesday evening, November 11, a reception was held by the members of the Friends' church at Tecumseh, Michigan, for their pastors, Lewis G. and Mary Barrett Pim, at their home. A goodly number of members and attenders of the meeting gathered and the pastors of the other churches, with their wives, were present. Light refreshments were served and a social time was enjoyed, which we trust will be productive of good in the future.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Tecumseh, Michigan, November 1-2. There were present Estella Hammond, of Tonganoxie, Kansas, Edna Whinnery, of Elkhart, Indiana, and Eber Hobson and wife, of Lupton, Michigan, all of whom had messages which were truly appreciated. On First-day afternoon a missionary address was given by Mary Barrett Pim, and pledges taken for mission work. The Quarterly Meeting throughout was a specially favored occasion. The one in February will be held at Raisin Center.

Eber Hobson and wife, of Lupton, Michigan, are assisting Claude Roe in a series of meetings at Raisin Center, Michigan.

Mount Pleasant, Ohio—At Mount Pleasant, Ohio, on the evening of November 4th, there was a surprise donation party for the family of our pastor, Isaac L. Kinsey, at the home of their neighbors, Mahlon and Anna Hill. Wagon loads of the necessities of life of all kinds were provided. There were one hundred persons present; a jolly good time was had, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. We had speaking, singing and a prayer service, also a lot of questions for impromptu answers, some of which were very apt and humorous. At a late hour simple but substantial refreshments, provided and served by the company, were enjoyed. This is the tenth year of Brother Kinsey's pastorate in this church, and this liberal donation may be taken as an index to the feeling of good will and appreciation toward him in the church and community.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Danville, Indiana—Jefferson Ford, returned missionary from Africa, was at Danville, November 2d. He spoke to large and interested audiences both morning and evening, following in the morning the line of thought on Faith, as developed by Vincent Nicholson, Field Secretary of Earlham College. His evening theme, "The Power of the Gospel," together with the curios he exhibited, awakened new zeal and enthusiasm along missionary lines, many expressing themselves as having never before so clearly seen the needs and claims of our benighted brothers.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

New Burlington, Ohio—Miami Quarterly Meeting of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, was held at New Burlington, November 8, 1913. The meeting was favored with the presence of eleven ministers. Rufus King, of North Carolina; Arthur and Edna Chilson, and two children, of Africa; George C. Levering, of Xenia; Abijah Wooten, of Waynesville; Mrs. Jane Carey, of Chester; Mrs. Deborah Lloyd, of Spring Valley; Josephus Hoskins, Evangelistic

Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting; Amos Cook, of Harveysburg, and Robert Dimond and Jesse Hawkins, of New Burlington, were present, and their services were very helpful and inspiring to all. Rufus King preached on Sabbath morning, and in the evening Arthur Chilson spoke of Africa and its needs. Mrs. Chilson was unable to be present at this service, but on Monday afternoon the Women's Foreign Missionary Society met with them for a better understanding of the needs of the station where they are located, and a box of articles needed will be sent soon. The Society also pledged $50.00 a year for the next five years toward the new station to be opened soon.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

The centennial celebration of Union Monthly Meeting of Friends, which was held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, November first and second, was an occasion which will long be remembered, not only by Friends of Union and West Branch, but all others who were in attendance. Several came from a distance. All joined in making it a grand success, and no one could attend one session without coming in touch with the spirit that led our forefathers to make it possible for us to worship as we do today.

One remarkable feature was that each one on the program was present and ready to respond to the subjects assigned them. On Seventh-day morning at ten-thirty, H. O. Miles announced the time had come for worship. After a few moments of silence, several earnest prayers were offered. David Coppock, of Arba, Indiana, who was once a member of Union Monthly Meeting, made an earnest appeal that we should not forget the earnestness of our fathers and mothers, for they always went to meeting. Robert W. Douglas then explained the meaning of Quakerism, to the younger minds and those who were not acquainted with our form of worship, more clearly perhaps, than they had ever heard it before.

When the time was announced for business, the two clerks walked to the table carrying the old record books. Leonard Coate, clerk, read the first minute of men's meeting of one hundred years ago. Verla Stewart read the minute of the women's meeting. The business was soon transacted. The social hour of both days was a noted feature. Dinner was served in the basement of the church.

On Seventh-day afternoon one can hardly describe the interest that was manifested by the older people. Enos Pemberton spoke on the subject of "One Hundred Years of Achievement." Reminiscences and sketches from the first books of minutes of men's and women's meetings were very interesting. The address given by S. Edgar Nicholson Seventh-day evening was very appropriate and given in such a manner that no objection could be offered by any one who does not believe in Friends' doctrine.

On First-day morning at the Bible School, one hundred and twenty-nine regular scholars were present. The sermon and address by Robert Kelly were fine, and were listened to with interest. The house was crowded and some had to be turned away. Music conducted by Edith Miles Pearson, consisted of an anthem, a solo and a trio, and all were very well rendered.

First-day evening was the last meeting, but not the least, when our own pastor, Elwood Hinshaw, spoke to a large congregation on "Requisitions of Today for the Future." Never was the way opened better for the teachings of our belief, than it is at this time. One hundred and ninety-five biographies of Friends were sold, and quite a number of other pieces of literature were given out. Letters were read from former pastors of Ludlow Meeting as follows: Emma Woolam, L. Oscar Moon, Murray S. Kenworthy, and E. B. Moore. We all join in saying, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

A WORLD WIDE TRIP

We learn that Joseph Elkinton, his wife and two daughters, have been granted a minute by their monthly and quarterly meetings to visit Friends and others in Great Britain, Germany, Norway, Denmark, Italy, Syria, China and Japan. This trip will include a visit to all the educational and missionary institutions of Friends enroute which time will permit. They expect to go by way of Egypt and India also.

They plan to sail on April 25th next, after attending Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, in order to attend Dublin and London Yearly Meetings. It is expected that they will be gone fourteen months.

In the Young People's number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, the number of C. E. members at Winchester, Indiana, given as twenty should have been seventy.

MORDECAI MORRIS WHITE

The subject of this sketch was born February 3, 1830, and spent his childhood alternately in Henry County, Indiana, and on his grandfather's plantation, in Pasquotank County, North Carolina, which he and his brother, Francis T. White, inherited, together with a number of slaves, at the death of their grandfather, Mordecai Morris, the second.

In 1847 he entered Earlham College and graduated in 1850; after which he took a commercial course in Cincinnati and later a clerkship in the mercantile house of Wood, Bacon and Company, in Philadelphia. In 1853 he came to Cincinnati, and became a member in the wholesale grocery house of Wells, White and Company, from which he retired in 1874. In 1855 he made his annual visit to the old plantation in North Carolina, and then with his brother, decided to free their slaves, which they did, Morris White himself bringing them north and settling them in comfortable homes in Indiana. In 1871, after doing business as a private banker for ten years, he entered the Fourth National Bank, and three years later was elected its president, serving in this capacity until 1908, when he retired from active business.

During this period he took a deep and active interest in the American National Bankers' Association and was a member of its executive council for many years. He was made vice-president in 1892, and president in 1893. He also served a number of years as president of the Cincinnati Clearing House, and as a director in several large corporations, until the time of his death. He always maintained a warm and intense interest in Earlham College and was for many years chairman of the finance committee of the endowment funds. Among his last gifts was a large contribution to complete the M. M. White Endowment Fund. He contributed largely from his fortune to religion, art, education and philanthropy, and there was scarcely a benefaction in his own city that had in view the development of character and righteousness in man but he was one of its most generous supporters. As a banker and a prominent member of the community he exerted a strong beneficent influence in the financial district and in the business world; his unerring judgment of men told him intuitively that this particular man or that one possessed the capacity to "make good," and to such a one Morris White was a friend when friends were few. The apostle expressly states that there are diversities of gifts, and it is quite clear that all of God's children are not appointed to the same service; upon him was conferred "the gift to amass means;" his conscientious fulfilment of his calling proved a great blessing to many in all walks of life, for he made it a rule to do "something" for "some one" each day that he lived. He regarded himself as a "trustee" of his fortune, a steward who was to give an account of his stewardship, and so he ministered to those who came to him bowed down with burdens and filled them with renewed hope and courage and assisted them on their way.

He was devotedly attached to the principles and held the doctrines of the Society of Friends, and was deeply interested in all branches of the work of the Church and was always ready to contribute liberally to the same and only the weight of years and failing strength prevented him from attending services. As the years passed on he deepened in his spiritual life and often expressed publicly in prayer and testimony his faith and hope. He believed that our Divine Lord was "the Life, the Truth and the Way," and that no man could come to the Father except through Him, and trusted alone in the power of His precious blood to cleanse him and present him faultless before the throne of His glory. When the Good Shepherd called him as He does His own by name, there was such a sense of quietness and peace that it seemed almost as if the visible presence of the Master was manifested, saying, "It is I, be not afraid."

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING NOTICE

In addition to notices already given, the United Missionary Conferences are to be held as follows:

Friends in New York Yearly Meeting are asked to take notice, and to see that their meetings are represented at these gatherings nearest at hand.

SEATS FOR SALE

The Friends' Meeting at Anderson, Indiana, having purchased a meeting house from another denomination recently, has twenty-two seats suitable for a church auditorium for sale. They are each about ten feet long and together will seat about one hundred and fifty persons. They are nice looking, and can be bought for $3.00 each. Any one interested may correspond with Horace P. Cook, Treasurer, Anderson, Indiana.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

November 30.

Subject—Crossing the Jordan.

Lesson—Josh. 3: 7-17. Read Joshua 3 and 4. Commit verses 12, 13.

Golden Text—Fear thou not, for I am with thee.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

November 30.

Topic—Our Church at Work for our Country. Deut. 8: 1-20. (Home Missions.)

Preaching the gospel unto every creature includes the next door neighbor, and the family in the slums and the immigrant who has just arrived, as much as it does the heathen in the foreign field.

The salvation of Americans is the basis of salvation for America. The gospel is for society, for the social order, for the municipality, for the Nation, no less than for the individual.

The Church has an obligation to make the community and the country better, and anything less narrows its operations overmuch. The Church is obligated to conserve public morals, in order to remove an environment that means destruction for multitudes.

FAMILY OF FIVE

All Drank Coffee From Infancy

It is a common thing in this country to see whole families growing up with nervous systems weakened by coffee drinking.

That is because many parents do not realize that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which causes the trouble. (The same drug is found in tea.)

"There are five children in my family," writes an Iowa mother, "all of whom drank coffee from infancy up to two years ago.

"My husband and I had heart trouble and were advised to quit coffee. We did so and began to use Postum. We now are doing without medicine and are entirely relieved of heart trouble.

(Caffeine causes heart trouble when continually used as in coffee drinking.)

"Our eleven-year-old boy had a weak digestion from birth, and yet always craved and was given coffee. When we changed to Postum he liked it and we gave him all he wanted. He has been restored to health by Postum and still likes it."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

If you use it it will bring
Smiles and joy in work and play.

Folks get cross at what they say;
When you say it people mind
And do what's wanted right away.
Learn to say that word with ease.

Amy's Beautiful Lesson

BY HILDA RICHMOND.

"Throw the thread over the needle! So!" said Aunt Marjorie, taking the work in her hands. "Now watch me, Amy."

Amy watched, and soon she saw the tangles untangled and the work smooth and straight under the trained hands. "I'll never learn," sighed the little girl, and it won't be anything nice when I get it done."

"Wait a little," said Aunt Marjorie, as she had said so many times. "Maybe you'll change your mind."

"I'm sure I won't," said Amy. "It's just a mass of red beads and green beads and blue beads. I'm tired of it all."

Amy had a big ball of stout thread on which were strung many beads of different colors. She had a little steel crochet hook, and day by day Aunt Marjorie helped her with her lesson. Amy did not inquire what she was making, as she did not like the work, and only did it because Aunt Marjorie coaxed her to, and she would be very glad when it was finished. If Aunt Marjorie had not been so kind to the little girl, and if she had not always brought such delightful gifts when she came to visit, I'm afraid Amy would have given up at the very first lesson. As it was, it was only because she was too polite to refuse that she kept on at all.

"Why, Auntie! Come here!" cried Amy in amazement, one day, after she had worked long and hard at her bead work. "There's a rose on this work. A red rose with part of a green leaf."

"Hush!" said Aunt Marjorie. "It is to be a surprise for your mother. We must keep it a secret."

"Why didn't you tell me, auntie?" asked the little girl. "I'm glad you didn't, though. It's such a delightful surprise."

After that Amy wanted to work all the time. "I'm so glad you taught me such a beautiful lesson," she said. "I do wonder what's coming next."

On Amy's mamma's birthday there was a beautiful box by her plate, with a red rose on it, and when the box was opened a lovely bead bag came out. It had a pretty trailing green vine on it and two red roses on the side, and at the bottom was the most beautiful fringe, made of red and green beads.

"For me?" said Amy's mamma. "Who made it? My own little girl? How very nice that is. I am very proud of you, Amy."

"I'm so glad you wouldn't let me give up, auntie," said Amy. "It was such a beautiful lesson after that rose came in the pattern. Thank you so much."

"My little girl must remember that all lessons are beautiful when we see the pattern of them," said her mamma, drawing the little girl to her to kiss her. "God sets us many tasks that we cannot understand, but when they are all worked out, they are very beautiful and useful. When you get discouraged at school or at home, remember this beautiful rose."

"I will, mamma," said Amy. "I'm glad you told me."

God's Kitten

One day a boy was tormenting a kitten. His little sister, with her eyes full of tears, said to him: "O Philip! don't do that; it is God's kitten." That word of the little girl was not lost. It was set on wheels. Philip left off tormenting the kitten, but he could not help thinking about what his sister had said. "God's kitten, God's creature—for He made it," he said to himself, "I never thought of that before." The next day, on his way to school, he met one of his companions beating unmercifully a poor, half-starved looking dog. Philip ran up to him, and before he knew it was using his sister's words, saying, "Don't, don't do that, Ned; it's God's creature."

Swallowing Sunshine

Lily stood one glorious morning by a sunny window, through which came a flood of rich, warm sunshine.

"What a lovely morning," said Lily. So she picked up a spoon and put it right in the sun-ray, and then in her mouth. "O mamma, I have swallowed a spoonful of sunshine," she cried, with a merry laugh.

"I will tell you at bed time whether you have or not," said mother. And

THANKSGIVING TIME

Richard Sill Holmes

THE harvests are gathered, the fields are bare,
The chill of the autumn is on the air.
The brook in the meadow, still fringed with sedge
Feels the touch of the ice-king at its edge.

The mountains beyond the broad river rise;
Snow-silvered, they shine as the daylight dies.
The north wind sweeps where the reapers sang,
And the earth is hard where the fresh grain sprang.
The toilers are gone with laughter and jest,
The green-sward's a-sleep, and the forests rest.
One robin sings late on the leaf-bare bough;
The last of its kind; 't will be winter now.
Cold, dreary, and dark is the world to-night;
But the home within is aglow with light.
The table is loaded with homely cheer,
The fruit of the goodness that crowns the year.
Praise God; 't is from Him that all blessings flow;
Praise Him, all ye creatures in earth below.
Where the fire leaps high by the hearth they kneel
To voice the thanksgiving glad hearts should feel.

THE PRESIDENT'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

HE season is at hand in which it has been our long respected custom as a people to turn in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His manifold mercies and blessings to us as a nation.

"The year that has just passed has been marked in a peculiar degree by manifestation of His gracious and beneficent providence. We have not only had peace throughout our own borders and with the nations of the world, but that peace has brightened by constantly multiplying evidences of genuine friendship, of mutual sympathy and understanding, and of the happy operation of many elevating influences both of ideal and of practice.

"The nation has been prosperous not only, but has proved its capacity to take calm council amidst the rapid movement of affairs and deal with its own life in a spirit of candor, righteousness and comity. We have seen the practical completion of a great work at the Isthmus of Panama, which not only exemplifies the nation's abundant resources to accomplish what it will, and the distinguished skill and capacity of its public servants, but also promises the beginning of a new age of new contacts, new neighborhoods, new sympathies, new bonds, and new achievements of co-operation and peace.

" 'Righteousness exalteth a nation,' and 'peace on earth, good-will toward men' furnish the only foundations upon which can be built the lasting achievements of the human spirit. The year has brought us the satisfactions of work well done and fresh visions of our duty which will make the work of the future better still.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the 27th day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to Almighty God.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the City of Washington, this 23d day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-eighth.

"By the President:

"WOODROW WILSON.

"W. J. BRYAN, Secretary of State."

Universal Bible Sunday, December 7th

A movement recently started in Canada, toward the universal observance throughout the world as Bible Sunday, has already received recognition in England, Scotland, Germany and elsewhere. This movement has recognized as Bible Sunday the same Sunday that the New York Bible Society adopted, December 7. This is the second Sunday in Advent. The recent General Convention of the Episcopal Church recommended the universal observance of Bible Sunday. Bible Sunday has also been officially endorsed by the Episcopal Diocesan Convention of New York, the New York Presbytery, the Reformed Classis of New York, the Baptist Ministers' Meeting and the M. E. Ministers.

Why a Nation-Wide Canvass for Missions in March, 1914?

BY J. CAMPBELL WHITE

General Secretary, Laymen's Missionary Movement

What has led the leaders of all the Protestant Churches of America to plan for a simultaneous canvass for all Missions and Benevolences next March? And what are some of the results that may reasonably be expected from this great combined effort?

One of the most powerful arguments for the simultaneous canvass on the part of all the churches is undoubtedly the marked success that has attended this plan in three different denominations. The first de-

The Spirit of Thanksgiving

The spirit of thanksgiving is peculiarly the spirit of Christianity. It is the philosophy of a direct relationship between the human and the divine that makes a thanksgiving day appropriate. Only the paternalism that is characterized by the elements of love and sympathy and fatherly care, which is so strangely lacking in other religions, can create the proper incentive for the giving of thanks. "O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good" marks the height and depth of human devotion to the Creator.

The spirit of thanksgiving is the spirit of optimism, and Christianity is optimistic. The sordid soul of pessimism is the soul of infidelity that has no vision of a larger life ahead because it has had no realization of the Divine touch in the past. The belief that God is in His world as the great Divine Architect of human life, leading humanity on to nobler types and larger endeavor, is the greatest incentive to the giving of thanks which the human heart can know. Faith and hope are the well springs of gratitude that overflow in never failing supply.

We are prone, this human race of ours, to reduce our thanksgiving to its lowest terms of self-gratification. The child of a loving household appreciates its toys and bubbles over with effusive declarations of gladness, not wholly because of the toy, but unconsciously to itself perhaps, because of an abiding faith that the parental care is to be continuous and ever watchful of the child's welfare and happiness. We may "give thanks to the Lord" and have only in mind the material prosperity which has flowed into the family life, and the heart may indeed be glad with a spirit of thanksgiving, but he has not learned the deepest joy of the thanksgiving spirit, who has had no vision of the higher realm, wherein God is leading all men to nobler achievements and a larger life, and wherein the guardianship and blessings of the past are a sure guarantee of greater things which are yet to be.

True thanksgiving is both nation-wide and world-wide in its characteristics, for God is both the Lord of the nations and the Ruler of the Universe. We may indeed have the spirit of gratitude for personal and family blessings and for neighborhood and municipal favors, but in larger degree we must recognize our participation in nation-wide and worldwide achievements, wherein the handiwork of Jehovah is written large upon the pages of mutual human endeavor.

This may indeed be a day of national thanksgiving for America, not so much for her bounteous material prosperity which has known so little of stint in this good year that is passing, but for a larger faith in the realm of religious activities. What means the great federative movements of the churches that are characterizing present-day American Protestantism, except that they are the call of God for a mightier service than the Church of Christ has known hitherto? American Christianity has awakened to the universality of human need with a decisiveness that may well provoke a song of universal thanksgiving, no less characteristic of the need of the hour than when Moses broke forth into his song of blessing, after realizing that his people were about to enter into their promised possessions.

For the first time in human history, the door of opportunity is literally wide open to "preach the gospel to every creature," whether in China, or India, or Africa, or among the immigrants, the slums of our cities, or our neighbors of the rural communities. God's hand is mightily upon this decade, preparing the way for the establishment of His truth. Isaiah's prophecy that "Nations shall come to thy light" is being fulfilled, as is the commission to the Church "to preach good tidings to the meek"; "to bind up the broken-hearted"; "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

Are we not facing the time when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea?" In a fuller, larger sense, may we not then make this a day of joyous thanksgiving, wherein we dedicate ourselves to the tasks of world betterment, of national betterment, and of neighborhood betterment? The year has been plenteous in the manifestation of the Spirit of God among the Nations of the earth. In our own America this is no less marked than in the heathen countries. The day is at hand when Christianity is to be a witness for God "unto the uttermost part of the earth." It is indeed a time for national thanksgiving.

The church loses far too much from leakage. It needs to set the efficiency experts to work to find the remedy.

Our Nation's God

REV. B. S. DISE

Thou, God of Nations, Thee we humbly bless,
Before Thy searching eye our sins confess,
Thankful, repentant stand.

Of old Thou hast vouchsafed us daily grace,
With peace and plenty, sunshine of Thy face;
We are a favored land.

Thou hast a mission for this people's part;
To share our fortunes with a gen'rous heart,
Our lot with all mankind.

Our own are here with us to worship Thee;
And from all climes they here seek liberty,
With us that good to find.

For blessings past, we thank Thee o'er and o'er;
The present stores we use, rejoice, yea, more;
Thy loving smiles abide.

We'll trust Thee ever for the future good,
In hopeful prayer for daily, needed food,
When Thou art at our side.

Abide with us, still bless us, gracious God;
We shall enjoy Thy presence and abode
In Nation and in Home.

Then safely lead, protect us, year by year;
The Wrong move far, but keep the Right us near
When we as children come.

Thankful for Things I Miss

An easy thing, O Power Divine,
To thank thee for these gifts of thine!
For summer's sunshine, winter's snow,
For hearts that kindle, thoughts that glow;
But when shall I attain to this—
To thank thee for the things I miss?

For all young fancy's early gleams,
The dreamed-of joys that still are dreams,
Hopes unfulfilled, and pleasures known
Through others' fortunes, not my own,
And blessings seen that are not given,
And never will be, this side heaven.

Had I too shared the joys I see,
Would there have been a heaven for me?
Could I have felt thy presence near
Had I possessed what I held dear?
My deepest fortune, highest bliss,
Have grown perchance from things I miss.

Sometimes there comes an hour of calm;
Grief turns to blessing, pain to balm;
A Power that works above my will Still leads me onward, upward still;
And then my heart attains to this—
To thank thee for the things I miss.

BY WILBUR K. THOMAS

It has been my privilege to spend six weeks in England studying English Quakerism. One cannot have such an opportunity without being deeply impressed with the tremendous influence of Friends upon the religious, social and political life of the kingdom. Some half-a-dozen Friends are now members of the British Parliament, and are exerting a great influence in legislative matters. A far larger number are members of city councils, where they are leaders for righteousness in civic affairs. In the Free Church Council (which includes all Protestants except the Church of England), Friends have representation far in excess of their numerical numbers and they are being looked to more and more for the spiritual message. In regard to social work, where there are Friends in a community, there is no effort made for the betterment of conditions but what Friends have a part in it. One of the most inspiring things about this work is that it does not seem to be done with the object of building up the Society, or increasing the prestige of Friends, but to be of help where there is need.

I am not conversant with the past history of London Yearly Meeting. I do know that today English Quakerism is alive. The evidence is more noticeable inside the Society. Concerned Friends are not only speaking of their concerns, they are carrying them out. Previous custom is of very little consequence, if it interferes with the progress of the work. "Thee" and "Thou" and the Quaker garb are less common in England than in America. Over a decade ago one Quarterly Meeting decided not to record more ministers. One of the subordinate Monthly Meetings, numbering over a thousand members in about twenty local meetings, has developed such an effective Eldership, that they keep in touch with every person who speaks acceptably in any of the meetings. Quite often these Elders meet for conference and prayer, and take definite steps to encourage different ones in faithful service.

Over the Yearly Meeting one finds young Friends meeting in fellowship groups studying their problems. Groups of twelve to thirty young people form Tramps, and making headquarters near the center of a group of needy meetings, spend a week visiting the members around each meeting, holding meetings in various places in the evenings, sometimes preceded by a street gathering. Each morning is spent with a meeting for worship followed by one whereby carefully prepared papers, topics of interest to the Society are opened for discussion. To see a group of so-called conservative Friends standing out in the square of some village, singing Sankey's hymns, and two or three stepping forward with a short definite message or appeal for discipleship of Jesus Christ, gives one a broader conception of English Quakerism.

Then there are groups which meet together for the study of social problems at large. There are groups which provide special subjects for discussion at some of the Quarterly Meetings, or at some week-end conference. Some who are more able make it a point to have in the course of the year a number of groups of young people, many of whom are not Friends, for week ends. Recreation, songs, jolly fellowship, talks on social and religious subjects, meetings for worship, enter into the three days. Young Friends and older Friends, independently, are taking up various branches of work, like teaching in the Adult schools; doing neighborhood visiting; helping in prison work; writing books and pamphlets on various subjects; giving addresses in various places on Biblical, social, or literary subjects. The Woodbrooke Extension Committee published a list in 1910 of forty-eight available people for lectures in different parts of the Yearly Meeting, with two hundred subjects to choose from. All such work, organized or unorganized, is what would be called unofficial; i. e., it has no official connection with a Monthly or Quarterly Meeting. Official recognition is a later development.

Through their kindness, I had the privilege of attending one session of the Meeting for Sufferings of the Yearly Meeting. To see this large group of most substantial Friends, leaving their business for a day each month to consider the affairs of the Church, gives one a still deeper impression of the consecrated spirit back of all their work. Not only does this body consider the business of the Church, but anything that concerns Friends, or work in which Friends can help, is proper for discussion and action.

To speak of one thing more than another, which seems to have contributed to the present activity, mention must be made of the Summer Schools. Those who have had the vision have taken this means of working it out. Various things have developed, without doubt the greatest being Woodbrooke—a continuous Summer School. Woodbrooke is not a “college” as we use the term, yet the curriculum offers much of college or university grade. The student may pursue higher graduate work, or may engage in work among the poor in the neighborhood under competent supervision. The ages of the pupils this term ranges from nineteen to the age when birthdays are forgotten. Some have not had what we would call a high school education; others have had more than our college curriculum requires for graduation. The object in starting this Settlement was: “Whilst carefully conserving the principle that a free ministry is a vital element in the Quaker conception of public worship, they sought to offer to those who received the call to this service, the intellectual equipment which is essential if the Quaker gospel is to be adequately set forth;” also “as a preparation for social usefulness in ordinary business and home life.”

The combination of Woodbrooke, Kingsmead,

“Training Institution for Missionary Candidates, and School of Study for Missionaries on Furlough and Others,” West Hill, “Training Institution for Sunday School Workers,” Fircroft, a place of study for Adult School men, all within half a mile of each other, each with its separate faculty, yet all working together, is an unmeasured force in determining the lines of work for the future. Similar institutions have been started in other places on a smaller scale, largely with the same object in view, Swarthmore Settlement at Leeds being the most noted.

The thing of most vital importance is not the methods used, but that something is being done. It means new life, new viewpoints, new inspiration, new leadership, for London Yearly Meeting. It means more or less of a change, and only the future can show the permanent value of much they are undertaking; but there is activity and development.

The great temptation is to compare the body of Friends in England and that in America and say that one is better than the other, and that we should copy their methods, and they should introduce some of ours. I feel that the time for such criticism is past. It produces only ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and the cause of Christ is not fostered by it. It makes one sick at heart to mingle with either American or English Friends and find here and there preconceived ideas, unsupported criticism, groundless suspicion and bigotry. I feel that we have no business to say that their methods are better than ours, or ours better than theirs, under unlike conditions, even if a few weeks' stay made me feel the tremendous difference in the very viewpoint of the English people. Social and economic conditions, their heritage from the past, while very similar are yet decidedly different.

The inspiration of my visit was the earnestness and zeal which English Friends are manifesting in making their message vital. We cannot transplant their beautiful lawns and flowers, but we can labor with like zeal in our gardens. Devotion is praiseworthy whether it be Oregon Yearly Meeting rising to the needs of Pacific College, or Henry Marriage Wallis and James Backhouse Crosfield giving of their time and paying their own expenses to go and administer the funds raised by English Friends for the relief of the non-combatants in the Balkan war. The work in England is different, and why not? We in America found long ago that all Protestants, not even those who call themselves Friends, could be poured into the same mould, but we are finding that all are striving for the coming of the Kingdom and therefore have great cause for fellowship. The past has its great lessons for us, but we should not live in the past. What others are doing in our day should be of profound interest to us. But the greatest consideration is, what are we doing? Do we have ideas of our own, or must we be continually borrowing and copying. We must strive to minister to our generation. That was what I found English Friends trying to do.

The Bible and High School Work

In the issue of August 7th, THE AMERICAN FRIEND published an article by Prof. Vernon P. Squires, of North Dakota, in which he outlined the North Dakota plan of Bible study, for which credit is given in the high schools of that state. It will be of interest to all readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to know that this plan is in process of being incorporated into the educational system of Indiana.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly, President of Earlham College, and a member of the Indiana Board of Education, has become the leader of the movement to promote this plan in the latter state. He has not only sought to enlist the sympathy and co-operation of the State Board, but has advocated its adoption before several ministerial associations and various educational conferences.

Before taking final action the following explanatory statement was sent out by the State Board of Education to a large number of representative school men and women, who were asked to give their impressions concerning it.

Dear Friend:

A committee of the State Board of Education has made the following report concerning the study of the Bible outside of the High Schools for High School elective credit. The members of the Board are generally if not unanimously sympathetic with the object of this report and the plan suggested, but wish to ascertain the thought of representative school men and women of the state. Will you be kind enough to read the report carefully and answer the appended questions? By so doing you will assist greatly in solving an interesting and important problem.

Very sincerely, R. L. KELLY.

1. That the State Board of Education have prepared a suitable syllabus for Bible Study, using the North Dakota syllabus as a model.

2. That superintendents and principals throughout the state have favorable attention called to this syllabus and the method herein recommended of carrying it into effect.

3. In case the authorities of a high school take favorable action upon the use of the syllabus, they shall allow all students who so elect to pursue the course as outlined. It is not expected that this study will be carried on in the high school buildings. The work of instruction is entrusted to parents, Sunday School teachers, ministers and other interested friends of the boys and girls. At stated intervals the State Board of Education will issue examination questions upon the work, mark the papers and award credit. It is recommended that not to exceed one-half unit of elective credit be allowed for this work, and in case a student satisfactorily passes the examination set by the State Board on this work, he will be excused from the appropriate amount of work in other elective subjects. A class may take as much time as it pleases to finish the work, but it is expected that at least 90 hours of recitation work be placed upon a course leading to a half unit of credit. It is recommended that in the examination questions, the literary and historical value, not the theological value, of the Bible be emphasized. The only text book recommended by this Board is the Bible itself, and any version adopted by the class will be acceptable to the Board. The object of the work is to acquaint students with the rich literature of the Scriptures, without some knowledge of which any person is seriously handicapped.

QUESTIONS

1. Do you consider it advisable to attempt a co-ordination of the work of the home, the church and the school along this fundamental line?

2. Do you believe the plan proposed is workable in some of the communities of the State?

3. Do you believe the plan proposed would fit conditions in your own community?

4. Do you see serious objections to this plan?

5. What do you consider its advantages?

6. Do you have a better plan to propose for instructing our youth in the literature of the Scriptures?

REPLIES

In reply to the first question, out of a total of 210 answering, all but 7 answered "yes." In reply to question two only 2 answered "no." In reply to question three 166 answered "yes." In reply to question four 104 answered "no." Many favorable replies were given question five and in reply to question six 117 answered "no."

The plan has been approved not only in this referendum vote, but by the State Sunday School Association, by the Ministerial Associations of such cities as Indianapolis, Richmond and Kokomo and by the press and pulpit generally throughout the state. No one has openly opposed the plan. The most decided endorsement came at Indianapolis on November 8th, after Doctor Kelly had presented the matter by request, when the State and Town Superintendents' Association of Indiana endorsed it by unanimous vote. In view of the fact that Indiana has 400 commissioned high schools and about 200 certified high schools, it will be readily seen that since the plan is now operative only in the State of North Dakota, its adoption by the Indiana Board of Education will be the most important and far-reaching official act that has ever been taken by public school authorities in the United States in the line of effective and systematic Bible study.

With all these endorsements, the State Board is expected to adopt the plan as outlined, at its next meeting, and it is hoped that the syllabus for study will be ready for the second semester of the present school year.

It is significant that, generally speaking, Friends have been foremost in promoting this plan of Bible study in Indiana. In addition to Dr. Kelly, the superintendent of Kokomo schools, who is a Friend, has taken an active interest in its behalf. One of the superintendents of the State, who is a graduate of Fairmount Academy, was on the committee of the State and Town Superintendents' Association and was responsible for the presence of Dr. Kelly on the program. The chairman of the committee on resolutions of this Association was a graduate of Earlham College, while Morton C. Pearson, as secretary of the Indianapolis Federation of Churches, was a large factor in securing the endorsement of the plan by the ministers of that city.

This plan of Bible study ought to be incorporated speedily into the educational system of every state.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

The holding of this meeting has a peculiar significance each year because it is the last one to be held and, after a manner, completes the Quaker cycle. Statistics for the year are now complete, if one does not take the phrase too literally, and the winter season, in many places a time of activity in church work, must be passed before we begin again to make history in our Yearly Meetings.

Baltimore did not do much that would be considered momentous at its gathering this year, but there is ground for confidence that some of the steps taken have in them great potentialities for future history making. The usual program was followed. The regular committees reported without any remarkable items of interest. The reports from the Quarterly Meetings were not very different from last year, but one who was at all sensitive to conditions must have gained the impression of quiet confidence, courage and hope. Nothing striking forced it on one's attention, but the reports showed pretty clearly that the local meetings were feeling a deeper responsibility for their communities.

The gain in membership was only eleven but it was a gain, in the face of a loss by the excess of deaths over births which is characteristic of eastern Yearly Meetings. A majority of those who came up to Yearly Meeting from outside Baltimore City were under thirty years of age, and on the days when the sessions were largest the gathering looked almost like a Young People's Meeting.

And most significant of all, possibly, the Young People's Union appointed a committee to co-operate with the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee in the visitation of meetings, so that they will come into direct contact with the real work of the church. They cannot get thus at the heart of things without an increase of "concern" for the progress of the kingdom.

The foreign work was brought well to the fore. Daniel and Emily Oliver, English missionaries to Syria; Arthur and Edna Chilson, almost ready to start again for Africa, and Dr. George F. DeVol, warm from China, made us see as never before that "the field is the world." Although Baltimore has been so far in advance in the missionary movement that they had only one organization to advance it, there being no separate societies for men and women, the Yearly Meeting "stepped backward a little to get into line with others and authorized the formation of the Woman's Missionary Society this year.

Public meetings were held in the evenings in the interest of Bible School work, addressed by Walter Haviland of Germantown; Foreign Missions addressed by Arthur and Edna Chilson, and Peace at which President Isaac Sharpless gave an illuminating statement of the relation of Japan to this country, and Daniel Oliver cleared up some misunderstandings about the Balkan war.

The devotional meetings were a very important element in the life of the week, and time was found for one more than last year. In addition to the foreign workers already named, Augustus T. Murray and S. Adelbert Wood of New England Yearly Meeting, J. Thomas Chappell of North Carolina, Homer J. Coppock of New York, and Esther G. Frame of Wilmington were present to help us.

Baltimore Yearly Meeting has been feeling, certainly its concerned members have felt strongly for the past few years, the need for the development of gifts in the ministry, and this year comes Augustus T. Murray with a message along this very line. He appointed a special meeting for those interested and gave practical, intelligent and helpful teaching on the Quaker basis, emphasizing that however well we may prepare ourselves no other qualification is final except the call of God, and when we have that we must respond with whatever we have and go on to give the best we can, and the best we can make of ourselves.

Among the interested developments of the past year were the Neighborhood House at Fishtertown, Pa., a bungalow built in the meeting-house yard and used to the glory of God in ways which the neighborhood needs; plans for a somewhat similar house at Bellefonte, Pa., which would be an adaptation of an existing building; and the continued progress of Corinth Academy in lower Virginia, where the new house and manual training department have given renewed interest. Corinth, with its live meeting and strong school, is a center from which radiates helpful influences for many miles.

Late News From Mexico

C. VICTORIA, TAMPAS, November 9, 1913.

Dear Mr. Tebbetts:

Friday night and still "nothing doing," but the entire atmosphere seems charged with expectancy. The papers are saying that the revolutionists have been routed from Linares and Montemorelos and that all is quiet there, but the fact remains that there are no trains running except military trains. Day before yesterday a train with some 300 soldiers left here and has not been heard from since. Yesterday another train left but returned today. The rumor is that the rebels destroyed the station at LaCruz, about an hour's run from here. Another train left this morning, but it is said that it got only about half an hour's run from town when the soldiers saw some people in the distance. They stopped the train and with field glasses saw an army of several thousand men. So they returned.

The city is quite alarmed tonight. Several families have come to the Mission and schools for protection. Many think that an attack will be made tonight or in the morning. If there is no attack tonight, I will send this on a train in the morning. There is still communication to Tampico. We hear so many false alarms that we have got so that we don't pay attention to anything we hear. Yesterday I heard that 500 rebels were a short distance south of here, but the fact that the road is not cut makes me think that it must be false. But the rumors of their coming from the north are so persistent that I am almost inclined to believe there is something in them; besides the soldiers are very active and they are keeping strangely silent.

The other day a squad of forty men went into battle north of here and it was reported that they routed the rebels with great slaughter, but by ones and twos the survivors of the squad came straggling in, until it appears from their reports that more than half of them were killed and the survivors escaped as best they could by hiding in the brush. I brought the team and wagon into town this evening so as to have them ready in case we need to leave in a hurry and know which way to run. I had planned to escape to the farm in case of an attack and take all the pupils of both schools along, but now it appears that our farm may be the battle ground. It surely will if the rebels continue following the railroad as they have done this far. So I don't know what course to take until the battle is upon us, when we will have to be guided by the circumstances at the time.

We are afraid to set out for Tampico for fear we may be left out in the country, cut off from all communication and without provisions. So we have concluded to await developments and take our chances right here where we are. We have not yet received the draft for July nor the one for October. We still have a little money on hand, but if we are shut in for any length of time so we can't get money from the patrons to help us out, I don't know how we will get along. We are hoping, however, that the situation won't prove to be as bad as it appears at present.

Sincerely yours, R. S. TICE.

LATER—Under date of November 18th, the newspapers report the capture of Victoria by the rebels, with great loss of life in the city, every member of the Federal garrison remaining being killed.

An Evening Over a Peace Program

BY JOHN F. HANSON

Neighbor Thomas.—Uncle John, you made the statement in your address that "war is a game, that if people were wise, kings could not play at." Do you think it would be wise to disarm in the present state of the world?

Uncle John.—It is well, Neighbor Thomas, to call attention to this phase of the subject. It is the common people who are most interested in this question and they can be depended upon to rise to the occasion in time of need. They are also thinking and weighing matters of public policy as never before, knowing that in the last analysis they must furnish the men and pay the bills in money, blood and suffering whenever war occurs. Discussion in labor organizations and agitation by means of peace literature and peace addresses have quickened the public conscience to such an extent that from the economic as well as from the moral point of view war is seen to be unjustifiable. Rulers are being more and more looked upon as servants responsible for the safety of the people, in some such way as the captain of a vessel is considered responsible for keeping his vessel off the rocks. For some such reasons the great heads of Europe have been notified by their respective labor organizations that in no country would working men fight their co-laborers in other lands. This fact largely decided the great powers from interfering in the Balkan affairs. The insane rivalry among the nations over armaments will stop when the people refuse to pay the bills. It is a matter of but a comparatively short time when the nations will be compelled to submit the question of disarmament to the constituted Hague court for a practical solution.

Neighbor Thomas.—Now, Uncle John, don't you think we ought to be ready to defend ourselves in case of attack from other nations?

Uncle John.—On the face of it this question might seem to be a stunner, but let us consider it carefully. In the first place, in our national history of over a century we have had some kind of war every twenty-five years and in all those conflicts where other nations were concerned we have been the aggressors. Is it not begging the question to make such a plea? We are ashamed of some of our country's history; for example, our Mexican war for the extension of human slavery. Taking our geographical position, our immense resources and our economic and moral force into account, we are really immune from attack.

Neighbor Thomas.—You spoke of moral force being more potent than physical in adjusting international disputes. I wish you would explain the process.

Uncle John.—According to Scripture, in the first place, it is true that the work of righteousness is Peace and its effect is quietness and assurance applied to nations or to men. Further, we have had many cases in which grave international disputes have been settled by arbitration. One case in point, the simple application of even-handed justice in returning to China a certain sum of indemnity money overpaid after the settlement of the Boxer raids, did so appeal to the thinking men in China that as a result we are their most trusted friends. Again, the hundred years of peace with our Canadian neighbors, abolishing warships and forts from the Lakes, is an object-lesson to the world. This is a forcible argument in favor of neutralization on a larger scale, for instance upon the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Other cases could be cited.

Neighbor Thomas.—Do you expect the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies concerning the triumph of universal peace to come in the progress of events and the providence of God, or do you think as some say that Christ must come before swords can be beaten into plowshares and men learn war no more?

Uncle John.—The prophecy of Isaiah that a child should be born and the Government should be upon His shoulders is now fulfilled in that Christ is King and rules in the hearts of men and in the affairs of nations where He can get access. He is now applying the principles of His Gospel of Peace to international questions by arbitration wherever nations are willing to submit to His Government. He does not compel nations to adopt His Peace Policy any more than He compels men to be saved. When He comes again it will be in the character of Judge; then He will compel men to stand before Him in the court of last resort.

Neighbor Thomas.—What is the duty of the Church in respect to this and other reforms?

Uncle John.—The authority of Scripture for all reform work is shown in the story of the man who fell among robbers, as given in Luke 10, and Paul's conduct with respect to the jail, in Acts 16; "Do thyself no harm." Then in Isaiah's vision of the Gospel Church being a new threshing instrument for the purpose of threshing down such mountains as the liquor traffic and the military system. These oppose the progress of the car of salvation at home and in the foreign field. The church is the conscience of the nation, and when once she realizes her power and responsibility she will make short work of legalized national iniquity.

Neighbor Thomas.—To what extent is the military system a factor to be reckoned with in the final settlement of universal peace?

Uncle John.—It makes little difference whether we call the military system a vampire, an octopus, or an elephant on our hands, we are facing one of the greatest foes of humankind, entrenched in the sentiment of the people as a necessary evil that must be endured. Its stronghold, like other world-wide curses, is in the financial field. Manufacturing corporations, with immense capital and Government pull, manipulate our Congress sometimes almost to any extent they desire. When orders for military outfits become slack, extra pressure is brought to bear on Congress to provide for more dreadnaughts or other engines of destruction in order to keep the establishments going at full blast. Military experts are quoted in our daily newspapers under scare headlines to the effect that our navy is inadequate, that we are at the mercy of the invaders, etc. Then the country is deceived with manufactured Japanese and Mexican scares which evaporate after Congress has appropriated the millions wanted and the people pay the bills. Recent disclosures in Germany and France revealed the fact that secret agents stationed in their respective capitals were working up sensational newspaper stories of an impending struggle between those countries, with the result that the great Krupp military establishments were getting rush orders for war materials. Thus the game goes on until the people get wise; see?

Neighbor Thomas.—Do you not think that nations will be compelled to stop warring because of the very destructiveness of modern inventions? For example, when the airships are perfected to destroy whole cities by dropping explosives?

Uncle John.—It would seem plausible, but from past history it is not true. Dr. Gatlin invented a gun so deadly that he thought it would frighten the nations into peaceful settlement of their quarrels, but he could hardly have been more deceived. At his death at eighty-four years it is estimated that his gun had killed more than a million men. The nations vied with each other in putting the gun in commission. Again, when the great torpedo boat was invented, immediately other inventors set about inventing torpedo boat destroyers and so ad nauseum. Neighbor Thomas, be it known that the axe is laid at the root of the tree; the demand now is for men to set to work in earnest to destroy the deadly Upas tree.

Compulsory Military Training

Is the Australian System to be Instituted in Great Britain?

A letter from Charles E. Howie, of Melbourne, Australia, Overseas Correspondent for the Australian Freedom League, has the following significant paragraphs:

Out here official militarism and the press are doing their utmost to impress a party of British members of Parliament, who are visiting Australia, that compulsory military training is generally popular.

A few days ago 18,000 cadets were paraded in the Melbourne streets, and everything done to impress the public and the parliamentary delegates from Great Britain.

Of course it was not announced that every lad was compelled to take part in the parade, as the parade was not voluntary. In fact, the military regulations provided a penalty of £10 ($50.00) for any lad failing to attend such parade.

After the parade, Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery (Unionist M. P. for South Birmingham), said:

"I only wish we had the whole of the House of Commons present to see what I have seen. If that were possible, I am convinced we would have the same thing in Great Britain in two years. I am certain on that point."

Sir Hildred Carlile (Unionist member) stated: "I hope I may live to see a similar system instituted at home."

If compulsory military training such as is now required in Australia, is adopted in Great Britain, it is easy to see that pressure will soon after be brought to bear upon the Congress of the United States to institute similar compulsory training for all boys and young men here.

One Thousand Hours' Imprisonment for Refusing to Drill

An open letter from John W. Barry, Commonwealth Organizer of the Freedom League, addressed to the South Australian Press, gives the following incident:

I have received today a letter from Mrs. E. Sayce (a member of the Society of Friends), of Broken Hill, containing a statement in connection with the case of Victor Yeo, of Broken Hill, a lad of fourteen years of age. He was sentenced to one month's imprisonment for refusing to be medically examined under the Defence Act. Victor Yeo is prepared to take an affidavit to the truth of the following statement: On August 25 he was committed to the local gaol for one month and released on September 24. His food consisted of dry bread and water for the first seven days, with one hour's exercise in the morning, and one hour in the afternoon. He was not permitted to speak to the other prisoners. This practically amounted to solitary confinement. During the second week he received the same fare and treatment on alternate days. About the third or fourth day he was visited in the cell by Dr. Bartley (the prison doctor), who remarked that he was not doing too well and needed a change of diet. He asked Yeo if he would submit to medical examination as required by the Defence Act if his diet were changed. On the lad replying, "No," the doctor said, "Then stop on bread and water." Within three hours after his release another summons was served on him and he has to answer that charge on Monday next. In fact, a summons was served on him before he came out of gaol! Mrs. Sayce informs me that this lad is well brought up, without the least trace of the larrikin element, nor inclined to whine about his treatment. He has taken his punishment bravely, and with a quiet determination, in spite of the treatment making him very weak. This is the second time Victor Yeo has been imprisoned on the same charge. The first time he was sentenced to two months, but after serving twelve days he was liberated. We were given to understand that the military authorities had then overstepped the mark! This case is one of strong conscientious objections to military training. To force conscience in this manner is a direct blow to religious and civil liberty. * * *

For refusing to undergo the sixty-four hours' drill, Victor Yeo was imprisoned for over 1,000 hours!

Haverford Students Hear Mr. Langdon Davies

The College Weekly (Haverford, Pa.) of October 20, 1913, reports an interesting address before the Seniors and Juniors of Haverford College on the subject "Peace versus War." Mr. Davies is a personal friend of Norman Angell, the author of the Great Illusion, and his address emphasized the importance of a consideration of the economic phases of the problem of bringing about permanent international peace, following in general the line of thought found in Mr. Angell's well-known work. One paragraph from the report of Mr. Davies' address is especially significant, containing as it does a statement of economic principles which certainly are becoming operative more and more widely as the relations between nations increase in complexity:

Political boundaries are not commercial boundaries, which upsets one motive of conquest most completely. The wealth of a modern nation is not tangible—bags of gold in the cellar of the exchequer. Wealth consists of the flow of labor into capital, capital into labor continued to the end of time.

Why a Nation-Wide Canvass for Missions in March, 1914?

nomination to try out the plan was the United Presbyterian Church. By the simultaneous canvass of that whole body, with 1,000 congregations and 142,000 members, during the month of March, 1912, they made an unprecedented advance of about 30 per cent in a single year in their total missionary receipts, even though they were already at the top of the list of the denominations in their per member gifts to these objects. Of course, they did a great deal of educational work in preparation for their simultaneous canvass. Missionary conferences, lasting through the most of two days, were held at all of the leading centers of the denomination, some sixty conferences in all. There was also ceaseless agitation by the church papers, and a vast amount of literature sent out by a special committee in charge of the campaign. But all of this effort was far more than justified by the splendid results.

Briefly summarized, the canvass increased the regular income of the various Mission Boards of the Church from $580,169 in 1912 to $739,452 in 1913, or a gain of $1.12 per member for the whole denomination in a single year.

This increase of $1.12 is more than many denominations now average as their total contribution for Missionary purposes, appalling though this fact is. But to appreciate fully the achievement of this one denomination, there must be added to the above figures a large amount contributed by their Women's Missionary Society, and bringing up the total of their Missionary giving to $853,569 for 1912-13, or an average of $6.11 per member for their entire constituency. The nearest approach to this that has yet been discovered is the Baptist Church of Ontario and Quebec, with 55,000 members, who this past year gave $220,000 to all Missionary purposes, an average of $4.00 per member. This has been increased from $103,000 since 1908. Very few denominations average over $3.00 per member, and the Protestant Churches of America as a whole, only average about $2.00 per member per year to all Missionary purposes.

It is also worthy of note that while the United Presbyterian Church added $1.12 per member for Missionary purposes, they also added $1.07 per member for other purposes, clearly proving that Missionary giving enlarges rather than decreases all other Church offerings. The average per member to all purposes in this Church is now $20.97 which is the highest we have yet discovered for a whole communion.

The other two denominations that made a similar simultaneous canvass in 1913, were the Reformed Church in the United States and the Southern Presbyterian, both of which made unprecedented increases in the amounts subscribed and in the number of churches actually making the canvass. Even during the year of the agitation for this simultaneous canvass, however, the Reformed Church increased its Foreign Missionary offerings from $107,900 to $146,020, while those of the Southern Presbyterian Church increased from $501,412 to $631,069. This is an increase from $276,263 in 1907, or a gain of 129 per cent in six years. Offerings for Home causes increased in about the same proportion.

In view of the manifest success of the simultaneous canvass plan in these three denominations, it was very natural for the leaders of the Home and Foreign Missionary Boards of America to decide upon carrying the co-operative principle still further and ask the Protestant Churches of the whole nation to register their practical interest in Missions during the same month. March was fixed upon as being most acceptable to the majority of the Boards involved. Being late in the winter season, it affords time to prepare for such a canvass by thorough educational processes.

[This educational process has begun in the district conferences now being held.—EDITOR.]

Every Day a Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving should never be wanting in a life. It is not enough to observe one day in the year for thanksgiving, although that is a beautiful thing to do. Nor is it enough to put a sentence of thanksgiving into our daily prayers, although this also is proper. It is the grateful spirit that pleases God, the spirit that is always full of praise. Too many of us go to God only with requests, our burdens, our worries, while we but rarely go to him with praise. We are not to be thankful only for the pleasant things that come into our days—we are to be thankful, too, for the things that appear to us to be adversities. "In everything give thanks." That means, in the sad days as well as in the glad days, when clouds are in the sky, as well as when the sunshine is pouring everywhere. It is specially said here that this is the will of God for us. This is the way God wants us to live. A rabbinical teaching says that the highest angel in heaven is the angel of praise. The Christliest life is one that is always keyed to the note of praise and thanksgiving.—Rev. J. R. Miller.

Our Thanksgiving Festival

Thanksgiving Day is not an American institution. It is older than our Republic. It was before Columbus. It antedates by many centuries the beautiful religious festivals of Easter and Christmas. It was proclaimed over 3,000 years before a President of the United States called the people to thank God for "blessings in basket and store." Its origin dates back to the days when that great host of Israelite slaves just escaped out of Egypt were having their first experiences of liberty, in the wilderness of Sinai. Then and there Jehovah himself made the original proclamation, whose echoes have sounded through the centuries, down to our day:

"Thou shalt keep . . . the feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labors, which thou hast sown in thy field; and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labors out of the field" (Ex. 23: 16).

Among pious Jews this Feast of Harvest has always been religiously kept, and the spirit of it has been recognized in all ages of the Christian Church. Our American Thanksgiving festivals are only the legitimate descendants of the Jewish Feast of Ingathering, of Moses' day.

The obligations for public thanksgiving to God are ever recurrent and perpetual. The reasons for such public recognition of the goodness of God are so many and so manifest, that no thoughtful mind can be at a loss to discern them. "Goodness and mercy" are the ever present facts of life in the individual, the family, the community and the nation.

"Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"—Herald and Presbyter.

A Psalm of Thanksgiving

(Adopted)

We enter Thy gates with thanksgiving,
And we enter Thy courts with praise,
For Thou art the Lord of the earth
And Thy kingdom is Heaven.
Thou hast created the stars,
And the firmament showeth Thy wisdom,
For Thou art the Father of all
And the Giver of all that is good.
We thank Thee for life and for love,
And the gift of Thy Spirit Divine,
Whereby we may know the truth
And become the heirs of salvation.
We thank Thee for peace, and for rest,
And the blessing of healthful endeavor,
For the knowledge to do is from Thee—
And the strength of Thy people.
We know that our deeds have been wrong,
And acknowledge our manifold errors.
Wash us, that we may be clean,
And renew a right spirit within us,
For only the pure can live
And abide in Thy presence.
We ask in the name of Thy Son,
Who brought us the gift of Thy Spirit
And called us, His followers, "Friends"
And the "Children of Promise."
And to Thee be the honor, and praise,
And the glory, forever and ever.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING

Pasadena—A series of Christian Workers' Conferences is being held at various points in California, under the auspices of Friends' Evangelistic and Church Extension Board. The first was held at Pasadena, November 7-9, and was eminently interesting and profitable from start to finish. The following are some of the topics considered: "Importance of the Home Base," by Edwin McGrew; "Relation of Home to Foreign Mission Work," by Benjamin S. Coppock; "Seventeenth Century Quakerism Adapted to Present Day Church Work," by Wilfrid Rowntree and Dr. Sylvester Newlin; "How to Secure Loyalty to the Church on the Part of Young People," by Harley M. Moore and Florabel Rosenberger; "Discipline as a Factor in Sunday-school Work," by Dr. W. V. Coffin; "Popularizing the Sunday-school," by Prof. Milo Hunt; "Problem of Winning Men to the Church," (a) "As Viewed from Within the Church," by Andrew F. Mitchell, (b) "As Viewed by Men from the Outside," by John T. Hadley; "Christian's Social Relations as a Measure of His Spirituality," by Dr. Cyrus R. Dixon; "Dynamics of Christian Fellowship," by Prof. Mabel Douglas. These conferences are to be repeated at Whittier, November 21-23, and at Los Angeles, December 12-14.

Berkeley—On Tuesday evening, November 14, the Men's League of the Friends' Church at Berkeley spent a very enjoyable evening in the church parlors, where a very plain but substantial lunch was served, after which the evening was spent in an informal discussion of the boy problem in its various phases, including sex instruction in the schools and home. "The Traffic" came in for a part of the discussion, and nearly every one present took some part in it. The reading circle of the league reported that they were studying with a great deal of interest, "Christianizing the Social Order," by Walter Rauschenbusch, and that they would prepare a review of the book for the league at some future session, perhaps at the January meeting. On Friday evening of this week will occur the annual church dinner, at which time a full attendance of the congregation is expected, and Rev. Levi Gregory, of the Oakland church, will speak on the work of "The Bible School." Gurney Binford and wife,

Friends' missionaries from Japan, will speak at Friends' Church next Sabbath, both morning and evening. These two faithful workers have been on the field a number of years, and are fully abreast of the times in Japan, and will be able to give a very interesting, as well as instructive account of the work and conditions now existing in the Flowery Kingdom.—"The Campanile."

The Binfords—Gurney and Elizabeth Binford sailed from Berkeley, California, for Japan, Wednesday, November 19th, on the steamship "Chiyo Maru" of the Oriental Company. On the preceding Sabbath they conducted the services at Berkeley Meeting, Gurney Binford preaching in the morning, and his wife giving an account of their work in the evening. Both services were attended by appreciative audiences.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

New Castle—Dalton H. Lewis, pastor of the Friends' Church, although but six weeks in the city, has the work well in hand, and every department of the work is moving off without a hitch. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are good mixers, as they say in politics, and they have formed many acquaintances in the short time they have been here.—Morning Star.

East Main Street, Richmond—Joint church and Sunday-school meetings will be held at the East Main Street Friends' Church throughout the winter, according to a vote of the congregation and the Sunday-school yesterday morning. Those in favor of the plan greatly outnumbered the opponents. By that plan the joint services will begin at ten o'clock and close at twelve o'clock without a break. The plan had been given a six weeks' trial. Hours for the meetings may be changed, if the church and Sunday-school attendants can agree on the change that is to be made, but the present hours will be observed until a change is requested.—The Palladium.

Dayton, Ohio—The Friends' meeting here is beginning the year's work with great interest, under the new pastorate of Henry McKinley. About $300.00 has been raised and expended in rebuilding the furnaces and lighting the building with electric lights, and in making other repairs. Eleven new members were received at the last Monthly Meeting.

Portland—November 16th was a great day for the Bible school as well as the church at large. Tennyson Lewis, the pastor, had previously announced two weeks of self-denial with a free-will offering to be given on that day. He made a call for at least $75.00. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested, and classes began to contribute and then add to their contributions. When all was counted, the treasurer reported a total of $105.57. There was much rejoicing over the success of the day's work. In the evening service twenty or more persons indicated a desire to have a closer walk with God and to get in closer touch with Him. We are expecting to have an "Every Member's Day" on December 7th. We expect to have good reports from Portland in the near future.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING

Monkton Ridge, Vermont—Charles N. Franklin and family have moved from Monkton Ridge, Vermont, to South Glens Falls, New York, and the manse at the former place is vacant. The meeting is continued on Sabbath morning, however, with interest.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

High Point—A series of meetings has been held from October 19th to November 5th, inclusive. During two weeks of that period almost all the other churches in the city held similar meetings in the evening. Two union services were held in the afternoon, these for the most part being for the help and instruction of Christians. The attendance at the evening meetings up to the last was very good, and this faithfulness was no doubt one factor in the definite good accomplished. George N. Hartley, of Indiana, was with us for eight sessions, and preached inspiring and original sermons, calculated to awaken one's earnest thought. The pastor, Lewis McFarland, rendered much earnest consecrated service and wisely avoided any sensational methods. His preaching also awakened many to their great need. While results cannot be reckoned in figures, still the fact that eighteen professed conversion and two renewed their allegiance, gives some idea of the work. Seventeen have applied for membership. Two of these are by certificate and one by letter from another denomination. The majority of these are young people, and eleven have joined the Christian Endeavor Society. This Society was organized last spring, after a series of meetings, and now numbers between fifty and sixty. It is a great help to the young people and gives an encouraging outlook for the church.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Urbana—The revival services conducted by Ida M. Allen, evangelist, and Mary E. Martin, pastor, in Friends' Church at Urbana, Ohio, closed November 9. The Spirit was working among the people for some time before the revival meetings began, and eighteen were saved and reclaimed at the cottage prayer meetings and the regular services. The presence of the Spirit was felt in all the meetings, and was manifested in a remarkable manner in a few instances. One man, whose sight had failed rapidly for over a year and was entirely blind for three days, received his sight, and came to the church one evening praising and glorifying God. Three men over sixty years of age were brought into the Kingdom. Mrs. Milam, from Virginia, who is visiting her son, attended some of the meetings. She is the mother of a large family and had lost her husband and all her children except two, but she felt rich in God's love and shouted his praises, shaking hands with every one in the audience, while a sweet spirit hovered over the meeting, comforting the children of the Lord and deepening conviction on those not saved. The young people's class of twenty-two members, aged from sixteen to twenty-five years, were all saved with one exception, and we feel that we have much to praise God for in the salvation of these young souls who have enlisted in the cause of Christ. These with a number of others who have requested membership will prove valuable acquisitions to our meeting. Over forty souls were blessed in the meetings, and it was a time of refreshing to the believers. Eternity alone can tell the results of the meetings as the influence of these lives is used for Christ, and we give God all praise and honor for the great work accomplished among us.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Dana—Annie M. Stafford, wife of Frank Stafford, pastor at Dana, Indiana, has had a serious operation performed in Eastman's hospital, in Indianapolis, but the friends of the family will be glad to learn that she is rapidly recovering.

Bloomington—Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held November 14-16, with good attendance and interest. Visiting ministers were I. Gurney Lee, of Sheridan, Indiana, and C. F. Stroup, of Columbus, Ohio. Both brought convincing messages. In the Missionary Conference Saturday morning, I Gurney Lee gave the address, and in the Bible School Conference Sabbath morning, J. Ord Fortner, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Bible School work, gave an instructive address. The Academic Association met in the Academy building Saturday night. J. Ord Fortner and others gave talks.

Indianapolis—The first of a series of Monthly Meeting suppers was given in the dining room of the First Friends' Church at Indianapolis, Thursday evening, November 20th, and one hundred and fifteen persons enjoyed the fellowship and cheer which surrounds such a church festal board. Following the supper and preceding the business meeting, Prof. Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, gave a most excellent address. These monthly suppers, which will continue through the winter months, the expense of which will be borne by the Monthly Meeting, will, it is hoped, be the means of a better and fuller acquaintance among the members of the church family.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

The Chilsons—Arthur and Edna Chilson recently spent about three weeks in the limits of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, attending Fairfield, Center and Miami Quarterly Meetings, and holding meetings at about fifteen points. Their services were very much appreciated as they presented in an effective manner, the achievements and needs of our mission work in British East Africa. They left Wilmington for Baltimore Yearly Meeting, November 14th.

Center Quarter—Center Quarterly Meeting held at Wilmington was very largely attended. Effective gospel messages were delivered by Arthur and Edna Chilson. The time being too limited for a thorough discussion of the proposed evangelistic campaign, the Quarterly Meeting adjourned to meet at 10:00 a. m. Saturday, November 15. On account of a severe storm, the adjourned meeting which had promised to be very large, was only attended by about one hundred Friends, but the two sessions, forenoon and afternoon, were very interesting. At the suggestion of this meeting the special committee appointed by the Yearly Meeting, co-operating with the evangelistic committee and the committee on young people's activities, is asking each meeting in the Yearly Meeting to send at least five delegates to a conference to be held at Wilmington on Friday, November 28th.

United Missions—The conference for this district on the United Missionary Campaign will be held at Wilmington, December 9-11.

Wilmington—Bertha E. Day, an Evangelist from Rockford, Ohio, and Mildred B. Allen, of Summitville, Indiana, recently closed a three weeks' meeting at the Center Church. In spite of the rainy weather, the attendance was good at every service. Quite a number professed conversion, several of them being heads of families.

Grape-Nuts a Perfectly Balanced Food

No chemist's analysis of Grape-Nuts can begin to show the real value of the food—the practical value as shown by personal experience.

It is a food that is perfectly balanced, supplies the needed elements for both brain and body in all stages of life from the infant, through the strenuous times of active middle life, and is a comfort and support in old age.

"For two years I have used Grape-Nuts with milk and a little cream, for breakfast. I am comfortably hungry for my dinner at noon.

"I use little meat, plenty of vegetables and fruit, in season, for the noon meal, and if tired at tea time, take Grape-Nuts alone and feel perfectly nourished.

"Nerve and brain power and memory are much improved since using Grape-Nuts. I am over sixty and weigh 155 lbs. My son and husband seeing how I had improved, are now using Grape-Nuts.

"My son, who is a traveling man, eats nothing for breakfast but Grape-Nuts and a glass of milk. An aunt, over 70, seems fully nourished on Grape-Nuts and cream." "There's a Reason."

For grass that grows beneath my feet,
For leafy trees with fruit and shade,
For things of beauty He has made,
I thank my heavenly Father.

For Jesus Christ, our dearest Friend,
For life in Him which knows no end,
Oh! thank our heavenly Father.

POORER THAN THEMSELVES

We relate the following true incident which happened several years ago: A gentleman sat in a plain office puzzling his head over a perplexing question. He was the agent of a benevolent society organized to help the poor of a great city. The trouble was this: Thanksgiving was at hand and he had not enough money to do all that he wished to do on the coming day. He knew, too, many families who lived at starving-point, to whom Thanksgiving gave little apparent reason for thanks.

He knew young men who did not hesitate to spend three dollars on a single rose. He knew young ladies who thought nothing of wasting more or less dollars a week on candy. Twenty-five cents would buy a sumptuous dinner for a starving child.

Many hundreds of the extremely poor looked to this man for one good dinner at Thanksgiving time. For one day in the year they hoped to have enough to eat. How was he to give it?

Suddenly, three or four dirty faces peered through the window; a timid knock followed. Five street boys and two somewhat tattered little girls trooped in. The agent recognized them as members of the city mission school. He said, pleasantly:

"Well, children, what can I do for you today?"

"Nothin'," answered the children, vaguely.

"You, Jimmy, you tell," said one of the girls, giving the tallest boy a shove. Jimmy fumbled in his ragged pocket, and slowly produced a large handful of pennies and small change.

"We fellers are a club," said Jimmy, with a grand air. "There's twenty of us, mister."

"We gals are in it, too," interrupted the girl who gave the shove.

"We, all of us, and the gals, too," responded Jimmy. "We come from Cummin's alley, and we're a club to help Thanksgivin'. Here's—here's nine dollars and ninety cents."

The agent stared at the large sum, collected at what cost of self-sacrifice only the givers could say.

"It's for them that can't git no dinner," explained the little spokesman.

"Is it?" exclaimed the good man. He hardly knew what to say, as he glanced at the poor clothes and shrunken cheeks of the "club."

"Yes," said Jimmy, stoutly. "There's plenty poorer than us, mister; we're a club to help 'em. We didn't care if we didn't have a dinner for two or three days so'st that we might give real poor folks one."

"How many dinners will nine dollars and ninety cents get?" asked a little girl, rather hungrily.

"What kind of a dinner?" inquired the agent, with a perceptible weakening in his voice.

"Oh—turkey and stuffin', and—and a puddin'!" cried the children eagerly.

"That will cost perhaps twenty-five cents apiece," said the agent, "and your money will give a fine Thanksgiving dinner to as many as thirty-five hungry people. You have done nobly, children."

The dinners were bought, "the club" distributed them. The children's first plan was to put a cabbage in with each dinner, the agent says. But there were not cabbages enough to go around. So they cut each cabbage into quarters and put one piece into each bag.

That club of twenty poverty-stricken children worked until nine o'clock at night on the day before Thanksgiving, distributing thirty-five dinners to people "poorer than themselves." — Zion's Watchman.

A NEW BOOK

Headley Brothers (of London) announce for immediate publication "The Quaker Bonnet," by K. K. K., the author of "The Living Remnant." The story deals with the experiences of a little girl who leaves her country home to stay in London with her maiden aunt, an "old-fashioned Quakeress." Their adventures together are told with much charm. The price of the book is 3/6 net.

UNITED MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN

We regret to announce that the conference at Greencastle, Indiana has been called off. Possibly some of Friends' Meetings that intended to send delegates there can reach Terre Haute November 30th and December 1st. Other conferences in Indiana that some of Western Yearly Meeting can reach are Bedford, December 9-10, and Bloomington, December 11-12. Other Indiana meetings will be reached by the series of conferences in January and February. These will be announced later. In Ohio conferences will be held at Urbana, December 2-3, and at Wilmington December 9-10. Many others will be held in Ohio, but I do not know which ones will be accessible to Friends.

In Iowa conferences will be held at Atlantic November 30 and December 1; at Marshalltown, December 4-5; Grinnell, December 7-8, and at Oskaloosa, December 9-10. These should reach a wide circle of Friends. Let me urge every meeting within reach of these to send a few delegates (men preferred), who will attend every session, and be able to carry the vision and methods to their home meetings. All pastors should be present. Keep in mind that the scope of these conferences is to cover the whole field of missionary responsibility, both at home and abroad. The methods given have brought great spiritual blessing to the churches that carried them through in the religious spirit that is always insisted upon.

PRESIDENT WILSON AND MEXICO

While the Peace Committee report was under discussion in Baltimore Yearly Meeting, it was proposed that a telegram be sent to the President expressing appreciation of his efforts in behalf of a peaceful settlement of the Mexican question. This was very heartily approved, and the following message was sent:

To the President—Baltimore Yearly Meeting of Orthodox Friends desires to express its sympathy with you in the present apparent crisis in Mexican affairs, and its appreciation of your efforts to secure a peaceful solution of the problem.

Allen C. Thomas, Clerk.

To this the following reply was received, after the adjournment of the Yearly Meeting.

November 18, 1913.

My Dear Sir—The President deeply appreciates the kind action of the Baltimore Yearly Meeting of Orthodox Friends, as indicated by your telegram

Sincerely yours,

J. P. TUMULTY,

“PRAISE YE THE LORD”

SING unto the Lord with thanksgiving;
Sing praises upon the harp unto our God,
Who covereth the heaven with clouds,
Who prepareth rain for the earth,
Who maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.
He giveth to the beast his food
And to the young ravens which cry. . . .
He maketh peace in thy borders;
He filleth thee with the finest of the wheat. . . .
O, give thanks unto the Lord;
Sing unto Him, sing praises unto Him,
For the precious things of heaven, for the dew,
And for the deep that coucheth beneath,
And for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun,
And for the precious things put forth by the moon,
And for the chief things of the ancient mountains,
And for the precious things of the everlasting hills,
And for the precious things of the earth and its fullness—
Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord;
Praise ye the Lord!”

Some Important Work for December

With the near approach of the New Year, thousands of Friends families in common with all others, will soon be selecting their list of periodicals for the household for another year. It is the time of all times when the claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND as the denominational paper should be earnestly presented and carefully considered.

Many local and Monthly Meetings have been looking forward to an opportune time to make an active canvass of the membership for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. That time is at hand, and there is not a Friends family in America that ought not to be impressed during this month of December with the obligation of patronizing the paper.

WHY SUBSCRIBE?

1. Because every Friends family should have the paper, in order to keep informed about the work of the whole church as a means of helping the work of the local meeting. We assert with no hesitation that the Friend who is not reading his denominational periodical is losing far more than he can afford to lose as an active church member. It is like trying to farm without the necessary equipment, or trying to keep house with some of the furniture omitted.

No practical business man would think for a moment of doing without a competent trade journal of the kind that deals with his special problems. No professional man would be considered up-to-date, who did not keep himself informed about the latest developments in his profession.

One great trouble with many Friends is that they are trying to serve the Church with out-of-date equipment and preparation. It will not work and in the nature of things cannot be made to work. More and more THE AMERICAN FRIEND will set forth the best in our denominational life, and at the same time increasingly will hold up the best ideals in the Christian brotherhood of denominations.

2. THE AMERICAN FRIEND needs the patronage of Friends generally. In no other way can it succeed permanently. We are convinced that in the majority of instances Friends must first be induced to take the paper as an obligation they owe to an important department of the Church. In no other way can they be convinced that they should take it for the profit and help they will get out of it.

Some Friends persist in taking other denominational papers and other religious papers in preference to their own. Why do they not contribute to the foreign mission work of some other denomination because it is a larger work, or to the evangelistic work of some other body because it will reach more people? Friends must come to recognize their Church periodical as an important department of their work, to be supported and maintained with the same loyalty as is manifested toward any other department. It is only by this means that they will come to be interested, just as they become interested in other departments by associating themselves with them and becoming contributors thereto.

Why not be satisfied with the pastoral service of a good Methodist minister, or the social service of a Presbyterian Committee? Why not be satisfied without any ministerial service at all? Yet many are guided by these very policies when it comes to the department of Church literature and periodicals, and are satisfied either to do without a periodical or to give their patronage elsewhere, while their own church organ suffers.

A WORD TO AGENTS

The above are arguments which can be used with telling effect in the case of many families. In addition, the positive merits of THE AMERICAN FRIEND can be urged in support of the effort to secure new subscriptions. There is hardly a day passes that does not bring one or more unsolicited testimonial of high appreciation of the paper and of the blessing it is to many households.

No one can be so deeply conscious of its shortcomings as the management itself, shortcomings which are being remedied as rapidly as circumstances can make possible; yet we are deeply grateful if any considerable number of our readers feel that the paper is a positive blessing to the church.

We appeal to all pastors, ministers and others interested to make December count tremendously for the paper, by pressing its claims upon the people, and seeing that the community is thoroughly canvassed.

THE COMING YEAR

It is not yet certain that we can start the New Year with a larger number of pages, although the matter is being given serious attention. The management desires to say, however, that whether this is possible or not, no effort will be spared to make THE AMERICAN FRIEND in 1914 a better paper and more serviceable to the church as a whole. Much of the present year has of necessity been devoted to getting acquainted with the business side of the publication, and it is only recently that proper attention could be devoted in any large way to plans that will be adequate to the needs of the denomination.

AN INVITATION TO SUBSCRIBE

To all who read this article, we give an earnest invitation to subscribe for 1914, and to do everything possible to get others to subscribe. THE AMERICAN FRIEND from now until January 1, 1915, for $1.50; to ministers $1.00. Send for sample copies.

Helping Foreign Mission Boards

The Commission on Foreign Missions of the Federal Council of Churches in America, of which Robert E. Speer is the chairman, met recently and adopted a program to be carried out in co-operation with the Annual Conference of Mission Boards and its Committee on Reference and Counsel. The Commission placed itself at the disposal of the Mission Boards to forward its movements among the churches and to disseminate special information concerning the work of federation, co-operation and unity which is developing on the foreign field.

The Federation of Religious Forces

We are living in an age of transition, no less marked in the ecclesiastical than in the material world. Within a decade, denominational walls have tottered, and here and there are apparently crumbling with startling rapidity. It is a time when federation is being written large upon the page of every record that marks the climb of humanity Godward. Brotherhood has become the keyword of a common fellowship that upon the face of things emphasizes the solidarity of Christian believers.

This fraternity of feeling and of spirit is the outgrowth of the necessities of the age. So long as individualism ruled the religious world, so long did factionalism supplant co-operation and federation. But a new epoch began with the preaching of the gospel of universal brotherhood and redemption for all the world. Henceforth religion ceased to be sectional, and every man, whether white or black, Chinese or Indian, was recognized as coming within the scope of the redemption plan.

In the face of such a task as this vision revealed, it is little wonder that ecclesiasticism began to lose its hold, as men and women in the Churches began to be concerned more about the outside world than they did about differences of procedure among themselves. It is because of this spirit that we are now hearing about a new Congregationalism, the product of the recent National Council at Kansas City, which is trying to adjust itself to the greater Christian tasks in common with their brethren of other Communions.

It is in this spirit that three or four different sorts of Presbyterianism are feeling their way toward a common goal. With like harmony, we find that the union of the two great branches of Methodism is a problem that will not down. Caught with the same spirit we find conservative Protestant Episcopalianism concerned about the unity of faith and order, and having a vision, however prematurely it may be, of a universal church union, although its Board of Bishops is not yet ready to set an example for unity by becoming affiliated with the Federal Council of Churches in America.

This Federal Council is itself typical of the new age, combining as it does for the higher good, those Christian activities that are characteristic of all denominational endeavor and which represent as they should do the united action of all in the attempts to save the world. In various ways a multitude of federative efforts is simply the attempt of all Christendom, and especially all Protestant Christendom, to voice its answer to a mighty call of God "to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

It is a matter of congratulation that Friends are having a substantial part in this new era of Christian life and service. It may not be that the time will ever come when the various branches of Quakerism can be welded into one sympathetic, working organism, yet one cannot but wish that that considerable part of Hicksite Friends that is plainly evangelical and surely orthodox could combine their forces with the larger body in a mighty service for the uplift and salvation of all who may be brought within the sphere of their influence.

Our work as Friends will be judged not by the energies which we consume upon ourselves, but by the place we occupy in the great work of carrying the gospel to others, by what we do to reveal Jesus Christ to a needy world. That is the test of efficiency for any group of disciples in this age. It is little wonder that the bonds of Christian brotherhood are being strengthened as the Church universal views its task in the cleaner light of present-day necessities.

Will We Do It?

With the proper effort in every Friends meeting in America, One Thousand new subscribers can be added to THE AMERICAN FRIEND list during December. That is an average of less than one and one-half to a congregation. If every present subscriber will undertake to get a new one, the task will be an easy one. May we not have a universal canvass for One Thousand new names in thirty days? It can be done. Will we do it?

God expects every man to be ready at the call of duty. But how many there are who must get ready after the call is heard, and then the opportunity is gone forever! We need more "minute men" in Christian service.

Not how little, but how much; not an ordinary, but the best service that one can render for God and humanity, is the ideal toward which all men should strive with faith and with increasing persistence.

Losing and Finding Our Lives*

BY ROBERT L. KELLY

President of Earlham College.

"He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."—Matthew 10: 39.

It is unnecessary perhaps to warn the ministers and workers of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings against the perils of the lower life, although we are all subject to divers temptations, or to preach the gospel of self-denial and self-effacement, although we have learned that when we are weak then are we strong. I call attention to another way in which we are in peril of losing our lives. I speak of a danger that lurks in an unexpected quarter, a pitfall into which every man and woman and every institution is liable to tumble.

Aspiration will lift us to higher levels of living and consecration will deepen our spiritual experience. These things are subjective—they are within us—and they are individual. I speak of a peril that comes to the high-minded man, the devoted, the efficient man, the man who with all his might and main is striving for the Christian ideal of perfection, and who feels that with God's help he is making progress in reaching his goal.

We contemplate life; and we may well do so, for we are all subject to the sweep of tremendous biologic as well as spiritual laws. Jesus was the first great biologist. He made spiritual application of the law of the survival of the fittest long before it was given that name, and He taught the necessity of the proper adjustment of men to their environment as well. I speak of a third biologic law not so fully recognized sometimes, but of equal dignity and influence. I may state it as the peril of over-adjustment or of too specific adjustment.

The species or the race forms habits, it develops functions, it creates organs for the accomplishment of certain tasks. It becomes highly efficient in the doing of some one thing. It may become more efficient than any other species or race. The time comes in the processes of life when those tasks are no longer needed or are not the paramount tasks required, and the habit and the function and the organ persist and become impediments which entangle the individual in his race of life, and dethrone him from his place of influence and power. This thing happens over and over again, to plants, to animals, to men, to organizations, to institutions. The laws of nature like other laws of God are relentless.

Livingstone reported a race of pygmies in Africa which vanished because it could not cope with the problems of encroaching civilization. There was a breed of men on our frontiers who could fight Indians, hunt buffaloes and round up cattle, but who could not drive bargains with the cattle men of Kansas City and Chicago, who could not conduct farms, and who much less could live in cities. In many a community of New England there is a recluse who simply cannot live with other people; he must exercise his inalienable right of independence.

Let us take an illustration from the church. In the fourth century humanity were weaklings. They were confused by the numerous forces that impinged upon them. There were too many ideas and notions and doctrines. They asked for some settled conclusions. They sought authority in Scriptural interpretation and in the rules of living. The church met their need. It formulated dogmas and constructed an unassailable system. It furnished the inflexibility the people demanded. It went further and offered its services as a mediator between man and God—finally as the sole mediator. At first all this was a means of blessing to many men, but ere long it became an unyielding obstacle to human progress and had to be blasted out of the pathway to civilization by the dynamite of revolution.

I attended the centennial celebration of a Friends Monthly Meeting a few weeks ago, and a man there eighty years old, the father of twelve children, and an almost life-long member of another denomination, repeated this formula to me from memory:

The.....day, 1850. Monthly Meeting of Friends, held

This is to certify that, having departed from plainness of dress and address, and having attended the marriage of one of our members not conducted according to our order, and having studied the art of music, we having labored with him without the desired effect, we dismiss him from being a member with us.

[Signed].....

Clerks.

I omit the names, but he supplied them. His own name figured at the beginning of the document and the entire minute, with the names of the clerks, had been burned into his consciousness for more than half a century. There was an organization, saving its life by finding it, and it is one of the miracles of modern church history that it did not lose its life.

It was the marvelous work of Protestantism to shift man's intellectual center of gravity from the church to his own heart and conscience. Protestantism placed high value upon the worth of a man. It set the individual free and allowed the soul to commune, not with a priest through the curtain of a confessional, but directly with God. We believe that following George Fox's immortal discovery, individuality found its highest expression, its logical consummation in the Quaker interpretation. We became human emancipators without regard to race, color or sex. It has been our supreme function as a church to democratise religion.

* Extract from a sermon delivered before the joint Ministerial Associations of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings, at Indianapolis, November 18.

Now the miracle of the twentieth century is the manner in which this idea is overcoming every barrier. Kingdoms are being swept aside, and hierarchies are tumbling down in the sweep of this mighty force. Men's minds are being gripped by this life-giving truth in America, England, Germany, Russia, Turkey, Persia, India, Japan, China. This is man's greatest day, for it is Christ's greatest day.

But it is not a time for self-gratulation. There is danger lurking in this onward movement of individualism. As Eucken says, "The supreme solicitude for the individual soul may readily cause indifference toward intellectual pursuits, split religion into sects and produce much cantankerous obstinacy on the part of individuals." This is the supreme peril of Quakerism.

We know how to guard against bad morals, we recognize how suicidal is low spirituality, but we are in peril from lack of intellectual grasp, from lack of open-mindedness, of ability to change our habits of thought, assume new functions and develop new organs if need be, in a changing civilization.

It was a great step forward to learn that man is incomplete and imperfect unless he has direct access to God; we must now learn that we are equally incomplete and imperfect if we are not in close and helpful relation with men. We must be able to grasp the thought that "The Divine revelations on which life depends are not vouchsafed to individuals only, but to humanity as a whole, in the sense that they require for their expression social organization and social forces." The call is not to swing away from individualism, but upon this secure foundation to build a safe and secure social structure. We must recognize that there are two poles in modern life and we must learn how to keep them in fruitful relation.

We hear much of the "city mind," of "community life," of "social conscience." What are these things? We speak of brotherhood, of neighborliness, of fellowship. Are these ideals or realities? Can it be that the people who have been for centuries urging the necessity of the international mind, will themselves be unable to work together in a group? We should highly resolve that our beloved church shall not succumb to the danger from long established habit and over-developed function. This is our supreme problem.

I make two suggestions looking toward a solution. The first suggestion is taken from the message of the beloved disciple. We must lay our foundations deeper; we must love one another. First of all, we should know one another. We should get one another's point of view, we should make due allowance for each other's shortcomings, we should develop charity. We should supplant ignorance and suspicion of one another with more cheerfulness and more trust in one another. Charles Lamb was once asked, "How can I hate a man I know?" The boy's definition of a friend is a good one: "A friend is a person who knows you and is still your friend." A friend like that is worth having. Our relations as fellow workers in a common cause should be based on justice for one another, on good will toward one another, on fraternal co-operation. We ought to be bound together, not by bands of steel, but by cords of love, into a true Christian brotherhood. This seems to be elemental.

We may take a second suggestion from the life of Paul. Above all things he had a program. Friends should adopt some definite campaign of social character. There should be some great motive animating us. Bishop Brooks said that the best way to save a young man was to set him to work to save another young man. Whitfield came to work among the Indians to save his soul. It was an early and long used motive of Puritanism. With that motive Whitfield neither saved his soul nor the Indians. But he and Methodism were large enough to find and accept the right motive; they got the passion for men.

The twentieth century has the greatest task of human history. It is to make a universal brotherhood of an evangelized world. Protestantism must do this work, for Protestantism has formed an alliance with modern civilization. We are already somewhat socialized. Friends, because of their heritage, ideals, training, knowledge of how to hear the voice of God and feel His heart throbs, ought to be leaders in this campaign. We may not be put into jail for it, but we need the zeal of those who were put into jail. We cannot even join this propaganda if we are independent units, if we are full of suspicion, if we are torn by factions. But God can use us as leaders in the movement if we are willing to lose our lives. Incidentally, let it be said, we shall then find our lives.

The Need of Aggressive Evangelism

BY HARRY R. KEATES

The right of any denomination to consider itself a part of the Church of Christ cannot be determined by its peculiar views and methods, but by its fulfillment of the mission for which the Church was called out.

We may seek to form the Church after our own views and patterns, some of which may be very good, but unless it is performing the mission which the Lord intended for it, it is nothing more than a denomination with its peculiarities, and must be included in that woe-ful word "unprofitable," and the denunciation of Jesus Christ applies to such (see Matthew 25).

The supreme business of the Church is found in His great command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto Me."

We have a number of proposed activities put before us at present, such as, "Social Service," "Quaker Study Classes," "Pilgrimages," "Fellowships" and "Conventions," etc. But good as some of those may be, men are not saved by any or all of them minus the absolute essential of being "born again."

The Evangelical Church is evangelistic in the true sense of the word, and must be possessed of that spirit which fires it with a passion for soul saving. Our poor intermittent methods of a two or three weeks' revival annually, may do good to a few, but it is like the pool of Bethesda rather than rivers of living water (John 7: 37-39). The one is stagnant and needs to be troubled (or stirred up), the other is fresh and overflowing and lasting results follow (see Ezekiel 47: 1-12).

In view of the growing millions already here, and others coming to our shores, we are verily guilty of indifference and neglect. We need and must have a revival which shall bring a mighty baptism of the Holy Spirit with pentecostal flame upon the whole Church, and equip her for the fulfillment of her mission. The measure in which this is lacking now, and the occupying of our attention with other things rather than the conversion of lost souls of every class who are all around us is responsible for the sad conditions to be found in so many places.

Thank God, there are not lacking evidences of a gracious visitation among us, but the urgent need of the hour is humiliation and a united cry to God, until He shall quicken and empower us to fulfill His purpose, and until in every Yearly Meeting there shall be an awakening to a sense of our responsibility and privilege. This we must earnestly do or the awful words will apply to us, "I will remove thy candlestick out of his place except thou repent."

Aggressive evangelism is the normal every day work of the Church. Let us get right with God and take up the work He has appointed us to do while we are spared, for the night cometh when no man can work.

Des Moines, Iowa.

A Working Program for the Church

Recently THE AMERICAN FRIEND has devoted considerable space to the great convention of Methodist men held in the city of Indianapolis, in the belief that it will be an inspiration to our Friends throughout America. The account is hardly complete without presenting the "Working Program" adopted at Indianapolis, which ought to appeal to our own membership in large degree. It should go down to our meetings with all the authority the Church can give it. The program here outlined is exactly the program of the United Mission Campaign:

A WORKING PROGRAM

The Convention of Methodist Men assembled at Indianapolis, Indiana, commits itself and calls the entire Church:

First: To a program of personal evangelism at home and abroad which shall enable the Church to reach effectively the last man with the message of redemption; and that we set as a goal an annual minimum gain of ten per cent. in the full membership of every local church.

Second: To the principle of social redemption in all lands and the application of the spirit and teachings of Christ to the total relations of men.

Third: To the bringing of our youth everywhere into real Christian life, and to their training for effective Christian service by all those agencies which the Church has created for this high purpose.

Fourth: To the practice of the principles of stewardship by every member of our Church as defined by our Discipline. This recognizes God as giver and owner of all things; man as a steward, holding as a sacred trust all he has; the systematic application of a portion of our income to the advancement of God's Kingdom, and the dedication of one-tenth of our income as a minimum.

Fifth: To the universal introduction of the every-member canvass and the weekly offering by every man, woman and child of our Church, with these two principles always in view:

(1) The standard apportionments met in full as a minimum achievement.

(2) At least as much for others as for ourselves, as our near goal.

Sixth: To the hearty and full support of those Boards which are created by the Church as the proper instruments for the application of the benevolence of the Church to the world's need. And we emphasize the paramount claims of those regular causes established and approved by the authority of the Church.

Seventh: To the loyal and loving support of all those forms of Christian activity, in all lands, as expressed in our educational philanthropic and evangelistic institutions, looking everywhere toward the care of the sick, the aged, the orphan, the unfortunate, and toward the training of our youth in the spirit of Christ.

Eighth: To an inspirational and educational campaign, having in view our full relation to the civic, industrial, social, educational, philanthropic and missionary problems of our age—and to the enlistment of the unused energies of the men of the Church under the leadership of the Son of Man.

Ninth: To an emphatic reaffirmation of the action of the General Conference on the subjects of higher Christian education and the imperative need of vastly larger funds for our schools, colleges and universities; the necessity of more liberal support for our ill-paid ministry, especially in view of the increased cost of living; the supreme claim of the retired veterans for an adequate support in their old age; and we commit ourselves with heartiness and devotion to the well-known attitude of the Church on the subjects of Temperance, Social Purity and Sabbath Observance.

Tenth: To the support and circulation and the faithful reading by ourselves and in our homes of that Christian literature in book and periodical, created by our Church for the training, instruction and inspiration of our people.

Eleventh: To a program which shall bring to districts and local churches the principles, ideals and methods which have found expression in this Convention. And we ask all our Boards to set aside their secretaries and other officers, as far as possible and necessary for the service of the districts and area groups, in a unified campaign for all these approved causes.

Twelfth: To the utmost co-operation of our Church with all other "Churches which exalt our Christ," in a common and united effort in all lands to bring in Christ's Kingdom.

SUPPLEMENTARY

The message closes with the following supplementary recommendations:

That the arrangements for Conference anniversaries and Conference visitation on account of all the causes to be so adjusted, as to make it possible for the annual Conference to set aside a sufficient time for the full presentation of these great interests of the Church, and for a study of practical methods, under the institute plan, for the solution of these problems.

This plan or some modification of it would seem to be essential if the ministry and laity of the Church are to be fully informed concerning these most important matters.

The conviction has deepened in these days that the Church everywhere needs the vision that has come to the Convention. It would be impossible through any printed word to bring at once the survey of conditions and the inspiration which has come from the living voice. Those who have spoken to us here must speak to the Church. We are convinced that a like uplift of faith and love would follow the presentation of these facts elsewhere as in this great Convention.

We would especially recommend that before leaving this Convention the delegates should plan for one or more central meetings in each Episcopal area, and that in consultation with the central office the dates of these meetings be so arranged as to make possible a thorough visitation of the Church by the speakers who may be set aside for the purpose.

SUGGESTIONS TO FRIENDS

Our Quarterly and Yearly Meetings would do well to put these recommendations into use. In this convention each department of the Church was given about fifteen minutes for report, and a half hour for presentation by a leader in that department. The larger part of the time was given to men who being in close touch with the world's work were able to give the needed vision, and to constructive work to qualify the Church to meet the great opportunity. In our Yearly and Quarterly Meetings nearly all the time is given to a round of reports, so like each other from year to year that one with a good memory could almost anticipate them before they are given. Almost no time is given to constructive work and as a result we make no progress.

If small commissions could be appointed each year to carefully work out our relation to the practical problems of the day, and present a well digested report for action, and if we could have the vision of the world as seen by the great leaders of today, there might be a stirring of fresh life, and the Friends Church might be lifted out of the deep ruts of past tradition and practice. Our last Five Years Meeting made a splendid beginning, but we need to pass down the vision to our subordinate meetings, and to our entire membership.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

Thanks for the daily round. Thus far

My Lord appoints my task, and lo!

I sow and reap, and reap and sow,
Where'er His leadings are!

A Talk to Subscribers

Advertising in THE AMERICAN FRIEND may be mutually beneficial to three parties—the seller, the buyer, and the advertising medium. The seller will advertise only when he feels that his money so spent will increase his opportunities to sell his product. The buyer who uses the advertising medium increases his opportunities to make a good purchase by widening his market. The larger the market the greater the variety of products displayed. If buyer and seller are brought together in the open market to their mutual advantage the medium which brought them together will enjoy their confidence, and at the same time increase its own prosperity. Some mediums enjoy the confidence of a large number of sellers and buyers, and some do not.

Let us make THE AMERICAN FRIEND a large and prosperous medium of advertising. The consumer, who in this case would be the reader of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, will be the determining factor. If he does not use the medium, the advertiser will no longer buy space, and the paper will fall back of necessity, upon voluntary contributions for part of its support.

Pledged to National Prohibition

The recent convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America at Columbus, Ohio, adopted a strong platform, prepared and read by Ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana, Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Resolutions. After a terrific indictment of the liquor traffic, the declaration concludes with the following:

We therefore declare for its National annihilation by an amendment to the Federal Constitution, which shall forever inhibit throughout the territory of the United States the manufacture and sale, and the importation, exportation, and transportation of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage. To the consummation of this high purpose we hereby pledge, as pledged our patriot fathers one hundred and thirty-seven years ago for the Nation's independence: Our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Trusting in Almighty God, we call upon all patriotic citizens to give their support thereto.

The conclusion of the reading was the signal for a tremendous demonstration of approval. The entire audience sprang to its feet, wildly cheering and waving handkerchiefs, followed by "America," then a prayer of earnest consecration by Bishop Anderson, closing with the Doxology.

A committee of one thousand men is being formed to go to Washington on December 10th, to present a petition for national prohibition to Congress and to inaugurate the movement in its behalf.

One of the marked characteristics of the Christian life is growth in the grace of gratitude. Jesus was grieved when only one of the ten lepers who were healed returned to give thanks to God. Our ingratitude grieves him who gave himself for the salvation of men. Growth in gratitude will mean that we shall learn to trace the blessing in what seemed to us at the time to be calamities and burdens and evidences of opposition.

The United Missionary Campaign

A Statement of Its Application to Friends in America

WHAT IS IT?

It is a movement started by the leaders of all the Protestant Churches in America to plan for a simultaneous canvass for missions, both home and foreign, and for all benevolences, during the month of March next.

In its final application, it will mean an every-member canvass, with a view to getting every man, woman and child more deeply interested in all the work of the Church. Some have thought it was only another effort to increase the contributions to foreign missions. It is a broader movement than that, and includes the whole work of the Church at home as well as abroad.

ITS FINANCIAL ASPECT

Friends more than all other denominations ought to throw themselves into this movement without reserve. As compared with other bodies, we have about the lowest record of per capita giving to the whole work of the Church. This is not due to any disloyalty, but rather to the lack of any specific, comprehensive, systematic financial plan.

Many of our Boards have excellent plans formed, which cannot be carried out until funds are supplied for their work. This is not due apparently to our poverty, so much as to a lack of getting the entire membership enlisted in their support in some regular, systematic way. When one considers that in the United Presbyterian, Southern Presbyterian and Reformed Churches a simultaneous every-member canvass has revolutionized their denominational finances by getting the whole membership more generally interested, we who are Friends ought to embrace this opportunity eagerly. Without burdening any, it will mean more money for every department by increasing the number who share the burdens regularly and systematically.

PREPARING FOR THE CANVASS

The groundwork for developing wide-spread interest in this movement is now being laid by the holding of district conferences throughout the country, under the management of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. These gatherings began in October, and will continue till the middle of February, and are addressed by groups of expert workers, who not only arouse interest in the movement, but explain in detail the steps to be taken and the purposes to be served.

FRIENDS SHOULD ATTEND

There is not a local Friends Meeting in America that should not be represented at these gatherings by from two or three to a dozen members. From time to time the list is being given in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and Friends should plan to attend the one nearest their meeting. There is tremendous inspiration in a simultaneous movement, wherein all denominations are working for a common cause. Friends will miss the opportunity of years if they fail to connect themselves with this campaign, and in consequence the work of our denominational boards as well as the work of local meetings will continue to suffer.

THE NEXT STEP

Following these district conferences, the delegates are expected to see that a local meeting of similar character is called, representing all the Churches, at which reports of the district gathering are made, and the plans as applied to the local Churches are considered in detail, with a view to interesting the local membership generally. These interdenominational gatherings should be followed by a congregational meeting of the individual Church at an early date to consider the movement as applied to the local meeting. At these gatherings, the duty of every member to support the Church work, including current expenses, foreign missions, home missions, evangelistic work, young people's work and other vital benevolences, should be strongly emphasized. The purposes of the united canvass in March should be carefully explained, and steps should be taken, perhaps by the appointment of a competent committee, to have charge of the matter and to prepare for this canvass by the selection of the best canvassers that can be secured.

KEEPING THE SUBJECT ALIVE

Following these congregational conferences, the general subject of the whole work of the Church should be kept alive by efforts to study the whole organized movement of our Church, and the relationship of the local meetings thereto. Literature concerning the work of the various Boards, now being compiled, should be circulated until every family has a copy. Frequent references thereto in the various services of the meeting should be made. At a Monthly Meeting not later than February, it should be officially determined what interests of the Church shall participate in the income derived from the general canvass, leaving the way open for any member to contribute to some other benevolence if he so desires.

THE CANVASSERS

At the proper time steps should be taken to enlist the services of the best equipped canvassers in the local meeting, who by twos will visit each member of the meeting. These canvassers should acquaint themselves with the work of the local meeting and of each department that is to share in the canvass, so as to be able to give any information that may be sought.

THE CANVASS

The canvass is to be made in March next. Every family should be visited, the purpose of the canvass should be explained, and a contribution to be made regularly throughout the year should be solicited. The ideal system is to get each member of the family down to the children interested in giving something and in giving it regularly. The best system that has yet been devised is a plan by which a certain amount will be contributed each week throughout the year.

The duplex envelope, with one end devoted to current expenses and the other to benevolences is the best means for collecting these contributions that has yet been devised. It is so ideal a plan that no meeting can afford to reject it or to ignore it without some specific reason.

All perhaps will want to pledge something for current expenses. For benevolences, many will pledge so much for foreign missions, while all will take their choices of Evangelistic and Church extension, social service, young people's work, etc., all amounts to be contributed in regular weekly payments throughout the year, unless some other plan is deemed better by the local meeting.

CANNOT BE IGNORED

No Friends Meeting can afford to ignore this simultaneous movement, for in it are wrapped up tremendous possibilities for strengthening the work both of the local meeting and the whole Church. The time has come for universal action among American Friends.

World's Purity Congress

REPORTED BY MARY SIBBETT

(Appointed as an Official Delegate by Governor Hodges, of Kansas.)

The greatest Purity Congress ever held, with its seventy noted speakers, has just closed at Minneapolis, Minnesota. It has left its imprint not only upon America but all other nations. The 600 delegates are going back to their several fields of work enthusiastic and far better fitted for life's duties. The scarlet thread of divine teaching and pure gentle love of our Christ has predominated in all the addresses, and made us all realize more than ever before the need of the baptism of the Holy Ghost for our special work.

Emphasis was placed upon the need of pure-minded, educated fathers and mothers and well-prepared teachers, who will enter into the open fields of childhood, watching the developing instincts, and teaching the great truths of life in a natural, sacred way, thus guiding the thoughts of the pre-adolescent age into the proper channels of pure knowledge and safeguarding them for the more critical adolescent age. If we would eradicate from our land the evils that have ruined nations of the past, and are eating into the very fiber of all nations today, it is recommended that sexuality be taught in our Normal schools, that our teachers may be fitted to do proper teaching along these lines in our High Schools, to help save the young from the pitfalls they do not realize, due to a lack of education that will give them intelligent self-control.

They need to understand that the greatest power in the world is love, the greatest joy is service, and the greatest battles are with ourselves. As Roosevelt has truly said, "The strength of a nation lies in the morality of that nation." If we would save our nations we must conserve the morality of our people.

As children are influenced more through what they see than by what they hear, there should be state boards of Censor for moving picture films, because the National Board has not the power to eradicate all impure films. These Boards should also censor all popular songs and every effort possible should be used to develop a public sentiment that will demand that the public press exclude all that is obscene and suggestive in their papers.

Ng Poon Chen graphically compared the new China with America. He said "the opium trade which is such a curse to China was saddled upon her by a stronger nation, but your whiskey is your own production. Whiskey makes a man a fierce brute and he goes home and kicks his wife and abuses his children. Opium makes a man dull and lazy. He goes home and his wife kicks him. We will soon rid China of opium. God help you to rid America of liquor. In China we teach the Bible in our schools; in America you forbid it read in yours and you do not make your innocent children go to church, but you compel your criminals in your penitentiaries to read the Bible and go to chapel."

Too much reformation and not enough prevention was emphasized strongly. Education to save the innocent, rigid laws to punish the guilty, with proper arrangements to take care of the victims, are the new plans for today. We have rigid laws forbidding criminals, imbeciles and degenerates coming to America, but for a little money we protect by laws an institution which is the hotbed of all vices, transforming hundreds of American boys and girls into imbeciles, degenerates and criminals. When this gigantic evil is dethroned the problem of other evils will be largely solved.

Thousands in our beautiful Christian America are falling around us like autumn leaves. We have many good laws; some of them need strengthening, others should be enacted, and public officials elected who will honor their oaths of office and who will prove their leadership in points of character while behind them are the great mass of Christian citizens, loyal to truth.

All cities should have police women and a lady juvenile judge to deal with and care for the children. With the combined forces of Christian men and women, victory will ere long be ours, and we will have a better manhood and womanhood in a better world.

W. C. T. U. Adopts Plans

Practical plans adopted by the National Convention of the W. C. T. U. at Asbury Park, New Jersey, are well under way. These plans center around the famous proclamation of the National W. C. T. U. President, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, sent out September 10, 1911, and the bill introduced in Congress by the Honorable Richmond Pearson Hobson prohibiting "the sale, manufacture for sale, importation for sale, and exportation for sale, of beverages or foods containing alcohol."

One of the resolutions adopted by the Convention, quoting Mrs. Stevens' ringing utterance, says:

"We invite all temperance, prohibition, religious and philanthropic bodies; all patriotic, fraternal and civic associations, and all Americans who love their country" to active co-operation under our slogan: On to Washington for National Constitutional Prohibition!

One of the important features of the plan is to urge voters in every state to nominate and elect to Congress men who favor National Constitutional Prohibition.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

CANADA YEARLY MEETING

Vancouver—Meetings of Friends in Vancouver, B. C., are now held at the Sailors' Home, 606 Powell Street, instead of in Room 205, The Labor Temple, as formerly. All Friends visiting British Columbia are invited to attend the meetings.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Richmond—On the evening of November 26, a remarkable and well deserved tribute was paid Timothy Nicholson by some of the citizens of Richmond. The occasion was the annual banquet of the Commercial Club of the city, and when the presiding officer introduced Timothy Nicholson for an address, the entire company arose and cheered him as the "Grand old man" of Richmond. At the same banquet, Prof. David W. Dennis gave an address on "The German and the Quaker."

Dublin—The social feature of the installation of Parvin Bond as pastor of Dublin meeting occurred in the form of a reception, November 21, at the home of Thomas Henby. An unusual freedom and good humor prevailed, in part attributable to the optimistic address of welcome by Anderson Toms, the happily worded response by the pastor, the choice music by Lucile Johnson, Mary Gilbert, Elma Henby and Frances Sutton, and the entertaining readings by Matilda Newlin Johnson and Elsie Crull Butler, with due emphasis upon the refreshments, substantial, as well as palatable. A large part of the membership was present and participated in making the evening a propitious event in a kindly disposition toward the year's ministry of Parvin Bond.

Centerville—The meeting at Centerville, Indiana, is again getting into working condition. Roy H. Wollam, the former pastor, resigned before the year was up so as to enter the McCormick Seminary at Chicago. The meeting very much regretted to lose such an energetic worker and still feels the loss very much, but is glad that it is possible for him to prepare himself to be a more efficient worker in God's service. Whatever he is doing we know that he is doing God's will. For several weeks the church was without a pastor. J. C. Propst and wife, Ethel Jay Propst, formerly of Dayton, Ohio, Mission, are the present pastors. They have not been long in the work here, but are devoted workers and are filled with the Spirit. The members have cooperated with them in prayer for a revival meeting which will begin about the first of the year.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Minneapolis—The annual roll call meeting of Minneapolis Friends was held Thursday evening, November 20. Following a delightful supper and social hour, responses were given by those present and messages read from many former members and others who were not able to attend. The outlook for the coming year was discussed and plans suggested for more definite and efficient work. The entire meeting was marked by a spirit of enterprise and mutual helpfulness.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

Stafford—We commenced in August to repair and build an addition to our church, fourteen by thirty-six feet. The pastor in charge had a serious injury to his left eye, so we did not get the building completed for Quarterly Meeting on the 7th and 8th of November, but we had Quarterly Meeting, nevertheless. Nearly all meetings were represented. Clarkson Hinshaw, of Wichita, our Yearly Meeting superintendent, and Charles Lescault, of Haviland, brought us the messages in the Spirit and with power. Each session was well attended and was a time of rejoicing. Miss Elma Albertson, of Haviland, has begun meetings at Antioch, which are well attended, and the interest is good. We are expecting Olen Hunt, of Wichita, to commence meetings here in three weeks. We had two conversions and one renewal at our last prayer meeting.

Northbranch—Mrs. W. Irving Kelsey, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, spent two weeks in November conducting a missionary campaign in Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting. She also visited her daughter, Miss Lorena Kelsey, who is the assistant principal of the Friends' Academy at Northbranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Craven and daughter, of Earlham, Iowa, recently spent a few weeks visiting relatives and Friends in and around Northbranch.

Friendswood, Texas—Friendswood Quarterly Meeting was held November 21-23. The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight discussed the subject of "The Adaptation of the Ministry to the Needs of the People." The minister should not only seek to know the will of the Master and to get a clear conception of the message, but he should study the Scriptures with all the aids he can secure and get into close touch with the members of the congregation so that he can know their needs and better adapt the message to them. The practice in our meeting of silent waiting on God, getting into communion with Him, was especially emphasized. Edith S. Worth spoke in the Saturday morning meeting on "Serving one another in Love," the only service worth while. During the business session, Alden L. Knight spoke on "The Urgent and Unsolved Problems at Home." Some of the weaknesses of our system of church government, and especially the antiquated methods by which we transact the business of the church, were sharply criticized. The subject was carried over to be brought up at next meeting. The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society rendered a program on Saturday evening. Several papers were read showing the condition of the missionary work, both at home and abroad, and the need for Friends to send more money and workers to be able to cover the part of the field allotted to them. The Sabbath School Conference on Sunday morning discussed evangelism by the Bible School and the organized class work. James Armstrong, of Indiana, delivered an able sermon on "Our Personal Relationship to Christ and His Kingdom." In the afternoon the C. E. Union met. Gertrude Dametz gave an interesting report of the Yearly Meeting C. E. Conference. R. S. Filkins, of Houston, the District Superintendent, was present and gave an interesting and encouraging address. We feel that we have enjoyed a feast of good things for which we thank our Heavenly Father.

Mt. Ayr—Calvin Choate began meetings at the Mt. Ayr Friends' Church October 1, continuing until November 13. The Holy Ghost fell upon the meeting from the very beginning. Many were convicted of sin. Thirty-four who knelt at the altar were definitely blessed in the forgiveness of sins, renewal, or sanctification. Brother Choate went from here to the Chalk Mound Friends' Church in Rooks County, where he is engaged in a revival effort.

Chalk Mound—Mt. Ayr Quarterly Meeting was held at the Chalk Mound Friends' Church, Rooks County, November 14-16. Calvin Choate from Wichita, Kansas, was with us on Friday and Saturday and brought to us at both sessions the message of love. Brother Choate went back to Mt. Ayr on Sabbath, and William R. Gregory was wonderfully favored in delivering to us the message on that morning, and in every session of the meeting the Spirit and power of the Lord was so manifest that it seemed like sitting in a Heavenly place. Many said surely the Lord is with us. The next meeting will be held at Mt. Ayr near Alton, Kansas, February 21-23. The meeting for Ministry and Oversight will be held on Friday morning at ten o'clock; a doctrinal conference at two o'clock in the afternoon, and on Saturday at 11:00 a. m., the Quarterly Meeting will be held. Any who may feel called of the Lord are cordially invited to be with us.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

Kernersville—George N. Hartley recently spent some days with Friends in a meeting at Kernersville, midway between Guilford College and Winston-Salem. Some years ago Sheppard Nelson and wife built a meeting house there at their own expense, and are continuing to give their time and means to the growth and development of a somewhat neglected class of people. George N. Hartley preached and lectured there, and by invitation spoke in a Methodist Church; he was greatly appreciated. He also lectured to the graded school of the town on three successive mornings in an instructive manner. He lectured two evenings in the auditorium of the school building, giving a stereoptican view of his travels in Europe and Africa. He then went to Oak Ridge Institute and thence to Pine Hill, where he attended Surrey Quarterly Meeting on November 22.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Mt. Gilead—The Friends at Mt. Gilead gathered at the meeting house on Thanksgiving day at 10:00 a. m., for a fellowship hour, and over one hundred took dinner together. The afternoon was taken up with religious thanksgiving services, and a sermon by the pastor, George E. Kent. Chestnut Grove and Western Meetings were invited to be present, and the day was one of great spiritual profit and uplift.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING

(Items gleaned from "The Friend")

Fourth and Arch—An important conference is to be held at Fourth and Arch Streets in Philadelphia, Twelfth Month 5th, with sessions at 4:00 and 7:30 o'clock p. m. The general subject of "Religious Education" will be considered in the afternoon and an address on "The Need of the Spiritual" will be given by John B. Garrett. Supper will be served from 5:45 to 7:00 o'clock. In the evening questions relating to the work of young people will be considered, and Rufus M. Jones will treat the subject "The Duty of the Church to the Community," while Alfred C. Garrett will speak on "What is the Function of the Church?"

Friends' Institute—Several young women of the Yearly Meeting who are closely identified with the interests of the Friends' School in Japan, propose to hold a sale of Japanese articles, etc., at the Friends' Institute on South Twelfth Street, on the sixth of Twelfth month, at two o'clock.

Media—On Seventh-day the 22d, a meeting of conference was held in Media, those attending it being the Ministers, Elders and Overseers of Concord Quarterly Meeting.

All who could be present were doubtless in attendance, the company numbering almost one hundred. After a period of unusual solemnity, there were several vocal offerings in the real life that helped to crown the meeting as one of favor, in which the Master's guardianship was rightly owned.

Coatesville—Calm Quarterly Meeting was held at Coatesville the fourteenth of Eleventh month. Its small membership was pretty well represented in the attendance, and among these the children were heartily welcomed. The presence of visitors from other meetings added greatly to the sense of Christian fellowship thus realized. The meeting for worship was felt to be a solemn and helpful one in the ministry offered, bringing a deep sense of responsibility to many hearts.

Maryland Book Making—The State of Maryland has the unenviable reputation of being one of four states of the Union where "Book Making" is allowed at horse races. Our Representative Meeting has had a Committee under appointment for a year or more with a view of using whatever pressure it could command to stop the unholy practise. A number of meetings have been held, one of them with a prominent Friend from Baltimore, where the matter is also claiming serious attention. On Sixth-day last week George M. Warner and William B. Harvey, members of the Sub-committee of the Representative Meeting, went to Baltimore to confer with the body of Friends there which corresponds with our Representative Meeting; it is hoped that in the united efforts of the two organizations, effective work may be accomplished, having in view legislation that will at an early date abolish this sort of gambling.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Indianapolis Third Church—Isaac N. Toole, of Beloit, Ohio, came to us the 2d of November for a series of meetings, continuing three weeks, closing the 23d with a full house and interest unabated. Some eight or ten claimed either conversion or sanctification at the last service. Many were reclaimed who had fallen by the way or had grown careless. The influence of the meetings was far reaching in its effects, as many attended from distant parts of the city. Members of other churches joined heartily in the work, losing sight of denominational lines and assisting financially. Brother Toole is an humble, yet very forceful speaker, and is clear and fearless in teaching. Any meeting is fortunate that can secure his assistance.

Bloomington, Indiana—Union Thanksgiving services were held in the Friends' Church, the pastor, Enos Harvey, giving the discourse.

The Home and School Association of Bloomington has been reorganized, and will meet each month during the school year, for the discussion of school questions in which the home is interested.

FRIENDS' ACADEMY BURNED

The Friends' Academy building at Friendsville, Tennessee, was burned on November 24th, which will be a serious blow to that institution. The fire started in the roof from a spark from the chimney. With an insurance of $5,000.00 however, an effort is being made at once to raise a sufficient balance to make it possible to rebuild. Friends from all sections are earnestly appealed to for financial help. The school is being carried on in the meeting house. Money should be sent either to Ora Wright, who is the Principal, or J. Frank Peters, Treasurer of the Board of Trustees, Friendsville, Tennessee.

A PROMINENT EDUCATOR

Dr. Ellwood C. Perisho, graduate of Earlham College, and member of his home meeting at Carmel, Indiana, who is State Geologist of South Dakota and head of the Geological Department in the State University of that state at Vermillion, is also President of the South Dakota Educational Association. At the recent meeting of that Association at Sioux Falls, November 24-26, Dr. Perisho gave an address on "The Rural School and the State."

IMPORTANT BIBLE SCHOOL ANNOUNCEMENT

The Executive Committee of the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting met at Indianapolis, Indiana, November 20 and 21, with additional representatives of the Board from North Carolina, Wilmington and New England Yearly Meetings.

Much business of importance to the Friends' Bible Schools of America was transacted, but probably the most important was in regard to the publication work of Peter W. Raidabaugh, at Plainfield, Indiana. After very carefully and prayerfully considering several propositions, the Board agreed with Peter W. Raidabaugh to purchase his entire publication interests and to take over the work on January 1, 1914, at which time the Board assumes complete control, retaining Mr. Raidabaugh in the office for three months.

The office will be retained at Plainfield, Indiana, until about the first of April, after which it is expected that new Quarterlies will be issued by the Board, announcement of which will be made in the near future. This will consolidate all the Bible School Publications and supplies for Friends, under the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting, and make the Church responsible for the kind of supplies published.

LETTER FROM GEORGE N. HARTLEY

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.
November 14, 1913.

S. Edgar Nicholson,

DEAR FRIEND—I have visited the meeting in High Point, where I helped in a series of meetings one week. The meetings were of much interest. Simultaneous meetings were held in the various churches. I find the Friends there in a very good condition and well prepared for this work. Lewis W. McFarland and wife, the pastors, are doing excellent work, and are much loved by all. They have a very fine meeting house and Sunday-school rooms.

I have been at this place nearly two weeks. The Friends here have a house with a seating capacity of nearly three hundred, which they purchased from another denomination and have repaired and remodeled. They have a membership of about eighty. They are located in a part of the city quite a distance from other churches. The membership is generally limited in means, but are a good class and well disposed. A good degree of spiritual life is manifested.

David and Sarah Sampson are the pastors, and they not only have the full confidence of the members of their own, but of other churches as well. Ministers of other denominations speak in the highest terms of them. He is president of the ministerial association of the city and is in close touch with all the reform movements instituted. The meeting is small but growing. The congregation numbers about sixty or seventy-five, with a good flourishing Sabbath School, and Friends will not miss it if they furnish a little financial aid to this small, but energetic and struggling congregation. They do indeed need help and are worthy of it. The prospects seem favorable for a good strong church, not in wealth, but in spiritual life. The wealth may come in later.

A marked change has been manifested in North Carolina since its prohibition law was enacted. The savings deposits have very materially increased, much more rapidly than before the law was passed. Boot-legging, etc., is carried on to some extent, but the conditions are far better than they used to be.

Very truly,
GEORGE N. HARTLEY.

WHITTIER COLLEGE

At a recent session of Whittier Quarterly Meeting, held at El Modena, Walter Cammack reported the educational interests of the church. The following extracts from his report give an estimate of the religious atmosphere of Whittier College, and the prominence given by the institution to Bible study and training for Christian service:

"The Bible department is well organized and ably handled by Prof. Essek Perry, and a Sunday-school Teachers' Training Class under President Newlin is developing trained Christian workers.

"The chapel talks given by the faculty and others are inspiring, and full of character building material for every student. Many chapel hours are given over to returned missionaries, such as Gurney and Elizabeth Binford, Thomas Elliott and Dr. and Mrs. Rosenberger, who present the missionary question in a vivid way to the students, and who are eagerly listened to by all present.

"The influence of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. is in a sense the most strongly felt, because these organizations are carried on entirely by the students. Meetings are held regularly once a week, and have a large attendance. The Bible is read, prayer is offered, and testimonies given, and the meeting is carried on similar to any church prayer meeting. Student leaders usually take charge of the meetings, and are fitting themselves for service by doing so.

"The deputation work carried on by the Y. M. C. A. has done much good in the past year. This consists of several Christian young men taking charge of a regular Sabbath evening meeting of one of the nearby churches. Young people can be reached in this way, that cannot be influenced in any other way.

"The Y. M. C. A. employment bureau is a great help to the students working their way through school. A great deal of work is obtained in this way. Any live young man can work his way through college by its help, which is freely given to all who care to take advantage of it.

"We have five student volunteers who are training for missionary work, besides many others who have not definitely stated their intention of becoming foreign missionaries. Two of them are going as delegates to the Kansas City convention in January.

"The aim of the college is to fit young men and women for service, primarily for Christian service; and we are accomplishing this under the able direction of President Newlin and a well selected faculty. We want the co-operation of the church in these efforts, and ask for your support by your prayers, that we may continue and increase in the efficiency of our work."

GOOD NEWS FROM VICTORIA

Florence Parker, of Carthage, Indiana, formerly of Matamoros, Mexico, has just received a letter from a friend in Brownsville, stating that a letter had been received from Victoria since the great battle there on November 17-19, bringing the good news that all Americans were safe. A newspaper dispatch under date of November 28th stated that these Americans were to leave Victoria that day in a wagon. This will be cheering news to the many who have been deeply concerned about Friends' Mission there.

RETURNING TO AMERICA

A letter from England under date of November 15th says that Orlando and Leanah Hobson were booked to sail for America from Southampton on November 26th, on the steamship New York. The Lord has blessed them in their labors in that country. With peace of mind they are returning home, giving thanks to the Lord, and deeply appreciative of the kindness of Friends in England, Ireland and Scotland. At the request of Friends at Mt. Airy, North Carolina they are returning there as pastors of that meeting.

AT NORTH WEARE, NEW HAMPSHIRE

Salem Quarterly Meeting was held at North Weare, New Hampshire, on October 16th. The meeting was favored with the services of Tom A. Sykes, of Central Village, Massachusetts, besides several ministers belonging to our own Quarterly Meeting. The session was of special interest, as it marked the one hundredth annual occasion, at which the Quarterly Meeting has been held in this town. The following paper prepared by Lindley H. Osborne, was read by him at this time:

HISTORICAL SKETCH

Most of the early Friends who settled in this vicinity came from "Down below," a term which was used to cover at least the towns lying on or near the sea-coast of New Hampshire and northern Massachusetts. (Here follows the names of the leading families.) * * * They were hardy and strong-minded pioneers, as they needed to be to meet the privations and perils of their situation. To other denominations they were not really welcome. Making little, if any, effort to accommodate themselves to the convictions of others, feelings of asperity grew up between them which we, who fraternize with our fellow Christians on terms of easy intercourse, find it difficult to understand.

Friends first settled in Weare about 1764, and they were allowed to hold a Preparative Meeting as early as 1777. The exact date and location of their first meeting house is unknown. There is evidence, however, that it was near Weare Center, and not far from the present Town Hall. The two meeting houses now standing were built in 1795, and Daniel Breed, the master workman on both, only twenty-six years of age, was already a noted builder. The Monthly Meeting was established the same year, with Ebenezer Breed clerk of the men's, and Martha Gove of the women's meeting. The meeting at Heniker was authorized in 1797, to be held at Daniel Newhall's, and two years later it was decided to build a meeting house. In 1844 that meeting had a membership of one hundred and nine. The meeting in Concord was set up in 1805, the meeting house built in 1812, where meetings for worship were held until about 1840.

In 1813, the South Meeting house in Weare was enlarged to accommodate the Quartely Meeting, the first session of which is said to have been the largest ever held in that place. The hospitality of the residents was equal to the occasion. "Five brothers and sisters, settled on adjoining farms, are said to have entertained ninety-one guests." The meeting at Unity was established in 1818, and house erected two years later. About this time the membership of Weare Monthly Meeting reached its highest point, five hundred and sixty-seven. Since that time there has been a gradual decline in numbers, owing to various causes, until the count in 1905 gave a total of only ninety-three which, let us hope, may prove the lowest mark, as there has since been a slight increase.

Here, as elsewhere, the Society has shown a real interest in education, though the facilities for obtaining it have not always been the best. From 1804 to 1812 Monthly Meeting schools were kept up. The Boarding school at Providence, Rhode Island, was opened in 1819, and since that time most of our families have been represented there.

The older Society records, though made up largely of routine matters, have occasional entries of real interest. Offences were usually stated in unmis-takable terms, for example: one man "pushed and kicked" one of his neighbors, another "struck a man with his foot," still another "signed a note in an unbecoming manner." A minister acknowledged he "had been overtaken by drinking too much cyder." Offenders usually made satisfaction, except in one class of cases—marriage with non-members. This made heavy drains upon our membership, and seemed to be the capital offence until about 1872.

I have referred to the blunt and uncompromising character of the early stock, yet they were by no means destitute of finer feelings. Wherever there was suffering their sympathies were enlisted. The sorrows of the Indian and the Negro seemed ever before them, and since my own recollection famine-stricken Ireland received substantial aid from the Society at large, in which our own membership bore an honorable part. In 1836 our records show that a petition was sent to Congress pleading for the freedom and enfranchisement of the slave. In more recent time there have been willing workers in the cause of Temperance, Missions and Peace and Arbitration.

So, looking widely over our past history, we find something to amuse, much to deplore, and are obliged to confess that this people has lived far, very far below its best ideals. We also find running through it all, a healthy interest in humanity, and at times a genuine contribution to the brotherhood of man, the general welfare of our race.

Prayer Meeting Topics

The following list of prayer meeting topics is being used in the Friends' Meeting at Portland, Oregon, having been prepared by Charles Woodman, the pastor. They are so comprehensive, that they may properly be used by other congregations.

1. Baptism as a Spiritual Experience (Luke 3: 15-16; 12: 50; Mark 10: 38).—Contrast the baptism of John and Jesus. Baptism as immersion into the life of God. Why do the Friends not practice water baptism?

2. When We are Tempted (Matthew 4: 1-11).—Facing our Ideals. What are our greatest temptations? Effect of temptation on character?

3. When the Master Calls (John 1: 35-51; Luke 5: 27-29; Matthew 4: 18-22).—How does Jesus call men today? Is there a difference between self-giving and the sacrifice of self? Consider the significance of Jesus' knowledge of personality.

4. When We Worship (John 4: 20-26).—What is worship? What best helps to worship? Effect of worship on the life?

5. A Neighbor's Estimate of a Christian (Mark 3: 20-30; 6: 1-5; John 1: 11).—Difficulty of maintaining one's profession at home. Is the neighborly estimate worth heeding? How can we live the Christian life with the community atmosphere against us?

6. Blessedness, Peace and Joy (Matthew 5: 1-12; John 14: 27; 16: 33; 15: 11).—Name reasons for praise. What is the secret of joy? Can we find happiness by searching for it?

7. Duty or Privilege (Matthew 5: 41; Luke 17: 7-10; John 15: 14-15).—Which word better describes the Christian life? What is the secret of service as a privilege?

8. Lessons in Prayer (Matthew 6: 5-15).—Examine carefully each petition in the Lord's Prayer. What more than petition is there in prayer?

9. Worry or Composure (Matthew 6: 25-34; Luke 10: 38-42).—Why do we worry? Of what does anxiety indicate a lack? What is the secret of composure?

10. The Essential Thing (Matthew 6: 33; Mark 10: 17-22).—What is really essential to life? What most occupies our thoughts, the essential or the unessential things and why? What did the rich young ruler lack?

11. Undervaluing the Choice Things (Matthew 7: 6; 13: 44-46; 16: 26; Luke 23: 11).—What choice things do we undervalue? How do we show our appreciation of value? How do we cheapen character?

12. Great Choices (Matthew 7: 21-27;

25: 14-18; 27: 17).—What determines our choices? The consequences of choice. Can anyone choose for us?

13. When the Christian Meets Discouragement (Matthew 11: 2-6).—Why do we meet discouragement? How shall we overcome discouragement? Are disappointment and discouragement identical?

14. When the Master Sends Us (Mark 6: 7-13, 30-32; Luke 10: 1-3, 17-20).—In what sense is responsibility a good thing? Why is a mission in life like a cargo in a vessel? Why do we shirk definite obligations?

15. Significance of a Spiritual Communion (John 6: 28-35; Mark 14: 22-25).—What is essential in Communion? Why are bread and wine not used in the Friends' Communion? What is the force of the figure, "The Bread of Life?"

16. What Christ is to the Christian (Luke 9: 18-26).—Overcoming obstacles to confess Christ; What are they? Popular and personal ideas about Christ.

17. When the Load is Heavy (Matthew 11: 25-30).—What are our burdens? Are burdens detrimental? Is such a thing as rest in work possible?

18. When We Stand Alone (John 6: 66-71; Luke 9: 18).—What to do in lonely hours. The loneliness of leadership. Was Jesus a lonely man?

19. The Growing Christian (Matthew 13: 1-9; Mark 4: 26-29).—What is growth? How is Christian growth produced? What hinders growth?

20. When the Heavens Open (Mark 1: 9-11; Matthew 17: 1-8; John 12: 24-33).—What is God's approval worth to us? How do the above references suggest the deeper meanings of prayer? What is Christian assurance?

21. Discovering Jesus (Luke 2: 41-52; Mark 6: 45-52; Luke 24: 27-35).—Where and how do we find Jesus? Which reveals Jesus better, crucial or common moments in life?

22. Within the Shadow of the Cross (Matthew 16: 21-27; Luke 23: 35; John 19: 25).—Name crosses we have to bear. Is there joy in self-sacrifice? Can a person truly live and escape the cross?

23. When Sorrow Darkens the Sky (John 14: 1-6).—What shall we do? Of what value is sorrow to the life? Should we ignore sorrow or fellowship with it?

24. In the Hour of Trial (Matthew 26: 31-35; John 18: 12-27).—Note that Jesus and Peter are both on trial at the same time. Why do we fail under the test? How do we deny Christ?

25. The Test of Love (John 13: 34, 35; 15: 9, 10; 21: 15-19; Mark 12: 28-34).—Can we cultivate love? What is love's severest test?

WIFE WON

Husband Finally Convinced

Some people are wise enough to try new foods and beverages and then generous enough to give others the benefit of their experience. A wife writes:

"No slave in chains, it seemed to me, was more helpless than I, a coffee captive. Yet there were innumerable warnings—waking from a troubled sleep with a feeling of suffocation, at times dizzy and out of breath, attacks of palpitation of the heart that frightened me.

(Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"At last my nervous system was so disarranged that my physician ordered 'no more coffee.' I capitulated.

"Determined to give Postum a fair trial, I prepared it according to directions on the pkg., obtaining a dark brown liquid with a rich snappy flavour similar to coffee. When cream and sugar were added, it was not only good but delicious.

"Noting its beneficial effects in me the rest of the family adopted it—all except my husband, who would not admit that coffee hurt him. Several weeks elapsed during which I drank Postum two or three times a day, when, to my surprise, my husband said: 'I have decided to drink Postum. Your improvement is so apparent—you have such fine color—that I propose to give credit where credit is due.' And now we are coffee-slaves no longer."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

READING, PA., August 18, 1913.

Gentlemen:

Since the installation of your “Farquhar” furnace in our home, the cold weather has had no effect on us whatever, no matter how far below zero it may have been. We heat twelve large rooms with it, and it is the most perfect heating and sanitary furnace we have ever seen. It is now three years since we have had your furnace installed, and in that time it has given perfect satisfaction and has needed no repairs of any kind. It takes less coal and less work than any other heater, and I would not take a thousand dollars for it, if I could not get another like it.

Wishing you continued success, I am,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) CHAS. VOELKER.

The Great Contrast.

ONCE it was the blessing, now it is the Lord;
Once it was the feeling, now it is His Word;
Once his gifts I wanted, now Himself alone;
Once I sought for healing, now the Healer own.

Once 'twas painful trying, now 'tis perfect trust;
Once a half salvation, now the uttermost;
Once 'twas ceaseless holding, now He holds me fast;
Once 'twas constant drifting, now my anchor's cast.

Once 'twas busy planning, now 'tis trustful prayer;
Once 'twas anxious caring, now He has the care;
Once 'twas what I wanted, now what Jesus says;
Once 'twas constant asking, now 'tis ceaseless praise.

Once it was my working, His it hence shall be;
Once I tried to use Him, now He uses me;
Once the power I wanted, now the Mighty One;
Once I worked for glory, now His will alone.

Joint Ministerial Conference

The joint Conference of the Ministerial Associations of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings was held in the First Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, November 18 to 20, 1913. The first session was called to order by P. W. Raidabaugh of Plainfield. In the absence of David Hadley, Enos Harvey led in devotion by reading a Scripture lesson and offering prayer. He was followed by a number of others, earnestly petitioning God for Divine wisdom and unction in the work of the Conference. Fannie Elliott for Indiana Yearly Meeting and Elizabeth Murphy for Western Yearly Meeting acted as Secretaries. Simon P. Hester, President of Western Yearly Meeting Association, gave the address of welcome, which was responded to by Milo S. Hinckle for the Indiana Yearly Meeting Association.

S. E. Nicholson, of Richmond, spoke on the "Relationship of the Local Meeting to the Community." Among the many helpful things said he developed the following important points: The Church is the highest embodiment of righteousness and is composed of a group of Christians commissioned to help others. It is the duty of the local meeting to carry the gospel of salvation to every person in the community. Learn the environment of life that hinders Church attendance, and as far as possible change that environment. Make the Church a living organism adapted to reach the public beyond the pales of its own membership. To accomplish this a personal workers' committee was strongly recommended by the speaker.

In discussion, Enos Harvey said: "Religion, education, sociability and law are needed to harmonize and develop the complex interests of the community and to control the evil tendencies due to sin and selfishness. The Church should be the leader in promoting all those agencies which make for both spiritual and physical happiness of the community."

The evening session opened with special music by the Indianapolis choir, and devotion led by E. James Carter. Then followed the Conference sermon, which was a strong message, by Robert L. Kelly, President of Earlham College, from Matt. 10: 39: "He that findeth his life shall lose it." (Liberal extracts from this sermon were printed in THE AMERICAN FRIEND last week.)

On Wednesday morning devotional exercises were conducted by A. J. Furstenberger, of Wabash. The subject of the morning was "Ministerial Poise," and was discussed by Chas. Sweet, of Muncie. He said there are some necessary essentials for the minister, conversion, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and the best possible mental equipment. There should be a proper poise in our relation to God, to Jesus Christ and to the Holy Spirit. There should be a proper relation to the Bible, and a perfect relationship between the minister on the one hand and the Church and educational institutions on the other. A like relationship should exist between the minister and officers. The minister should be well poised in the pulpit, in his pastoral work and in his home and public life. An interesting general discussion followed in which the need of proper poise in the various departments of the work and life of the ministry was emphasized.

"Problems of Common Interest to the two Yearly Meetings" were discussed by Truman C. Kenworthy, of Richmond. He emphasized strongly the need of a trained ministry and an educational institution adequate to meeting the demands of this age. A general discussion followed, during which a number spoke of the importance of better equipment and training in ministerial work.

The afternoon session on Wednesday opened with devotional exercises led by Mary Miars Harold, pastor at Greenfield, following which there was a fervent prayer by David Hadley for Charles L. Jessup, who for years has been under the hand of affliction, and for Ira C. Johnson, Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, who was ill at his home in Lynn.

The subject of "Religious Conservation" was treated by Willard O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis. Defining conservation as the act of guarding or keeping with care, in a safe or entire state, he said religious conservation would be the keeping of all that is valuable in religion without decay or violence. In past years, the life of the Monthly Meeting was gauged by the number of offenders dealt with, and while we would not criticize their points of emphasis, now the emphasis is not on creeds or formulæ, but on preserving the souls of men. The functions of the Church have changed because we better understand the mission of Christ and His church. The division of the subject into non-resident members, new converts and children, led to the discussion of the following points:

Our Church from the beginning has been a rural society and has been slow to adjust herself to the cities; yet, with the rushing of the rural population to the cities, they have a large population of Friends, and for this and other reasons, there are 20,000 non-resident members. Letters of greeting, giving information concerning home work and asking for a reply were suggested as a means of keeping them in touch with the Church.

The reports of our revival efforts as to number of converts, and the comparison of records a year hence, are anything but encouraging. The fault may be found both in the lack of care by the Church and in evangelistic methods used. A prerequisite for converts should be a definite teaching on the fundamentals of the gospel.

The greatest emphasis was placed on the conservation of children. This is the children's age. At the places of worship, children should be made welcome and the sermon should be adapted to their comprehension rather than gauged by the most intelligent person in the congregation. There is no place like the home to conserve the child life. Mothers need to feel that their children are worth more to them than any club or social function. If home life breaks down the church does also.

In the discussion which followed by Edgar Wil-

The Call to a Mighty Service

Not since the Reformation found its rightful culmination in the evangelism of the seventeenth century has the Church been so determined to give an account of its stewardship as at the present time. Within half a decade has come such a baptism of sacrifice and consecration upon the religious leaders of the Christian world as has scarcely been witnessed since Pentecost. The church that is blinding its eyes to the open doors that are being set upon every hand is missing an opportunity that will hardly come again.

The Spirit of the mighty God is abroad among the Nations, and Christ's church is hearing the call of the centuries to realize upon its investments of faith for nineteen hundred years by entering upon its rightful spiritual heritage throughout the earth. The individual, the family, the community, the municipality, the State, the Nation, the world, society, business, the professions, politics, government, every pursuit, occupation and relationship of life, all individually and collectively are the objects of gospel concern, until one stands almost appalled at the wide scope of the redemption plan. The vision of a new earth, here and now, "wherein dwelleth righteousness" is opening before the church with tremendous reality, and is bringing a challenge for the manifestation of her noblest sacrificial endeavors, out of which will be ushered in the day when all men shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

The Church is at the threshold of a new day. Either it must answer the call of the Spirit and enter in and possess the land of promise, or it must turn traitor to its supreme opportunity for which nineteen centuries have been the period of preparation. Either it must make good by carrying the gospel to every creature, regardless of the barriers of law and custom and superstition which it must batter down in the attempt, or it must confess that its professions are a sham and its teachings are a mockery. The world is awakening from its sleep of centuries, and the golden age for the disciples of Jesus Christ has begun. There can be no other meaning to the march of events within the past half dozen years.

The church is already massing itself for a generation of religious activity such as the world has never seen. Great denominational movements attest its coming. The Edinburg Conference, the passion for missions upon every hand, the spirit of fellowship which possesses all sects and orders, the convocation of Methodist laymen, the every-member canvass among three Communion, the United Mission campaign now under way, the awakening of our youth, the organized adult classes, all typify the strivings of the church to meet the great tasks of a Christian brotherhood bent upon fulfilling its mission to the world in this generation.

What of the Society of Friends? What place is it to hold in the march of this modern crusade of the Christian church against the darkness and superstition of the world of sin all about us? Shall we be in line when the mighty tread of Christian disciples is heard in every sphere of human life? The optimism of a mighty faith cannot blind us to the fact that the prospect is not altogether assuring. In all too many places there appears to be an indifference, where there ought to be a supreme awakening. To remain at ease in Zion when the command is to go into all the world, and when the Church is shaking herself for the mighty tasks of the next decade, is to miss the climax of opportunity.

How multitudinous are our problems; the rural problem, the problem of the immigrant, of the non-church goer, of labor, of our city slums and our city poor, of better municipal government, of the saloon and vice, the problems of youth, of marital fidelity, of home happiness, of Sunday rest, of religious education, of better training and preparation for the ministry, of social service and home missions in all their varied forms, no less than the problems of the foreign field in which the Church must keep pace with its opportunities in China and Africa and India and Japan and South America and Persia and Mexico and the "uttermost parts of the earth"! All these and more are the tasks which we, in common with our Christian brethren of the other denominations, face with an obligation that is startling.

The lessons of two and a half centuries have been lost upon us if, in the face of these gigantic tasks of world redemption, we as Friends must perforce stand aside to patch up our differences about theology or doctrines or any ism that clamps the wheels of our progress toward a higher and more efficient denominational service for the salvation of human souls. We cast no discredit upon sound and fundamental doctrinal truth when we say that this is not the supreme issue in Quakerism today. Fundamentally our faith has been declared over and over again with an exactness that is convincing, and the guarantee of its perpetuity lies not in its elementary reiteration half so much as in the practical interpretation of its truths in terms of present necessities as applied to individual and neighborhood and world redemption. We draw no cords with which to limit the fullest investigation of truth, whether in the scientific or religious world when we say that the desire for freedom of thought cannot afford to mark a line of cleavage among Christian brethren bent upon their task of carrying the gospel to every creature in this generation.

Suspicion and rancor and false witnessing can furnish no hotbed from which will spring the saving truth that shall be for the healing of the nations. The new slogan of the conquering Church is the spirit of fraternity that means co-ordination and fellowship in Christian living and in Christian service. We realize all too well how sensitive is the ground upon which we are treading, but our conviction is profound that the most pressing obligation upon the Friends of America today is the harnessing of all our capabilities and consecration and spiritual life in a spirit of unity and faith, to the great tasks to which the Church universal is being called in a mighty movement for the saving of men.

Why Not a Gathering of Men?

The recent gathering of Methodist men in Indianapolis and the work which consecrated men are doing in other denominations have suggested the idea of a national gathering of men of our own body. There are certain tasks in the Church which are peculiarly the work of the men. The development of a universal and comprehensive financial plan that will provide an income adequate to the necessities of our Boards, the co-ordination of our activities without the loss that comes from friction and unnecessary duplication, the efforts to equip the church for the larger work that comes by reason of our association with others in the great brotherhood of Christian service, the insight into our whole mechanism of ecclesiastic government as applied to the tasks of world redemption, are obligations which the men of our church cannot shirk.

If a hundred or two hundred men, representing every section of our Five Years Meeting, could come together by the first of February or earlier, in the spirit which dominated that great gathering of Methodist men in October, and largely for the same purposes, as applied to the work and opportunities of Friends, it would probably mark a new era of development for our Society in this country. We believe the suggestion is full of tremendous possibilities. We would like to know how it impresses our membership.

The Work and Spirit of Quakerism

As Interpreted by one of that class known as "Young Friends."

BY VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

A little over two hundred and fifty years ago there was presented to the world what seemed to be a new conception of religious truth. In reality the truths were as old as religion itself, but had been neglected and forgotten until their reincarnation in this new message. So fresh was the message and so vital the truths that religion was rescued once more from the whited sepulchres of a dead formalism and translated into divine realities, living in the hearts and consciences of men and finding expression in their characters and lives.

The new teaching found its first and leading exponent in the person of George Fox and found its body of believers in what later came to be known as the Society of Friends. Tried in the changing life and thought of the two most widely extreme periods in English history, tested by the fires of bitter persecution, Quakerism proved its adequacy for human needs. Spreading with phenomenal success, it became the largest non-conformist body in England and at one time the largest single religious force in the American colonies.

After this flush of achievement in the first century of the movement there followed a period of over a hundred years when Quakerism came to be regarded as a spent force, the shell of a once vital faith. But during the latter part of the past century an awakening took place. It was seen that the crust or shell, which was all that had been apparent to men, still contained the seed of that same living faith. The Society had wrapped up its real message in a covering of church government and discipline and lifeless practices, much as a silk-worm wraps itself in a cocoon of fine threads. But just as the cocoon is finally burst open, so did a few prophetic souls in the Society bestir themselves, and, breaking through the lifeless crust of practices that had lost their meaning, present to the world a new manifestation of the same living message proclaimed by Fox and Barclay and Penn. All over the Society there came a quickening of life, a new enthusiasm, something of the same old white-hot conviction of a real mission among mankind.

We are living today in the midst of the operation and development of this new spirit. As a result a question has arisen to confront the modern "Young Friend" who wishes to make the best accounting of his possibilities of religious service. Is the Society worthy of the maximum expenditure of money and the last full measure of devotion, or is the present revival of interest a temporary and vain effort to put new life into a movement that has served its day? To answer this question one must first understand those particular phases of religious truth inhering in the Society from its inception and then apply them to modern life and thought.

All the while it must be remembered that a proper interpretation of the Quaker message of the present cannot be had by adhering inflexibly to all the doctrines and practices of the past. It is often believed that true religion is forever fixed and unchangeable; that it is a rigid system of beliefs and practices, not to be confirmed by reason but blindly accepted by faith and crystalized into one inflexible form for every age. But such a theory is not supported by human experience, past or present.

Religion is simply the life of God working in the life of man. It is essentially living and must be as free as life, adapting itself, as do all living things, to the conditions in which it lives. Every religious denomination is founded upon certain great central truths, but in the application of these truths to the changing conditions of life and thought, they find diversity of expression. Thus the five points of Calvinism, the Wesleyan doctrine of Christian perfection, the ninety-five theses of Luther have little meaning today, and yet the churches founded by these men still have messages of tremendous power. We must go behind the teaching and practice of all periods and there we ought to find a great unchanging truth that is the heritage of all ages.

What is this central note of Quakerism? As originally promulgated by Fox it is the conception that religion is a spiritual and personal matter between each individual and his God, that this spiritual life is borne and sustained by the direct working of the living Christ in the soul, and that this inward Christ or "inner light" finds expression and fruitage in the changed life and character of the believer. In other and simpler terms, Fox took religion out of the thousand and one incumbrances that had veiled its true meaning and presented it as a reality of experience touching every issue of life, instead of meaningless performances by priests and ministers. He presented the then strange teaching that all men might be priests and have the same free access to God.

Out of this recognition of personal and immediate responsibility to God, and of the direct leading of His Spirit, grew all of the minor phases of belief that have characterized Friends,—such as opposition to a hireling ministry, to ordinances and to all forms of worship; refusal to bear arms, to take oaths or to indulge in the various flatteries of the day; insistence upon the spiritual interpretation of all worship, and upon the highest ideals of life and conduct. Many of these retain today their vital meaning, whereas others have been outgrown through changing conditions and are important only in an historical sense as throwing light upon the essential message that should still find propagation through the Society of Friends. The modern Friend asks the question, "What is this message and how should it be related to twentieth century life?" This article admits of no exhaustive discussion of these all-embracing points and must at most be but suggestive in its nature.

It is, of course, true that we need not look only to peculiar and distinctive beliefs to justify our separate existence. Every Christian denomination has a common and basic heritage in the gospel of Christ. Since at present the church seems to perform its tasks most effectively under the system of separate and highly organized denominations, any such religious body, grounded in the eternal truths of this gospel, has a mission as wide as the world of men and as deep as human needs. The church, as the army of the living God, is catching today a clearer vision than ever before of the whole world as its promised and rightful heritage and is girding itself as never before for the task. Thus, our own denomination, as one well-organized and well-equipped division of this army has a mission that should arouse the united loyalty of its members.

Yet Friends not only desire to possess but can be thankful that we do possess a heritage of distinctive phases of truth, the propagation of which rests upon us as a mighty trust. The Friends' conception of worship is a distinctive heritage to be thankful for, and for which we are accountable as were the servants in the parable of the talents. Great as has been the advance among Christian peoples toward a higher ideal of worship and communion, men even yet are failing to see clearly beyond the form to the real essence. Not only for greater richness and fullness of personal experience but for better equipment for service does the world still need the Quaker ideal. The mighty all-embracing task of facing the Church demands the clearest vision of God's purposes and the deepest consecration to the accomplishment of those purposes,—not on the part of the few but of the whole body. The Friends' message of a more spiritual interpretation of the religious life should be upheld among men as bringing to Christian people generally the spiritual equipment necessary for the performance of the task.

The Friends conception of religion in its entirety is peculiarly adapted to the needs of the present day. It is a practical, questioning, utilitarian, scientific age. Men are accepting no truth except that which is verified by fact. Since religion is an experience of man's inner and higher nature, any religious teaching will be at a discount unless based upon the facts of actual experience. The Quaker message, being grounded in the simple realities of religion, stripped of everything that tends to turn the emphasis from these realities, is peculiarly adapted to modern needs. The coming generation will demand a religion of reality, verified by experience, or it will have no religion at all, and Quakerism can still serve as a beacon light pointing the way toward the truth that convicts, convinces and satisfies.

Growing out of our central belief are a number of matters that have received in an especial sense the individual and collective attention of Friends,—such as, simplicity of living, high standards of honesty and integrity, and the advancement of all efforts toward the social betterment of mankind. The fact that Friends are no longer alone in many of these fields is no reason for yielding our position in the vanguard, and some fields are still distinctively our own. The present materialistic trend of thought and life, the rampant extravagance of living, both attendant upon great national prosperity—the increasing mad indulgence in idle and questionable entertainment, give our Society, with its protest against such absorption in temporal affairs and its firm adherence to the simple truths of man's real destiny, a peculiar mission today as in the time of Charles II. It should not be left to "rolled oats" and "ranges" and "whiskey" and other commercial products to perpetuate the qualities that have made the Quaker name synonymous with honesty and integrity.

In the fields of social service and reform Friends were pioneers and have long been standard bearers, and should not cease to be such merely because the ranks are growing. Their very real and personal appreciation of the universal Fatherhood of God, has given Friends a like appreciation of the universal brotherhood of man. Instead of relinquishing the banner of world-wide peace to other hands we should be found still bearing it in the van at the time of final victory. Now that civilization is reaching the mark of our first ideal in such reforms as liquor prohibition, humane treatment of dependent races, prison reform, and the many branches of philanthropy and social service, Friends should still point out the new ideals and continue to lead on to higher vantage ground.

Denominational barriers are being dissolved by the advance of God's truth, and practical if not organic unity of Protestant bodies may not be a far distant goal. Yet, into that union of purpose and service must be poured all the highest and best of each denomination. Until that time shall come Friends should be increasingly zealous and loyal in maintaining the purity and the power of our distinctive message, so that we may make a proper accounting of our stewardship of divine truth.

The Hour of Worship

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN

The most important hour in all the week may be, and I believe should be, the hour of worship. Whether it deserves this characterization depends sometimes upon the worshiper, and sometimes upon the environment of the sacred hour over which he has no control.

It ought to be the consummation hour of the previous days, when the moral and spiritual value of the motives and activities of the week are brought up to conscience and the eternal judgment seat of God for condemnation or commendation. It ought to be the inspirational hour for the following week, when noble vistas of life's duty, flashes of eternal light, and visions of lofty ideals fill the horizon of the soul with a heavenly prospect, and stir the heart with divine enthusiasm. Here stern duty, which says "Must," is robed in the beautiful garments of privilege, and says "You may, because God wants you to." Here responsibility assumes a size and shape that rests less heavily and oppressively upon weary shoulders, and the labor of the hands and feet keep time with a celestial music. Here sorrow throws aside the veil, and traces of the hand of the Great Character Maker are seen upon faces stained with tears, where He has come to lead the life into closer walks with Himself in the fellowship of His sufferings. Here old age confidently dwells upon hopes which increasingly assume the aspect of realities as the spirit nears the portals of the Larger Life. Here youth aspires greatly, dreams the impossible possible, and goes out to make it so because he feels God's approval upon the impulses of the soul. Here middle age is saved from the cynic's sneer, the critic's seat, the sordidness that comes from apparent failure.

All this comes to pass in the hour of worship because it gathers up within its compass, not only the immediate past in review, and the near future in prospect, but holds within its silent grasp and weaves into one fabric the spiritual and the material, the heavenly and the earthly, the eternal and the temporal. It brings the all within reach of the one, the universe is mirrored in a soul, and God stands by to own and possess a single human life. He who worships truly can —"see a world in a grain of sand,

And a heaven in a wild flower;
Hold infinity in the palm of the hand,
And eternity in an hour."

The bloom of worship is the emotion, which like the flower fills the life with beauty and fragrance. This in itself adorns the routine and the commonplace with a grace which is found in no other way. The fruit of worship, born of the inspiration of the holy hour, is the impulse which transforms the life, purifies the motive, ennoble the aspiration, and produces a righteous and holy character. The bloom will pass as the petals fall from the flower, but the fruit will abide, and those who form the habit of weekly worship with the people of God will find religious emotion ripening into Christian character.

This is a great ideal; let us keep it before us as an aim and an incentive. Let us make the hours for worship the choicest and holiest hours of all the week. Let us guard them from all intrusion, and keep them as an unbroken chain reaching through all the year. Let us unite in the hour of worship at the feet of God, and with common needs and common aspirations find in the inspiration of His presence the power which will make life more beautiful, its burdens lighter, its problems less perplexing, its temptations less alluring, its faith stronger, its ideals clearer, its hopes brighter.

A prayer that is all petition, and without praise, is ill mannered.

William Penn Angell

William Penn Angell, one of the most widely known and loved ministers of the Society of Friends, died November 20, 1913, at the home of his son, Dr. W. A. Angell, Minneapolis, Minn., in the 75th year of his age. His health had been failing for the past few months, but in spite of weakened physical powers, his mind remained clear and active up to the day he passed peacefully away.

William Penn Angell was a descendant of Thomas Angell, one of the original founders with Roger Williams of Providence, R. I. He was born in the town of Greenfield, Saratoga County, New York, January 21, 1839, and was educated in the common schools of that state and at Friends School at Union Springs, N. Y. In 1865 he married Francena Mott whom he survived less than three years. When about 30 years of age, he was recognized as a minister by the Moreau Monthly Meeting of Glens Falls Quarterly Meeting, and from that time until 1892 he was active as pastor of various meetings in Glens Falls Quarter, and in the general work of the ministry throughout New York Yearly Meeting.

In 1892 he was called to the pastorate of the Friends Meeting in Minneapolis, Minn., and continued in the work there until 1900. During this time the present beautiful meeting house in that city was built. In 1900 he was called to the meeting at Muncie, Indiana, and was pastor there and at New Castle until 1908, when, owing to the failing health of his wife, he gave up his active work in the ministry and devoted himself to her with constant solicitude until her death.

Since that time he has lived with his son in Minneapolis, and his daughter, Annabel Cunnington, in Delano, Minn. Upon his return to Minneapolis, he was made Pastor Emeritus of the Friends Meeting there and engaged occasionally in active service as strength and opportunity permitted. His sermons and messages during this last period were not exceeded in grasp of subject and intellectual and spiritual power by those given during any part of his 45 years of ministry.

He is survived by the following children: Robert H. Angell, of Aberdeen, S. D.; Edward M. Angell, of Glens Falls, and wife; Dr. William A. Angell, Minneapolis, Minn.; Mrs. Benjamin D. Glascock, Muncie, Ind.; and Mrs. Arthur Cunnington, Delano, Minn.

The funeral services were held at Dr. Angell's residence in Minneapolis, November 22d. Appropriate and feeling remarks were made by Samuel L. Haworth, Pastor of the Minneapolis Meeting and by Dr. J. H. Stuart, also of that meeting, an intimate friend of many years. He was buried beside his wife in the Angell plot in the Friends' section of beautiful Lake-wood Cemetery on the shore of Lake Calhoun, Minneapolis.

The following from the Glens Falls Times, written by one familiar with his life and work, is a worthy tribute:

"In the death of William Penn Angell, the Religious Society of Friends has sustained a severe loss.

He was a fine type of the old school and his long life was full of usefulness. One of the remarkable features of his ministry was the beauty of his personality. His whole life was a sermon that exalted the Lord and Master whom he loved and served. To this day in the meetings he served, his name is mentioned with reverence and affection by all who were privileged to know him. At the same time in the realm of his actual ministry he was a force to be reckoned with. His power in the pulpit was large. His messages were able and helpful. His whole service in the ministry was constructive and his part in building up the walls of the Kingdom of God will always stand. In the contemplation of his life one sees a life of beauty, a life of usefulness, a life of power, and a life beautiful in the close of its earthly ministry."

An Appeal From Tuskegee

Very often friends of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute inquire as to how they can help the school in some specific direction. There are numbers of ways, for instance:

1. $50.00 a year constitutes a scholarship. The student himself provides for his own board in labor and cash. A scholarship has to be provided for each student in attendance.
2. $1,200.00 constitutes a permanent scholarship, the interest alone being used for the purpose.
3. The school is constantly in need of money for its current expenses. This can be given in the form of a scholarship or in small amounts toward the General Expense Fund.

The Principal of the school will be glad to give full information upon any subject relating to the items, as above stated, to any persons desiring more detailed knowledge.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

For Peace or For War?

Ways in Which Friends of Peace are Helping Carry Out the Program of the Militarists

1. All friends of peace as well as all other citizens are helping to pay the amounts appropriated by Congress for military and naval expenses.

Most of us do not know just how or when we pay our share, because we pay it as a part of the price of the shoes, coats, hats, gloves, flour, meat, etc., that we are obliged to buy. If the military expenses of the government were smaller, all these necessities of life might be cheaper.

The amount which friends of peace, as well as others, pay each year for military and naval expenses, averages not less than $5.00 for each person; this means for each man, woman and child in the nation.

This means that in a family consisting of father, mother and three children, the average amount paid from the father's wages each year for military expenses is $25.00; for some families of five the actual amount is greater than this.

2. In addition to the above named amount which is paid each year for national expenses, there is also a bill for state military expenses, which is paid for by every citizen who pays taxes.

3. The general military expenses of the nation include not only the maintenance of the army, and the maintenance and increase of the navy, but also the expense of an educational campaign designed to accustom the people to the presence of soldiers; designed also to create in young men the desire to take up the profession of arms.

One of the latest schemes of this kind which has been announced is the holding of not less than four summer schools for military instruction in different parts of the United States. The young men invited to attend are the college boys. The officers of instruction will be officers of the regular army. The cost of making these plans and advertising them, and part of the cost of the summer camps will be paid by the War Department; that means that friends of peace, along with other citizens, pay the bills.

4. Many friends of peace are helping the militarists because year after year they are doing nothing definitely to oppose militarism. This kind of help through carelessness or indifference is the worst kind of enmity to the cause of peace. "He that is not for Me is against Me."

As friends of peace we must deplore the fact that a part of our effort as represented by a share of our earnings must go for the support and even for the extension of the military department of our government, but this is a condition we cannot escape for the present; it is a condition which has come to us largely as an inheritance from the past; we are reaping what past generations have sown. But we are under no obligation to add to this financial support, the support which comes from inaction; on the other hand, as good citizens and as Christian believers we are under obligation to act so vigorously and persistently that we shall not only neutralize our own unwilling contribution to the program of the militarists but make some real contribution to the work of bringing about international brotherhood and world peace.

Ways in Which Friends of Peace May Help to Oppose the Program of the Militarists

1. Spend some money definitely for the advancement of the peace reform.

How much money shall we spend? Let the answer be another question: Are you excusable if you spend a smaller amount definitely for peace than you are obliged to give for war expenses? If you put in just as much against militarism as you put in for it, it will average $5.00 per year for yourself and each other member of your family. If you have a son in some state university and you have not thought it worth while to object to his doing duty as a cadet, you have paid a considerable additional amount to equip him for being trained as a soldier.

Perhaps the financial burden which militarism has imposed is so great even in the United States that some families will say, "We cannot make ends meet if we pay $5.00 each per year to help the cause of peace;" can such a family be satisfied to spend nothing? Are we as yet so much oppressed, so enslaved, that we cannot make some attempt to become free?

Surely all can spend some money for the sake of lightening the burden that weighs upon us all. If each one would put in money according to his ability the day of release from militarism would be at hand.

2. Find out by reading, by writing letters, by talking, and by all means possible, what the program of the militarists is, and what they are really doing. More plans are on foot than most of us could imagine possible.

3. Find out by reading, by writing, by talking, and by all means possible, what the friends of peace are trying to do. Great plans are already formulated which await the intelligent co-operation of every citizen before they can be fully effective.

4. Decide now on some course of action and begin at once to carry it out to the end that your unwilling assistance to the cause of militarism may be more than equaled by positive assistance rendered for the cause of peace.

The greatness, the goodness and the gentleness of God should all conspire to evoke the gratitude of man.

The Cost of Militarism

In a recent editorial under the heading, "Counting the Cost of War," The Indianapolis Star speaks as follows:

It will be for the future to count the cost of war, not merely in life loss, not merely in heartbreaks, but in an imposition of billions of dollars as a dead load upon the oncoming generations. * * *

The enormous economic waste of military establishments is open to objection on every conceivable ground of mundane utility. The military fetish will fall of its own weight when the world awakens to the enormous charge it imposes, for which the only return is a momentary sense of pride, barbaric in its origin, which statesmen and designing private individuals mislabel "patriotism."

How many friends of peace who read these words with approval have at hand, or know how to secure, the facts and figures necessary to prove to a supporter of the military program that this statement in regard to the cost of war is true?

liams, of Carthage, and others, additional thoughts were given. The type of Christianity in the Church forms the type of convert. Put converts to work. If they do not stand it is often more of a criticism on the Church than on the evangelist or his methods, for the convert needs the care of a child rather than the treatment of an older member. S. Edgar Nicholson emphasized the fact that with all the failures that may come, we need evangelists, some one to get the ear of the outside world.

The evening session was led in devotion by Arthur Hammond, Carmel, with fitting remarks by Murray S. Kenworthy, chairman for the evening. Daisy Barr, of Muncie, brought to the Conference a message on "The Church and Social Service." We need to see the work of the church as a complete whole, which represented by a star, has the five points, to know, to unite, to teach, to serve, to use. The church should know the community politically, educationally and socially. Be in close touch with laborers, with amusements, organizations, clubs, etc., and then unite with everything good. We have been too clannish and have forgotten Lazarus at our gate. Then we will feel the need of teaching the Bible, Church history, social purity, how to worship, as well as the need of evangelism, which will include the whole world. Service will be the natural outcome, having gained by worship the strength to serve. Is it nothing to the church that annually 30,000 daughters are being sacrificed on the altar of impurity? Giving examples from real life, a strong plea was made for service on social purity lines.

The Church should use the public press to let the world know what she is doing. Her building should be open for use every day in the week.

On Thursday morning devotional exercises were conducted by Solomon B. Woodard, of Bloomington. Murray S. Kenworthy, of Richmond, spoke on the subject of "Deficiencies in our Church Organization and Methods." He said efficiency is the thing for which men are struggling in commercial enterprises and success is crowning their efforts. In the religious world the same is more or less true, and the church that adopts methods to meet the condition of the community is the one that is growing. Efficiency is determined by what we can do.

Many local congregations are weakened by being too remote from the place where their Monthly Meetings are held. There should be some plan by which the members can come closer in touch with the business meetings. It seems to be questionable whether the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight is meeting the need of the present. In the pastoral system we have failed to define the pastor's duty officially. The duties of many officials are not definitely defined. Many societies in the church are doing good work in the name of the church but have no official relation to it. The church has provided an associate membership list but no official arrangements to take care of them. In the case of new converts we are lacking in methods of follow-up work.

We have an organization centuries old, and while much good has been accomplished by it, we are holding to some of the ancient methods that will not accomplish results today. Traditional methods will not always meet the need of modern times. Our financial methods are not in keeping with the times and the way of conducting our business does not appeal to the people of today.

Charles E. Tebbetts, of Richmond, in his talk on Missions, said that our giving has not kept pace with our prosperity; and that the gift to make money is as much a divine gift as the gift in the ministry, and that both are of equal responsibility. He covered in a most comprehensive way some of the larger tasks of the church and made a strong appeal for the church to prepare herself to meet these in an efficient manner.

Morton C. Pearson, in discussing the subject of "Church Federation—Our Rural Problem," said we should get big enough in our interest in the salvation of the world, that denominationalism will become a secondary matter. The church should be the logical leader of the community and should seek methods to assume that leadership. To save the social life of the community the church should be open to every phase of honorable community life. Unity of effort must be accompanied by unity of spirit.

After the Committee on Resolutions had reported, the Conference adjourned with a feeling that the discussions had been of unusual importance and profit.

A New Magazine

With the December issue, the British Friend ceases publication, and will be merged into a new magazine which will probably be called "Present Day Papers." The new venture will be issued in this country under the editorial supervision of Rufus M. Jones, back of whom will be an editorial board in America and another in England. The magazine will be published monthly and will not attempt to cover denominational news or other matter pertaining to the immediate work of the Society.

A Crutch That Blossomed

"Aaron's rod was nothing but a stick, but it blossomed."

The door shut very, very softly, and mother went out. But the thought stayed.

Mother always went out when she had said something very important that she wanted the girls to think of. Her way was the very opposite of nagging. She knew well that this was one of those little seed-thoughts that need silence and darkness and letting alone, and nobody poking and pushing about in the mold to see if they are "rooting."

It was dark enough in the room mother had left, if that was all. Carol wanted it dark. Then she could not see the hateful thing that lay close to her hand, and if she lay still where they put her—as if she were a stick or a stone, or a piece of furniture—she need not feel it, either. If she had to move about, why, then, she must reach for her crutch.

That was the trouble—a crutch. A stick—what was that mother had said about blossoming? Just an answer to her bitter, muttering speech about the "stick." Well!

That "Well!" came out of Carol's heart, and was just like it—hot, bitter and resentful.

"Miss Caroline! Miss Caroline!"

The "girl" was calling from the front hallway, then from the porch, then from outside, as if she were running down the walk—a loud, frightened cry, a cry for help.

Carol began to be frightened herself. Where was mother? Why did nobody answer? What had happened? An eager hand went out for the despised stick, and Carol hopped over to the window which she flung wide, pushing back the closed blinds so as to lean out and get a view of the walk leading down to the open garden gate. A bicycle lay flat on the sidewalk just outside the gate, and Myra, "the girl," was awkwardly dragging a limp-looking burden up the graveled walk toward the porch, screaming pantiingly, "Miss Caroline! Miss Caroline."

Even as she went painfully over the stairs, Carol wondered why they called her, and not her mother, who was always at everybody's beck and call. Myra was a little thing, but not over strong. The poor girl who had fallen from the bicycle was no feather weight. Myra gladly welcomed the tall, strong girl—even though she was a crippled one—who came to her relief. Between them they got their burden to the porch, and into the big "Cape Cod" hammock, and then Carol hobbled quickly to the telephone and summoned a doctor.

Two weeks later Carol and her mother sat in her room talking over the future of the pale little shop girl who lay helpless in the next room—just where she had lain ever since the accident.

"If you had been here, mother, perhaps you could have helped her quicker, or better, or something!"

groaned Carol, remorsefully. "Myra is so little and I was so awkward with—this!" indicating the crutch which was now her constant companion.

Her mother's gaze rested almost lovingly for an instant on the symbol of Carol's life-long trouble.

"I think it was meant that I shouldn't be here, dear," she answered, gently. "I had just gone down to the pasture for some ripe berries for you, and so I didn't hear anyone calling, but you did all that anyone could have done—between you. And you have been taking care of her ever since."

"I haven't been able to do much yet," said Carol. "But, mother"—

"Well, dear?" her mother prompted, noticing the wistfulness of the suspended appeal.

"Why couldn't we—yes, I!" she added, boldly. "She's going to be another one just like—me!" she almost whispered, touching the crutch lightly, as if that told everything. "Only with this difference: that she is poor and I am rich, and she has nobody belonging to her, and I have you and father and the boys and Myra and everybody. Don't you think I ought to be good to her? Why, mother, what is the need of her ever going away from here? Couldn't I sort of adopt her—for a sister, you know? When she gets up, you know what the doctor says. She never will walk again—perhaps not even as well as I do. Just think of it! But I could make her happy, it seems to me. May I try? Tell me just what you think, mother!"

"I think," said her mother, laying a hand over the one that was absently caressing the crutch, "I think I have seen a crutch that blossomed! A good heart, and God's blessing will do that for any stick, even the knottiest and knurliest."—Anna Burnham Bryant.

The New Tariff

The new Democratic tariff bill is now a law, having received the President's signature on October 3d. Partisans are quite naturally disagreed as to its effect upon business—and politics. The public is disposed, however, to wait with calmness the outcome. The Democratic managers are already announcing that no immediate effect upon the high cost of living may be expected, which will be disappointing to many who have not looked deeply into economic matters of this sort. It is estimated that there will be an annual surplus of $18,000,000.00 under its operation.

Faint not nor fear, his arms are near;
He changeth not, and thou art dear;
Only believe, and thou shalt see
That Christ is all in all to thee.

Gratitude for little things is cultivated less in our lives than it should be. For it is abundantly true that small mercies may be tokens of a great love. To appreciate the small gift is the best way to understand the love of God that passeth understanding. At the return of the Thanksgiving season it is well for every one to look over life and select the small as well as the large blessings that indicate God's great love.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Traverse City, Michigan—On the evening of November 24th the officers and teachers of the Friends' Sabbath School of Traverse City, Michigan, held a banquet at the home of the superintendent of the school. The object of the gathering was to hear reports of the delegates to the State Sunday-school Convention held at Benton Harbor, Michigan, and to discuss the needs of the school in the light of the ideas and information gathered there. The chairman of the Sabbath School Committee acted as toastmaster, and after the general report was given, a free discussion was entered into by all, which proved to be very profitable and interesting. A more efficient school is sure to be the result of the pleasant evening thus spent together. There were twenty-seven present. The following Sunday, a continuation of the reports of the delegates was given at the opening of the Sabbath School.

On Sunday evening, November 30th, while the C. E. Society was singing, "The Fight is on, O Christian Soldier," the Indiana Yearly Meeting C. E. banner for "membership increase" was unfolded and hung upon the pulpit by the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of C. E. work. This came as a surprise, as only a few knew our Society had won the banner. It brought forth a burst of applause and cheers from the young people. It is the purpose of this Society to win the banner for another year.

Ira C. Johnson—Ira C. Johnson, Superintendent of the Evangelistic and Church Extension work of Indiana Yearly Meeting, has been quite sick for two weeks. He is very much better, and is now able to attend to all correspondence and will be able to take up the work fully in a short time.

West Milton—We are glad to report that our meeting is in a very prosperous condition. The young people are becoming more interested, and with their service in song and a good orchestra, the meeting promises great things for the community this coming year. With our pastor a resident with us, and occupying the parsonage, which has been nicely improved, we feel greatly encouraged and strengthened in the work. We are thankful to report that Cora H. Kittrell, wife of our pastor, is now able to be at home, and while she has not fully recovered from her serious illness, she is gaining sufficiently in health to add much to Brother Kittrell's ministry.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Rubio—Friends of Rubio and Hope-well meetings are building a new and commodious parsonage at Rubio. Sixty days' work have already been donated, which resulted in the excavation of a basement 24 by 26, a cement walk for the same, a new cement walk in front of the church and twenty-five logs hauled to the sawmill to make the frame work. Many of the men gladly left their own corn-gathering and donated a few days to help in the work of the church. The ladies brought in supplies and provided dinners at the pastor's home for the men who were working. At our last Monthly Meeting eight new members were received at Rubio, and there are more names to present for membership next month.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

A Workers' Conference for Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting was held at Emporia, Kansas, November 20-22. B. F. Allee, of Walnut Grove, J. Arthur Wollam, of Emporia, Thomas Williams, of Cottonwood, and Lyman G. Cosand, of Barclay, all gave stirring addresses. Lewis E. Stout, of Wichita, was present all through the meeting and added many helpful suggestions in all the sessions, aside from the masterful addresses which he gave and the powerful sermon on the Atonement, which he preached. The Conference was quite well attended throughout, and we certainly feel that it has been a time of great blessing and of feasting upon spiritual things, and a source of helpfulness to our Quarterly Meeting. The Conference was in charge of our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, B. Frank Allee, of West Walnut Grove Meeting.

Buffalo—Reports received from the local meetings at the recent sessions of Buffalo Quarterly Meeting show an increase in attendance and interest at each point. Abijah Cox, of Haviland, Kansas, was present and preached at several sessions. The Quarterly Meeting was an added encouragement to all.

Sadie L. Nichols preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at the M. E. Church at Buffalo.

Gate, Oklahoma—The Quarterly Meeting at Gate, November 20-23, was favored by the excellent sermons of L. Clarkson Hinshaw and by the "At Home and Abroad Missionary Campaign" efforts. Dates are made to hold sessions at all the eight preaching points of the Quarterly Meeting. Prof. Sceva B. Laughlin is a great help in building up sentiment favorable to sending the gospel to all lands. May Smith and Austin Lewis are to conduct the local campaign. Mary S. Harvey, who has recently been recorded a minister, has been chosen pastor.

Laurence Academy—Leroy Thornburgh is holding meetings at Laurence Academy. The question of the support of the Academy claimed the attention of the Quarterly Meeting, and a subscription of more than $100.00 was taken to help meet the salary of the teachers. Miss Kelsey resigned and went back to her home in Iowa, and Mrs. Laughlin will become the Assistant. Miss Laura Mendenhall is rendering good service in the dormitory. Her parents and the parents of Miss Kelsey sent eighty quarts of fruit to the dormitory. Miss Kelsey won the hearts of the students and will be greatly missed by them.

Scientific Temperance—Melissa Fellow is accompanying her husband, Henry C. Fellow, in visiting the public schools of Beaver County, Oklahoma, and is giving scientific temperance instruction and talking about the Loyal Temperance Legion for the children.

Chalk Mound—Calvin R. Choate, of Wichita, Kansas, held a series of meetings at Chalk Mound from November 19 to 30, which were very remarkable meetings. The preaching, which was Scriptural, was in the demonstration of the Spirit and with much power. Earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, warning against higher criticism, hypocrisy and dead formality on the one hand, and wildfire, fanaticism and foolish suggestions of Satan on the other, he faithfully pleaded with the Church not only to receive the Holy Ghost, but constantly to abide under His anointing and push the battle for the glory of God and the salvation of the lost. His messages to the unsaved were vivid warnings and strong pleadings not to presume on God's mercies, but to accept Jesus and be saved. His sermons were well illustrated with interesting incidents, many of them being taken from things that have transpired under his own observation. There were nineteen sessions in all. Over twenty persons were at the altar for definite blessing and the Church was much encouraged and strengthened. We are truly thankful to God for sending his servant this way and for the good work done.

Red Wing—Cora Lamb, of Wichita, closed a very successful series of meetings on November 30, at Calvary Monthly Meeting. Several bowed at an altar of prayer and were saved, while others received the blessing of sanctification. The preaching was clear and plain on Holy Ghost lines. Several will unite with the Church. The Evangelist also held a good meeting at Shannon Church. We truly praise the Lord for the good work that has been done. We are still believing that others will yet give their lives to the Lord.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

Unity, Maine—The prospects of the work here are bright. A mid-week prayer meeting has been organized in which there will be a weekly study of the International Sabbath School lesson; also a boys' club, in which instruction in "first aid to the injured" will be given. The meetings for worship are well attended, and there is a delightful spirit of unity and cheerfulness in the congregation.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

Winston-Salem—A friend recently visiting the meeting at Winston-Salem reports splendid progress made in the two years that meeting has been set up. The attendance at the Bible School and Sabbath morning service was between fifty and sixty. Evidence of spiritual growth was abundant and the ministry of David Sampson and wife suitable and efficient. Friends who assisted that meeting to become housed and established have made a good and lasting investment.

Greensboro—Arthur and Edna Chilson have recently spent a week at Greensboro, and on the night of November 23d spoke to a good audience. Much interest is being manifested in them and their mission by Greensboro Friends.

Science Hill—A unique birthday surprise was given Sarah E. Winslow, a minister at Science Hill, on her last birthday. Just as meeting closed the choir led by Francis P. Hubbard, sang "Nearer, My God to Thee." After the song, three little girls came forward and repeated birthday greetings; each gave a bouquet; a small boy, after reciting a poem, presented a large bouquet of chrysanthemums. Dr. C. C. Hubbard then made a pleasing and appropriate talk. A beautiful poem from Whittier was read by Ida Lowe, after which a well-filled purse was presented. In the expressions of surprise that followed the overflow of heart found an answering tenderness in the hearts of others. From the summit of years she still proclaims the way that leads into green pastures and beside still waters.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING

From The Friend

Visitation Committee—The prospect of the Visitation Committee of Haddonfield and Salem Quarter was fulfilled on the 30th, in well attended meetings at Tuckerton and Barnegat, New Jersey. The attendance at Tuckerton was about fifty. Of these, thirty were visiting Friends, perhaps a dozen were interested town people, and the balance resident members of our Society. Four favored communications seemed in harmony with the solemnity of the united worship in silence. More than one hundred were present at Barnegat, and as at Tuckerton, the meeting was a favored one. Visitors were rejoiced to see Friends' property restored, and to know that Friends' meetings are appreciated in that place.

West Grove—On Sixth-day, the 21st ultimo, with weather conditions which rendered even a light overcoat almost a burden, Western Quarterly Meeting met at West Grove. The attendance was fully up to the average, a number of visitors being present. A reverential silence covered the assembly for a period, after which Rufus King, of North Carolina, delivered a message of comfort and cheer to any who were under discouragement. John B. Garrett spoke forcibly concerning the Deity of our Savior; he also dwelt on the significance of Christ feeding the multitude when there appeared to be nothing but a few loaves and fishes for them. A supplication from Zebedee Haines further baptized the meeting. Charles Kirscht's sermon on the Kingship of Jesus Christ was in harmony with the expressed exercise which preceded it: it would surely be a calloused soul who could not say that it had been good to have been at the meeting.

Representative Meeting—An adjourned session of the Representative Meeting was held in Philadelphia last Sixth-day, the 28th ultimo.

A Friend suggested that it might be timely to send a telegram to President Wilson to encourage him in his efforts to avert war with Mexico. After weighty deliberation this was done and the message was despatched while the session of the meeting continued.

A letter from Jonathan E. Rhoads, whose health has confined him to his house for some time, called attention to a bill recently proposed to Congress to levy a special tax (a super tax) on incomes of $20,000 or over, this tax to be especially applied to the navy. The bill, the meeting was informed, is not likely to come out of the committee, but the concern of our absent Friend was spread upon the minutes and the committee of the Representative Meeting on legislation was specially charged to watch the bill.

In the line of unfinished business, information was given of the distribution of the letter, approved at last meeting, to the managers and masters of ocean steamships on the question of gambling by passengers. Several replies to the letter had been received, and in one instance it appeared that a wholesome order on the subject by the directors of a company had followed the receipt of the letter.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

Vermilion Quarterly Meeting Conference—Vermilion Quarterly Meeting held its conference of ministers and workers at Pilot Grove, Illinois, October 28, which proved to be one of the most helpful and spirit-filled meetings ever experienced by those present. The subjects before us were as follows. "A Passion for Souls; What is it?" Frank Ashby, of Georgetown, spoke on this subject and the Lord wonderfully blessed the message. We seemed to realize more than ever before the meaning of a passion for souls. Lindley M. Reagan, pastor of Friends' Chapel, gave the conference sermon. He took for his theme "Jude," and dwelt with the man and the epistle. His earnest message strengthened our faith in the inspired Word of God. In the afternoon Frank Stafford, another pastor in the Quarterly Meeting, spoke on "The Heart Cry of Jesus." Again the passion for souls was enlarged upon. Surely this was the cry which came from the heart of our Savior. Our present methods of Evangelism were discussed by Carl F. Miller, pastor of Vermilion Grove Meeting. His main thought was that we might pick out the weak places in our evangelistic methods today and improve upon them in order that greater work might be accomplished for our Master. The day was most profitably spent.

Westfield—Revival services are being held at Westfield in charge of Robert Pelt. He is an interesting and forceful speaker, and has sufficient personality to impress his message upon the hearers.

IT CAN BE DONE

If every one interested in the success of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will get busy, we can easily add one thousand new names to our subscription list by December 31st. But it will take some effort. Families are now making up their lists of periodicals for 1914. Read again the article on page two in last week's issue, and set out to get at least one new subscriber. Many neighborhoods have not yet been canvassed thoroughly. One thousand new names by December 31. Will you help?

THE LATEST FROM MEXICO

News of Friends' Mission at Victoria, Mexico, continues to drift in slowly since the great battle there, November 16-18. The daily papers reported early last week that automobiles had set out from Brownsville, Texas, bound for Victoria, to rescue all the Friends' missionaries.

Letters from R. S. Tice to Charles E. Tebbetts under date of November 22d and 23rd, bring the cheering news that both the missionaries and their property were safe. The battle began at 7:30 o'clock on Sunday morning, the 16th, and continued until early Tuesday, the 18th, when the rebels took possession of Victoria. The missionaries put up their American flags on all their buildings, and in this way saved the barn at the farm, from which some of the Federals fought for a time.

The rebels took the horses, however, and the best mule, but this was rescued later by Mr. Tice. Some fodder and corn were also taken, but later Mr. Tice secured an order from the commander prohibiting all molestation in the future, either of themselves or property.

A famine threatens the city, but the mission has its cows and pigs and pumpkins to use for food, if they are allowed to keep them. The colonel offered to send a guard to protect the ranch in case of further molestation. Mr. Tice wrote that they were getting rid of the children as rapidly as possible, sending them to their homes so as to be ready to get out at the first opportunity. There is great difficulty in getting checks cashed. The next word will probably be of the arrival of the party at the United States border.

RALLY DAY AT NEW CASTLE

Sunday, November 30, was a great day at New Castle. As the result of a four weeks' effort to increase the interest and attendance in the Sunday-school, over four hundred printed invitations were sent out, besides the personal invitation system adopted by each class.

Two new classes were organized: a Men's class and a Young People's class. Thirty-two men joined the new class the first day.

In every particular, with the exception of unfavorable weather, the rally day was all that could be desired. The enrollment jumped from eighty-two on the previous Sabbath to one hundred and eighty, the highest in the history of the school. The greatest increase was shown in the two extremes of age, the primary classes and the senior adult classes.

Take the senior class for an example. Heretofore, the seniors have been combined in one mixed class, numbering an average of about fifteen. Yesterday this class was divided into men's and women's classes, and the aggregate strength was forty-nine. The combined morning offering was $7.65, an increase of about five dollars over the ordinary.

At the close of the exercises Frank E. Beach delivered a short address to the children, to which the grown-ups paid the closest attention, and Dr. Kelly, president of Earlham College, spoke a few timely words. So congested was the audience room that the teachers had to stand in the aisles. The room was beautifully decorated with cut flowers, mostly roses, for which New Castle is famous.

At the service following, the church was crowded to hear a masterful and scholarly discourse by President Kelly, of Earlham College. Dr. Kelly had been invited because of the rally day feature in the Bible school, which preceded the church service, and his sermon supplanted these exercises most perfectly.

Dr. Kelly took as his text these words from the gospel of Luke: "And Jesus grew in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." This theme, divided into its four parts, furnished the basis of an intensely interesting and practical discourse of forty-five minutes duration.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 21.

Subject—The Division of the Land.Lesson—Joshua 12-14. Commit verses 13, 14.Golden Text—Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Matthew 6: 33.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 21.

Topic—The Christmas Spirit, and how it may prevail. Isaiah 9: 2-7.

The Christmas tide is the period of joy, of thanksgiving, of helpfulness, of kindly deeds. The angels proclaimed a message of peace on earth, good will to all men.

The spirit of Christmas is the spirit of helping to lift the burdens of others. Christ came as the messenger of salvation for all men and for all ages.

But the message of Christmas is lost in part if it means only the temporary relief of human suffering. Men must be taught how to get away from that which makes them suffer and which makes them to be in want. Christ's power to uplift and to change the bad conditions of life should be emphasized in all its fullness.

The spirit of helpful ministration can be perpetuated by realizing what a great privilege it is to bring sunshine into other lives, and by continuing to practice the precepts which the Scriptures so plainly teach. Try to cultivate the practice of helping other people, and one will be surprised at the blessings that inevitably come into his own life.

In the prayer meeting, plan a few brief talks, in which the speaker tells what Christmas means to him.

COLLEGE PARK ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS

The Forty-ninth Semi-Annual Meeting of this Association was held on Seventh-day, Eleventh Month first, 1913, at their meeting house in College Park, San Jose, California. Meeting for worship at 10:30 a. m. The absence of so many who usually attend was felt. Rain during the night and early morning kept some away, yet the house was nearly filled. William C. Allen and Elizabeth Allen returned from the Peace Conference at The Hague, were gladly welcomed. Gurney Binford, missionary from Japan, and Elizabeth W. Bacon from Germantown, were acceptably with us. William C. Allen, Walter Vail, Hannah Moore and Elizabeth M. Shelley were the speakers in the devotional meeting, and William C. Allen offered prayer. The meeting was followed by a brief business session. In the absence of Dr. Murray, the presiding clerk, Walter Vail, was chosen to preside. Reports from the Treasurer, the Japanese and Ram-Allah mission were read, and committees appointed to receive contributions for both, in addition to an appropriation from the treasury for Japan. A committee to nominate officers with one or two other committees was the preliminary business for this session. The report of the Japanese mission brought Gurney Binford to his feet. He spoke of his delightful acquaintance with Joel and Hannah E. Bean, when it was his privilege to go to Honolulu with them on the same boat seven years ago. At the conclusion of his address, adjournment was taken for lunch and a social hour.

The meeting reconvened at 1:30 o'clock for business. After the usual pause of silence, business opened by all rising and repeating in concert, 1. John IV: 7, 13. Letters received during the intermission from Joel Bean and Lily Cox were read. The subject of holding special meetings in the Bay cities about San Francisco was introduced and discussed and referred to William C. Allen, Edward Alexander Wright, Walter Vail and Elizabeth H. Shelley, with liberty to hold such meetings if way should open for them. Four by request were received as members. The program for the afternoon was then nearly followed. 2. The London Epistle read by Arthur Vail. 3. Poem by Rudyard Kipling read by Walter Vail. 4. Holland and Peace Conference by William C. Allen and Elizabeth C. B. Allen. After discussion and voluntary remarks the Forty-ninth semi-annual meeting, with the usual pause of silence, came to a close.

At the meeting on First-day Gurney Binford preached, George N. Jones spoke briefly, and there were three prayers. As the meeting closed Gurney Binford by invitation gave an address of about forty minutes on the work of Friends and the influence of Dr. Nitobe in Japan, and the prospect of organizing three monthly meetings of Friends in Japan. BETTER POSITION

And Increased Salary as a Result of Eating Right Food.

There is not only comfort in eating food that nourishes brain and body but sometimes it helps a lot in increasing one's salary.

A Kans. school teacher tells an interesting experience. She says:

"About two years ago I was extremely miserable from a nervousness that had been coming on for some time. Any sudden noise was actually painful to me and my nights were made miserable by horrible nightmare.

"I was losing flesh all the time and at last was obliged to give up the school I was teaching and go home.

"Mother put me to bed and sent for the doctor. I was so nervous the cotton sheets gave me a chill and they put me in woolens. The medicine I took did me no apparent good. Finally, a neighbor suggested that Grape-Nuts might be good for me to eat. I had never heard of this food, but the name sounded good so I decided to try it.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts and soon found my reserve energy growing so that in a short time I was filling a better position and drawing a larger salary than I had ever done before.

"As I see little children playing around me and enter into their games, I wonder if I am the same teacher of whom, two years ago, the children spoke as 'ugly old thing'.

"Grape-Nuts food with cream has become a regular part of my diet, and I have not been sick a day in the past two years." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

He was unassuming and quiet in his Christian life and church work, but deeply interested in the welfare of the church and community. He was always a champion of those things which he thought would make conditions better for the development of young people, and his strong conviction of right and wrong made him an enemy of anything that rendered it harder to live an upright life. Two Men of Power

CLYDE TULL

THE ONE

Dynamic, he molds men to his will
And scorns them molded; bids them fulfill Machine-like functions, then laughs with glee
At their soullessness, their sychophant knee,
Or sullen envy. Inspired by greed
He crushes weaker men, bids them take heed
The Fit survive. His arrogant might Enthrones false gods, brings withering blight
To faith in self, coarsens the strain
Of manhood. Broadcast spreads the pain
Of Doubt and Hate. Men cringe and cower
Before this brutal man of power.

THE OTHER

Benignant, 'mongst humble folk he lives
In glad equality, nor gives
A thought to Pride. With wholesome mind
Bent to his task, with heart that's kind
Toward everyone, he goes his way,
So free from false ambition's sway,
So pure and finely sane is he—
His life exhales unconsciously
The breath of Love. Whose faith is dim Finds confidence in God through him.
With radiant hope men rise and tower
Before this lowly man of power.

Relationship of Our Denominational Boards

At its meeting on October 23d last, the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting adopted the following report of a special committee, which had been appointed in April to consider the relationship of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting to the corresponding Boards of the various Yearly Meetings. It is important that all members of all Boards give careful consideration to matters contained in this report.

REPORT

To the Executive Committee:

In considering the relationship of the various Boards of the Five Years Meeting to the corresponding Boards of the different Yearly Meetings, it needs to be kept in mind that as yet the Five Years Meeting has only limited power and legislative authority. This being true, the scope and power of the Boards appointed by the latter body are correspondingly limited.

Without doubt Friends generally have begun to regard this central body as the governing body of Orthodox Quakerism in America, and this probably foreshadows an ideal status that will ere long be realized, but until that time comes it would seem unwise for the Boards to assume an independent authority over their respective fields that they do not yet possess, which may lead to unfortunate complications with the various Yearly Meeting Boards, and expensive and unnecessary duplications of efforts, that are likely to produce a reaction in the minds of a large part of our membership that might threaten the permanency of the Five Years Meeting itself.

However this may be, it seems important that at least a working understanding be attempted between the Boards of the central body and the corresponding Boards of the several Yearly Meetings. We would suggest, therefore, the following:

1. That it shall be considered the province of the general Boards to lay plans for the systematic and harmonious organization of the whole church in their respective fields, that as far as possible there may be unity of purpose and procedure in all the Yearly Meetings.

2. That the general Boards shall endeavor to establish harmonious and systematic relationship with the corresponding Boards of all the Yearly Meetings, with a view to inducing intelligent and friendly co-operation in the development of these systems of organization.

3. That so far as it may seem feasible the general Boards seek to make the corresponding Yearly Meeting Boards the active, working organism for the execution of the plans agreed upon, thus conserving our financial interests and avoiding unnecessary duplication and friction, with the further result of solidifying and strengthening our denominational activities in their several fields. The potentiality of this realistic exhibition of co-operation will be immeasurable.

4. That where fields of work may be opened that do not seem to belong to any particular Yearly Meeting, as a means of broadening our influence as a church, the general Boards shall take full charge of the work that falls within their scope, and shall be entitled to call for the needed moral and financial support from all the corresponding Yearly Meeting Boards and from the entire membership which is interested in these particular kinds of activity.

5. That in every way possible, the general Boards seek to help and strengthen the work of the corresponding Yearly Meeting's Boards, and that these in turn reciprocate these efforts by endeavoring to strengthen the hands of the Central Boards. It is only in this way that the church as a whole can be built up and her influence broadened in the world.

6. That in accordance with action already taken, the general Boards seek the help of the Yearly Meeting Boards in arranging times when the interests, financial and otherwise, of the Central Boards may be properly presented before the membership in the respective Yearly Meetings. When this co-operative system is worked out, and the membership of the church as a whole sees that the general Boards are a strength to the corresponding work in each Yearly Meeting, and that not only by the assistance rendered to the Yearly Meeting Boards but by the establishment of new centers of activity, the whole church is to be built up, we believe that a maximum of financial support will be assured that will not be certain under any other conditions.

We, therefore, recommend that these six suggestions be adopted as rules governing the procedure of our various Boards, and that the committee direct them accordingly.

S. E. NICHOLSON,

Sabbath Observance

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance was held on Monday, November 24th, in the chapel of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, in two sessions, luncheon being served in the interval. Auxiliary societies from several states gave reports of progress during the year. The Field Secretary, having sent out over eight hundred letters and appeals to club women throughout the country asking them to express by informal action their views on the subject of preserving a day of rest and worship, has received a large number of replies giving "heartly co-operation," "cordial support" and "entire approval" of the work the Alliance is endeavoring to do. The Field Secretary is making engagements this winter to speak on two topics: "Giving the Immigrant the American Sunday," and "What Are We Doing With Our Sunday?"

In the open conference almost everyone present participated, and various as were the questions and answers all were united in the conclusion that the cause of religion, the work and life of the church itself must largely depend on the attitude Christians themselves take towards keeping the Lord's Day "holy."

Count your many blessings,
Name them one by one,
And it will surprise you
What the Lord hath done.

Getting Back to First Principles

The essence of Quakerism in Fox's day was the re-discovery of the great and fundamental truth that there was One, even Christ, who could speak directly to the deepest need of human life. George Fox did not rebel against the form of existing ecclesiasticism. Had he found in the "steeple houses" the satisfaction which his soul sought, he at least would not have been the founder of a new religious sect. It was the sham, the unreality, the emptiness of the Church life and the Church message, against which he protested, and which led him ultimately to discover that relief must come from within.

He put to the severest test every hope which sprang from the existing order, and these all failed him, leaving him in despair and with no ray of light pointing to any safe habitation. Then it was that in his extremity he found the door of opportunity. By a process that plainly showed the revelation of God, he grasped the fact that Christ Jesus was able, and He alone, to speak to his condition. Then did his heart leap for joy, and this re-discovered truth became the burden of his wonderful messages that well-nigh revolutionized the ecclesiasticism of all England, and transplanted a new gospel among the American colonies.

No one has yet been able to improve upon this fundamental truth of Friends belief and of our denominational message. Indeed this is the very soul of Christianity, the essence of evangelical truth, the very core of the gospel in its application to human need in all ages. What the world needs to know today, no less than in the seventeenth century, is that Jesus Christ can speak to every human condition. Nominally this truth may be accepted everywhere, but for lack of its practical exemplification, multitudes are groping in sin and wandering in spiritual ignorance, while wrong holds the reins in the social order and error leads blindly the teeming millions all about us.

The hope of the world and of every problem that vexes the souls of men is Jesus Christ. Amid the sin and vice and greed that grips the inhabitants of earth in this generation, amid the squalor and want and misery of our city slums, amid the shams and vagaries of our social and religious life, amid the doubts and uncertainties of a materialistic age, wherever wrong lifts up unholy hands to curse mankind, wherever iniquity throws its slimy coils about the innocence of childhood and of womanhood, wherever honest doubt is groping blindly for a vision that does not reveal itself, wherever infidelity in its ignorance tramples beneath its feet the holy shrines of faith and consecration, wherever darkness and despair has gripped a human soul, there will a message that reveals the Savior of earth in His reality to the consciousness of needy humanity be embraced and welcomed gladly.

Perhaps as Friends we have lost something of that fine perception of religious truth that mirrors the revelations of God in human consciousness. Apparently we have yielded overmuch to the temptation to reduce religion to formulæ and to gauge the Christian life by the fixed rules of tradition and of custom, or we have gone to the other extreme and have sought to understand our relationship to God by the strict rule of logic or by the same exactness as is applied to a problem in mathematics or a theory in science.

Religion is a life, and when under the power of the Spirit, can no more be limited in its scope or measured by the rules of reason than can the human life be put into a straight jacket that cramps its every aspiration and remain a normal, healthy life. The early Friends believed that the same Spirit which revealed Divine truths to the world in the olden days, and which inspired the writing of Scriptural truth was still operating upon the understandings of men, shedding new light upon the Scriptural pronouncements, interpreting established truth in terms of present day necessities and conditions and revealing the pathway to Jesus Christ to all who would but seek Him. Who can doubt that that same Spirit is in the world today operating upon human life whenever a heart is open to receive the truth?

Our concern is that Friends shall get back to first principles by exemplifying the Christian life and by declaring a virile message that will be the savor of life to this age as it was to that of Fox and Barclay and Penn. The world is tired of hollowness and pretense. Labor is thinking as it has never thought in any previous age and only the realities of a genuine gospel as exemplified in daily life will ever appeal to it strongly. Society will never forsake the tinsel and outward show of its daily rounds of quest after pleasure and gratification except for the call to a life that gives large promise of better things. The sordid life of a multitude that follows the mad rush after greed and wrong in any sphere will never turn aside for anything short of a living truth that satisfies the highest needs of man's aspirations upward and Godward.

It is no time for Friends to be satisfied with the ordinary and the commonplace in our religious experience and practice. The call of the age is for the reincarnation of the great and fundamental truths as proclaimed when Quakerism had its birth. The Christian world needs the touch and inspiration and the quickening of this living gospel, as it applies itself to the world tasks of human redemption. By every right, if we have not lost our heritage, Friends should be in the vanguard of the evangelism of this age that is seeking to apply a living gospel to every condition of human life. Herein lies our mission as the Society of Friends today, and we are already overdue to take our proper place in performing the great tasks to which God is calling the Christian Church.

A National Conference

In last week's issue we suggested the desirability of a national meeting of men belonging to the Society of Friends to consider our denominational needs and the best ways to meet them, in some such manner as characterized the great gathering of our Methodist men in October. In the very nature of the situation, such a gathering could not be official, and its conclusions would not of necessity be binding. No one could doubt, however, that the deliberations of a representative body of from one hundred to two hundred men would have far-reaching influence in shaping the policies and procedure of the Church as a whole. Indeed, it is a question whether such a gathering would not be better able to get at the heart of some of our problems by being unhampered by official and disciplinary and ecclesiastical rules.

The Executive Committee might with propriety consider the subject, and if deemed advisable might authorize the holding of such a conference, indicating the scope of the discussion or not as seemed best. The program of the denomination will be determined by the vision of its tasks. Possibly our lack of program, which seems apparent in large degree, is an indication that our vision of denominational tasks is somewhat vague and indistinct.

One thing appears to us to be quite apparent, and that is the practical impossibility of continuing permanently the provincial policy of laying denominational emphasis upon community activity to the exclusion of centralized activity. The Five Years Meeting is an attempt to voice our denominational unity. But unity without a purpose is like having power with no visible means of applying it. There are vital problems concerning our tasks, our procedure, the best means of accomplishing results, and somebody needs to solve them. What do Friends think of the proposition?

"Consider Christ Jesus"—Heb. 3: 1.

BY LUKE WOODARD

No. VI

His Resurrection

The resurrection of Christ is one of the principal doctrines of Christianity, and sustains an intimate relation to every other. His death was the necessary antecedent of His resurrection, and His birth—made in the likeness of men—was a necessary antecedent to His death.

In view of the great importance of this doctrine it is well that it is established by "many infallible proofs." Had He not risen from the dead the proof of His Deity would have been wanting, and who could have had faith in Him as the Savior for the whole world if like other men He was held under the dominion of this "last enemy"? Or had He, like Enoch and Elijah, been "translated that He should not see death," that world-embracing revelation of God's love, that supreme manifestation of His righteousness, that provision of abounding grace, by which the sovereign lawgiver can "be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus," would not have been vouchsafed to men.

The Fact of the Resurrection

It is made evident: (1) By Christ's own prophecy, "After three days I will rise again"; (2) By the double witness of both friends and foes, that on the third day the tomb was found empty; (3) By the testimony of angels; (4) By that of the disciples to whom, on that day, and at various other times, He showed Himself alive; and (5) The testimony of the apostle Paul, who says "He was seen of me also as of one born out of due time," and finally that of the ascended Christ himself who uttered in the hearing of His beloved disciple John these words: "Fear not, I am the First and the Last; I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore." (Rev. 1: 17, 18.)

The Credibility of the Disciples

The credibility of a witness depends on several particulars, such as his capacity to understand that which is involved in the inquiry; his opportunity to know the facts; his reputation for veracity. These requisites were all possessed by the disciples of our Lord. They were men of sound mind, capable of understanding what was evident to their sense of sight, hearing and touch. As to the facts in regard to the resurrection of Christ, they had the most ample opportunity to know them. The scene at the cross left no doubt in their minds of the reality of His death; it was not a case of swooning, for His heart was pierced; they saw the body laid in the tomb; they found that tomb empty on the third day and angels told some of them how it came to be so, and the intelligence thus received was quickly borne to others of His disciples, some of whom were too incredulous to believe until they had seen for themselves that the tomb was empty; and added to all this Jesus showed Himself alive to them, spake to them, showed them His hands and His side. He invited them to handle Him, and, to dispel any apprehension that it was only an apparition, He said: "A spirit has not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Not only immediately after His resurrection but at intervals for forty days, often in broad daylight, He showed Himself to them, walked, ate and conversed with them. Mistake as to His identity under such circumstances was impossible. The fact that they were incredulous, "slow of heart to believe" and required the most palpable proof, lends weight to their testimony, and their sincerity was evidenced beyond question.

Our faith in the reality of the resurrection is confirmed by a consideration of what is involved in a denial of it. The Jews and the disciples were alike agreed as to His death and burial; they were also in harmony as to the fact that on the third day the sepulchre was empty. History knows of only two ways in which this was accounted for, viz.: the testimony of the disciples that He was risen; and secondly, that of the soldiers who guarded that tomb who said that His disciples came by night and stole Him away.

This story of the Roman guard is for many reasons unbelievable. Under Roman law the penalty was death for a soldier to sleep on guard. That all of them, whatever the number, four, eight or twelve, with such a penalty hanging over them should fall asleep and sleep so soundly and long as not to be awakened by the sound of the hurried removal of the stone and the body is utterly incredible. Men are not competent to testify to what transpires when they are sound asleep. These soldiers, supposing they were asleep, could not with any show of reason testify that Christ did not rise.

In view of the fact that the disciples had, within a few hours, fled for their lives, it is highly improbable that they would venture beyond a death-dealing guard, especially as the night was made light by a full moon, and they could not hope to avoid discovery by an armed guard placed close to the sepulchre to prevent its being robbed of its sleeping tenant. They could not suppose the guard would all be asleep. Even were it so, the disciples had no means of knowing it. Again, what motive could induce them to venture upon so hazardous an undertaking; of what use to them would be a corpse? How would they dispose of it? If it was sacred to them, could they find a better resting place than a new tomb wherein it was nicely embalmed, adjacent to their Holy City?

That story of the guard bears unmistakable marks of falsehood and perjury, and is in keeping with Matthew's account of the bribing resorted to by the leading actors in the trial and death of Jesus. For would not those who had repeatedly shown themselves bitter enemies to Christ, who had sought to put Lazarus to death to prevent people from believing in the One who had raised him from the dead, would not those who were guilty of the infamous crime of crucifying the Lord of life and glory stoop to any expedient to justify their course, and escape the stigma consequent upon having put to death one whose innocence and Messiahship were attested by the astonishing fact that He rose from the dead? And would not Pilate acquiesce in the vile plot for fear of being reported to Rome as having consented to the crucifixion of One who, from the judge's seat, he had several times pronounced innocent? Well might the guilty parties dread the inevitable consequences of Christ's resurrection being made public.

On the other hand, the eleven disciples and the women would affirm that angels told them He had risen; that they saw Him repeatedly, and under circumstances that made mistake as to His identity impossible.

When the testimony of a witness is in the direction of his own interest it is received with a degree of caution, if not of doubt. On the other hand increased confidence attends the testimony of one who testifies to his material disadvantage. This was the case with the disciples of Christ. In the face of threatened scourging, imprisonment and death, they boldly preached the resurrection of Christ in the very city where He had been put to death, and in the hearing of the very persons who brought about His crucifixion, charging them with being His betrayers and murderers. That eleven men in their right minds should conspire together to declare that their Master had risen from the dead when they knew it was not true, knowing it would cost them the loss of all in this life that they held dear, is too incredible for any sane man to believe. But in view of the fact that they confidently believed their eternal happiness and that of those who heard them hinged upon the acceptance of Christ crucified and risen, their self-denial, zeal and boldness have a most rational explanation.

As Christ after His resurrection did not show Himself openly to all the people, how are we to account for the fact that the disciples succeeded in convincing vast numbers of the fact that He had risen? The answer is at hand; "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all." This gospel which at "the first began to be spoken by the Lord was afterward confirmed unto us by them that heard Him, God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to His own will." (Heb. 2: 2-4.)

The resurrection of Christ is the prime proof of His

Deity. "Jesus Christ which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, is declared to be the Son of God with power according to the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." (Rom. 1: 3, 4.)

It is also the certain pledge of a future life and of our own resurrection: "As by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus, will God bring with Him," and the same event proclaims the certainty of a judgment to come. "God hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance unto all men in that He hath raised Him from the dead."

The reader may notice that in this discussion I have taken for granted the trustworthiness of the four evangelists together with that of the entire New Testament. I make no apology for this. It is a maxim of common law that if any document has stood the test of rigid examination for a great length of time, the law presumes it to be genuine, and the burden of proving it to be otherwise devolves upon him who denies. The writings of the four evangelists have had a place in and confidence of the best of men through all ages. Accordingly I do not hesitate to say that the resurrection of Christ is as well authenticated as any event of equal antiquity, and consequently the truth of Christianity is established with a certainty that makes the rejecter of it both unreasonable and culpable.

The Social and Political Theories of Friends

BY LINDLEY D. CLARK

Few Friends would assume that our branch of the Church had a theory of society or of the State that could be called distinctively our own. Our ideas and practices may be to us so much a matter of course that we need to be discovered to ourselves no less than to the world at large by the inquiries and classifications of the outside investigator. This is to some extent the result that is accomplished by a German doctor of political science, Augusta Jorns, in a volume entitled "Studien über die Sozialpolitik der Quäker," or Studies in the Social and Political Theories of Friends.

This author credits our forefathers in the faith with the origination of a theory of society that was distinctive and vital. I have not seen a copy of the book, but it was reviewed in a German periodical devoted to social and economic subjects, the review being brought to my attention and translated for me by a fellow-worker in the United States Department of Labor. The interest that attaches to the work is, of course, in part historical, in so far as we find satisfaction in reviewing the worthy deeds of those whose heirs we claim to be; but unless it is far more inspirational and stimulative in its effect on our own ideals and resolves for achievement, a knowledge of the approbation of the author and her reviewer will tend to hurt rather than to help us. But because I believe the latter result may well be anticipated, while the historical knowledge will strengthen us and give confidence of success, I am asking that the review as translated be given space in the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, hoping to say something in an early issue along the lines suggested by this record of past attainments and abiding results.

The book was published in 1912, being one of a series of social-economic discussions of the colleges of Baden. The translation of the review follows:

"This work is based on extensive studies of original sources which were made in the Friends' Reference Library in London. Use was made not only of all available printed matter relating to the Quaker movement, but annual reports and minutes of meetings which in part were only to be found in manuscripts dating from the earliest stages of the movement were also put at the disposal of the author and utilized by her in her work. The material has been treated in an interesting manner and is clearly arranged.

"Although the Friends were above all a religious society, such as were numerous formed in England in the seventeenth century, they occupied themselves not only with questions of the soul and the hereafter, but they developed, furthermore, an extensive and successful practical activity, as they desired also to set forth the theory of Christian brotherly love in practice. It is amazing and admirable how these idealists introduced in various spheres methods of social reform which differed considerably from those practiced at the period; and what is more, the soundness of the fundamental principles of these methods has been more and more acknowledged up to the present time. The care of the poor, for instance, was organized by them in a manner to grant assistance with a view to ultimate self-help, and in pursuance of this theory they advocated regulation of the system of procuring employment. While they undertook with special zeal the education of children, they intervened to prevent their exploitation by industrial labor. Similar examples could be quoted in any number. There exists hardly a single sphere of welfare work in which the Quakers did not engage in a systematic manner, and their activity in several of these directions has been so full of results as to serve as a model of its kind, so that the complete reform in the treatment of the poor, the insane, prisoners, etc., is traceable directly to the Quaker movement.

"The Quakers, however, did not content themselves with the promotion of these endeavors in benevolence and welfare work, but exercised also an influence on activities of a highly political nature. They brought, for instance, a religious, ethical undertone into the English free trade movement, and into the movement for the abolition of slavery. By cultivating at an early period, in the middle of the strongest Manchester movement, the idea of social responsibility, the Friends have done their share in smoothing the path for social legislation. The fundamental theory of the Friends,—'Riches and abilities are goods entrusted to men for faithful administration and proper use,' is in a certain sense also followed by civic social reform, which acknowledges the right of the employer to profits, in so far as these profits are not obtained through exploitation."

The Simultaneous and Every Member Canvass

United Missionary Movement

BY J. CAMPBELL WHITE

Each denomination is doing its best to reach its own constituency through all regular channels, but in addition to this, several hundred interdenominational Missionary Conferences are being held. Over twenty teams of speakers have been organized, making it possible to hold twenty or more conferences in different cities simultaneously, for at least a part of the season. All of these conferences aim to present the conditions and needs both at home and abroad which call for a great Missionary advance. They also show clearly the great advantages of proper Missionary Education and of the organized personal canvass for subscriptions. There are about 23 millions of Protestant church members in America. To get them to act together, and to act simultaneously on anything, is a great undertaking. But the responses coming in from many parts of the country indicate general interest and sympathy on the part of pastors and Church leaders in this United Missionary Campaign.

At the present time, about forty million dollars annually are being contributed by American Churches to Home and Foreign Missionary work of all kinds, over 60 per cent. of this amount being for Mission work at home. By this simultaneous canvass, it is hoped that some millions of dollars annually will be added to the income of the various Missionary agencies of the Churches. It is also perfectly evident that the Churches can all do their best work by close co-operation, rather than in isolation from each other. "Comprehension is half way to sympathy" and it comes only by contact.

There is in reality a great fundamental spiritual unity among all Protestant Churches, which is only revealed as these bodies act jointly in a great common enterprise.

The Every Member Canvass

It is well known that the United Presbyterian Church is a pioneer in the effort to enlist every member of the Church, young and old, in the support of all the departments of their Church organization. The following editorial utterance from The United Presbyterian of November 20th, ought to be considered as expert testimony upon the importance and practicability of the every member canvass, and its suggestions might well be heeded by Friends generally.

The paper says in part:

"It is probably known by the members of the Church generally that the last General Assembly made it the duty of the Missionary and Efficiency Committee to organize and direct, annually, an effective Every Member Canvass for Home Support and for the Missionary and Educational work of the Church; this canvass to be completed in time to enable the Committee to present a full report upon the results of the same to the General Assembly of that year. Now it ought not to be necessary for the Committee to spend its time and strength in convincing the congregations that have not yet tried this system that it is far better than any plan that they may have followed heretofore. The experience of the congregations that have tried it affords ample proof of that. It was the unanimous testimony of all those who were present at the Pittsburgh Conference that the Every Member Canvass not only increases very largely the offerings of the congregation, thus placing it financially upon Easy Street, but it proves itself a blessing to the congregation in every way. Many pastors who have tried the Every Member Canvass have declared that even if the General Assembly should give up the plan, they will adhere to it in the interest of the welfare of the congregation itself.

"The congregation is yet to be heard from that having tried it, is not heartily in favor of it. If the success in some cases has been only partial, it is because the effort has been weak. Committees have not been faithful or prompt to do their work. The need and the plan have not been fully explained, and the enthusiastic interest of the congregation has not been secured. If the Canvass is properly conducted it will in every case bring larger offerings for home support and for the missionary and educational work of the Church, and it will bring a blessing of revival to the life and work of the congregation. It will add to the intelligence of the membership. It will help to make systematic givers. It will bring some members of the congregation up into the higher rank of workers. It will give some people a taste for church work that they will never get over. It will bring church visitors into the home. It will be the means of reclaiming some indifferent church members. It will cause people to think, and start them to talking, and give them occasion to ask questions and to confer together about the work of the Church. It will put the needs of the Church into the prayers of the people at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting. It will put into the heart of the pastor a willingness and desire to preach missionary sermons without being petitioned to do so. It will educate the people in the way of giving. It will make the congregations more self-respecting. It will afford some of the elders an opportunity to discover where some of their people live, and how they live. It will prompt members of committees to inform themselves better, so that they can talk intelligently to other people.

"The United Presbyterian Church is being quoted and copied and praised as the discoverer of the Every Member Canvass. May the Church continue to commend the system which it has inaugurated."

"Every pleasant smile, every cheerful deed, every gentle word is a stroke of the brush that adds beautiful colors to the home skies, and so makes life's every day sweeter. This is helping God."

An Open Letter

TO ALL WHO ARE ELDERS IN OUR MEETINGS

[From The Friend]

As far as I am aware, the gift of eldership has always been considered by Friends to be quite as real a gift as a gift in the ministry, though perhaps something even less tangible. A true elder had the power of discernment. He was gifted with the ability to distinguish not only "sound" and "unsound" doctrine, but more important even than that, an anointed utterance from that which (though preached with never so much earnestness) still lacked that freshness and power which characterizes all that is spoken, as we term it, in the life.

The Discipline provides that "each Monthly Meeting choose two or more Friends to sit with the ministers, . . . taking care that the persons chosen for that service be Friends of solid judgment, prudence and experience," but does not expressly determine any more particular qualifications to be looked for. So far as my acquaintance goes, our meetings have been uniformly careful to appoint as elders the type of person specified. But have they all the distinct gift of eldership, or if they have, are they as careful to exercise it as they ought to be?

Of course, we must not expect a person to exercise a gift he has not; and the more "solid," "prudent" and "experienced" he was, the less we should look to him to assume duties which he believed were to be rightly performed only by the exercise of a Divine gift, when he was not at all sure that he was the possessor of such a gift. It has been my experience more than once, after asking some Friend if he were an Elder to receive the reply, "I am in the station of one"—almost implying his own doubt as to whether he had any business to be there at all! And in a letter from a worthy elder of another Yearly Meeting, I find (after an expression of some dissatisfaction with regard to conditions among them) this sentence: "Perhaps some of us are old-fashioned and cannot keep pace with the progress of the present day. I know I am not qualified to sit in judgment over our ministers."

Why, then, was he in the position of elder, whose chief service consists in that very "sitting in judgment" (both favorable and unfavorable) over those who speak in meeting?

But I believe many of our Elders do have that gift of eldership which will enable them to "be as nursing fathers and mothers to those who are young in the ministry, and with all care and diligence advise, encourage, admonish and, if they see occasion, reprove them in a tender and Christian spirit. . . . that so . . . they may witness a growth in their gifts, and be preserved from extending their declarations further than they find the life and power of Truth to bear them up."—(Discipline, p. 25.)

But could they not exercise this gift more frequently and less fearfully? Probably the idea uppermost today in the minds of our elders, in regard to this matter, is that considerable harm may have been done in the past from too sharp criticising and too severe pruning. It were best, they say, not to interfere more than absolutely necessary. The spiritual life of one "young in the ministry" is indeed a tender plant. But if too severe cutting-back is detrimental to the best growth, neglect may also prove fatal. Such plants need tending by those who have the gift of caring for them. Weeds may creep in and choke the young life, or they may grow up rankly, with many leaves but no fruit. They may become gnarled or be trodden on by some unthinking foot.

To those who from time to time feel it right to speak in meetings for worship, such speaking is just about the most serious thing they ever undertake. They desire earnestly that their message should be given forth nearly as purely as they have received it, with just as little tincturing as possible from the earthen vessel. There is not one of them who would not rather be excused from all such service if he might not perform it well. They are all fervent in their desire that their speaking may develop into that ministry that is truly convincing and tendering. But they feel so at a loss sometimes to know certainly if they are proceeding along the right lines. They are afraid they have made mistakes. There may be unfortunate mannerisms which they do not realize. Perhaps they hold back too long when they ought to speak. Perhaps in their sincere zeal they "run before their guide" and speak too frequently or too long, so that the sense of power with which they started is lost.

Perhaps a thousand and one things—but they feel the need of an occasional word of some sort from one whose spiritual experience is deeper. It is not congratulation that they seek—but the tender counsel of those accorded the gift of right counseling.

An example will help to show what I mean. A young Friend had spoken at some length in a large meeting where several acknowledged ministers were present and there had been considerable other service. He had taken his seat feeling he had done the best he knew, but rather under a cloud as to the suitableness of what he had said. Directly after meeting a venerable elder came up to him, shook him by the hand, and remarked, "I think thou wert in thy right place." That was all. It was enough. The dark clouds of uncertainty were dispersed as by a west wind.

I know of a meeting where the average attendance is close to three hundred. Regularly present at this meeting are at least four and often five elders. Among those who take part in the meetings are some nine or ten young Friends. Scarcely ever, to my certain knowledge, is anything said by the elders to those who stand in such need of this caring for, and who would be so deeply grateful for any suggestion that might make their ministry more pure and effective.

Will not all who have been appointed Elders by their meetings ask themselves if they are performing their full duty in these matters?

A YOUNG FRIEND.

National Sunday School Convention in Cuba

The Seventh Annual National Sunday School Convention of Cuba was held in the beautiful city of Cárdenas on the north coast of the island, the first week in November. Three days were occupied by the Sunday School Convention proper and another by a Convention of the United Young People's Societies, Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, etc.

There were a total of 169 registered delegates, representing nearly all the Protestant churches of Cuba and coming from all parts of the island. Friends were represented by Sylvester Jones and Jose Reyes from Gibara, and Clarence G. McClean from Holguín.

The program was composed of reports of the year's work, and plans for the coming year, with demonstrations of classes in the various grades of the Sunday School and several conferences on principles and methods directed by Mr. Neblett, the General Sunday School Secretary of Cuba. Besides this, there were devotional exercises at the beginning of the half-day sessions and courses of New Testament and Old Testament study, and a special, devotional Bible-study lesson each day which was exceedingly beneficial.

The spirit of confidence and fraternity among the denominations is very marked and the fine fellowship among the delegates, regardless of race, color or church connection, was one of the most precious features of the Convention.

The work for the children and young people of Cuba is the most promising field of Mission activity and the church is centering its attention on these departments in a way that must bring results.

Some of the topics discussed were:

"The Great Mission of the Teacher and His Preparation."

"The Positive Results of the Sunday School for the Nation."

"How May We Do an Effective Work in the Young People's Societies?"

"The Vision That Leads to the Victory."

This latter was given the closing night by a young Cuban preacher and teacher and was a very strong and eloquent address.

A willingness to learn and to do, and a dependence on God for guidance and help was the underlying spirit that makes us hopeful for the future.

At the election of officers for the coming year, Sylvester Jones was chosen President of the National Association and Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Clarence G. McClean, Superintendent of the Intermediate Department of the Sunday School and Treasurer of the Young People's Association.

"The language in the Old Book descriptive of penitential pain on the one hand, and of the joy of conscious forgiveness of sin on the other, shows great earnestness in earnest persons. If earnestness does not show itself in dealing with this matter, where may we look for it?"

Friends in Ireland

We have cited previously that considerable opposition has developed in Ireland to "Home Rule." In part this is a protest of Protestants against being placed under a Parliament that would be almost exclusively Romanist. Already there has been considerable disorder, and conditions may be worse before they are better. A volunteer force of more than one hundred thousand men was enlisted some weeks ago in Ulster to oppose the effort to sever the union between Great Britain and Ireland.

The situation became so grave that Ulster Quarterly Meeting of Friends appointed a Committee to consider it, with the result that the following statement was presented and adopted by that body:

"In common with the other churches, Ulster Quarterly Meeting feels that the circumstances in which our country is placed demand earnest prayer on our part to our Heavenly Father for protection and guidance. He is King of kings and Lord of lords, and the deepest desire of our hearts should be that His will may be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

"All around us warlike preparations are proceeding. The Society of Friends has always held that war and the taking of human life are irreconcilable with the spirit and teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We would do well to read and dwell upon the Sermon on the Mount and those portions of Scripture which deal with the love of Christ and His love manifested through us to others, even to our enemies, and seek to be thoroughly convinced in our own minds of the disparity between the spirit of Christ and that which animates war. Our faith and action should be the result of personal conviction, not merely a blind following of a creed handed down by our fathers.

"We are all members of a community, and not isolated individuals, and in our relationship with our neighbors we must inevitably come to a point of decision as to our attitude and action, in case the troubles come which are so sadly feared. That we should give the matter deep consideration is the duty of every Friend, so that the moment of choice may not find us unprepared. If we are true to our principles as Friends, we shall not assist in the taking of human life, however great our desire to defend our rights as citizens of the United Kingdom.

"This non-militant attitude may lead to misunderstanding of our position, but we must be prepared to face this, remembering that the servant is not greater than his Lord, and that such suffering was His portion in this world. Some members may be placed in circumstances of extreme difficulty, if not in actual danger; they should, however, not neglect to take such precautions, consistent with our principles, as prudence may dictate.

"Again, the non-militant attitude implies a firm faith in the protection of our Heavenly Father, as when Hezekiah of old said, 'With them is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God to help us.' We, therefore, urge our members to see to it that they are individually 'reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord,' and in the position of being His servants.

"Prayer is far the most powerful weapon with which we are armed. Whatever our political views, we may truly unite at the Throne of Grace, asking that our country may be kept in peace. Let us, therefore, pray unitedly, as perhaps never before, that we may in all things do the will of God."

Confessions of Faith in the Society of Friends

BY W. A. CURTIS,

Professor of Systematic Theology in the University of Aberdeen, in "Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics," edited by James Hastings, published by Scribner's.

The confessional attitude of the Quakers is in evident affinity with that of Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists and Salvationists, at many points; but it represents a more radical breach with Christian convention. They renounce all external authority in matters spiritual, the letter of Scripture not less than subordinate standards, in favor of the direct and inward guidance of the illuminant Spirit of God, the Inner Light. Ceremonies and sacraments, traditions and conventions, organizations and official teachers, are set aside. Yet history repeated itself in their experience, apologetic statements of their teaching being necessitated by popular caricature and theological misrepresentation.

* * * * *

Quakerism is thus a protest against ecclesiasticism, sacramentarianism, biblicism, sacerdotalism, traditionalism, and rationalism alike, a rigorous and consistent reaction against every element of dangerous formalism and literalism in Christianity; spiritual to the core, mystic and intuitionist, individualistic. It subordinates, to the point of sacrifice, the letter to the spirit, the form or symbol to the substance. It assumes a spiritual advancement or education possessed only by the few, and underestimates the use of letter and symbol because of their abuse. If "their oddities in dress and habit are the shadows of virtues," their idiosyncrasies in doctrine are at worst the exaggeration of truths, thought-compelling, impressive, and searching distillations of Scripture teaching and of sanctified common sense. They had their anticipators in this or that peculiarity of their life and teaching, though they are not indebted to them. They have, beyond question, prepared the way for much that is characteristic in Methodism and Salvationism, particularly. They represent Puritanism puritanized, a sublimate of prophetic Christianity, a spiritual outgrowth from a highly developed type of popular religion. More than is generally appreciated, their conceptions of Scripture, the Sacraments, Spiritual Liberty, the Inward Light, the Indwelling Christ, the Essence of Worship and of Ministry and the Meaning of Justification have led the way to views now widely entertained by the most thoughtful Christians in all the Churches and outside them. What Mysticism has been in general Religion, or Quietism in Roman Catholicism, Quakerism has been in Protestantism. Its very exaggerations and crudities were deliberate-arresting symbols and advertisements of its essential message. It has given silence a place in worship, and it has exercised the universal conscience by its Socratic demand for perfect sincerity and consistency. If it can be the religion only of a few, the world may be grateful to have contained those few. If it has given no criterion to distinguish the true from spurious movings of the Spirit, and lends itself to subtle or crude individualisms and egotistic whims and conventional make-believes peculiar to itself, it has a page of Christian history devoted to it whose freedom from serious blemish most other branches of the Church might wistfully envy.

Let Us Be Consistent

Through THE AMERICAN FRIEND, I wish to protest against the use of the term "Quaker" as applied to the "Religious Society of Friends." It certainly is not dignified. It does not suggest anything of a religious nature, hence it is inconsistent.

Not long ago a business man in a certain city asked a young Friend if he belonged to a Church. He said, "Yes, I am a Quaker." The man said, "Who are the Quakers? I thought that was the name of a business firm that manufactures the Quaker products that are so widely advertised."

Another person in speaking of the Quakers said, "They are like the Shakers; you see their names are synonymous." I know of no other branch of the Church that has attached to it a name which carries with it so little significance and is really so objectionable; and yet the use we make of it among ourselves makes it appear to others that we accept it and are satisfied with it.

I cannot believe this is really the case. It is too widely removed from the spirit and purport of our true name, "Friends," a name given by the Savior to his followers, suggesting a blessed relationship between Him and them. I am sure the study of the history and work of our Church is very important, especially for our young people, but I have a feeling that "Quakerism Classes" and "Quaker Round Tables" are not the most appropriate names that could be selected for this work.

My plea is that Friends discontinue the use of the term "Quaker" as applied to us. I am hoping for an arrest of thought along this line. Let us be consistent.

Our Place in Modern Church History

Next week, in the issue of December 25, we will present an introductory chapter, designed to show the place of the history of Friends in modern Church history, by Prof. Elbert Russell. This chapter will contain an outline and an analysis valuable to all who are interested in studying the place which Friends hold in the larger movements of the Christian denominations, and how Friends are related organically to contemporary history.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING

Dr. George F. DeVol is spending some weeks this month at the Johns Hopkins Hospital and Medical School in Baltimore to increase his efficiency for surgical work at the Friends Hospital at Lu Ho, China. While there he is acceptably attending the two Friends' meetings in Baltimore.

Daniel Oliver and wife, missionaries of London Yearly Meeting to Syria, after attending Baltimore Yearly Meeting went to Washington for a conference with President Wilson and Secretary Bryan, he wishing to encourage this country to maintain "a positive peace policy" in its attitude toward both Mexico and the affairs in the Balkan States. He reports highly satisfactory conversations with both the President and the Secretary of State, in which they expressed their profound appreciation of his message and their hope that its suggestions might be fulfilled.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Des Moines—The Friends of Des Moines met at the church Friday evening, November 28th, for a rally, and a social time was enjoyed by all. A program was rendered, consisting of readings, debates and music, after which refreshments were served in the basement of the church.

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held December 6-7. Owing to the rainy weather, there was a small attendance, only two from other meetings being present.

Earlham—We have just closed a very successful series of meetings in our church. Frank W. Dell was the evangelist. The meetings began November 17th. The gospel has been preached in a clear and forceful manner. The Bible lessons to the church were very helpful. There were some conversions and many church members have made vows for a closer walk with God. His sermons to men were strong appeals to live manly, Christian lives and to put manhood into Christian service. Our church has been greatly strengthened and edified.

Oskaloosa—Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting assembled at New Sharon, Iowa, on November 22, 1913. Although the attendance was not as large as usual, the meeting was unusual. Harry R. Keates, General Superintendent of Iowa Yearly Meeting, was present and brought the message of the morning. He took his text from Psalms 80: 3. He emphasized the need for us, as a church, to turn again and grasp the vision and inspiration that impelled the early Friends, and later the Friends of Iowa Yearly Meeting. He reminded us that this meeting, our first gathering after Yearly Meeting, was unique. We are just starting on a new half-century. He urged that we reconsecrate ourselves to the work of the Church and of our Master, and press forward with renewed zeal in His service. The message was one which gripped the hearts of the hearers and should bear much fruit in the Quarterly Meeting. At noon the New Sharon ladies served a bountiful dinner, which was fully enjoyed by all who were privileged to be present. The business session, too, was a time of blessing. One item that will no doubt mean much in the future, was the direction that our representatives to Yearly Meeting present to the Quarterly Meeting following, a written report of the Yearly Meeting, the main items of business, and their impressions of the meeting as a whole. It was further suggested that the representatives to Quarterly Meeting might present a similar report to their local meeting, thus bringing the whole quarter into closer touch. In the discussion following the report of our Quarterly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent, Fred Comfort, told of the union meeting that had been established in the neighborhood of old Spring Creek meeting. The attendance lately has been over seventy, and the mid-week meeting has had over forty. The sentiment in this meeting is practically all for Friends, and it seems probable that, as they are outgrowing the capacity of the school house where it is held, a church may be built in the near future, and it is possible that Spring Creek Meeting may be revived. Another encouraging fact is the beginning of a congregation at High Point, where meetings were held, and a number joined the Friends' meeting at Wright. It is assured that the abandoned church at Cedar will soon be moved to that place, where it can be of real service. Items of information like these give great encouragement, and inspire us to greater faithfulness in the Master's service. At the special invitation of Grinnell Monthly Meeting, we adjourned to meet at that place in February.

Tonganoxie—Cyrus H. and Amy B.

Hawkins are spending the winter in their home near Tonganoxie after nine successive years of active pastoral work, but are not idle in the ministry. The latter by invitation preached the sermon at Stanwood, when eleven new members were given a public welcome. The former preached at the same place the following Sabbath. They have also filled the pulpit at Tonganoxie for a month in the absence of the pastor, who is engaged in Evangelistic work.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

East Lynn, Massachusetts—Revival services have been held at Friends' Chapel, East Lynn, Massachusetts, for the past two weeks, November 23-December 7. The meetings were conducted by Mr. P. E. Call, of the Union Rescue Mission, Boston, and his co-workers. Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Peters, and Miss Evelyn Allen, the child singer, assisted greatly in the service of song. Captain and Mrs. Jewell, of Lynn Salvation Army, were with us, and a street parade was a feature of each evening. The Friends marched the streets singing gospel songs. The Lord has wonderfully blessed East Lynn, and many souls sought Jesus and were saved during these meetings.

Theological Library—The General Theological Library at 53 Mount Vernon Street, Boston, has just completed a printed, catalogue of available books. This catalogue, in book form, can be had for $1.00 post paid, by addressing the Library. Some of the provisions of this Library make it of great value to Friends in New England. It is composed of over 20,000 books on religious and social subjects. These are for the free use of ministers any where in New England. Anyone living over twenty miles from Boston can have books sent to them by mail, prepaid each way by the Library. Such a wonderful opportunity to make use of this library should be greatly appreciated by New England Friends. It is for the free use of ministers of all denominations. A bulletin is issued quarterly by the Library, giving a course of readings on selected subjects. It is hoped that ministers among Friends will make greater use of this Library than they have done in the past.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING

Amsterdam—An interesting meeting was held in a home in the city of Amsterdam, New York, by the superintendent of Cornwall Quarterly Meeting. Nineteen were present and a number of testimonies were given. Four families of Friends reside there. Arrangements are being made to hold another meeting during the winter.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING

Quilcene, Washington—The Friends' parsonage at Quilcene is now completed, and we wish to take this opportunity to thank the many Friends whose kind offerings made it possible. It is a cozy, five-room cottage; is free from debt, and fills a great need in this little field.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING

Haverford—Haverford Meeting joined with several of the other protestant churches of the vicinity in a Thanksgiving service in the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian Church. Dr. Barton, a Friend, of the Bryn Mawr College faculty, gave the address of the morning. A number of Friends were present.

The two Young People's classes of Haverford Bible School met for a social time Monday evening, December first. The fellows of Haverford College who are members provided entertainment and refreshments. About forty were present to enjoy the good time. This is the second such social of the year, the other being a camp supper at Darby Creek, two months ago.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

St. Joseph—Ellis Wells and wife, of St. Joseph, Illinois, have accepted a call to Upland, Indiana, and will begin their work with Friends there December 14.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

Springfield, Ohio—Bertha E. Day, of Rockford, Ohio, assisted by Mildred B. Allen, of Summitville, Indiana, closed a two weeks' meeting at Springfield Church near Wilmington, December 9, resulting in twenty-six conversions, and the church greatly strengthened. Miss Day and Miss Allen are in a meeting now at Ogden.

NEWS FROM MEXICO

A telegram received by Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana, states that Nancy Lee, Mary Pickett, Emma Reeder, Mrs. Brannon and one Mexican girl from the Friends' mission at Victoria, Mexico, have reached the mission at Matamoros, Mexico, which is just across the river from Brownsville, Texas, by way of automobile, in safety. Solomon Tice and wife, and Clyde Roberts are on their way by wagon, bringing the baggage.

MISSIONARY NEWS

From "The Nebraska Friend"

Gurney and Elizabeth Binford are on their way to Japan again. This will be her third term, while it will make four for Gurney Binford. They are sent out by Canada Yearly Meeting.

Ohio Yearly Meeting is sending out two new missionaries this fall. Martha Hixon to Nanking, China, and Margaret Smith to India. The latter has worked in India before and so knows the language.

Esther Baird returned to India in September.

Emma D. Oliver, on account of her health, has had to give up her work at Nanking, China.

From Jamaica—The total given for foreign missions by our Jamaican church for the year 1912 is $83.93, besides a considerable amount for home missions. Some of the funds have been sent to India, some to China, and some to Friends' African Industrial Mission.—Annual Report, 1912.

From Africa—Some of the young Christians have voluntarily relinquished all financial support and are going out among the tribes to do Christian work and support themselves in order to prove to the pagan natives that they are not Christians for the pay they get. It is exceedingly interesting how, in ten years' time, boys have been trained to go out and take charge of meetings among the natives and conduct schools for the children. This is being done now in a number of out stations at each of our three principal stations, so that scores of children are being taught the rudiments of education and some thousands are thus hearing the blessed truths of the Gospel.

The young Christians are building for themselves better homes, and living lives far above their surroundings. Some of the chiefs are adapting better customs. One influential chief has built a school house.—Annual Report, 1912.

Take The American Friend. To new subscribers until January 1, 1915, for $1.50.

OUR TOTAL MEMBERSHIP

We hope next week to be able to give a statement of the total membership of Friends in America. This could have been done last week, except for the fact that Western Yearly Meeting has not collected statistics of her total membership for the past two or three years. We have sent a letter to each Monthly Meeting in that Yearly Meeting asking for the number by Monthly Meetings, and many are responding. We ask all that have not done so to send the statement at once.

ABOUT BIBLE SCHOOL SUPPLIES

We appeal to each School in the Five Years Meeting to order Bible School supplies through our own denominational Bible School Board. No matter by whom published or where they are published, you can help the work of the Board by sending your order through them. You will receive the same kind attention through the Houses as though you ordered direct, and the per cent. of profit on all orders helps finance the work of the Board.

Attention is called to the following:

For the first quarter of 1914, send your orders either to W. K. Thomas, 12 Hazelwood Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts, or to P. W. Raidabaugh, Plainfield, Indiana.

Please do not order supplies from other houses for more than the first quarter of 1914. The Bible School Board expects to have ready at that time for the use of all Schools among Friends their own Quarterlies. Plan now to support this department of work of the Five Years Meeting.

In the Beginners', Primary and General Departments of the Graded lessons the supplies are cheaper than formerly. If your order for this quarter is according to the old prices, you will be credited with that much for the following quarter.

In Cook's publications, the Home Department Quarterly, the Mother's Magazine and the Sunday School Executive, the price has been raised.

Any books that deal with Sunday School work, such as Bibles, Teachers' Training books, etc., can be procured through our Board with profit to the Board and no more expense to you. If you desire books, write us concerning them.

On behalf of the Bible School Board,
WILBUR K. THOMAS, Secretary,
12 Hazelwood Street,
Roxbury, Mass.

WHITTIER FELLOWSHIP COMMITTEE

There will be a meeting of the Whittier Fellowship Committee at the "Young Friends' Association Building," Fifteenth and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on Seventh and First days, Twelfth Month, 20th and 21st, 1913.

Sessions of the Committee will be held at 4:00 p. m., on Seventh-day and on First-day evening. Public Conferences on "The Young Friends' Movement During 1913 and Plans for 1914 and Beyond" will be held on Seventh-day evening at 7:30 p. m., and on First-day at 4:30 p. m.

MISSIONS IN NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING

Up to the present time there has been only $265.00 received for missions during the year. At this rate there will only have been paid in $454.00 at the end of the year, compared with $1,154.00 for last year, $1062.00 the year before, and $1,333.00 during 1910-1911.

Some of our meetings have not been heard from at all, while none have paid in their proper apportionment.

A very vigorous campaign will have to be instituted among local committees if we bring our receipts up to our $1,200.00 average.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION

The Friends' Church in Kansas City is at Thirtieth Street and Bales Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. Friends delegates to the Student Volunteer Convention, to be held in this city December 31 to January 4, will do well to make note of this address. A reception and dinner for all Friends delegates will be held at the church Thursday, January 1, between the afternoon and evening sessions. Delegates will come to the church from the afternoon session of the convention, and remain until time to go to the evening session. If further notice should fail to reach any delegates, they will please consider this a sufficient invitation. The denominational meetings of the convention will be held Friday afternoon.

VOCATIONAL STUDIES

James S. Hiatt, who is the son of William J. and Eliza Hiatt, well known Friends of Richmond, Indiana, is the Secretary of the Public Education Association of Philadelphia. In a recent article in the Philadelphia North American, he describes at length and in a most interesting way, the work being done by the Vocational Bureau in Philadelphia and other cities.

Emphasizing the importance of the child workers problem, he has reached the following conclusions:

1. That the problem of the working child is not an immigrant problem, since over fifty percent. of those reported as at work are of the second generation of American birth.

2. That this is not the problem of the boy alone, since over forty-nine percent. of the workers are girls.

3. That the vast majority of the children who leave school at fourteen to enter industry, go into those kinds of employment which offer a large initial wage for simple mechanical processes, but which hold out little or no opportu-ity for improvement and no competence at maturity.

4. That wages received are so low as to force a parasitic life.

5. That but slight advancement is offered the fifteen-year-old over the fourteen-year-old child worker.

NEWS OF A FRIEND ABROAD

Word has come that Leannah Hobson, who has been spending some months among Friends in England and Ireland, but who expected to have returned home before now, has been detained by illness. She is now on the way to recovery, however, and is at Brighton on the south coast of England, where it is hoped the rest and bracing sea air will soon restore her to health. She will return to America, if her condition will permit, in three or four weeks.

NOTICE

O Lord! by thy grace impart and grant to me, if it be Thy holy will, the moral courage, boldness, and freedom of utterance, that I may speak, act, and be used of Thee in Thy service this day, as Thou seest best;

1913 RECORD Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, at Chicago, Western Canada carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

December 28.

Subject—A Day of Decision (Review).

Lesson—Joshua 24 and Heb. 11: 28-31.

Golden Text—For God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life. John 3: 16.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

December 28.

Topic—Our Church at Work for the World. Mark 16: 14-20 (Foreign Missions).

The Church has no greater mission than that of world evangelization. The ideal is that this shall be accomplished in this generation. We at least have no right to foist a burden upon the next generation which it is within our power to relieve now.

The door of opportunity was never open wider in the foreign field than at the present time. Outside of a few tribes in Central Africa, and a few small peoples in Central Asia, the gospel can now be proclaimed everywhere.

In 1800 the Bible had been translated into sixty-six languages and dialects. Now it has been translated into more than five hundred. Since the time of the first converts in Korea in 1887, there has been an average of a new convert for every hour of the day and night to the present time.

In Japan, Christianity has begun to impress men high in authority. There are some Christians in the Japanese parliament. While in China there appears to have been a slight reaction, due to an attempt to perpetuate Confucianism, there is no reason to believe that there will be any appreciable harm to Christian activity in that country. In India, Africa, Persia, South America, opportunities for gospel work are increasing.

Will the Church measure up to its opportunity? Will our own denomination prove itself equal to the task imposed upon us? Shall we be satisfied with doing little things? We have an effective Missionary Board. It remains for the membership to respond heartily and fully to their calls for financial and spiritual support. Every Christian Endeavor Society should plan to give a larger offering for Missions this year than last. The Master's business requires haste.

EARLHAM ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Earlham College is in the midst of a strenuous campaign to increase its endowment. This is necessary now in order to meet a proposition from the General Educational Board. Friends, and especially those of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings, cannot afford to permit this effort to fail.

Earlham has reached a point of efficiency, where if it is to go on and meet the growing obligations upon it as an up-to-date educational institution, it must have a larger endowment. Already important members of the faculty are being sought by other institutions. We take it that the friends of Earlham will not readily consent that the standards of the college be in any degree lowered.

The Endowment Secretary and members of the college faculty are making a strenuous canvass to meet the conditions of the General Board by December 31st. Friends who ever expect to help the institution are earnestly asked to do it now.

ANNA M. VOTAW

Anna Maria Votaw, daughter of Eleazar and Gulielma Hiatt, was born near Richmond, Indiana, on the twenty-second day of February, 1827, and died at Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, at the home of her son, Albert H. Votaw, on the eighth day of October, 1913. With the exception of the last few years when she was an invalid, she resided in Wayne County, Indiana, and her membership was always in either New Garden or Whitewater Quarterly Meetings. In 1849 she was united in marriage to Isaac Votaw, of Chester, Indiana, and spent the greater part of her active life as a member of Chester Monthly Meeting. From earliest infancy she was susceptible to religious impressions. One bears testimony of her that "she must have experienced conversion at a very tender age, yielding to the Spirit so early that she could not remember any definite time" (of conversion).

About the year 1870 her gift as a minister of the gospel was officially recognized. In what she apprehended to be the call for duty, she proclaimed the gospel within the limits of her own Yearly Meeting, and also of the Yearly Meetings of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Ohio, Western, Iowa and Kansas. But her mission was largely in the community in which she resided. She felt the burden of pastoral care, and though attending to domestic duties, was frequently engaged in visiting the afflicted, the indifferent and the discontented. "She often appeared to have a sense of the spiritual condition of her hearers, and was able to speak words that came close home to them in warning or in comfort."

In her early days she attended such schools as pioneer times afforded, and received instruction under several teachers of sterling worth, such as

Nathan Davis, Esther G. Dickinson, John M. Macy and Barnabas C. Hobbs, for a time assisting the latter at Richmond. Her bent of mind was decidedly literary, and from early life she evinced some inspiration of the poetic muse. "She wrote much beautiful verse and in her heart there was a great deal more which she found no time to write." Her home was always open in hospitality, and particularly so to the young people, inasmuch as they found in her both a friend and companion. Her heart ever retained the freshness of youth, and to the end of her days she was deeply interested in all movements, both of national and local concern.

"Though taking part in a variety of Christian duties, perhaps her greatest gift consisted in her power to cheer the unfortunate. . . . With her gentle tones and assuring faith, she was especially gifted to reach the sorrowing and despairing, and to convince them that Heavenly Father was ready to receive them and hear their petitions. And we know that many of these in distress of mind or of body saw her face as the face of an angel of mercy."

Funeral services were held at East Main Street, Richmond, Indiana, Luke Woodard, an old friend and neighbor, taking the leading part. Interment was in the family lot at Earlham Cemetery.

Died

NOTE—We have a number of obituary notices on hands, which will appear as rapidly as we can get to them.—EDITOR.

Chambers—Elizabeth Shreve Chambers, daughter of Clayton and Elizabeth Cleaver Kille, was born at Chartiers, Pennsylvania, July 8, 1818, and died at the home of her son at Bayard, Ohio, October 15, 1913, aged 95 years 3 months and 7 days. She was the youngest of a family of seven children who attained an average age of eighty-six years. She joined Friends with her father at the age of four years and was converted at the age of seven. In early life she moved with her parents to Ohio, and became a member successively of Deer Creek, East Goshen, Lexington, Alliance and Sandy Springs Meetings. She was married to Enoch Shreve in 1841, and after his death she was married to James H. Chambers, in 1867. She was an efficient worker in the church, was an Elder for many years, was a teacher in the Bible School for nearly sixty years, and had served as reading clerk

He was a birthright Friend and for many years a member of Denver Friends' Meeting, though he affiliated in worship and work with the Presbyterian Church in Salida. He graduated from Earlham College in the class of 1869. He is survived by his widow, Ruth Hinshaw Spray, and his daughter, Mrs. L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore, Maryland.

Wood—John B. Wood, of Camden, New Jersey, was born September 6, 1843, and died October 18, 1913, in his of the same. He was more especially interested in Friends' work in Cuba, and was editor of "The Christian Arbitrator," a monthly paper published in the interest of peace.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT

By Rev. L. C. Littel

O HAPPY earth, for Love was born tonight;
Angels, come near, assist us to proclaim
In chorus grand the honor of His name;
Bright spirits, hither bring, from frosty height,
The instruments your fingers touched that night,
And reproduce e'en now the glory song,
Angel of peace, thy viol take, and throng
The midnight with thy sweetest notes, that height
And depth of gloom, where gold of old were used
To go, may now resound with His great name;
Angel of heroes, make each star a flame
Of triumph for the feet that were so bruised,
And sound again the timbrel's swift pursuit,
For Christ is born, and joy is absolute.

OUR CHRISTMAS

EMMA BROWNELL READE

Whence cometh Christmas? It began
 When Love sent Love as Gift to man.
 The day is love. Then we, through art
 And emblem, testify our love of heart.
 Yet they mistake who tell that once each year
 Is sole recurrence of this day of cheer,
 For hearts and homes where love, unselfed, is found
 Keep Christmas every day the whole year round.

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER

ELIZABETH HILL WILLIAMS

A boon, dear Lord, we crave today—
 This Christmas-tide, with hearts all humble;
 With feet that falter on the way,
 Unsteady, weak, and prone to stumble.
 With hands unskilled to do the task,
 The service of our King demandeth;
 With heads bowed low, we yet would ask
 This gift from Him who understandeth.
 Not wealth nor honor we desire,
 Not fleeting fame or worldly treasure,
 Our hearts, dear Father, are on fire
 To know Thy love in fuller measure.
 This, our petition, in our need—
 Incline Thine ear to us and hear it,
 Grant to our hungry souls, we plead,
 A double portion of Thy spirit.
 Dunreith, Indiana.

Campaign for National Prohibition

On December 10th, the campaign for National prohibition, started at the convention of the American Anti-Saloon League at Columbus, Ohio, on November 13th, was formally launched in Congress. On that day, the committee of one thousand men, which grew to more than two thousand men in boots, marched down Pennsylvania Avenue for more than a mile to the Capitol. On the way they were joined by nearly a thousand women of the W. C. T. U.

At the Capitol, the great procession was met by Senator Morris Sheppard and Congressman R. P. Hobson, who were to introduce the resolution calling for a Constitutional Prohibition Amendment in the respective branches of Congress. A great demonstration was made on the east Capitol steps, addresses being given by General Superintendent P. A. Baker, E. H. Cherrington and Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson of Tennessee for the Anti-Saloon League, and Mrs. Ella Boole of New York and Mrs. Mary Harris Armor of Georgia for the W. C. T. U. The speeches were followed by the introduction of the resolution in both the House and Senate.

During the same week the Temperance Commission of the Federal Council of Churches met in Washington and organized for work. We will give further account of this meeting later.

The next convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip will be held in Philadelphia, March 5th and 6th next.

Peace Association of Friends in AmericaNew Plans for the Coming Year

With the beginning of the new year some changes with respect to the work of the Peace Association of Friends in America will be inaugurated, all of which are more or less directly the outgrowth of the work carried on by the Association the past year. Those who have followed the announcements made in these columns for the last twelve months will remember that with the starting of the new AMERICAN FRIEND a co-operative arrangement was entered into according to which matter on various phases of the peace question should appear first in THE AMERICAN FRIEND and should then be re-printed, in part at least, in the Messenger of Peace. This plan seemed desirable for various reasons, one of which was that a very considerable number of the regular subscribers to the Messenger of Peace were at that time not readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND; and another, the probability that close co-operation in the matter of publication would prove to be of financial advantage to both papers. In a measure, both of these reasons have been justified, but the developments of the year have so far changed the conditions which existed a year ago that a new arrangement seems to be desirable. The details of these conditions need not be recounted here, but it should be said with respect to the particular conditions referred to above that the very considerable number of new subscribers secured among Friends by both the Messenger of Peace and THE AMERICAN FRIEND, has made it apparent that an arrangement which involves the reprinting in the two papers of any very large amount of material does not seem wise. It has, therefore, been agreed that the department in THE AMERICAN FRIEND known the past year as "The Peace Movement Among Friends," shall be discontinued, with the understanding that articles or news items concerning phases of the peace reform will appear from time to time under the editorial care of the editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in the same way that articles from other departments of work in the church have appeared the past year.

The Peace Association of Friends in America will continue to issue the Messenger of Peace as heretofore. Under the new arrangement it will occupy a position much more important than previously since it becomes the only periodical available which furnishes for the low rate of twenty-five cents per year up-to-date information upon such a variety of topics dealing with important phases of the peace question.

As in the past, correspondence in regard to any phase of the peace reform will be welcomed by the officers of the Peace Association and readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND are asked to respond especially to requests for action on special topics as announcements in regard to them may from time to time appear.

For the Peace Association of Friends in America,

ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

Spirit of the Christmas Tide.

The observance of the Christmas season was born at the altars of the Christian Church. Betokening the spirit of human helpfulness, its remembrance has gone beyond the bounds of ecclesiasticism and credal pronouncements, and in every land that has ever heard the story of the manger, hearts grow warm, and unselfishness blossoms in wondrous fullness, in sympathetic harmony with the day which Christmas typifies. No other product of the Church has ever been accepted so eagerly by such multitudes of people.

Beyond the cavil of the doctrinaires, beyond the abstruse tenets of the theologian or the scientist, beyond the abstractions of a formal faith, beyond the selfishness of human greed, beyond the exclusiveness of the caste spirit, beyond the pomp and bigotry of worldly ambition, beyond the sufferings of gaunt hunger and the remorse of the devotees of sin, beyond the degradation and humility of the outcast, beyond the joys and sorrows, the woes and tribulations to which humanity is heir, all mankind finds in the Babe of Bethlehem the anchor of a mighty faith, the bond of a universal brotherhood, the author of a common redemption.

A recent writer has said: "So the simple thought of lowering privilege and dignity for brotherhood's sake to the level of want and woe, nobody has ever been able to bind up in guarded parcels of ritual or dogma. Instead, this Christmas thought inevitably becomes common property. And that is no doubt the reason why Christmas today has come to be a gracious minister to masses whom the church has scarcely touched with any other influence."

This is the birthday anniversary of human brotherhood. Looking back through the centuries, every weary troubled son and daughter of Adam gets the vision of a mighty love that brought the Son of God to earth upon the mightiest mission that all the centuries have known, a mission fraught with the spirit of human kindness and breathing the message of human hope and human uplift. The birth of the Savior of men established a joint heirship with all humanity, whose heritage is the bounty of the God of the universe. What a wonderful message the Church is obligated to proclaim that will reveal Jesus Christ as the one and only hope of humanity in all the ages!

No less is this the birthday anniversary of universal human fellowship. No system of caste or vassalage or peonage is compatible with the spirit of the Christmas tide. Christ came to set humanity free—from sin and darkness and ignorance and oppression and slavery and spiritual death. His gospel is for every race and for every condition of mankind. The story of His birth, if properly proclaimed, will mean as much to the red man or the black man, the brown man or the yellow man as to the Caucasian; as much to the heathen, the immigrant or the resident of the slums as to those who sit in the pews on the Sabbath day and sing the songs of redemption through the blood of the Lamb. The language of Christianity is the language of a Christian fellowship that knows no limitations except the limitations created by the unfaithfulness of the Christian Church in its failure to "preach the gospel to every creature."

More than all else, this is the birthday anniversary of a new era that has brought redemption to a sinful world. No wonder it was ushered in by a heavenly host, "praising God and singing 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased'." Sin and wrong and evil found their conquering foe when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, "for it is He that shall save His people from their sins," and "of His kingdom there shall be no end." Primarily the Church must ever be the evangel of the truth that in Christ Jesus there is plenteous redemption, or it will be false to its highest mission. Not in abstract terms, not theoretically, not in the form of dogmatic formulæ, but by a living message that reveals the Savior of men to human consciousness as One who can save to the uttermost, must the Church fulfill its mission to the needy multitudes at home and abroad.

The Christmas story will never lose its charm, for therein are the elements that make life worth living. With every new telling, hidden meanings and fresh inspiration are revealed, like the sudden gleam of a new star from the dark unknown. No less truly than that Christ had a physical birth that momentous night when all the angels of heaven sang for joy, will He be reborn in every life that will but seek Him with a whole heart.

The message of Christmas is not a message of abstraction but of a living reality, a message not alone that begets new life, but that sets men to the task of helping other people. It is a message for the toiler no less than the capitalist; for the sad and suffering no less than the joyous and happy; for the homes that are wrecked by sin no less than the prosperous and the contented; for the waif upon the street no less than the children of affluence; for the frayed wrecks of humanity no less than the sons of plenty, a message that will meet the deepest needs of world-wide humanity.

To the Church, the Christmas tide should reveal a new vision of its tasks. The gospel is for all men, and it is the business of the Church to proclaim it with such clearness and with such fervency that it will reach all men. To scatter the seeds of truth is to reap an abundant harvest by and by. "Truth cherished at the church's altars will grow the brighter because of truth dispensed outside."

A Year's Experiment

The experiment of issuing a weekly periodical under the direct authority of the Society of Friends has had a year's trial, with what success or failure, the Church as a whole is now able to judge. The management is frank to say that its hopes have not been fully realized. A multitude of Friends have been kind, to the point of enthusiasm in many instances, in expressing their appreciation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and the criticisms that have reached our ears are so few as to be considered well nigh negligible. For all this we are profoundly thankful and deeply appreciative; but no one knows better than the management how far short of the ideal we have fallen.

The business end of the enterprise has taken more time than should have been necessary, due in large part to the problem of getting Friends generally to see their obligation to patronize the paper. While questions of editorial policy and management are vital, the question of patronage is still the most important problem that remains yet unsolved.

Friends, the majority of them, are slow to understand that THE AMERICAN FRIEND is now a department of the Church just as truly as is the Foreign Mission or Bible School work, and that the obligation is as binding upon Friends generally to support the one department by their patronage as it is to support the others by their free-will offerings. There has been a net increase of about 850 new subscriptions during the year, which, while encouraging and in a sense gratifying, falls far short of our ideal. By all rules of reason and justice, THE AMERICAN FRIEND should have at least ten thousand subscribers instead of a little less than half that number.

The editorial policy has been an object of much concern on our part. We have tried to carry out religiously the direction of the Five Years Meeting to avoid unnecessary controversy. The result has been that our policy has appeared to many, no doubt, as well as to ourselves, somewhat colorless and negative. While holding still to our purpose to avoid controversy, we are satisfied that the policy and declarations of THE AMERICAN FRIEND must become more positive and that its columns must give a living call to the church to go forward in the performance of the great tasks to which its hands have been set.

In next week's issue we hope to give expression in more concrete form to some of the live questions that have to do with our Church periodical, indicating at the same time some of the ideals in policy and management with which it is our purpose to be guided during the coming year.

Shall We Have That Convention?

With the passing of Christmas and the coming of a new year, with all of its added responsibilities of gospel service, Friends may well contemplate seriously their duties and their opportunities. In the last two issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, we have suggested the desirability of a gathering of men Friends in harmony with the spirit and purpose which characterized that great gathering of Methodist men in October.

We are convinced that such a gathering would be full of tremendous potentiality in helping to solve some of our denominational problems and in leading the entire Society to more practical and successful endeavor. In recent years a new vision of religious opportunity has been coming to the Christian Church in America, and many denominations are now busy in the attempt to adjust both their mechanism and their membership to the situation.

Friends cannot afford to lag in the forward movements of this decade. We believe that a real need exists of studying our denominational tasks with an accuracy and fervency that has not yet characterized our efforts, and that a gathering of men, such as has been suggested will go far toward reaching the heart of our needs. What do Friends think about it?

Why Not Do It?

A few more days of the old year remain. Why not send THE AMERICAN FRIEND as a New Year's gift to some one who may not be able to pay for it? Or, in lieu of that, why not solicit and secure at least one new subscription and send it to us as a New Year's gift, to help out the paper for 1914? Is there any good reason why either or both of these suggestions may not be carried out in a thousand and more instances, except—what? Why not do it before January 1?

He who lives closest to God in thought and life will reap the most bounteous harvests, both here and hereafter.

CHRISTMAS

By B. F. M. SOURS

Shepherds! Shepherds! light divine,
 See upon the darkness shine!
 Light is breaking o'er the gloom,
 Filling all the years with bloom.
 Shepherds, shepherds, tell the tale,—
 Cast the news upon the gale!
 And the years have passed away
 Since the dawn of Christmas day.
 Little children o'er the sea
 Know the song of victory.
 Happy Christmas, day of days,
 Fill our hearts with hope and praise!

NO ROOM FOR THEM

By LILLIAN F. LEWIS

When Jesus came, Oh, strange! Oh, shame!
 No room for Mary save in stable shed,
 And for her babe, naught but a manger bed;
 A poor renown for Bethlehem town!
 Ah, critic, pause; hath Christ no cause
 To show your welcome lacks, in thought and deed,
 The spirit of the Christmas boon and need,
 When yields your heart but meager part?
 Thou, Lord, sent down our hopes to crown,
 What room should we in gladness offer thee
 But biding place with us as fair and free
 As unto friend best loved we would extend.

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

J. G. HOLLAND

There's a song in the air!
 There's a star in the sky!
 There's a mother's deep prayer
 And a baby's low cry!
 And the star rains its fire while the Beautiful sing.
 For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a king.

There's a tumult of joy
 O'er the wonderful birth,
 For the virgin's sweet boy
 Is the Lord of the earth.
 Ay! the star rains its fire and the Beautiful sing,
 For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a king.

In the light of that star
 Lie the ages impearled;
 And that song from afar
 Has swept over the world.
 Every hearth is aflame, and the Beautiful sing
 In the homes of the nations that Jesus is King.

We rejoice in the light,
 And we echo the song
 That comes down through the night
 From the heavenly throng.
 Ay! we shout to the lovely evangel they bring.
 And we greet in His cradle our Saviour and King.

The Place of Quaker History in Modern Church History

BY ELBERT RUSSELL

INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER

Many things suggest that the Society of Friends had little or no connection with contemporary church history. The founders of the Society broke sharply in many important respects from historical Christianity as embodied in the great historical churches that surrounded them—the Roman, Lutheran, and Anglican. They discontinued the historical sacraments, feasts, and rites of worship. They discarded the traditional forms of organization, orders of ministry, and officials. They discontinued the historic creeds and confessions and systems of theology, refusing to use them as authoritative or even convenient expressions of their religious beliefs. They changed the style of speech, dress, and church architecture, and renamed the days of the month and week. They based their system on personal experiences or the ancient Scriptures, and frankly avowed their intention, without regard to the historic developments of Christianity, to reproduce the spirit and simplicity of primitive Christianity.

If this impression were justified,—if Quakerism had no direct connection with contemporary religious life and no roots in Christian history; if it were the creation of a few minds in a single generation,—it would be open to the suspicion of unreality or one-sidedness that attaches to all such attempts to create an entirely new order of society or system of religion. We have learned from the pretty uniform experience of the race to doubt the ability of any mind to create de novo a worthy or workable scheme of life. We distrust the social, political, or religious system that does not rest solidly upon a historic foundation. We know that what little is stable and vital in the religion of Mohammed was rooted in Judaism and Christianity. The American constitution was not the creation of a new scheme of government by the constitutional fathers, but was the ripe fruit of centuries of English, Dutch, and Colonial experience in self-government. On the other hand, most social schemes which involve radical departures from existing institutions and tendencies, such as Locke's Grand Model for the Carolinas, Fourier's communistic phalansteries or the radical innovations of the first French republic, have been rejected in advance as impracticable, or else doomed to early decay, because not sufficiently rooted in living human experience.

We shall, first of all, show the relation of the Society of Friends to modern church history, and then trace its historic roots in the mystical and Biblical movements of the Medieval and Reformation periods. This will serve not merely as a proper introduction to the history of the Society, but also as an important side light on the truth and historic validity of the Quaker system of thought, worship, and life.

The history of Friends falls naturally into three periods.

I. The Rise of the Society (1647-1690). The period naturally begins with Fox's decisive experience of the sufficiency of Christ as an inward Savior, although some might date the beginning of the Society from 1652, when Fox had his vision on Pendle Hill of a gathered people and began forming groups of followers among the Seekers of the North. I have put the date of George Fox's death as the close of the formative period. Others would put it later, about 1700 when the affairs of the Society were a little more fully developed, or even as late as 1718, when Penn, the last of the founders of the Society, died. I prefer, however, the earlier date. For nearly a half century the Society remained in all important respects as it was at Fox's death. It had by that time extended over the territory it was to occupy. Its organization had been outlined and the principal features put into operation. Barclay had given its doctrines classical form, and Penn had founded Pennsylvania. The Revolution of 1688 and the Toleration Act had already relieved the Society from the persecutions that conditioned so much of its early efforts, and given the Society a legal place among the English Non-conformists.

II. The Period of Crystallization (1690-1827). This period was marked by a reaction from the strenuous struggles against persecution, and from the reforming and evangelizing passion of the first period. Then followed in the middle of the eighteenth century a revival of energy which took the form of the completion and enforcement of the discipline. The close of the period was characterized by quietism, relieved by philanthropic zeal that led to the abolition of slavery within the Society and to efforts on behalf of the Indians, prisoners, and the insane. The period came to a violent end with the Hicksite separation.

III. The Modern Revival and Reconstruction (1827-1913). This period is characterized by the growth of both liberal and evangelical tendencies, a revolt against the rigid discipline of the previous period, the revival of Bible study, the promotion of education, the development of evangelizing and missionary activities, accompanied by violent differences of opinion over the changes and by frequent separations. Toward the close of the period there was a dropping of old forms, closer approximation to the life and methods of surrounding Protestantism, and a marked growth in the spirit of co-operation with other Christian denominations as well as in unity within the Society itself.

For the sake of comparison we now turn to the divisions and principal events of the contemporaneous church history. Modern church history begins with the Protestant Reformation. The initial date usually given is 1517, the year Luther nailed his famous theses to the door of the Wittenberg castle church. For Europe we divide the history into three periods.

I. The Reformation (1517-1648). From Luther to the Peace of Westphalia. In this period the reformatory movement spread throughout western Europe. It obtained a permanent foothold in the northern countries, and settled its doctrines and polity. It was finally turned back in France, Spain, Italy and Austria by the Catholic reaction. It took a political turn in the civil wars in Germany and Switzerland, in the Huguenot struggles in France, and in the republics of Geneva and Holland. The Thirty Years War in Germany put an end to the growth of Protestantism on the continent.

II. The Period of Critical Individualism (1648-1789). From the Peace of Westphalia to the French Revolution. In this period the doctrines and practices taken over from Medieval Catholicism and the system of Protestantism were subjected to critical examination in the light of individual reason. The first part was a period of religious indifference, followed by the rise of various forms of rationalism and by the religious revivals of Pietism. The insistence upon the rights of the individual judgment coupled with the doctrine of the "rights of man" in politics culminated in the French Revolution in the overthrow of the last vestiges of autocratic authority in Church and State. In this period the latent individualism of Protestantism worked out to its logical negative results.

III. The Period of Social Reconstruction (1789-1913). In this period occur the beginnings of the positive religious expression of Protestantism and the reconstruction of church and society on a voluntary and democratic basis. It is the period of Bible study, foreign missions, evangelical revivals, theological reconstruction, organized philanthropy and social reforms, and denominational co-operation and federation.

This survey shows that the Society of Friends arose after the close of the Reformation period on the continent and leaves us in doubt whether it is a more complete development of the reformation movement or a product of the reaction in the period following.

Since Quakerism sprang up in England we must ascertain its relation to the English reformation. In England the periods of modern church history are somewhat different from those of European church history. The emphasis is different and movements slower at times. The Reformation in England was really twofold; the first initiated by the government and the second by the Puritans. Again, the French Revolution did not represent such a religious crisis in England as on the continent. The real beginning of the modern period in England came with the removal of the political disabilities of the Catholics in 1828. The divisions of modern church history in England are as follows:

I. The Reformation (1509-1689). From the accession of Henry VIII to the Toleration Act following the Revolution of 1688.

a. First Division: The governmental reformation (1509-1558). The influence of the Oxford Reformers, Tyndall's Bible, and Henry VIII's divorce of Catherine led to the break with the Pope, 1531. The church was still Catholic in doctrines and forms, but slowly driven to Protestant positions. Under Mary the conscientious Protestantists were driven to Geneva and the country was Catholic again.

b. Second Division (1558-1689). With Elizabeth's accession the exiles came home determined to purify the church of all remnants of Popery. The Bible was translated in 1611 with the royal sanction. The Puritans controlled Long Parliament and after the civil war and the execution of the king (1649), governed England through Cromwell. After the temporary reaction of the Restoration, the government was made Protestant under William and Mary and toleration secured for Catholics and non-conformists.

II. Critical Individualism (1689-1828). Characterized by religious apathy, the rise of Deism, the Wesleyan movement, and toward the end by prison reform, the abolition of slavery in the British colonies, the Low Church or "evangelical" movement, and the political enfranchisement of the Catholics.

III. Modern Reconstruction (1828-1913). Practically the same as in Europe and America.

These outlines show that the rise of the Society of Friends covers practically the last part of the second division of the Reformation in England. It was coincident with the fiercest struggle and the moral victory of the Puritan movement. If it was organically related to contemporary history, Quakerism should be, by its chronological position, the final development of the Reformation, the most Protestant form of Protestantism.

Such our Discipline asserts it to be: "The logical conclusion of the Protestant Reformation, and the culmination of the development of doctrine which had been advancing by irregular stages for more than a century."

Whether and how far the logical relation of our history to the Protestant movement corresponds with its chronological relation will be the subject of future studies. We may note here that the next two periods of the history of Friends correspond so closely in dates and character with contemporary history as to leave little doubt that the two are parts of the same great stream of history.

The Sunday School and the Morning Service From the Pastor's Standpoint

(Extract from an address given before the Jay County Ministerial Association at Portland, Indiana, by George W. Bird, of Pennville, Indiana, December 1, 1913.)

The Sunday School is one of the strongest influences for good and one of the greatest feeders of the church, yet we are told that only three children out of five in the United States are in Sunday School, and that the church loses two out of three of these, so we need to be aroused to save those who are lost somewhere between the Sabbath School and the church. In the average church from five to fifty per cent, and in some cases even more, of the students in the Bible School do not stay to the preaching service. Six churches among Friends in Indiana, in both large and small places, averaged last year 130 in the Bible School and 66 in the morning meeting. Others had as many at meeting as at the school. Who is to blame? First, the parents; second, the Sunday School; and third, the pastor or minister.

WHAT THE PASTOR CAN DO TO HELP THESE CONDITIONS

We must point out to the parents the need of the entire family being present and helping in the work of the church as well as of the Bible School and the need of making the church the center of our activities rather than the school if the church is to continue its existence.

Encourage the bringing of the babies to church, as none are too young to form the habit of attending church. The pedagogue has influenced the Sabbath School of today more than the theologian, and the manner of teaching has received more attention than the subject matter taught.

While the Sunday School should not be sectarian, yet it is proper for every school to point the scholars to the church to which the school belongs and lead them into active church membership. Every teacher should be a Christian and only those whose interest is sufficient for them to remain for the meeting for worship should be allowed to teach. The average Sabbath School and morning meeting lasts about three hours and in some cases even more. This can be shortened to the good of both school and meeting to two or two and one-half hours. The combined school and meeting now being tried by East Main Street Friends in Richmond bids fair to be a success and will be watched with much interest. Thus far it has proven a good thing both in attendance and interest.

During the recent stormy period I carried a sack of salt to the church to remove some ice and left the remainder in a back room and in a few days I found the mice had eaten holes in the sack to get the salt. If a church mouse likes salt, how about a boy of eight to twenty?

Do we salt our sermons enough with the things that will interest the young people? If we can interest the young people we need not be alarmed about the older ones. We must use simple language. After President Moore of Earlham had preached one day in North Carolina, an old colored man was heard to say, "That man is no college president, this old nigger could understand every word he said."

The Master said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." We begin to speak of regeneration and a few more big words and soon have this important passage and its meaning veiled. P. W. Raidabaugh tells of a little girl who was walking along the street with him and seeing a crowbar asked, "What am that thing?" On being told it was a crowbar, she replied, "What am a crowbar?" Taking the bar and two stones he soon showed her how the bar was used to pry. The little face brightened as she said, "I know now." Was it worth while to teach a child what a crowbar is? If so, how much better to teach the way to salvation simply and perfectly.

Johnny sits on the front seat with his feet swinging. Look at him and tell him some real heart experience of how you felt a need in your life; tell him how you tried to do right but could not because of an unseen power that seemed to draw you down; tell him how you got a different spirit in your own life, and that God is right here to help even in the games and similar things.

Abstract truth does not readily appeal to the human mind, especially the mind of a child.

The Master knew this and the greater part of His teaching was in parables. He used the vine, the shepherd, the sheep and many others to illustrate truth that He well knew they would not get in any other way.

Be sure that we know enough about the illustration to use it intelligently. Illustrated truth is one of the most effective ways of holding the attention of all classes of people. The stories of the Bible have not lost their charm. Young life is not seeking easy things, and we need to present the hard side of the Christian life and the possibility of conquest through Jesus Christ.

"Mother, I want a ball," said a boy of six. "But you have a ball, my son." "Yes, but I want a hard ball, one that a feller can feel when he catches it." The young life of America is before us asking not for milk alone, but for a fair share of life's hard problems, stated in language they can understand.

Forbid Them Not

BY FLORA M. BEALS

December 28th has been set apart as Children's Sunday by the labor organizations throughout the country. The day will be observed by mass meetings and demonstrations in the interests of American childhood and particularly those who are so unfortunate as to live in our great strike districts. Dare we say that the Spirit of Him who gathered the little ones about His knee with the charge that they were not to be offended, has not prompted this humanitarian work?

We may or may not sympathize with the men and women who have found their laboring conditions unendurable and have taken this way of bringing about their emancipation, but our hearts cannot fail to go out to the little ones who suffer the most in such trying times. It is coming to be a recognized fact that the fathers and mothers remain firm in the determination to reach the goal they have set for themselves as long as the children are provided for, but when they must suffer too great hardships and starvation, the parent determination weakens and they yield to the master yoke.

We talk much these days of our Quaker heritage. We are proud and justly so, of the record handed down to us by our ancestry. Let us not forget that we in turn are making history for posterity. Is it to be a record which they will be glad or ashamed to own? The oppressed Red Man and the Black Man have long known us to be their friend. Shall not the oppressed Working Man claim the same privilege? Have we enough of the Christ strength and spirit to be ready to face the possibility of misunderstanding and unpopularity, and enter the door which seems proverbially opened to us at this season of the year? Could we find a more appropriate commemoration of the coming of the Child whose birth and life has meant so much to the world, and who has given us the ideal standard of brotherhood?

How shall we do it? A children's sermon, or even a few words calling attention to the life many of them are forced to live would mean so much to the cause of childhood. Winnie E. Branstetter, 111 N. Market St., Chicago, Illinois,* will be glad to send you any information you may desire on the subject. If you feel it is impossible to observe that special day, why not set apart a day early in the new year for them? I have observed that it is the Church that touches these vital problems of life, which interests the working man who is worth while. And they are so full of life and purpose, I do covet them for the Kingdom.

I never rejoiced more in our common heritage of the championship of the oppressed, than when recently a girl said to me, "I understand now why you are so nice to us working girls since I found out you are a Quaker."

Think Before You Speak

If thou thinkest twice before thou speakest once thou wilt speak twice the better for it. Better say nothing than not to the purpose. And, to speak pertinently, consider both what is fit and when it is fit to speak. In all debates let truth be thy aim, not victory, or an unjust interest; and endeavor to gain rather than to expose thy antagonist.—William Penn.

A call for an International Prophetic Conference, bearing testimony to the doctrine of the premillennial coming of Christ, has been called to meet at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, February 24-27 next.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT

MABEL BOURQUIN

'T was Christmas night.

Across the Syrian plains with swinging stride,
The treasure-laden wise men swiftly ride,

Their goal the Light.

And humble shepherds, by their quiet sheep,
With burst of music saw the heavens sweep Upon their sight.

'T was Christmas night.

But not within the slumber sodden khan
That shelter could not share with brother man,
Nor feel his plight.

Nor yet for him who from his doorway turned
The ones in need, like heaven's lamp, there burned
Love's glorious Light.

'T is Christmas night.

Yet not all men their choicest treasures bring,
Nor in all hearts do angels carols sing,
O'er fields of white.

For these alone whose feet have traveled far,
Whose eyes, uplifted, have beheld the star,

'T is Christmas night.

Peace Movement Among Friends

COURSE IN GOOD WILL

Better Than a Gold Eagle

BY ANNA D. STEPHENS

(Copyright, 1913, by the Peace Association of Friends in America)

Mildred and John were closing a joyous two weeks with their mothers and Uncle Jack at the lake. A strenuous fortnight it had been for Uncle Jack as he tried to live up to his cordial invitation, and give "two weeks of good health and solid happiness to those precious children so soon to be locked up most of their waking hours in the brick prisons we Americans politely call 'Our wonderful educational system'." Uncle Jack found an especial comradeship in this nephew whose mother insisted "Jack" just the right name for the bachelor uncle, but resented its use as a nickname for his namesake and her son.

"Here you are thirteen years old, and going into the eighth grade—ready for high school next year," exclaimed Uncle Jack in their farewell chat. "Well, when I see you next Christmas I have a gold eagle for the one of you who has the highest grade in the class." Mildred and John each knew what a ten dollar gold piece looked like; also what good things it would buy if spent with forethought.

"Fine, Uncle Jack! We will report when we see you at Christmas time." The next week they were in school.

On Saturday morning the music teacher called at their homes. John wished to do without his music this winter—"until Christmas, anyway, mother." But the mother insisted that a half hour's practice twice a day would keep him enjoying his music and in good condition for real work when summer came again.

Some students of the eighth grade were late to school, but these included neither Mildred nor John. In October announcement was made of the highest grades in the class. Mildred and John had equal standing. How they beamed at each other! John said, "We'll each spend five dollars of that eagle, I believe, Mildred." A determined flash of the eyes and a faint little smile might have indicated that Mildred anticipated such an outcome only half-heartedly.

Before the season was over, nutting made a delightful Saturday afternoon's frolic. On returning, John went to see why Mildred had missed the outing. He found her working on a biography for a Monday's class.

"Oh, Mildred! You surely haven't used this glorious outdoors weather studying! You never spent a whole Saturday so before, and you always write good themes."

"I'm not working to write a good theme. I'm working to get the highest grade in the class. So you see why nutting parties do not come in, Cousin John."

The middle of November found Mildred holding the highest grade and John a close second. That evening his father reminded John that nine o'clock had come while he was still poring over his books.

"Studies laid aside at a quarter of nine, and go to bed at nine, son."

In a few days John came home from school and worked at his arithmetic. When Mrs. Milan came home at five she inquired why the usual two hours of outdoor exercise had not been begun.

"Please let me work, mother!"

"How many problems with that principle have you solved already, John?"

"Why, twenty, mother. They are easy enough, but so long that I'm afraid I will not get the last one finished before the study period is over tomorrow."

"You can never make arithmetic take the place of God's out-of-doors, laddie, so run along."

"The good boy" came back in an hour with red cheeks and a bear's appetite.

Two weeks before Christmas plans were made for "the last day."

One evening John was thinking, "Oh, I must get ahead of Mildred to please my parents and Uncle Jack—I must make a tie with her, at least." Anything less appeared to him disgraceful.

Then his father called him to the library. Mr. Milan began, "John, on meeting your teacher today I remarked that I would come, as usual, to your Christmas program the last afternoon of school. To my surprise he told me you were not helping this year."

"No, father."

"Aren't the others doing something, in groups or singly?"

"I think so, father."

"You are in good health, your school work is well done, you could prepare the simple cornet solo you were asked to give by practice in your regular practice hours. Do you think it quite fair for others to make the good time without your doing your share? That's all."

On the last day how heartily Mr. and Mrs. Milan cheered the numbers on the program! They fairly beamed on John as he gave his simple solo as well as most boys of his age could have done. John's heart fairly pounded him from the inside when Mildred recited, and forgetting, finally left out some lines of the familiar verses. Later, the three highest grades were given—first being Mildred Carr Milan, and a close second John Gregg Milan, Jr. Father and mother gave a friendly nod to Mildred and smiled proudly on their son.

They did not know that John slipped off to his room the rest of the afternoon. When he came to dinner the becoming redness of his cheeks and the unbecoming redness of his eyes indicated as distinctly as the unemptied plate the storm which was raging inside.

Mr. Milan remarked that the teacher had called John "a splendid, all-round boy, studying as a real student, playing for real recreation, and altogether the kind of a boy from whom our best men must be made." A look of relief flitted across John's face as he grasped at the thought that possibly he had not made the worst failure. However, it rested only a moment, for he thought of Uncle Jack again.

After dinner John remarked that he was going out a little while. Although so unusual his mother said, "Yes a walk in this crisp air will be delightful." He slouched forward and walked slowly through the residence district. "Oh, Uncle Jack!" he muttered. Next in fierce tones came, "Well, you forgot, Mildred, and I'm glad, glad, glad!" He crossed the school-grounds. Seated on the cold steps he moaned, "Oh, Uncle Jack, don't come tomorrow! Don't ever call me your namesake again! I'm not smart enough," then in slow tones, "and I'm not good enough, either." With this startling thought he looked soberly into the starry sky. His mind at length was quiet; then his soul became still and listened. And lo! every star in the universe was singing the Christmas carol! How clearly it came to him—the song of the night, the song of Christmas eve:—

"Peace on earth, yes, good will;
Peace on earth, good will to men."

In every direction he turned the chorus rang until the heavens were filled with glory—glory which overflows to abide in the soul of the listener.

At home it seemed long as they listened for familiar footsteps and whistling.

"The air's just fine outdoors, father!" was John's greeting.

"Yes, we'll have some sport on the ice," was the reply.

The boy's calm, serene face made mother very happy as she remarked, "We must have a good night's rest before tomorrow's gifts, dinner and visit."

"Yes, you know Cousin Mildred and I will be so happy beginning another vacation together. Of course, we will want to give Uncle Jack a week of joy this time."

A Christmas Legend

BY MARY T. AUSTIN

Once upon a time, long, long ago, a company of early Christians had assembled to celebrate the birthday of our Lord. He had not been gone from this earth very long, and His memory was still green in their hearts. One, an old, old man, was one of the children whom our Savior had blessed and, although at that time an infant in his mother's arms, he had never forgotten the touch, the look, the voice of the Divine One. They were a poor and simple folk, and had come together to celebrate the day and devise some memorial of their Lord. Silver and gold they had none wherewith to build a costly monument, but they loved Him much, and as they thought of Him and talked of Him their hearts burned within them. At last one, a woman, spoke. "It has been laid upon my heart to give myself to the Master, and this I will do. When the physician goes upon his rounds, I will be with him. I will stand at the bedside of the sick and dying and whisper words of hope and cheer; in the weary days and wakeful nights I will be there and speak to them of the Great Physician." "And I," said another, "will be the patron-saint of the shepherd. I will go with him as he leads his flock to the distant hills, and in the still watches of the night will tell him of the Good Shepherd." "I," said another, "will go with the sailor on the stormy sea. In times of loneliness I will give him thoughts of home and loved ones, and cause him to cast his care upon One who holds the sea in the hollow of His hand."

And so they each took upon themselves their special duty as guardian over the shepherd, and the sailor, the husbandman as he went forth to sow the precious seed, the artisan in his shop, the workman at his bench; and even the very humble folk were remembered as they prepared to go their appointed ways. The very old man, who had hitherto kept silence, spoke in his trembling, piping voice, "The last shall be first, the least shall be greatest. St. Nicholas will be the patron-saint of children." He struck the staff, which had supported his feeble limbs, upon the ground, and lo! a miracle; it had become a tree, on which, in place of leaves and fruit, there was every kind of toy dear to the heart of childhood. So he, too, took his departure to cheer and bless the little ones. Almost two thousand years have passed and saints are out of date. We never hear of them now except in song or story; all but St. Nicholas, who is loved more and more as the years go by, and whose worshipers have become an innumerable company.

Our Totals of Membership

Because of a failure to hear from fifteen Monthly Meetings in Western Yearly Meeting, we are unable this week to give the totals of membership for all our Yearly Meetings in America. We urge each Monthly Meeting Recorder in Western who has not yet reported to us the total membership to do so at once. More than forty have replied, but these totals are valueless unless we can get all.

Next Week

In next week's issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, among many other good things we will have an article by Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, of London, on "A Recent Trip to Madagascar," and another by Joseph T. Elkin-ton on "The Reform Jews in America." There will be some new features, which we trust will be pleasing to our subscribers.

Booker T. Washington writes us that he finds a number of cases where colored teachers in the South are not receiving more than $10.00 per month for teaching. He will be glad to receive gifts of Christmas cards, books or other similar gifts which he will furnish to these needy teachers. Address him at Tuskegee, Alabama.

The Commission of the Episcopal Church on the World Conference on Faith and Order is pressing its work vigorously. The Church of Ireland has joined others in appointing a Commission. Preparatory work is being done for a Conference of Commissions being named by all religious denominations.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

Van Wert, Ohio—A successful series of meetings has just closed at Van Wert, Ohio, under the leadership of the pastor, F. H. Tormohlen. The meetings continued for six weeks with unabated interest to the close. More than eighty people professed conversion or were reclaimed. One of the most encouraging features of the meetings was the number of men that took a definite stand for Christ. The meetings throughout were characterized by a deep religious spirit and all surface work was put in the background. The sermons were very spiritual and of a high standard, in which the pastor spared neither saint nor sinner. The meetings closed with an all-day service on December 14th. Previous arrangements were made for all that desired to remain for the entire day, to eat dinner in the basement, and about one hundred and seventy-five enjoyed the dinner together. Many older members expressed their opinion that this was one of the greatest days in the history of the church. The outlook for Van Wert Meeting was never brighter.

Manton, Michigan—A series of meetings was held from November 16 to 30, conducted by D. G. Hodgins, of Brighton, Michigan. Great conviction for sin seized upon a number, resulting in repentance and salvation. A goodly number of Christians consecrated themselves wholly to the Lord for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. God is doing the same things for men in the twentieth century that He did in the first century. The attendance was good throughout. Estella Hammond has just arrived to take charge as pastor.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING

Stanford Meeting—Charles M. King conducted a ten days' meeting at Stanford Friends' Church near Union, Iowa. The truth was presented in a very clear, forceful manner—in the spirit of love, and with power. The weather was unfavorable and many were deprived of attending. We believe the seed sown will yet bear much fruit.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING

Stanwood — Springdale Quarterly Meeting was held at Stanwood, Kansas, December 6-7. The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight was not held on Friday afternoon on account of the rain, and the missionary meeting which is usually held on Friday evening, was held on Sunday evening. Those in attendance from outside the Quarterly Meeting were Asa Dillon, of North-branch, who has recently been recorded a minister, and Francis A. Wright, Sr., of Kansas City. Asa Dillon brought the message Saturday morning from the text found in Philippians 3: 13-14. Francis A. Wright gave some interesting missionary information during the business session. Asa Dillon also had charge of the services on Sunday morning and brought a very helpful message. Cyrus and Amy Hawkins, who have recently moved back into our Quarterly Meeting, were very acceptably in attendance. Asa Dillon accompanied by the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic work, Nettie Hawthorn, held a meeting at Springdale on Tuesday evening, December 9. He held a meeting at Friends' Church in Leavenworth on Wednesday evening, and attended prayer meeting at Tonganoxie Thursday morning at eleven o'clock, going from there to Lawrence to attend Hesper Quarterly Meeting.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

Greensboro—The work is moving along finely. There is a growth in spiritual life, and a consequent interest in all lines of work. Fred E. Smith has pastoral charge.

Symons Creek—The old Friends' Church at Symons Creek was one of the first houses of worship that Friends erected in Carolina. In 1791 the Yearly Meeting was held at New Garden and continued to be held there and at Symons Creek alternately until 1813. The old church has long ago decayed, but now a new one has been completed on the old grounds. According to announcement the dedicatory exercises occurred November 23. On the night preceding Adelbert Wood, of New Hampshire, delivered an impressive sermon proving that God's promises are true, illustrating the same by many incidents in his own experience. On Sabbath morning the services were opened with singing, followed by appropriate remarks by J. T. Chappell, relative to the object of the meeting. David E. Sampson then had read the sixty-second chapter of Isaiah, and emphasized in his discourse the importance of a due preparation of the hearts of the people, in order to build up the interest of the Church of God on earth. He specially emphasized the dedication of the individual life as a means to this end.

Rufus P. King spoke very earnestly from Romans 12-1. He directed a part of his remarks to the children, which was greatly appreciated. The wrapt attention of the entire audience indicated the deep interest with which the message was received. The noon intermission was a time of social enjoyment, renewal of old acquaintances, etc. Lunch was served on the grounds. The afternoon exercises began at two o'clock. In a short time the balance on the new building was cancelled, and "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow" was sung with a hearty good will. "Ye are God's building," was the subject from which Adelbert Wood gave us a splendid sermon, closing with a very impressive prayer, earnestly desiring that we should be temples of the living God dedicated to His service. David Sampson and wife tarried a few days visiting families and holding meetings.

New Garden—New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Guilford College, December 13 and 14. The weather was warm, bright and beautiful. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight considered the subject of the family altar, and Mary C. Woody called attention to the Minutes of the last Yearly Meeting which, among other things on the subject, contains the following: "We feel to urge upon parents the importance of maintaining the family altar upon a deep spiritual basis, that will make it easy to discover any gift which the Lord may have conferred. To this end we suggest as a very helpful means, 'The Family Altar League,' a very simple but world-wide movement to establish the family altar in every home." The eleven o'clock service opened with a hymn and with prayer by David E. Sampson of Winston-Salem, and Lewis W. McFarland of High Point. An excellent sermon was preached by S. Adelbert Wood, of New Hampshire, in which he showed that God would have us render glad and not a burdened service. A goodly number were present from all the Monthly Meetings, and especially from New Garden. A dinner at the meeting house followed the morning session. In the afternoon good reports were given of the spiritual condition of the various local meetings. It was reported that George N. Hartley had had several days of acceptable service at Winston-Salem and Kernersville. A committee to petition the legislature for a law against liquor shipments reported the work attended to, but the law only applies to two townships in the county. Reports were given of successful work being done to prevent the illegal sale of liquor in various places. A report was also given of the great national anti-liquor convention at Columbus, Ohio, in November. The Meeting directed that an endorsement of his Mexican policy be sent to President Wilson.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING

Berlinville—D. G. Hodgins, of Brighton, Michigan, has recently held a revival at Berlinville Friends' Meeting. The various services were attended with good success, and great interest was manifested. S. D. Cox is the pastor in charge.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING

Portland—The ninth session of Portland Quarterly Meeting convened in Sunnyside church, Homer L. Cox, pastor, December 5th at 2:30 o'clock, and was well attended until the close on Sabbath evening. On account of business conditions and the inability of a large majority of our members to get away from employment on Saturday, the business sessions are held on Friday evening. Four Monthly Meetings compose this Quarterly Meeting, three in Portland and one at Quilcene and Leland, Washington. The Meeting in Washington is in a lumber region, where there is a dearth of religious influence except that exerted by Lewis and Myrtle Russell, pastors, and their co-workers. Probably the most important act of the business meeting was the endorsement of the recommendation of Portland Monthly Meeting that Chester A. Hadley, son of Lewis I. Hadley, be recorded a minister of the gospel. He has been active in Christian Endeavor work in his own church and has held responsible positions in the Portland Christian Endeavor Union, in which capacity he was able to carry the evangelistic spirit into the formal meetings of that organization. He and his wife now reside at Rosedale, where he is engaged as pastor at about one-fifth the salary he was receiving in business in Portland. At the close of business, Mayor H. R. Albee, of Portland, spoke on how the church can help the city administration to promote civic righteousness. He is the first mayor of the city under commission government, and is going about his work in a God-fearing way, and asks the co-operation of all good people. The ministry of the Quarterly Meeting was at the hands of John Riley and wife, now in charge of the Meeting at Lents. In the Saturday afternoon session, where John Riley preached on Present Day Evangelism, a spontaneous call to establish a Friends' city mission resulted in $25.00 per month being subscribed for that purpose. Myra B. Smith is in the minds of all to take charge of the work. The evening service was in charge of the Literature department, Mrs. Mildred Hanson, Superintendent. After some short talks, President Levi T. Pennington, of Pacific College, spoke on "What and How Shall Friends Read?" At the C. E. Union meeting, C. C. Barker, of Lents, was appointed superintendent of that department, to supercede Chester A. Hadley, resigned on account of promotion and removal.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING

New London—New London Quarterly Meeting was held December 5-7. Jefferson W. Ford, a returned missionary from Jamaica, William L. George, from Kansas, and Asa Woodard, from Hinckle Creek Monthly Meeting, were in attendance on Seventh-day, as was also Murray S. Kenworthy, of Richmond, in the interest of Earlham College. All these ministers rendered helpful service. Jefferson W. Ford addressed the missionary meeting on Sabbath afternoon.

Westfield—A series of evangelistic meetings has recently been held at Westfield, beginning November 13th and continuing for three weeks, in charge of Robert Pelt, formerly of Ohio, but now residing at Sheridan, Indiana. Brother Pelt is a speaker of fine natural ability, and under the unction of the Spirit, his ministry has had a marked effect. The attendance has been good throughout the series. The pastor, George H. Moore, together with his estimable wife, Jane D. H. Moore, who is also a recorded minister, rendered valuable assistance. Another element of power in these meetings has been the constant attendance and help of about a score of the students of the Biblical Seminary at this place. These young men and women are here from different parts, making preparation for the ministry and work to which the Lord may call them. As a result of these efforts there are evidences of a marked spiritual awakening among our membership. A number, especially of the younger class, have been born into the kingdom, and with a few of the middle aged, have claimed the blessing of sanctification. Several have already given their names for membership, while others intend doing so. The Friends at this place have recently purchased a valuable parsonage at a cost of $3,000.00, and it is now occupied by the pastor and wife, who are on their third year of service at Westfield.

Bloomington—Patrons of Bloomington Academy are much pleased with the excellent instruction being given by Enos Harvey in Bible Study. He has two large classes studying the Life of Christ. Sabbath evening services for several weeks have been devoted to a careful study of the Epistle to the Hebrews, by the pastor, Enos Harvey, who has presented many new and helpful thoughts which his hearers appreciate.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING

Waynesville—For some months the meeting at Waynesville had been without a resident pastor, until Elizabeth Ward, of the Cleveland Training School, came and served so acceptably in that capacity. When in September she returned to her school duties we were again without a pastor. Then in November we called Abijah E. Wooten, of Cardington, and he with his wife and family have come among us. Already he has endeared himself to his flock, and we see encouraging results of his labors among us as a Church, and in the community. Our Sabbath School is growing in numbers and interest, and at the end of the old year we feel encouraged to enter upon the new with this as our motto: "Serve the Lord with gladness."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

January 4.

Subject—Jesus and the Children.

Lesson—Mark 9: 30-41; 10: 13-16.

Golden Text—Gird yourselves with humility, to serve one another; for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. I Peter 5: 5.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

January 4.

Topic—Twelve Great Verses. I. The Salvation Verse. John 3: 16. (Consecration Meeting.)

The first topic of each month during 1914 will be under the general heading of "Twelve Great Verses." One verse each month will be considered upon some theme vital to the Christian life.

This month we have the universally known and loved John 3: 16, the salvation verse of the Bible. Perhaps no other Scriptural utterance has been more universally quoted and none has been more universally helpful.

God's love for humanity is the basal fact in man's salvation. "For God so loved the world." Who can measure the breadth and depth and fullness of that love? Its measure is indicated in part by the willingness with which He gave His only begotten Son.

Whosoever. That means all who will. The scope of human redemption is not limited by the boundaries of nations or continents. Salvation knows no distinctions of race or color. Whosoever believeth on the Son has everlasting life.

Shall not perish. The promise is positive. Man is reconciled to God, and the Atonement is complete. Henceforth humanity was to look up and forward. Why should we be dejected? Christ the mighty Savior is alive forevermore.

But our responsibility does not end with being saved. Others need the gospel light and their environment has shut them out from the presence of God. We must help to change this environment and by our lives reveal Christ as the Savior for all men.

PRESENT DAY PAPERS

To the Readers of The American Friend:

The first number of "Present Day Papers" will appear at the opening of the year, and it will be issued each month thereafter. The English and American Friends who have made the plans for this monthly periodical, which is to be a successor to the "British Friend," have distinctly planned it so that it might not in any way come into rivalry with our Quaker weekly publications. It will not in any way perform the functions of the "London Friend," the "American Friend" or the "Philadelphia Friend." It will have a totally distinct and different mission. In the first place it is not to be a newspaper at all. It is to be devoted to the presentation and interpretation of vital and spiritual Christianity, both for Friends and others. The editorials and articles will deal with the central problems of Christianity, and with its application to the life of the present day world. We shall be very glad to have all Friends take it, but we want to encourage all Friends to be loyal first to their own denominational periodicals.

SUGGESTIONS FROM THE BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD OF INDIANA YEARLY MEETING

At a recent meeting of the Bible School Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting, held at Earlham College, a committee was appointed to arrange for an exhibit of Bible School material to be held in connection with the Quarterly Meeting conferences. This exhibit, similar to the larger exhibit held at Yearly Meeting time, may be secured by any Quarterly Meeting Bible School superintendent by writing Ancil E. Ratliff, Fairmount, Indiana, or Arthur M. Charles, Earlham, Indiana.

The Board has secured from the Yearly Meeting Book and Tract Committee for distribution among the Bible School workers, copies of "The Sunday School and the Teens," by John Alexander; "Handwork on the Sunday School," by Dr. Littlefield; "Stories and Story-telling," by E. P. St. John; "The Girl in Her Teens," by Margaret Slattey; "The Adult Bible Class," by W. C. Pierce.

A committee was appointed to arrange for a chart to be hung in every Quarterly Meeting house showing the standing of each school in the Quarter in "Front Line" qualifications. The committee is also to endeavor to have each school in the Yearly Meeting hang in its room a chart entitled "Our Standard for a Front Line School." The first chart should foster a healthy rivalry among the schools, and the second an ambition to attain a high percent. standing in "Front Line" requirements. These are ten in number, each rating ten percent., and a "Front Line School" having a standing of one hundred percent. The ten are as follows:

1. Graded organization (At least four classes, Primary to eight years; Junior to twelve years; Secondary, the teen age; adult, over twenty years).

2. Organized classes (At least one class in school holding International Certificate).

3. Teacher Training (One or more students during the year).

4. Missions (Regular Instruction, regular offering.)

5. Temperance Instruction (At least once each quarter).

6. Cradle Roll.

7. Home Department.

8. Definite Decision for Christ.

9. Workers' Conference.

10. Offering for Denominational Bible School Work. (To be taken any Sunday in April for the use of the Yearly Meeting Bible School Board.)

Other suggestions for improving the work of our Bible Schools emphasize the value of visualizing more of our teaching. For instance, temperance instruction could be so presented in a few moments by a physician or other scientist making a simple chemical experiment before the school. More use should be made of pictures, post cards, lantern views, etc.

Suggestions for the teen age included the value of centering the social life of the young people about the school and church. Young people of this age should be given something difficult to do in the work of the school; effective story-telling on missionary day to primary class, and preparation of good music for the school are two among many forms of such work.

BIBLE SCHOOL EDITORSHIP

Announcement has already been made that the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting has purchased the publishing interests of P. W. Raidabaugh, and that after the first of January, all our Bible School periodicals and helps will be issued under the authority of the Board. Richard Haworth and Wilbur K. Thomas, Chairman and Secretary of the Board, have been elected Associate Editors of the Quarterlies.

LAYMEN'S CONFERENCES

In connection with the Student Volunteer Convention in Kansas City, Missouri, special Laymen's Conferences will be held on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday afternoons, January 1, 3 and 4. These will be open to all laymen who can attend. It will be well for Friends who can attend to keep these dates in mind.

MEXICAN MISSIONARIES SAFE

Charles E. Tebbetts, Secretary of Friends' Foreign Missionary Board, received a telegram on the 20th, announcing the safe arrival at Brownsville, Texas, of R. S. Tice and wife and Mr. Roberts, of Friends' mission at Victoria. This is cheering news indeed.

With the Children

A LITTLE CHRISTMAS SECRET

Christmas is a time of secrets,
 So I'll whisper one to you;
 Grandpa says that all who try it
 Find that every word is true.
 "Would you have a happy day?
 Give some happiness away."
 Grandpa says this little secret
 Should be carried through the year;
 And if all would try to heed it,
 Earth would soon be full of cheer
 "Would you have a happy day?
 Give some happiness away." —Ex.

THE JOY OF GIVING

"I want another Henty book," said Bert; "I wish I had the whole set."

"Well, I wouldn't mind getting a pretty story book, too," said May. "But I want a brush and comb set, with flowers on the handles. Rena calls them Dresden."

"I don't," said Dot; "I want a bureau for my doll clothes. I saw a pretty one in the store window; all white, with gold handles."

"Gold! not much," laughed May. "But it is pretty all the same, sweetheart; I hope you will get it."

"It's nice to have a time in the year when everybody gets presents," said Dot.

"But everybody don't," said May with a sigh. Mother showed me some pictures that had been sent her by some charity lady. There was a little girl in the horriddest room; she looked so cold and she was trying to peep up the chimney for Santa Claus, who never comes to her."

"Why doesn't he?" Dot asked.

"Because nobody gives anything to take her. This charity lady would be glad to be Santa Claus to the poor little girl, if any one would give her some presents to take."

"Were there any boys?" asked Bert.

"Yes. Say! let's stop talking about what we want for ourselves, and think what we can do for those poor children."

"My Christmas money will be all used up on the home folks," said Bert.

"We all want to give something to father and mother, of course, and to Nora, but suppose instead of spending money on each other, we sent it to the charity lady."

"I tell you what, girls," said Bert, "I have thought of something I can make for you both, but it won't cost any money. So I can save mine for the poor children."

"So can I make something," said May, joyfully.

"I'll ask mother what I can do," said Dot. "Oh, isn't it blessed to give something to everybody?"—E. E. Hewitt, in "Sunshine."

CHRISTMAS FOR THE BIRDS, TOO

Of all the customs observed at Christmas, none is prettier than that described by a returned traveler in Sweden:

One wintry afternoon at Christmas-tide, he says, I had been skating on a pretty lake three miles out from Gothenburg. On my way home I noticed that at every farmer's house there was erected in the middle of the dooryard, a pole, to the top of which was bound a large, full sheaf of grain.

"Why is this?" I asked my companion.

"Oh, that's for the birds. They must have a merry Christmas, too, you know."

Not a peasant in Sweden will sit down with his children to a Christmas dinner, indoors, till he has first raised aloft a Christmas dinner for the little birds that live in the cold and snow outside.

The little story is a reminder that the used Christmas trees, stripped of decorations, might be stood in the yard and kept hung by the children with bits of bread and other birds-goodies for their little feathered brothers.—Selected.

RIDDLES YOU MAY NOT KNOW

Some day when your boy and girl friends come to see you, and it's too warm to run and romp, try a game of riddles. Here are a few "fish" riddles which they may not know:

What fish is found in every band?
 Drum.

What fish is served with meats?
 Jelly.

What fish is worn by officers in the army?
 Sword.

What fish is prominent in winter sports?
 Skate.—The Continent.

THE CHILD JESUS

Who was born on Christmas Day?

Little Baby Jesus.
 Blessed little Christmas Child;
 Pure and sweet and fair and mild
 In His mother's arms He smiled;
 Little Baby Jesus.

Who told the news that He was born?

God's own holy angels,
 Singing in the starry sky
 Praises sweet to God on high;
 'T was a heavenly lullaby

For the Baby Jesus.

ASA BALDWIN

Asa Baldwin died at his home near Marion, Indiana, October 13, 1913, aged seventy-eight years and seven months. He had been in failing health for more than a year, seriously so for about four months, but was confined to his bed only ten days. Surviving him are his widow, Mary E. Baldwin, a minister, also two sons and a daughter.

The Baldwin family were among the earliest of the Friends who settled in Wayne County, Indiana, at the beginning of the last century. In 1833, Thomas Baldwin and Lydia Thomas were married in the old New Garden meeting house, soon afterward coming to Grant County to live, and Asa, their son, was one of the first white children born in the county. For many years he taught country schools and also taught the first two winter schools of whites and Indians at White's Institute.

Asa T. Baldwin was a birthright member of Friends, an elder, and a faithful attendant at the weekly, monthly, quarterly, and yearly sessions of his church. For a number of years he served as clerk of Marion Quarterly Meeting, and was for many years the chairman of Indiana Yearly Meeting's Committee on Peace.

As long as he was able he taught a

Bible class in the First Friends' Church, and he is greatly missed by both old and young in the school. There was a large attendance at the funeral service, which was held at the church on Saturday, October 19, conducted by the pastor, Charles E. Hiatt, who preached from the text in Ecclesiastics 11: 6.

FRIENDS' PRIVILEGES

A convinced Friend, who has travelled much and who has been associated with Friends for many years, was heard to express astonishment the other day at the surprisingly few birthright Friends, comparatively speaking, who seem to realize in any adequate degree the privileges they hold as Friends, and for which their fathers were willing to make such sacrifices. Otherwise, he reasoned, there would be many more who have genuine concerns for service for their beloved Master. X X X
